TO THE READER,

The Author rendreth this Account of his Vndertaking and Performance in the following Work.

IT is a great complaint with many, that they want time either to undertake great matters, or to accompliſh thoſe they have undertaken: Whereas it is more truly affirmed by Seneca, that we do not ſo much want, as waſt it. Non parum temporis habemus, ſed multum perdimus, as that Author hath it. We triſle out too much of our precious time, as he well obſerveth, Aut malè agendo, aut nihil agendo, aut aliud agendo; either in doing ill, or nothing, or elſe things impertinent: and then cry out, that we want time convenient to perform thoſe duties, which are expected from us, in our ſeverall places. Nor have we onely time enough to ſpend, but ſome time to ſpare; ſome privacies and retreats from buſineſs; ſome breathing fits from the affairs of our Vocations: and even of them, thoſe times of leiſure and receſs, we are to render an Accompt, in Cato's judgement. Otii reddendam rationem judicabat Cato, as we read in Tullie. In which Accompt, as all men generally are concerned, ſo am I intereſſed therein as much as any. For being by the unhappineſs of my Deſtinie, or the infelicity of the times, deprived of my Preferments, and deveſted of my Miniſteriall Function (as to the ordinary and publique exerciſe thereof) I cannot chooſe but ſay I have leiſure enough; the opportunity of ſpending more idle hours (if I were ſo minded) than I ever expected or deſired. And though perhaps I could have ſpent thoſe times of leiſure, which the change of my affairs hath given me, with greater benefit to my ſelf, and more to the advantage of my private fortunes: yet that of Cato did ſo over-ballance me, that I was willing to do ſomewhat which might witneſs to inſuing times, how I had paſſed away thoſe hours, and imployed that leiſure. And when I was conſidering of ſome particulars within the compaſs of my power, and anſwerable to that ſmall ſtock of Books which I had recruited, (mine own being taken from me and diſpoſed of, contrary unto publick Order) I was requeſted by ſome friends of no common quality to review my Geographie; to make it more complete and uſefull to an Engliſh Reader: My vacancy from buſineſs, uſed by them as an Argument to induce me to it. A motion looked on, when firſt made, with neglect enough, my deſuetude from thoſe younger Studies, my great want of Books, the ſad complexion of the times, and the unhandſom entertainment which my endeavours for the publick had lately met with, ſeeming ſufficient to diſſwade me from the undertaking. Little encouragement, God wot, to write Books for others, when I could not be permitted to enjoy my own; or to imploy my ſelf in order to a publick ſervice, when not alone my private fortunes, but the publick Patrimony of the Church was deſtroyed and diſſipated. But afterwards being preſſed unto it by ſome Members of Parliament, whom I found loath to be denied, and by ſome others of great rank, but ſuch different Intereſſes, that I wondred how they could all center upon the ſame Propoſall: I thought it at the laſt a more Chriſtian dutie to ſatisfie the honeſt deſires of ſo many men, than to ſacrifiſe any longer to my own privacy and retiredneſs, to which I had intended to devote my ſelf. So I reſolved to venture on it, though well I ſaw that my condition in ſo doing might be reſembled unto that of the Iſraelites in the Land of Egypt: of whom the Task-maſters did expect the full tale of Bricks, and yet denyed them their accuſtomed allowance of Straw and Stubble. My caſe in this not much unlike to that of the Duke of Alva, Who being under the diſpleaſure of the King of Spain in quality of a Priſoner, without the leaſt aſſurance of recovering the Kings favour, or his own liberty, and yet imployed in that Conjuncture, for the conqueſt of Portugal; was wont to ſay, That he was ſent to conquer Kingdoms with his Fetters on.

And here I cannot but remember a pretty accident which befell me in the moneth of January, An. 1640. at what time it had been my ill fortune to ſuffer under ſome miſapprehenſions which had been entertain'd againſt me, and to be brought before the Committee for the Courts of Juſtice, *on the complaint of M.*Prynne, then newly return'd from his confinement, and in great credit with the Vulgar. Heard by them, I confeſs I was, with a great deal of ingenuous patience; but moſt deſpitefully reviled and perſecuted with exceſſive both noiſe and violence, by ſuch as thronged about the doors of that Committee to expect the iſſue: it being as naturall to many weak and inconſiderate men, as it is to Dogs, to bark at thoſe they do not know, and to accompany each other in thoſe kinds of clamors. And though I had the happineſs to come off cleat, without any cenſure, and to recover by degrees amongſt knowing men, that eſtimation which before had been much endangered, yet ſuch as took up matters upon truſt and Hear-ſay, looked on me as a perſon forfeited, and marked out for ruin. Amongſt others, I was then incountred in my paſſage from Weſtminſter to Whitehall, by a tall big Gentleman, who thruſting me rudely from the wall, and looking over his ſhoulder on me in a ſcornfull manner, ſaid in an hoarſe voyce theſe words, Geographie is better than Divinitie; and ſo paſſed along. Whether his meaning were, that I was a better Geographer than Divine; or that Geographie had been a Study of more credit and advantage to me in the eyes of men, than Divinitie was like to prove, I am not able to determine. But ſure I am, I have ſince thought very often of it, and that the thought thereof had its influence on me, in drawing me to look back on thoſe younger ſtuaies, in which I was reſolved to have dealt no more; and thereto, in the Preface to my Microcoſm, had obliged my ſelf.

And it is poſſible enough, that in reſpect of that generall promiſe, I may lie under the cenſure of inconſtancy, and breach of Covenant, in that I had ſolemnly declared in the aforeſaid Preface, that the Reader ſhould not fear any further inlargements, which might make him repent his (then) preſent Markets; that it had received my laſt hand, and that from thenceforth, I would look upon it as a Stranger onely. But it was meant withall, and expreſſed accordingly, unleſs it were for the amending of ſuch Errors, of which by the ſtrength of mine own judgement, or any ingenuous information, I ſhould be convicted. And Errors I muſt needs ſay, I have found ſo many on this laſt peruſall, and thoſe not onely verball, but materiall too; as did not onely free me from that Obligation, but did oblige me to a further Review thereof. For being written in an age, on which the pride of youth and ſelf-opinion might have ſome predominancies, I thought it freer from miſtakes than I ſince have found it: And thoſe miſtakes, by running thorough eight Editions (ſix of them without my peruſall or ſuper-viſing) ſo increaſed and multiplied, that I could no longer call it mine, or look upon it with any tolerable degree of patience. So that in caſe the importunity of friends had not inforced me, in a manner, upon this Employment, the neceſsity of conſulting my own fame, and leaving the Work fair behind me to ſucceeding times, would have perſwaded me in the end to doe ſomewhat in it. Which though the laſt, was not the leaſt of thoſe inducements which inclined me to the undertaking of this preſent Work.

Having thus plainly and ingenuouſly laid down the reaſons which did induce, though not incourage me, unto this performance: It is now fit I should declare what I have done in it, and what the Reader may expect from so great inlargements. And first the Reader is to know, that my design originally, was onely to look over the former Book, to give it a Review, to purge it of the Errors which it had contracted, and not so much to make a new Book, as correct the old. But when I had more seriously considered of it, I found sufficient reason to change that purpose, to make it new both in form and matter, and to present it to the world with all those advantages which a new Book might carry with it. The greater pains I took about it, the greater I conceived would the benefit be which might from thence redound to those who should please to read it: And I would willingly so fain comply with all expectations, that the short Taper of my life should give light to others in the consuming of it self; Non nobis solum nati sumus, may well become a Christians mouth, though an Heathen spake it. But if all expectations be not satisfied in the completeness of the work, as I fear they will not, I desire it may not be ascribed unto any neglect or fault of mine, but to the wants and difficulties which I was to struggle with. Books I had few to help my self with of mine own; nor live I neer so rich a Clergie (most of the Benefices of these parts being poor and mean) as to supply my self from them with such commodities. The greatest helps I had was from Oxford-Librarie, which though but nine or ten miles off from my present dwelling, yet the charge and trouble of the journey, with the loss of time, made my visits to that place less frequent, and consequently the Neighbourhood thereof less usefull to me, than the generality of the design might well comport with. So that when all things are considered as they ought to be, it rather may be wondred at by an equall Reader, how I could come to write so much, with so little helps, upon a subject of such a large and diffused variety, than that in any part thereof I have writ too little. And to say truth, the work so prospered in my hand, and swelled so much above my thought and expectation, that I hope I may with modesty enough use those words of Jacob, Voluntas Dei fuit, ut citò occurreret mihi quod volebam; The Lord God brought it to me, as the English reads it.

In the pursuance of this Work, as I have taken on my self the parts of an Historian and Geographer; so have I not forgotten that I an English-man, and which is somewhat more, a Church-man. As an English-man I have been mindfull upon all occasions to commit to memory the noble actions of my Countrey; exployted both by Sea and Land, in most parts of the World, and represented on the same Theaters, upon which they were acted. And herein I have followed the example of the great Annalist, Baronius. Who pretending in that learned and laborious Work, a sincere History of the Church, and no more than so; yet tells the Pope in his Epistle, that he principally did intend the same, Pro Sacrarum Traditionum Antiquitate, & Autoritate Romanæ Ecclesiæ; to manifest therein the Antiquity of such Traditions, and for defence of that Authority and Power, which at this day are taught and exercised in the Church of Kome. And so much I may also say of my self in this performance, though without any by-design to abuse the Reader, that though the Historie and Chorographie of the World be my principall business, yet I have apprehended every modest occasion, of recording the heroick Acts of my native Soil, and filing on the Registers of perpetuall Fame the Gallantrie and brave Atchievements of the People of England. Exemplified in their many victories, and signall services in Italie, France, Spain, Scotland, Belgium, in Palestine, Cyprus, Africk and America, and indeed where not? Nor have I pretermitted their great zeal and piety in converting to the Faith so many of the German and Northern Nations; Franconians, Thuringians, Hassians, Saxons, Danes, Frisons; as also amongst the Scots and Picts, together with those of Lituania and the people of Norwey: by that means more inlarging Christs Kingdom than they did their own. And as I have been zealous to record the Actions, so have I been as carefull to assert the Rights of the English Nation: inherent personally in their Kings, by way of publick interess in the Subject also; as the whole body doth partake of that sense and motion, which is originally in the Head. And of this kinde I reckon the true stating of the Title of the Kings of England to the Crown of France; demonstrating the Vassallage of the Kingdom of Scotland to the Crown of England; vouching the legal Interess of the English Nation, in Right of the first Discovery or Primier Seisin, to Estotiland, Terra Corterialis, New-found-Land, Novum Belgium, Guiana, the Countries neer the Cape of good Hope, and some other places against all Pretenders: insinuating the precedency of the the English Kings before thoſe of Spain; their Soveraignty and Dominion in the Britiſh Ocean, with the great benefit which might from thence ariſe unto us, invaded and almoſt ingroſsed by the Hanſe and Hollanders. And yet there is another thing which ſpeaks me more an Engliſhman, than all theſe together; which I ſhall fall on ſoon enough, and indeed too ſoon, the ſadneſs of the ſubject being well conſidered.

Next, as a Church-man, I have taken more eſpeciall notice of the antient and preſent face of Chriſtianity, in all parts of the World; the planting and Government of Churches, the Hetrodoxies and opinions of thoſe ſeverall Sects into which it now doth ſtand diſmembred. By which it will appear moſt clearly amongſt other things, that the Doctrin and Government of the Church were of equall ſtanding; that this government was no other than that of Biſhops; and that whereſoever Chriſtianity did find any admittance, Epiſcopacie was admitted alſo as a part thereof: the Goſpel being in moſt places firſt preached by Biſhops, or growing to eſteem and ſtrength under their Authority. And it is found on theſe Recherches, that as Eſpiſcopacie was co-ævall with the Church it ſelf: ſo the Subordination of Biſhops to their ſeverall Primates, and the Coordination of thoſe Primates amongſt themſelves in the common Government thereof, was of ſuch antiquitie (as being ſetled and confirmed in St. Cyprians time, who flouriſhed in the year 250.) that it is hard to trace the beginnings of it. Debere Epiſcopos in commune Eccleſiam regere, is a noted Maxime in St. Hierome; but practically true in the Communicatoriæ and Formatæ, of the Elder Ages: Which happy courſe had it been preſerved, Epiſcopacie had been ſo far from being made a ſtirrup for Antichriſt to mount into his throne, as the Smectymnuans falſly charge it; that it had ſerved rather as a Martingall to have kept him down from lifting up his head too high above the reſt of his Brethren. And that this courſe was not preſerved, came not intentionally from the Popes (for that by Antichriſt they mean the Popes of Rome, is a thing paſt queſtion) but from the Inundation of the barbarous Nations: though I confeſs the Popes were apt enough to make the beſt advantage of thoſe various Accidents, which the diſtreſſes of the Church did preſent unto them. For by the overflowing of the Barbarous Nations, Chriſtianitie was either quite extinquiſhed, or the authoritie of the Primates trodden under foot; or that intelligence and commerce which had been anciently amongſt them interdicted on good reaſons of ſtate, by ſuch Heathen or Mahometan Princes, under whom they lived. And then how eaſie was it for the Pope, in the new planting of the Goſpel in theſe Weſtern parts (done either by his Miniſters, or by his Incouragement) to give unto the Biſhops of his own appointing ſuch a limited power, as might make them more and more obnoxious unto his commands, and afterwards to leſſen their Authoritie, as he ſaw occaſion, by granting large Exemptions to Monaſteries, Convents, and Cathedrals; with Juriſdiction over the Parochiall Churches which belong'd unto them. So that it is moſt evident in the courſe of Story, that the Popes never came unto their height, nor could obtrude their Superſtitions and Novations on the Church of CHRIST; till they had weakened, by degrees, the Epiſcopall power. Followed in that deſign, though on different ends, by Wicliff, and ſome others in the Ages ſince; who have driven on their private projects under the colour and pretence of a Reformation. Epiſcopacie as it was co-ævall with the Church of CHRIST, ſo was it the beſt and ſtrongeſt Buttreſs in that ſacred Building. The weakning or ſubverting of which Primitive Order, did either proſtitute the Church to the luſt and tyranny of that proud Uſurper, or expoſe the Patrimonie thereof unto ſpoyl and rapine; or finally ſubject it to the Anarchy and licentiouſneſs of Hetrodoxies and confuſed Opinions. But I fear I have digreſſed too far in this ſpeculation.

As a Geographer, I have been punctuall and exact, in giving unto every Province its peculiar bounds, in laying out their ſeverall Land-marks, tracing the courſe of moſt of the principal Rivers, and ſetting forth the ſituation and eſtate of the chiefeſt Towns; and did once think of beautifying the Work with as many Maps as the ſeverall States and Kingdoms which are here deſcribed. But upon further conſideration, how much it would increaſe the Book both in bulk and price, and conſequently make it of leſs publick uſe than I did intend it; I laid by thoſe thoughts, and reſted ſatisfied with the adding of four Maps for the four parts of the World: by which the Reader may diſcern how each Countrie lies unto the other, though he find not each particular Province, and much leſs all the Towns and Cities which are here expreſſed; and on the other ſide may meet with many Towns of inferior note which are here omitted. And herein I have took ſome pains in ſearching out the firſt Inhabitants of each

severall Country, as far as I could see by the light of Letters, or go by probable conjectures; in finding out the place of such antient Cities as are now decayed, not easily visible in their ruins; and adding to such Cities as are now in being (if of any Antiquity) their Originall names. A thing as necessary to the understanding of the Histories of those elder times, as the knowledge of the present names is to the more delightfull reading of our modern Stories. And though I have not pretermitted any Town of note, fit to be specified and insisted on in a work of this nature; yet would I not have the Reader look for such a punctuall enumeration and description of them, as he may meet withall in those who have written the Chorographie of some Countrey onely; or think himself unsatisfied in his expectation if he find not here the situation and affairs of each Town of War, or the Quartering place of every Company or Troop of Souldiers, which are presented to him in the Weekly News-Books. In all Countreys there are many places which either by the advantage of their situation, or some present exigency of affairs, are fortified and made Towns of Warr; or otherwise remarkable for some signall battell, in these late bustles and commotions of the Christian World; of which no notice hath been taken in former times, and consequently not within the compass of this Discourse: and yet perhaps may grow as famous and considerable in the times to come, as many of the mightier Cities now decayed and ruined. He that shal think the work imperfect (though I confess it to be nothing but imperfections) for some deficiencies in this kinde, may be likned to the Countrey-Fellow in Aristophanes (if my memory fail not) who picked a great quarrell with the Map, because he could not finde where his own Farm stood. And such a Countrey-customer I did meet with one, a servant of my elder Brothers, sent by him with some horses to Oxon, to bring me and a friend of mine unto his house. Who having lost his way as we passed thorow the Forest of Whichwood, and not able to recover any beaten Track; did very earnestly intreat me to lead the way, till I had brought him past the Woods to the open Fields. Which when I had refused to do, as I had good reason, alleging that I never had been there before, and therefore that I could not tell which way to lead him: That's strange, said he, I have heard my old Master your Father say, that you made a Book of all the World, and cannot you finde your way out of the Wood? Which being spoken out of an honest simplicity, not out of any pretence to wit, or the least thought of putting a blunt jest upon me, occasioned a great deal of merriment for a long time; but I hope to meet with no such Readers. The greatness of the bulk, and consequently of the price, makes me somewhat confident that none but men of judgement and understanding will peruse these Papers: and such as they will look for no more particulars, than the nature of a generall Discourse will fitly bear. Perfection and exactness is to be expected in each kind of Science, as is observed by Aristotle in the 2d Book of his Ethicks, εἰ' ἐστὶ τὸ ἀκριβὲς ἐν ἅπασι τοῖς λόγοις, as far forth, as the condition of the Argument may be capable of it. And so much if I have attained unto, it is all which can with reason be expected from me. To look for more were as improper and absurd (in the words of Aristotle) as for an Artist to expect Tropes of Rhetorick from a Mathematician, or Demonstrations from an Orator.

Lastly, as an Historian, I have traced the affairs of each severall Countrey from the first Inhabitants thereof, (such as the Latines call Aborigines, and the Greeks Αὐτόχθονες) till these later times. Which that I might be sure to do on a good foundation, I have took more than common care, to settle all the first Adventurers (after the proud attempt at Babel) in their right Plantations: and that too in the way of an Introduction, that I might the better know where I was to finde them, and to go on with their affairs with the less disturbance. The rest of their Occurrences I have summed into so short an Abstract, as may be usefull to the learned in the way of a Remembrancer; to the less knowing man, in the way of a Tutor; Brevity in this kinde, I have much indeavoured; but so as to avoid all obscurity also. Nor have I only kept my self to the Storie of Kingdoms, or of the greater Signieuries, Estates, or Nations, which are or have been of the greatest consideration in the sway of the world: but looked on the Estates of such Dukes, Earls, and inferiour Princes, as in their times have had the Government of those parts which gave Title to them; whose actions and successions are distinctly specified, and all such alterations noted, as have hapned either in the ruin of such Estates, or the transflating of them from one House to another. The Catalogues and Successions of which royall and illustrious Families, I have drawn down unto the yeer 1648. towards the expiring of which yeer, I began to set my self

ſelf upon this Imployment. And there I fix as on the top of ſome dreadfull Precipice, which one can neither venture down without danger, nor look down without horror. Some things there are of ſuch a nature, that either to ſpeak of them, or to hold our peace, is alike unſafe. In ſuch a caſe it is beſt keeping at a diſtance. For though Truth be the beſt Miſtreſs which a man can ſerve, (Magis amica Veritas, ſaid the great Philoſopher;) yet it is well obſerved withall, that if a man follow her too cloſe at the heels, ſhe may chance to kick out his teeth for his labour.

In this regard, as alſo out of that compaſſionate affection which a true Engliſhman ought to bear his native Country, although in my approaches towards theſe preſent times, I have took notice in ſome other places of ſuch battells, ſieges, and ſucceſſes in the chances of War, as have hapned in theſe later dayes: I have ſorborn to take the leaſt notice of thoſe Tragedies of blood and death, which have been lately acted on the Stage of England. I cannot but with grief confeſs, that I might find variety of this kind enough, in the late Wars amongſt our ſelves: in which there have been more pitched fields, more ſtrong pieces taken, more notable traverſes of State, and exploits of war, than all the world can parallel in an equall time. But I have too much Engliſh bowels to pleaſe my ſelf in the recitall, or to look back on thoſe unfortunate adventures, which I ſhould rather chooſe to cover with the Act of Oblivion, or bury in the grave of perpetuall ſilence. How gladly I could have recorded theſe exploits of war, had they been exerciſed on a ſubject more proper for them; my willingneſs to take notice upon all occaſions, of the actions and achievements of the Engliſh Nation, will bear witneſs for me. But the imploying of that valor againſt our ſelves, as if not to be conquered but by one another, ſtrikes ſuch horror in me, that I cannot think thereof without much affrightment, nor intimate thus much of it without great reluctancies. I fear it may be ſaid too truly of our late imbroilments, as the Hiſtorian of the Civill Wars betwixt Cæſar and Pompey; Cauſa hujus Belli eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; that they were principally occaſioned by a ſurfet of too much felicity. But if we were grown weary of our own proſperities; and that that prayer & paſſage in the publick Liturgie (Give peace in our time O Lord) did not reliſh with us: how happy had it been if we had found ſome other field to have tried our valour in? and made ſome forein Country that Aceldama, which ſo fatally was made at home? The diſhonor which we ſuffered in the Iſle of Re, when beat thence ingloriouſly by the French; the forcible and long detention of the Palatinate by the power of the Spaniard; the barbarous butchery at Amboyna, and the beating up of the Spaniſh Fleet within the protection of our Caſtles, by thoſe of Holland; the inſolencies of the Scots, and the rebellions of the Iriſh, might well have ſtirred ſome indignation in an Engliſh breſt. And had we fought upon thoſe ſcores, or on none but them, our victories had deſerved the honor of a ſolemn triumph, denied by the old Roman Laws to a Civill War: But our infelicity (as it ſeems) was like that of Rome, in following thoſe unnaturall wars with ſuch animoſities; when the unrevenged death of Craſſus, the blood of ſo many thouſand of their ſlaughtered Citizens, and the ſhamefull loſs of ſo many of the Roman Enſigns, ſhould rather have invited them to the conqueſt of the Parthian Empire. Of which thus feelingly the Poet,

Cumque ſuperba foret Babylon ſpolianda Trophæis,
Bella geri placuit, nullos habitura Triumphos.
And when proud Babylon ſhould have been conſtrain'd
To give us back our Enſigns lately gain'd;
We rather choſe ſuch Quarrells to purſue,
For which no Triumph could be juſtly due.

But ſuch is the condition and viciſſitude of humane affairs, that there is nothing permanent, and much leſs of certainty. The greateſt Monarchies of the world, the Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, Roman, have all had their periods, nothing remaining of them now but the name and memory. And what is now become of thoſe mighty Cities of the Eaſt, Ninive, Babylon, Ecbatana, Suſa, with the reſt mentioned in the Scriptures, and in Claſſical Authors? are not their very ruins now become inviſible? Where are the puiſſant Families of the Achæmenides of Perſia, the Seleucidæ of Syria, the Pharaohs and Ptolomies of Egypt, the Cæſars of Italy the Merovingians and Carolovingians of the Realm of France, & the Plantagenets of England? are they not all extinct & gone, not to be found but by the benefit of ſtory, and ſome antient monuments? And if it be ſo, as it is, with the greateſt Monarchies, the moſt mighty Cities of the world, we muſt not think that ſmaller Kingdoms & Eſtates can either be ſo evenly ballanced, or ſo ſurely founded, as not to be obnoxious alſo to the ſame viciſſitudes.

And

And being that saying of Optatus is most undoubtedly true, Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is but a part of the Common-wealth, we must not hope to finde it in a better posture than the Civill State in which it is, and under the protection whereof it subsists and flourisheth. The Church must needs miscarry in the ruin of the Civill State, and may miscarry many times, although the Civill State receive no such alterations. Compared for this reason to the Moon by the antient Fathers, who had observed her in her Prime, in her Increases, and her Full; and finally had not only seen her in the Wane also, but sometimes too under some horrible Eclipses. Which various condition of the Militant Church, the Scriptures and succeeding Stories have set forth so fully, that there need no better nor no clearer demonstrations of it. The Ark of God taken by the Philistins, the Temple destroyed by the Chaldæans, and prophaned by the Syrians, the Apostacy of ten Tribes at once from the Law of their God, and the extermination of the other two in a short time after, abundantly declare the frail condition and estate of the Jewish Church. And finde we not the same for the Christian also, in the removing of the Candlestick from the Asian Churches; and making them, together with those of Greece and Egypt, and all the flourishing Churches in the East and South, to languish and decay remedilesly under the mercilesse incroachments of the Turks and Saracens? He must be more than blind that sees not, more savage than those merciless men that grieves not, at their sad condition: but a dead member, at the most, of Christs mysticall Body, who feels not in himself the sufferings of those wretched Christians.

If now we look into the causes of that desolation which hath hapned in the Civill State of those mighty Empires; to what can we impute it but their crying sins? the pride of the Babylonians, the effeminacy of the Persians, the luxury of the Greeks: and such an aggregation of vices amongst the Romans (or Western Christians) before the breaking in of the barbarous Nations, that they were grown a scandall unto Christianity. In nobis patitur Christus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Christiana maledictum, as the devout Salvian then complained. Thus also in reference to the Church, did not the Idolatries of the ten Tribes hasten in the Assyrians? the shedding of the blood of so many Prophets by the other two, as much accelerate the coming in of the Chaldæans first, and the Romans afterwards? Do we not find the Arianism of the Eastern Churches to usher in the inundation of the Saracens; the Donatism of the South to have set open a wide Door to let in the Vandals? Did not the Saxons follow on the heels of Pelagianism, as soon almost as entertained amongst the Britains? If so, as most undoubtedly it was in the dayes of old, why should we think but that the Superstitions and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, the sacrilege and faction of the Churches of the Reformation, shall at the last receive the like Retribution: Or that the Divine Justice is so fast asleep that our sins must cry as loud, as the Priests of Baal did unto their God, before it be awakened by us? Assuredly we are no lesse sinners than any of those on whom the Tower of the Divine vengeance hath so heavily fallen, whose blood the Pilates of all Ages have mingled with their solemn and religious sacrifices: and therefore have no cause to hope, but that unless we do repent, we shall likewise perish.

The serious consideration of all these particulars hath made those alterations both in Church and State, which have hapned here amongst our selves, the less strange unto me. For is there any of these things, whereof it may be said, Ecce hoc est novum, Behold this is new? Eccl. 1.10. Have they not been already in the times before us? Do we not finde it positively affirmed by the wisest man that ever was, That which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been; Nihil enim novum est sub sole, for there is no new thing under the Sun, Eccl. 3.15. & 1.11. And though I cannot tell what effect the reading of this following Book may produce in others, yet I can warrantably say thus much of my self, that the observation of the fall of so many great and puissant Empires, the extirpation of so many mighty and renowned Families, the desolation of so many flourishing Christian Churches, as the composing of this Book did present me with (though formerly no strangers to me in the course of my Studies) did more conduce to the full humbling of my soul under the mighty hand of God, than either the sense of my misfortune, or any other morall consideration which had come before me. And I could wish the Reader may receive so much benefit by it (besides the profit and delight which Books of this nature carry with them) that the mighty man may learn hereby not to glory in his great strength, nor the wise to glo-

Let the great Leaders of theſe times in the Art of War, conſider the ſad ends of Joab, the Generall of David; and of Beliſarius, the Commander of Juſtinians Armies: whereof the one was ſlain inglorioufly at the Horns of the Altar, after all his ſervices; the other forced to beg his bread at the Gates of the Temple. Let the great Maſters of Wit and State-craft have before their eyes, the unſucceſſull ends of Achitopel, the Oracle of the times he lived in; and of Cæſar Borgias, propoſed by Machiavel for the Pattern of a Politick Prince: of which the one laid violent hands upon himſelf, becauſe his Counſell was not followed; the other, after the defailment of all his projects, and a long impriſonment to boot, forced to flie his Countrey, and ſlain obſcurely in an Ambuſh. Let all men lay unto their hearts the ebbs and floods, thoſe alternations and viciſſitudes, to which all humane power is ſubject; the ſlippery foundations of that might and greatneſs, which is not laid upon the Principles of Juſtice, and regulated by the Maximes of Chriſtian Piety; and that even thoſe which have dominion over others, have a God too above themſelves, to whom they are to render an accompt of all their Actions. Not ſuch a God, as that of Lewis the 11th. of France. Of whom it is reported, that he wore a Leaden Medail in his Bonnet in the form of a Crucifix: which, when he had cauſed any man to be killed whom he feared or hated, he would take into his hands and kiſs it, deſiring it to pardon him that one murther more, and it ſhould be the laſt which he would commit. Such mockeries as theſe may well be put on a Leaden God, but the God of Heaven and Earth will not ſo be mocked: who being Totus oculus and totum lumen, as the Father calleth him, can eaſily diſcern our intents and purpoſes, notwithſtanding thoſe diſguiſes which are put upon them; and ſee the nakedneſs of ſin in its uglieſt ſhape, though apparelled with the Fig-leaves *of the beſt pretences, which the ſelf-deceiving wit of man can patch up together. A GENERALL INTRODUCTION to the following Work, containing the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the same by the sonnes of men; the necessary use of History and Geographie, as well for understanding the Affairs of the Ages past, as for converse and correspondence with the Nations present; together with a brief view of some Generall Præcognita which necessarily are required unto the Knowledge of each.

WIth great both Piety and Prudence did the Apostles in their Summarie of the Christian faith, joyn our Belief in God the Father Almighty, with that clause or Article of making or Creating the Heaven and Earth. For as the name of Father doth imply making (Is not he thy father which hath made thee? saith the Prophet Moses, Deut. 32. v. 6.) so who but an Almighty Father could by his meer word, without any preexistent matter, create that goodly edifice of Heaven and Earth which we behold with so much wonder and applause. A work so full of wonder to the antient Gentiles, that some of them made the World a God. Vis illum (i. e. Deum) mundum vocare? non falleris; as it is in Seneca: others more rationally conceiving God to be the Soul of the World, as giving animation or beginning to it. And though they erred, as well in making the World a God, as God to be the Soul of the World, yet might they very well have said as one since hath done, That the World is nothing else but God unfolded, and manifested in the Creature. Nil aliud mundus universus quam Deus explicatus, as Cusanus a late Cardinall hath it. For certainely the speciall motives which did induce God unto this great work, were a desire and purpose to manifest his power, to exercise his providence, and declare his goodness. Not that God needed to have made the World in regard of himself; for the World we know was made in the beginning of time, but God is infinite and eternall before all times: but that it seemed good to him to create it at last, as a thing most conducible to his praise and glory; the Heavens declaring the glory of God, and the Earth shewing his handy-work, saith the Royall Psalmist. Some measuring the God of Heaven by their own affections, and finding nothing so agreeable to their own dispositions as to be in company, conceive that God being at last weary of his owne solitudes, did create the World, that he might have the company of the Angels in Heaven, and make a start into the Earth (when he saw occasion) to recreate himself with the sonnes of men. Quæ beata esse solitudo queat? What happiness (said Hortensius) can there be in solitude? To which Lactantius, Lib. 1. cap. 7. not being furnished with a better, doth return this Answer; That God cannot be sayd to be alone; habet enim Ministros quos vocamus Nuntios, as having the society of the Angels. But then Lactantius must suppose that the Angels were Co-eternal with God himself, (which were to make all Gods, & no God at all;) or else his Answer is no Answer, as to that Objection. How much more appositely might he have thus replyed unto Hortensius, That the supreme contentment possible to Almighty God is by reflecting on himself, and in himself contemplating his owne infinite glories: which being Co-eternall with himself, even from all Eternity, he needed no more company before the World was made, than he hath done since. Lactantius being himself a man of a very great reading, (though indeed a better Humanitian than Divine) could not but know those sweet delights which a man habited in learning takes in contemplation, and the good society he hath of his own dear thoughts when he is most retired from the sight of men. And if the wise Gentile could affirm so sadly, nunquam minus solum quam cum Solus esset, that he was never lesse alone than when he was by himself: what need can any rationall man suppose in Almighty God of having more company than himself to delight himself in? If this suffice not for an answer to that needless question, What God did before he made the World; let him take that of Augustine on the like occasion: who being troubled with the like curious and impertinent Caption, is said to have returned this Answer, fabricasse inferos curiosis, that he made Hell for all such troublesome and idle Questionists. Which resolution of that Father is by Sabinus, a late Dutch Poet, moulded into this handsome Epigram.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

When reverend Auſtin did in Africk preach,
An in Gods Houſe the ruder people teach,
As he the Worlds Creation prov'd, and taught
That God made all things by his Word, of nought:
A ſawcy Swain upſtarting needs would know,
How God before that did his time beſtow;
And what to ſpend his thoughts upon, he had,
When neither Heaven, nor Earth, nor Seas were made:
To which the Father tartly thus; He then Made Hel for thee, and ſuch audacious men.

But not to ſpend more time in anſwering ſo vain a caption, ſuffice it us to know, that it pleaſed God at laſt; when it ſeemed beſt unto his infinite and eternall Wiſdome, to create the World, and all things viſible and inviſible in the ſame contained. A time it had, in which it firſt began to be, which before was not; This Moſes calls Principium, a beginning ſimply. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth, in the firſt words of the Book of Geneſis, which is all one as if he had ſaid, the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that this unformed Maſs or Chaos which he entituleth there by the name of heaven and earth, was the beginning of, or firſt draught of thoſe ſeverall things which after were created in their proper times, that is to ſay, the firſt in order of time, becauſe made before them, not in order of cauſality, as the cauſes of them. Cœlum & terra in principio, i.e. ante omnia facta ſunt, ſaith Simon Pettius in his Scholies on S. Johns Goſpell: So that whether we do expound thoſe words that the Heaven and Earth had a beginning, or that Moſes by theſe words did mean, that out of that matter which he calls Heaven and Earth, as out of the beginning, or firſt matter, all things were created, it comes all to one: becauſe it is thereby acknowledged that the firſt matter was created by Almighty God, and therefore of neceſſity to have a beginning. And to this truth we have not only the authority and conſent of Scripture, but of the greateſt part of the old Philoſophers, guided thereto by this impoſſibility in nature, that any viſible work, whether it be naturall or artificiall, ſhould either give it ſelf a being, or have that being which it hath from no cauſe precedent: For from that Principle Tully argueth very rightly in his moſt excellent Book de Natura Deorum, that as a man coming into a goodly houſe in which he found nothing but Rats and Mice, could not conceive that either the houſe had built it ſelf, or had no other maker but thoſe Rats and Mice which were neſted in it; ſo neither can it be imagned, that either this World ſhould be eternall, of a ſelf-exiſtency, or was compoſed by any naturall Agent of what ſort ſoever. And this is that which is more briefly and expreſly ſaid by the Apoſtle, viz. that every houſe is built by ſome man, but he that built all things is God, Heb. 3. v. 4. It is true, that Ariſtotle being a very great enquirer into the works of Nature, conceived the world to be eternall; and yet was not alwaies conſtant unto that opinion. But then it is as true withall, that there was ſomething elſe that inclined him to it, than a meer admiration of the works of Nature. Democritus and ſome others had been of opinion, that the World was made in the beginning fortuitis atomorum concurſionibus, by the accidentall union or conjunction of thoſe ſeverall parcells, of which the Univerſe conſiſted; and that man himſelf was but voluntaria elementorum concretio, a voluntary mixture of all the elements, as Minutius hath obſerved out of their writings. To which abſurd opinion (as it was no better) though it found a generall imbracement amongſt many of the old Philoſophers, when Ariſtotle knew not how to ſubmit his moſt exquiſite judgement, and yet was deſtitute of ſuch further light as might more fully have inſtructed him in its true Originall; he rather choſe to grant the world to be eternall, than to be made of ſuch ridiculous, and unſound, though eternall Atoms. Et maluit hanc pulchram mundi faciem ab æterno eſſe quam aliquando ex æterna deformitate emerſiſſe: Valeſius in his Book de Sacra Philoſophia ſo pleads the caſe in his behalf; and I thank him for it, who am (I muſt confeſs) a great friend of Ariſtotles, whom ſome account for the Precurſor of our Saviour Chriſt in rebus naturalibus, as John the Baptiſt was in divinis.

Nor doth the Scripture and the light of Reaſon tell us onely this, that the whole world had a beginning, but by the help of Scripture, and the workes of ſome learned men, we are able to point out the time when it did begin, or to compute how many years it is preciſely from the firſt beginning, without any notable difference in the calculation. For though it be moſt truly ſaid citius inter Horologias quam Chronologias, that Clocks may ſooner be agreed than then Chronologers, yet moſt Chronologers in this point come ſo neer one another, that the difference is ſcarce obſervable. From the beginning of the world to the Birth of Chriſt, in the accompt of Beroaldus, are 3928. yeers; 3945. in the computation of the Genevians; 3960. in the eſteem of Luther, and 3963. in the calculation of Melanchthon, between whom and Beroaldus (being the leaſt and the greateſt) there is but 35. years difference, which in ſo long a courſe of time can be no great matter: Now if unto the calculation made by Beroaldus, which I conceive to be the trueſt, we add 1648. ſince the Birth of Chriſt, the totall of the time ſince the worlds creation will be 5576. yeers, neither more nor leſs. A thing which I the rather have inſiſted on, becauſe that from this Epoche or Æra of the Worlds creation, we ſhall compute the times of ſuch Kings and Princes, as reigned and flouriſhed in the world before the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour.

It being then reſolved as a thing undoubted, that God made the World, and that he made it in ſuch time as himſelf beſt pleaſed; let us next look upon the matter and the method which it pleaſed the Divine Majeſty to make uſe of in this wondrous work.

Firſt, for the matter, out of which all things were created, I take it, as before was ſaid, to be that which Moſes in the firſt words of Geneſis calls the Heaven and the Earth, becauſe they were ſo in potentia; but after telleth us more expliciteley, that that which he calleth Earth, was inanis et vacua, without form and void; and that which he called Heaven was but an overcaſt of darkneſs, or tenebræ ſuper faciem Abyſsi, as the vulgar reads it: Of which Chaos or confuſed Maſs we thus read in Ovid, who queſtionleſs had herein conſulted with the works of Moſes, being before his time communicated to the learned Gentiles:

Ante mare & terras & quod tegit omnia Cœlum
Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in Orbe,
Quem dixere Chaos, rudis indigeſtaq́, moles,
Nec quicquam niſi pondus iners, congeſtaq́, eodem
Non bene junctarum diſcordia ſemina rerum, &c.

Which I ſhall Engliſh from G. Sandys with ſome little change.

Before the Earth, the Sea, and Heaven were framed,
One face had natnre, which they Chaos named;
An indigeſted lump, a barren load,
Where jarring ſeeds of things ill-joyn'd abode:
No Sun as yet with light the world adorns,
Nor new Moon had repair'd her waining horns:
Nor hung the ſelf-poiz'd Earth in thin Air plac'd;
Nor had the Ocean the vaſt Shores imbrac'd;
Earth, Sea, and Ayr, all mixt: the Earth unſtable,
The Air was dark, the Sea unnavigable.
No certain form to any one aſſign'd,
This that reſiſts: For in one body joyn'd
The cold and hot, the dry and humid fight,
The ſoft and hard, the heavy with the light.

Out of this Chaos, or firſt matter, did God raiſe the world, according to thoſe ſeverall patts and lineaments which we ſee it in, not as out of any pre-exiſtent matter which was made before, and had not God for the Author or firſt Maker of it; but as the firſt preparatory matter which himſelf had made, including in the ſame potentially both the form and matter of the whole Creation, except the ſoul of man onely which God breathed into him: And therefore it is truly ſaid, that God made all things out of nothing; not out of nothing as the matter out of which it was made, for then that nothing muſt be ſomething, but as the terminus à quo, in giving them a reall and corporall being which before they had not, and did then firſt begin to have by the meer force and efficacy of his powerfull Word. And though it be a Maxim in the Schools of Philoſophie, Ex nihilo nil fit, that nothing can be made of nothing, that every thing which hath a being doth require ſome matter, which muſt be pre-exiſtent to it; yet this muſt either be condemned for erroneous Doctrine in the Chair of Divinity, or elſe be limited and reſtrained to Naturall agents, which cannot go beyond the ſphere of their own activity. Inviſible and ſupernaturall Agents are not tied to Rules, no not in the production of the works of Nature, though Nature conſtituted and eſtabliſhed in a certain courſe, work every thing by line and meaſure as a certain Rule: And ſo it was with God in the Worlds Creation; he did not only make the world, but he made it out of nothing, by his Word alone: Dixit et facta ſunt, he ſpake the word and they were made, ſaith the royal Pſalmiſt, Pſ. 33. v. 9. There went no greater pains nor matter to the whole Creation, but a Dixit Deus: And this not only ſaid by Moſes, but by David too, Verbo Domini firmati ſunt Cœli, & ſpiritu Oris ejus omnis virtus eorum, v. 6. i.e. by the Word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the Hoſts thereof by the breath of his mouth. In which it is to be obſerved, that though the Creation of the World be generally aſcribed to God the Father, yet both the Son and the Holy Ghoſt had their parts therein; Verbo Domini, by the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, ſaith the Prophet David: In the beginning was the Word; all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made, ſaith S. John the Apoſtle. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, ſaith Moſes in the Book of the Law: Et ſpiritu oris ejus, and by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth were all the Hoſts of Heaven created, ſaith David in the Book of Pſalms. Made by his Word, and yet not made together in one inſtant of time. In the firſt day he laid the foundation, and no more; in the five next he raiſed the building: and this he did, to teach us men deliberation in our words and actions: and to ſet forth withall unto us both his Power and Wiſdom. His Power he manifeſted in the Method of the whole Creation, in that he did produce what effects he pleaſed without the help of naturall cauſes: as giving Light unto the World before he had created either Sun or Moon; making the Earth fruitfull, and to bring forth plants, without the influence or motion of the Heavenly bodies. And for his Wiſdom he expreſſed it in as high a degree, in that he did not create the very Beaſts of the field before he had provided them of fodder and ſufficient herbage; nor made man after his own Image, before he had finiſhed all the reſt of his works, fitted his houſe, and furniſhed it with all things neceſſary both for life and pleaſures.

But all things being fitted and prepared for him, at laſt comes Man into the world; and he doth make his entrance with a greater pomp than any of the reſt of the Creatures which were before him. They came in with no other Ceremony than a Dixit Deus: but in the workmanſhip of Man there was a Conſultation held by the bleſſed Trinity: It is there, Faciamus Hominem, let us make a Man; each Perſon contributing ſomewhat (as it were) to his compoſition. For God the Father as the chief Workman, or principall Agent, gave him form and feature, in which he did imprint his own heavenly image. The Son, who is the living and eternall Word, gave him voice or ſpeech, that ſo he might be able to ſet forth Gods praiſes. The Holy Ghoſt, the Lord and giver of life, (as the Nicene Fathers truly call him) breathing into his noſtrills the breath of life, whereby he became a living Spirit. In this one Creature was amaſſed whatever thing was excellent in the whole Creation; the quantity or ſubſtance of Inanimate creatures, the life of Plants, the ſenſe of Beaſts, and the underſtanding of Angells. In this one Creature did God ſhew the excellency of his power and wiſdom, in printing on him his own Image, and giving him Dominion over all the works of his hands; which Image of God they look for in a very wrong place, who hope to finde it in mans Body, though of a gallant compoſition and erected ſtructure. The Heathen Oratour was able in this point to inform ſome erroneous Chriſtians, Ad Divinam imaginem propius accedit humana virtus quam figura, Man doth approach more neer to the Image of God in the endowments of his Minde, than in the ſtructure of his body, as divinely Cicero. And as for that Dominion which God gave him over the works of his hands, the Patent is at large laid down in the firſt of Geneſis. For God no ſooner ſaid, Faciamus Hominem, let us make man after our own Image, but preſently he addes this Charter of Supreme Authority, And let him have dominion over the fiſh of the Sea, and over the fowles of the Air, and over the Cattell, and over all the Earth. A more particular explication of thoſe ſeverall points, wherein that Image and this Power do conſiſt eſpecially, I ſhall not take upon me or endeavour now, as being not of this place and purpoſe: Which onely is to ſhew, that as man in the very act of his Creation participated more of the Divine Image, than all other Creatures; ſo was he by Gods ſpeciall grant infeoffed with a larger power than any of the reſt could pretend unto. Man, though made lower than the Angells, is in this above them, that all the Creatures of the World were made to be his ſervants, and to attend upon his pleaſure. And yet this great and mighty Prince, this generall Lord of all the World, and the Creatures in it (ſetting aſide the dignity of his firſt Creation) doth come into the world in a worſe condition than any of the Creatures which were made to ſerve him, naked, and impotent, and ſpeechleſs, without the uſe of reaſon; neither of power to help himſelfe, or ask help of others. Whereof Lactantius in my minde gives a very good reaſon, who telleth us, that God ſends man into the world, nudum & inermem, naked, and weak, and undefenced againſt all violences and dangers; whereas all Creatures elſe, munita indumentis naturalibus & armata ſunt, are naturally both armed and clothed, and able to relieve themſelves. And this he doth unto this end, that man being naturally deſtitute of thoſe outward helps, might make uſe of his inward faculties of judgement, wit and underſtanding, in furniſhing himſelf with that which he wants by nature. For hereunto the firſt originall of all Manufactures and mechanick Arts is to be referred, as is moſt plain and evident from the Book of God; in which we ſee, that preſently upon the procreation of mankind, Abel betook himſelf unto keeping ſheep, and Cain to husbandry; Iubal to handle the Harp, Organ, and ſuch Muſicall Inſtruments; and Tubal-Cain to work upon braſs and iron, two metalls very neceſſary to moſt kinde of Trades. The like may be ſuppoſed in all other myſteries and Arts of living, though there be no expreſſe mention of them in thoſe early dayes, except it be the Art of building, or the Carpenters Trade, which no queſtion is as old as any, as by the building of Cain's City, and Noah's Ark is moſt cleerly evidenced. God made the world, and fitted it with all things neceſſary for the life of man, leaving man to provide himſelf of ſuch Additions, as rather ſerve for comforts and conveniencies in the way of his living, than the neceſſities of his life.

Here then we have the works of God, and the works of Men to be conſidered in purſuit of our preſent Argument. The works of God, in ſhadowing the Earth with Trees and Forreſts, interlacing it with Chryſtall ſtreams and capacious Rivers, inriching it with fruitfull and delicious

Vales,

Vales, adorning it with lofty Mountains, and ſtocking both the Hils and Vales with all ſorts of Cattell. But nothing more ſets forth the Power and Wiſdom of Almighty God, as it relates to theſe particulars, than that moſt admirable intermixture of Want with Plenty, whereby he hath united all the parts of the World in a continuall Traffique and Commerce with one another; ſome Countries being deſtitute of thoſe Commodities with which others abound, and being plentifull in thoſe which the others want. Inſomuch that as in the Body of man, that Microſm, or little World, the Head cannot ſay that it hath no need of the Foot, nor the Foot of the Hand, nor other members of the reſt: ſo neither in the Body of the great World, can Europe ſay to Aſia, or Spain to England, I have no need of your Commodities, or am not wanting in thoſe things whereof thou boaſteſt an abundance. Some thing there is in every Countrey, which may be ſpared to ſupply the defect of others, and are accordingly vented in the way of Merchandiſe: Of which, thus Du Bartas in his Colonies.

From Holland Hops; Horſe from the banks of Rhine.
From England Wooll. All lands, as God diſtributes,
To the Worlds treaſure pay their ſundry tributes.

This, as Du-Bartas ſpeaks of the preſent times, ſo queſtionleſs the ſame, or the like Commerce held good in the firſt Ages of the Worlds Creation; God furniſhing all Countries from the firſt beginning with ſome Staple-commodities for the benefit of themſelves and others; for the maintaining of that entercourſe between Nation and Nation, which makes them link the cloſer in the bonds of Amitie. And to this end alſo ſerve thoſe ſeverall Manufactures wherewith ſome Countries do abound in reſpect of others, but looked on in the preſent Book as the works of men. And of this kind alſo are there ſeverall Politses and forms of Government: For though all Magiſtracy in it ſelf be from God originally, and that the Monarchicall form comes neereſt to the Government uſed by God himſelf; yet being that ſome Polities are meerly but humane inventions, and that even Monarchy it ſelf is founded on the conſent of men, explicitely or implicitely required unto it; All Government or Magiſtracie is called an Ordinance of man in holy Scripture. 1 Pet. 11. v. 13. But thoſe particular Works of men which are the moſt conſiderable part of our preſent ſubject, are Caſtles, Towns, and Cities of moſt eminent note; which thrive and proſper in the World according as they do partake of thoſe Conveniencies which conduce moſt to their Magnificence and Greatneſs. Of theſe Boterus gives us many (relation being had to the time he lived in) but of thoſe many we ſhall touch upon the principall onely, paſſing by thoſe of leſſer note, as pleaſantneſs of Site, fruitfulneſs of Soyl, ſalubritie of Air, and ſuch like obvious Obſervations. Firſt then, there is required to the Magnificence and Splendour of Cities, a Navigable River, or ſome ſuch eaſie paſſage by Sea, which will bring thither a continual concourſe and trade of Merchants; as at Venice, London, Amſterdam. Secondly, ſome Staple-Manufactures or Commodities, which will draw the like reſort of Merchants, though the conveniencie of Sea or Rivers invite them not; as in Nurenberg in Germany, a dry Town, but mightily Traded. Thirdly, the Palace of the Prince: For ubi Imperator, ibi Roma, where the Court is, there will be a continuall confluence of Nobles, Gentry, Merchants, and all ſorts of Trades: And by this means Madrid, not long ſince a poor beggerly Village, is grown the moſt populous Citie in all Spain. Fourthly, the Reſidence of the Nobility, beautifieth a Citie with ſtately and magnificent Buildings; which makes the Cities of Italy ſo much excell ours in England, their Nobles dwelling in the Cities, and ours for the moſt part in their Countrie-houſes. Fifthly, the Seats, or Tribunals of Juſtice, on which both Advocates and Clients are to give attendance; as in the Parliamentary Cities in France, and Spires in Germany. Sixtly, Univerſities and Schools of Learning, to which the Youth from all parts are to make reſort; which hath been long the chief cauſe of the flouriſhing of Oxford, Cambridge, Bononia in Italy, and other Cities of good note beyond the Seas. Seventhly, Immunity from Tolls and Taxes; moſt men being moſt deſirous to inhabit there, where their Income will be greateſt, their Privileges largeſt, and their Diſburſements leaſt: So Naples, Florence, Venice, having been deſolated by Plagues, were again ſuddainly re-peopled by granting large Immunities to all comers-in. And laſt of all, the opinion of Sanctitie, either for the Reliques of Saints, or ſome noted Shrines, or the reſidence of ſome Famous man, or the Seat of Religion, is not the leaſt Allomant which draws people to it, to the great enriching of ſome Cities: And of this, Rome it ſelf can give us two moſt pregnant evidences, the one in reference to the Popes, and theſe latter times, that famous Town, not otherwiſe ſubſiſting now, than by the conſtant reſidence of the Popes and Cardinals; whoſe abſence while the Papall Sea was kept at Avignon, had made it over-grown with Briars and Brambles, and buried it almoſt in its own ſad ruins. The other, in the perſon of Titus Livius the Hiſtorian, to ſee which man there came ſo many from the Coaſts of France and Spain, that Saint Hierome elegantly ſaith, Quos ad ſui contemplationem Roma non traxerat, unius hujus hominis fama perduxit; qui jam urbem tantam ingreſſi, aliud extra Urbem quærerent.

Such are the cauſes of the Greatneſs and Magnificence of Cities, when they are once built; none of all which might poſſibly be looked at by the firſt builders of Cities, I mean by Cain before the Flood, and by Nimrod after it; who aimed more at the love of Empire, and ſelf-preſervation, than at the generall good of Mankind, or the particular wealth of thoſe amongſt whom they lived. Of Cain it is affirmed expreſly in the Book of God, That being poſſeſſed with this fear, that every one that found him would lay hands upon him and ſlay him, in revenge of the blood of Abel; He builded a Citie, and called it by the name of his ſon Enoch. Gen. 4. 17. Builded a Citie? For what reaſon? To fortifie and ſecure himſelf againſt all revenge, as the Text doth intimate; or thereby to oppreſſe his Neighbours, as Ioſephus witneſſeth. Neither was this the onely Citie of the firſt Ages, though none but this be mentioned in the Book of God. And that which the Scripture ſaith of Jubal, that he was the Father of ſuch as dwell in Tents, and of ſuch as have Cattell; that is to ſay, he was the firſt of thoſe which lived upon Paſturage, and followed their cattell up and down with their moveable Tents, not having any certain home or habitations, as the wild Arabs now, and the ancient Nomades; Is proof ſufficient, that the reſidue of all Mankind lived a more civill kind of life in their Towns and Villages. And if Pomponius Mela be of any credit (as in theſe things, I think, he is) he will inform us, that the Citie of Ioppa was built before the Flood; that the King thereof was named Cepha; and that his name, and the name of his Brother Phineas, together with the Grounds and Principles of their Religion, were found graven upon certain Altars of ſtone. But whether this be ſo, or not, certain it is, that as well Canaan in the Weſt, whereon Ioppa ſtood, as the Land of Nod on the Eaſt ſide of Paradiſe, where Cain built his Citie, were peopled long before the Flood; and ſo were moſt of the other parts of the World beſides: And if well peopled in all, or moſt parts thereof, no doubt but they had Villages and Towns, yea and Cities too, as well for neceſſary habitation, as for ſtrength and ſafety. Now that the World was throughly peopled before the Flood, ſeems clear to me by that great and univerſall Deluge, which God was pleaſed to bring upon the Face of all the earth: For what need all the Earth be buried in that Sea of waters, if all the Earth had not been peopled, and all the people of it guiltie of oppreſſion in the ſight of God? Beſides, it is expreſſly ſaid in the Holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 350 years after the Flood, in the largeſt Accompt, and not 300 in the ſhorteſt, there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philiſtims, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinaar, Elaſar, Ellas, and of the Nations, who queſtionleſſe had their Lands well peopled; that both Chaldea, and Meſopotamia, in the time of Abraham, had their ſeverall Cities, as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charan in the other; and that Damaſcus the chief Citie of Syria was then founded alſo: Not to ſay any thing of the building of Babel, Erach, Accad, and Chalneh in the land of Shinar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Reſen, Rehoboth, and Chalah in the land of Aſſyria, mention whereof is made in the 10 of Geneſis. And it is found in good and credible Authors, that Ninus the third Aſſyrian Monarch (who lived before the birth of Abraham) having ſubdued the Kings of Media and Armenia, invaded Baſtria with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 200000 Horſe, and 16000 armed Chariots, and was encountred by Zoroaſter the King thereof with an Army of four hundred thouſand. The credibility whereof if it were diſputed, might be affirmed from the like numerous Army brought by Xerxes againſt the Greeks, though in times long after following. And if we will give credit unto Diodorus Siculus, who voucheth Cteſias for his Author, Semiramis the Wife of Ninus invaded India with an Army of three Millions of men, and upwards; and yet was overmatched, and ſlain by an Indian King. If then within the ſpace of 400 years, we find the Eaſtern parts to be ſo well planted, ſo many Kings poſſeſſed of their Regall Thrones, and many of them able to impreſs ſuch infinite Armies; Why may we not conclude, that in the courſe of 1656 years (for ſo long it was from the Creation to the Flood) the whole World was inhabited and planted in all parts thereof; eſpecially conſidering the long lives of men, amounting to 800, or 900 years; and conſequently the long time they had to apply themſelves to the Act of Generation. And though I have no certain ground for it in the Book of God, yet I am apt enough to be of Mercators opinion; who placing the 16 Dynaſty of the Kings of Egypt (where Euſebius begins to calculate the Egyptian times) at the firſt planting of that Country by the Sons of Noah, reckoneth the former fifteen to have been before the Flood, and to reach very neer the times of the firſt Creation. That Miſraim the Son of Ham was poſſeſſed of Egypt within two hundred years after the Flood, is a truth undoubted. Nor ſee I any cauſe to doubt, but that in the like ſpace of time from the firſt Creation, it might be planted alſo by the ſons of Adam; conſidering, as we ought to do, that in the infancy of the World, when the bodies of men were moſt perfect, and of greateſt vigour, they obſerved no degree of Kindred or Conſanguinity, nor tied themſelves ſo ſtrictly to one woman as they ſhould have done. And for the names of all the Kings of thoſe ſeverall Dynaſties, either they they might be left engraven upon Pillars, such as that of Seth, or upon Altars of stone, as in those of Ioppa; or Misraim might have them by tradition from the hands of Noah, and so deliver them by tale unto his posteritie: the Egyptians being generally very good Heralds, and standing very much on their own Antiquitie. And if this may be said of Egypt (as for my part I see no reason but it may) then may the like be said of all Countries else, that they had their severall Kings and Rulers, and set forms of Government: The Fathers of Families in those times having the command and soveraignty over all that descended of them. Nor make I any question of it, but they had severall Languages and forms of Speech, at least as to the Dialect and pronunciation, although the Radicals of the Language might remain the same: But being there are no Remainders of this first Plantation (unless we will give credit to some Iewish Fablers, who tell us of some Giants who saved themselves upon Mount Sion; or that of Masius Damascenus, who speaks of some that saved themselves on an high Hill called Baris, in some part of Armenia) I shall the less insist upon it: Nor had I stood so long upon these first Ages, which Moses passeth over with so short a Narrative, but that it is affirmed by Pererius, a right learned Jesuit, that neither Egypt, nor Assyria, nor the rest of the World was planted and inhabited before the Flood; and that upon no stronger reason, for ought I can find, but that it is affirmed in the last words of the tenth of Genesis, That, by these (that is to say, by the posteritie of the Sons of Noah) were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Flood. Out of which words he thus concludeth, Quo significatur talem divisionem non fuisse ante diluvium; By which it doth appear (saith he) that in the times before the Flood was no such division.

'Tis true, that this division of the world by the Sonnes of Noah hath the best evidence in Scripture; because there is expresse Text for it, which is not for the first Plantations: But looking on the great increase of mankind before the flood, that saying of Berosus will prove tantamont to a Text of Scripture, Ad comparandas novas sedes necessitatem compulisse, that they were driven then by necessity to seek new dwellings; the necessity of providing victualls for themselves and their families, being as strong a motive unto such dispersions, as the Confusion of Tongues was afterwards: The difference is, that that which such necessity would have done in long tract of time, the confusion of Tongues did in an instant: not onely making those proud Builders to give over the finishing of the Tower which they had begun, but to unite themselves with such whose language came most neer to that which themselves were masters of. It was high time, no question, to desist from this proud attempt, when the Labourer understood not what the Workman called for, but brought him things quite contrary to his expectation. But because some Plantations had no reference to the Confusion of Tongues, but were made before it, or on the sending out of such Colonies as were neerest to the place where the Ark did rest; I think it not amiss to resolve that question touching the resting of the Ark, on which the Plantations of the East have so great dependance. All that the Scripture telleth us of it, is, that the Ark rested on the Mountains of Ararat; but where those Mountains are, that it telleth us not: I know Iosephus, and some other, of more eminent note, (but such as ground themselves upon his authority) affirm those Mountaines of Ararat to be the hills of Armenia, which they doe chiefly on these Reasons: First, because Armenia is called Ararat in the Book of God, as it is confessedly. And secondly, because of an old Tradition, countenanced by Berosus, and some others of the ancient Writers, cited by Iosephus, affirming, that on the Gordiean Mountains in Armenia Major, some of the Relicks of the Ark were remaining in their times, and used as a preservative against inchantments: Which notwithstanding I incline rather to the opinion of Goropius Becanus, (who amongst many strange whimseys broached some notable truths) by whom the Ark is said to rest on the top of Mount Caucasus in the Confines of Tartaria, Persia, and India. His Arguments are many, but I look on two as of greatest consequence: the first whereof is grounded upon evident reason; the second on plain Text of Scripture. That which is grounded upon reason, is the exceeding populosity of those Eastern Countreys, into which none of those by whom the world was planted after the Confusion of Languages, are yet reported to have travailed with their severall Colonies, by any who have took most pains in this discovery. Those infinite numbers which Staurobates, one (and but one of many) of the Kings of the Indians, brought into the field against Semiramis; and the vast Army of Zoroaster the King of Bactria, conducted out of that one Province against Ninus; are proof enough, that those Countries were of an elder Plantation, than to be a second or third Casting of some other Swarm setled in Persia, or Assyria, after the Confusion: For Ninus who was the Husband of Semiramis, was but the Grandchild of Nimrod; and I must needs look upon it, as a thing impossible, that those vast Armies which Semiramis was able to raise out of all her Dominions, should be encountred by one King with an equall force, and that of his own Subjects onely; If that one King, and those his Subjects had been some late Colonie of those new Plantations, and not possessed of a Country peopled and inhabited before that Confusion. Nor was it but upon some good ground, that the Scythians (who inhabited on the North of Mount Caucasus) were generally esteemed the most antient Nation in the World; and carried it away from the Egyptians, Phrygians, and all other Competitours, with this publick Verdict, Scytharum gens semper antiquissima; which ground could be no other, but the neighbourhood of the Ark unto them (though perhaps that ground long since forgotten, was not stood upon) and the dwelling of Noah and his children neer the place of the Ark, till numbers, and neceſſity compelled them to inlarge their borders. And in the inlarging of their Borders, I ſhall make no queſtion, but that ſuch parts as lay neereſt, were peopled and poſſeſſed before thoſe which lay furtheſt off; according to the method of Plantations in all Ages ſince. This, though it be to me a convincing Argument, yet it falls ſhort of that which comes from the Text it ſelf, both in authority and weight; where it is ſaid of the Heads of thoſe ſeverall Families which afterwards joyned together in the building of Babel, that, As they went from the East, they found a Plain in the land of Shinaar, and there they abode. Gen. 11. *v.*2. If then they came from the Eaſt to the land of Shinaar, as the Text ſaith plainly that they did, it might well be that they came from thoſe parts of Aſia, on the South of Caucaſus, which lie East of Shinaar, though ſomewhat bending to the North; impoſſible they ſhould come from the Gordiæan Mountains in the greater Armenia (ſuppoſed to be the Hills which the Ark did reſt on) which lie not onely full North of Shinaar, but many degrees unto the Weſt: For Babylonia, or Shinaar, is ſituate in the Latitude of 35, and the Longitude of 79, and 80. the Latitude of the Gordiæan Mountains in 41, and their Longitude in 75. By which Accompt thoſe Mountains are 6 Degrees more Northwards, and 5 Degrees more Weſtwards than the Land of Shinaar; by no means to be reckoned on the East of that Vallie, except we make Moſes (whoſe hand God guided in his Books) to ſpeak God knows what; or in plain terms, to ſpeak plain non ſenſe. And though this Scripture be ſo clear, that it needs no Commentarie, yet the perplexities I find amongſt thoſe of the other opinion, in ſhifting out of the autoritie of ſo plain a Text, doe adde in my conceit ſome moment and weight unto it. For ſome will have the Mountains of Ararat to be indeed on the North of the Land of Shinaar, but with ſome bending towards the East; which were it true, as nothing is more truly falſe, Moſes had never told us that they came from the Eaſt, but from ſome Countries of the North, which lay towards the Eaſt. Others will have a double progreſs of the Heads of their ſeverall Families: Firſt, from the Mountains of Ararat, or the Plains of Armenia, to the Fields of Aſſyria, and Suſiana; And ſecondly, from thence to the land of Shinaar. But of this firſt journey there is ne gry quidem, nor ſo much as any one ſyllable in all the Scripture; beſides the needleſneſs of making them go ſo far about, and to croſs over the great Rivers Euphrates and Tigris; whereas they had a ſhorter, and an eaſier paſſage. Capellus, ſingular by himſelf, quarrelleth with the Tranſlation (received without diſpute by all other Criticks) and will not have the Hebrew Kedem to be rendred Eaſt, but to ſignifie that Region, whatſoever it was, which was inhabited by Kedem the ſon of Iſmael, of whom we find mention Gen. 25. 15. But then beſides his quarrell with all other Tranſlations, he ſuppoſeth a former progreſs from the Mountains of Ararat to that land of Kedem; and conſequently falleth into a part of the Errour before refelled. Bochartus finding (if not fancying) that the Aſſyrians called all thoſe parts of their Empire beyond Tygris, the Eaſtern, and thoſe on this ſide of it, the Weſtern; Would thence conclude, that theſe Heads may be ſaid by Moſes to have come from the Eaſt, becauſe they came from one of the Eaſtern Provinces of the Aſſyrian Empire. Every way faulty in this point: For beſides that, the greateſt part of Armenia lieth on the North of Tygris, and the leaſt part of it on the Weſt, and therefore not within the compaſs of the Eaſtern Provinces; and that Bochartus hath not proved (nor indeed can prove) that this diviſion was in uſe in the time of Moſes; We may as rationally conclude, and with leſs abſurditie, that the firſt Inhabitants of Britain, might have been ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, or any Writer of that time, to come out of the Weſt (though he well knew they came from Gaul, which is plainly Eaſt of it) becauſe Gaul in his time was a Province of the Weſt parts of the Empire. Having thus fortified our opinion both with Scripture and Reaſon, the Arguments produced againſt us will be eaſily anſwered. For though Armenia be granted to be the Countrie of Ararat; yet the Mountains of Ararat may extend beyond the Countrie. That mighty Ridge of Mountains which beginning in Aſia the leſs run as far as India (by the Antients commonly called Mount Taurus) might very well be called by Moſes the Mountains of Ararat, becauſe that was the firſt Countrie of the greater Aſia by which they paſſed; and where they were of greater note than they had been formerly. Juſt as the Adriatick Sea took that name from Adria, then the chief Port of it, though it waſhed many Shores beſides: Or as ſome Hils with us are called Malvern Hils, becauſe they are higheſt neer that Village, though they extend themſelves into other Lordſhips. And as for the Authoritie of Tradition, and the Teſtimony of humane Writers, which (as before was ſaid) are brought in for an help, touching ſome Relicks of the Ark to be ſeen on the Gordiæan Mountains, I look upon it as an Argument of no weight at all. For firſt, Beroſus (followed herein by all the reſt) reports it onely on the ground of uncertain hear-ſay; which is a weak ſtaff for ſo heavy a cauſe to rely upon. Secondly, to balance the authoritie of Beroſus (if of any credit in this caſe) we have the teſtimony and authoritie of Porcius Cato, as antient almoſt as he, affirming poſitively, in Scythia Saga renatum eſſe mortale genus, that Mankind was repaired in that part of Scythia, which after was poſſeſſed by the Sacans: And they, we know, dwelt in thoſe parts of Scythia which lay next to Bactria, a Province of the Perſian Empire, and not far from the branches of Mount Caucaſus. And Thirdly, unto one Tradition to oppoſe another; thoſe of Mount Caucaſus do aver, that a large Vineyard in Margiana, neer the foot of that Mountain, was of Noah's Plantation: Of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Tartaria.

It is now time I ſhould go forwards with the Builders of Babel, and their wide diſperſions; for for whom it was high time to conſort themſelves with ſuch as they could underſtand; the neceſſity of diſcourſe and conference on that fatall Accident, making them lay aſide their old acquaintances, and joyn themſelves to others of their own new Language. I know that many learned men, according to the number of names laid down in the tenth of Gen. being 70, have made ſo many Languages to have been ſpoken upon that Confuſion: And that of thoſe, 26 being the Poſteritie of Sem, diſperſed themſelves about Aſia the greater; 30 others of the loyns of Cham, peopled Africk, Arabia and Syria; and that the 14 which remain, being the iſſue of Japhet, withdrew themſelves towards Europe, and the leſſer Aſia. But this, as to the number of Languages, I take to be but a conceit, though many, more improbable, have paſſed for currant: It being plain, that Canaan and his Sonnes, eleven in all, had but one Language amongſt them, which was the Hebrew, or the Language of the land of Canaan. And as for Iokan and his Sonnes, being 13 in number, conſidering that he was the younger Brother of Phaleg, in whoſe time this Confuſion hapned, it is moſt probable, and avowed for a certain truth, that either none of them were born, or if they were, yet they were all of them too young to have an hand in the deſign for the building of the Tower of Babel; and conſequently could not be within the curſe of confounded Languages. So, here is neer a third part of the 70 to be taken off; as poſſibly might all the Sons of Miſraim be, if it were worth the while to inſiſt upon it. This then I take but for a fancy. And as for that, of the diſperſion into the ſaid three parts of the (then) known World, I take it to be true enough in long tract of time; but falſe enough, if underſtood of any preſent ſeparation of the Sonnes of Noah into parts ſo far remote and diſtant from one another. For what needed any ſuch remote Plantations be, as long as they had room enough to live one neer another, and ſo enjoy that civill entercourſe, and mutuall ſociety which the nature of Mankind doth moſt delight in? And therefore I conceive it to be far more probable, that they who met together for the building of Babel, joyning themſelves to men of the ſame Language with them, did firſt ſet down upon the places neer the Valley of Shinaar; and from thence propagated and diſperſed themſelves into further Countries, as either the neceſſity of providing of Victuals; or ſeeking better and more fruitfull habitations for themſelves and theirs; or the deſire of being out of the reach of ſome potent Neighbours, whoſe yoke they found too heavy for their necks to bear, did enforce them to it. And being ſo ſetled to their mindes, the addition of a few more years brought the like neceſſitie of ſending Colonies further off, as they grew more or leſs populous in their generations: It being in Plantations of Men, as in that of Bees, amongſt whom one Swarm ſends out another, that begets a Caſtling, till the whole ground or Garden grow too ſmall to hold them. For thus (to ſeek no further for an inſtance of it) the Gauls firſt planted Britain, the Britans Ireland, the Iriſh Scotland and the Iſles. Thus the Helvetians finding their old dwellings both too barren to ſuſtein, and too narrow to contain their multitudes, anguſtos ſe fines habere arbitrantes, as in Cæſars Commentaries, intended to plant themſelves in Gaul. And thus the Syrians and Phœnicians flying the dreadfull ſword of Ioſuah the ſon of Nun, ſought them out dwellings further off from the preſent danger, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. On the like motives and inducements did the firſt people after the Flood diſtribute and diſperſe themſelves into ſeverall parts, as their poſterities have done ſince, and will do to the end of the World in all probabilitie: Giving their own names, or ſome names of their own impoſing, upon the Countries planted or diſcovered by them. And though the length, and conſuming nature of time, hath either changed or worn out the names impoſed by the firſt Adventurers, I mean the firſt Planters after the Flood: Yet all the Footſteps of Antiquitie are not ſo defaced, but that ſome Nations and Cities have preſerved the memory of their firſt Founders and true Parents. In the diſcovery whereof, as Ioſephus in his Book of Iewiſh Antiquities did firſt lead the way, and gave good light to thoſe who have travelled in it: So a more notable proficiency hath been made therein by Junius in his Notes on the tenth of Geneſis, Sir Walter Ralegh in his excellent Hiſtory, and lately by Bochartus a French Writer in his Book called Geographia Sacra. Out of whoſe learned labours, and ſome Animadverſions of mine own, I ſhall here ſay ſomewhat concerning the Plantation of the World by the Sons of Noah; leaving the more exact and punctuall deſcription of it unto the Hiſtory of thoſe ſeverall Lands and Countries which were planted by them.

Firſt therefore to begin with the poſterity of Sem, as thoſe who fixed themſelves in Aſia, without wandring further, we finde Sem to have had five ſons, that is to ſay, Elam, Aſſur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram, of whom there is no iſſue on Record in holy Scripture, but onely of Arphaxad and Aram: And of theſe two there are but four ſonnes given to Aram, viz. Uz, Hul, Gether, and Meſech, and but one to Arphaxad, which was Selah: To Selah was born Heber, to Heber, Phales, the Anceſter of Abraham, and Iokan the father of thoſe thirteen ſonnes, whoſe names we ſhall rehearſe hereafter, if occaſion be. From Elam, who is firſt named, did deſcend the Elamites, a people bordering on the Medes, and therefore oft-times joyned together in the Scriptures, as, Go up, O Elam; beſiege, O Media. Eſ. 21.*v.*2. And all the Kings of Elam, all the Kings of the Medes. *Ier.*25.*v.*25. And in the ſecond of the Acts, Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, march in rank and file, as being Nations bordering upon one another. The principall City of this people was called Elymais, mention whereof is made in the ſecond of Maccab. cap. 6.*v.*2. Sufficiently famous for the rich and magnificent Temple which was there conſecrated to Diana. A City ſeated on the banks of the River Eulæus, and neighbouring cloſe to Suſiana, which therefore is ſometimes included in the name of Elam, as Dan. 8. *ver.*2. I was (ſaith he) in the Palace of Susa, in the Province of Elam; where Elam is not taken for the Province of the Elamites only, but as it gave denomination unto all those Nations whom they after mastered. The second son of Sem is Assur, of whom there is no question made amongst the Learned, but that he was the Father of the Assyrians, called Assyres in some old Greek Writers: Not of the whole people of that great and unwieldy Empire, who sometimes generally passe by the name of Assyrians; but of the people of Assyria strictly and properly so called, as it denotes the Country about Nineve (the Regall City of that Empire) which after was called Adiabene. Iuxta hunc Circuitum Adiabene, Assyria priscis temporibus vocata, as in Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 33. Arphaxad comes next after Assur, and him Iosephus makes to be the Father of the Chaldeans, called antiently Arphaxadæi, if he tell us true. But others tells us, and that more probably perhaps, that he planted in that part of Assyria which was first called Arphaxitis, afterwards Arrapachitis; by which name it occurreth in the Tables of Ptolomie. Lud the fourth son is generally said to be the Father of the Lydians, a people of Asia the lesse; the names of Lud, and Lydi (or Λυδοι, as the Grecians call them) being much alike. And it is possible enough that some of the posterity of this Lud might afterwards settle in those parts, and call the Country by the name of Lud their common Ancestor; as the posteritie of Abraham took unto themselves the name of Hebrews from Heber, one of the Progenitors of their father Abraham. But that Lud should in person go so far from the rest of the sonnes of Sem, I cannot easily imagine. For Aram the fift and last (as they stand in order of the Text) sets himself down close by his Brethren, in the Land of Syria, which in the Hebrew is called Aram, and from thence the name of Aramites was given to the Inhabitants of it. Of which, and of the severall Provinces which were hence denominated, we shall hereafter speak more fully when we come to Syria. Onely take now this testimony and acknowledgment from the pen of Strabo, Quos nos Syros vocamus, ipsi Syri Aramehios & Arameos vocant. Those (saith he) which we now call Syrians, do call themselves Arameans, or Aramenians. In, and about the same parts did the four Sons of Aram set themselves and their Families; Uz in that part of Syria, which is called Syria Damascena, or Aram Dammesek; the building of the great Citie of Damascus being generally ascribed unto him; and the Land of Uz, bordering South upon Damascus, taking denomination from him. The like did Hul, or Chul, the next son of Aram, whom both Josephus and St. Hierome setle in Armenia, or Aramenia, as in Strabo: And that not improbably, considering that there is a Region in Armenia, which Stephanus calls Cholobetene; and divers Cities in that tract, which still preserve the Radicals of Hul, or Chul, as Cholus, Cholnata, Cholimna, Colsa, and Colana, whereof mention is made in the Tables of Ptolomie. For Gether, the third son of Aram, it is not yet agreed on where to find his dwelling. Josephus, contrary to all reason, placeth him in Bactria; and Mercer with as little, in Caria, a Province of the lesser Asia, and Acarnania of Greece. Junius sets him down in the Province of Cassiotis, and Seleucis, neer his Father Aram, where Ptolomie placeth Gindarus, and the Nation called by Plinie Gindareni: Bochartus on the banks of the River Centrites, which divides Armenia from the Carduchi, as it is in Xenophon. Which River, if it were called originally Getri, as he conjecturech it might be, the controversie were at an end. But being that we find in Ptolomie, a City of Albania (which bordererh on Armenia) called Getara, and a River of the same Country called Getras; I see no cause why we should seek further for the seat of Gether; though the Greek Copies (more subject to corruption in the times of ignorance, than the Latin were) insteed of Getara read Gagara. But if this be too far to set him, we shall find Mas or Mesch, the last Son, planted neerer hand, even in the Northern part of Syria, towards Mesopotamia, neer the Hill called Masius: at the foot whereof there is a people, which Stephanus calls Masieni, and thereabouts a River, which in Xenophon is named Masca. Both which do evidently declare from what root they come.

Come we next to the second branch of the house of Sem, derived from Arphaxad; whom we left setled in the Region of Arrapachitis, in, or neer Assyria. Not far from which in Susiana, a Province of the Persian Empire, there is a Citie of chief note called Sela; mention of which is made both in Ptolomies Tables, and the 23 Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. Adde unto this the autoritie of Eustathius Antiochenus, who briefly thus, Σαλα ἀφ' ἧς Σουσοι, The People of Susiana came from Sala. But this, as I conceive, must be understood onely of that part of this people, which lived in and about the Citie of Sela, and not of the whole Nation of the Susians, or Susiani, which borrowed their nomination from another root. To Sela was born Heber, from whom the people of the Hebræi, or Hebrews do derive their name: And to him Phaleg his first-born, who in all probabilitie gave name to the Town called Phalga, situate on the River Euphrates, not far from Seleucia: Mention whereof is made by Stephanus in his Book de Urbibus, and by Ptolomie in his Geography; where it is placed right on the banks of Euphrates, where the River Chaboras mingles waters with it; but there corruptly called Pharga instead of Phalga.

But the great increase of Sems posteritie came by Jocktan, the second Son of Eber, the Father of no fewer than thirteen Sons, whose names are on record in the tenth of Genesis, where it is said, that their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest to Sephar, a Mount in the East. And here I must crave leave to differ from Bochartus, who hath thronged Jocktan and his Sons into a little corner of Arabia Felix, where I can find no room for them, and less reason to place them. For being that Chus the son of Cham, and the Chiefs of his posteritie, eight in number, were planted in Arabia, as himself confesseth, it must needs be, that they had spread themselves over all the Country before any of the ſons of Jocktan were of age ſufficient to be the Fathers of Families, and lead Colonies thither. Jocktan is credibly ſuppoſed not to have been born when ſuch of Noahs poſteritie as are mentioned Gen. 10. diſperſed themſelves into new Plantations; but it is evident from the Text, that none of his children were then born, if their Father were. And this Bochartus doth acknowledge in two ſeverall places. Firſt, granting that neither Phaleg, nor Jocktan were preſent at the building of Babel, multo minus Jocktanis filii poſt aliquot annos geniti; much leſs the Sonnes of Joktan begot many yeares after; Lib. 1. cap. 16. And Secondly, affirming that Jocktan and his children came not within the curſe of Confounded Languages, quia nondum erant geniti, becauſe then unborn, Cap. 15. Hereupon I conclude it to be very improbable, that Jocktan and his children ſhould find room in the beſt parts of Arabia Felix, which Chus and his poſteritie had inhabited ſo long before. And as it is improbable that the Sons of Chus would plant themſelves in the worſt part of the Country for ſo many Ages, and leave the beſt and richeſt of it for ſome new Adventurers: So it is impoſſible that the Sons of Jocktan ſhould either be removed ſo far from the reſt of the houſe of Arphaxad, who were all planted on the Eaſt of the River Tigris, as was before ſhewed; or that they ſhou'd be able, had they been ſo minded, to break thorough the whole Countries of the Aſſyrians, Chuſites, and other Nations, to come unto the utmoſt corners of Arabia Felix. He that believes they did, or could, muſt have a ſtronger Faith than mine; but it ſhall never conduce any thing to his juſtification. Nor am I moved at all with that which ſeems to me to be his weightieſt Argument, namely, that the Arabians, particularly Joſeph Ben Abdallatif, and Mahomet Ben Jacob, two of their chief Writers affirm, that Jocktan was the Founder of their Tongue and Nation; no more than I am moved to think that the Saracens are derived from Sara the Wife, and not from Hagar the Concubine and ſervant of Abraham; becauſe that people ſo report it for their greater glory.

And for the ſeverall Nations of Arabia Felix, whoſe original he aſcribes to the ſons of Jocktan, I ſee ſo many tranſpoſitions of Syllables, alterations even of Radicall Letters, ſuch and ſo many wreſted Originations, as by the like libertie of making quidlibet ex quolibet, it were no difficult matter to find place for them in any Country whatſoever; For how extorted and unnaturall are the derivations of the Allumæotæ from Almodad, of the Manitæ from Abimail, of the Jobaritæ from Jobab? How impoſſible is it that Jaraeh ſhould give name to the Iſle which Ptolomie calleth Νῆσοι Ἱερᾶναι, Inſula Ieracum, or Accipitrum, as the Latin hath it, that is to ſay, the Iſle of Hawks, from the abundance of Hawks which are therein bred: There being another Iſland of the ſame name neer unto Sardinia (ſo called for the ſelf ſame reaſon) and a Town called Ierax in Hammoniaca a Region of Egypt, to which Jarach might as well lay claim (if that would carry it) as to this Ieracum, or Accipitrum in the Gulf of Arabia? How improbable that Ophir ſhould give name to Urphire, a poor Iſle of the Red Sea, Obal to Sinus Avalites in Æthiopia, on the other ſide of that Gulf? Or that Dicla muſt be fixed in Arabia, for no other reaſon, but becauſe the word ſignifieth a Palm-tree, of which that Country yeelds good plenty; as if ſome other Countries did not yeeld as much? Theſe, and ſome other reaſons hereafter following, have made me bold to differ from that learned man in this particular, whoſe induſtry and abilities I do otherwiſe honour; and rather to look for Joktan and his ſonnes in the Eaſt part of the World, where the Scriptures place them; than in the South (with reference to the Wilderneſs, or land of Madian, in one of which the Book of Geneſis was witten) where Bochartus placeth them. Yet ſo far I muſt yeeld to that learned man, that ſome of the Deſcendants of Joktan in long tract of time, moved with the rarities of the place, might come from India, and plant themſelves upon the Sea-coaſts of Arabia Felix; as the Arabians at this day moved with the wealth and trade of India, have poſſeſſed themſelves of many of the Ports and peeces on the ſhores thereof.

Now the Text telleth us of the Sonnes of Joktan, that their dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, a Mount of the Eaſt; ſo that by theſe two boundaries, Meſha and Sephar, their habitation muſt be found. I know Bochartus would have Meſha to be Muſa, a noted Port-Town on the South-Weſt of Arabia Felix; and Sephar to be the Citie of Saphar in the South-Eaſt of that Country; that Citie giving name to ſome Mount adjoyning. But being they both lie directly South of the place in which Moſes wrote, I cannot ſee how this poſition can agree with the word of Scripture; and therefore we muſt look for both in ſome other place. And firſt to find out Meſha, we need go no further than Bochartus himſelf, who maketh Meſh, the laſt of the Sonnes of Aram, the Sonne of Sem (according to the generall opinion of moſt Writers elſe) to be planted in the mountainous tracts of Meſopotamia, from him called Mons Maſius; more of which before. And then for Sephar, which the Text calleth a Mount of the Eaſt; if it be the Southern part of Mount Imaus, by Ptolomy named Bitigo, by the Moderns Gates, extending from Mount Caucaſus to the Cape Comari in the hither India, as Poſtellus a right learned man doth conceive it to be; We have without more difficulty found out the dwellings of the ſonnes of Jocktan, according to the bounds laid down in Holy Scripture. But for fear this may not ſatiſfie, for want of ſome Seconds to Poſtellus (if Truth needs a Second) we have Siphare a Citie of Aria, directly Eaſt from Mons Maſius, or the dwellings of Meſh; both in the Eaſt parts of the World, with reference unto the place in which Moſes writ: Mons Maſius being placed by Ptolomie in the 74 degree of Longitude, and the 37 of Latitude; and Siphare 36 degrees more towards the Eaſt, but with no more than two degrees of Latitude ſuper-added to it. And this agreeth to the poſition aſſigned to the ſonnes of Joktan, by Joſephus, Euſebius, and St. Hierome;

the emendation of Bochartus coming in to help. It is affirmed by Josephus that the Joktanites possessed all that Tract, ἀπὸ Κωφήνου ποταμοῦ τῆς Ἰνδικῆς, καὶ τῆς πρὸς αὐτῇ Συρίας τινὰ, which lieth about Kophenus a River of India, together with such parts of Syria as did border neer it. These words being borrowed from Josephus both by Eusebius and S. Hierome; the first instead of Syria reads Seria, and the other Jeria, but neither rightly: there being no such place in the world as Jeria; and Syria and Seria (or the Countrey of the Seres) lying too far off to border on Cophenus a River of India. Bochartus therefore helps them out, conceiving (I think right enough) that for Syria we should there read Aria: and withall granting, as he may, that Aria in the largest latitude and extent thereof, comprehending Paropamisus and Arachosia, extendeth as far Eastward as the River Cophenus. So that we have found out a dwelling for the Sonnes of Joktan, betwixt Mons Masius and Siphare, a Town of Aria: which probably might give name to some Mount adjoyning, as Saphar by Bochartus is supposed to do to some of the Arabian hills bordering neer unto it. And as these Situations do agree exactly with the meaning of those Antient Writers; so is it also very suitable to the other Plantations of the Sonnes of Arphaxad. For this I look on as a matter out of all dispute, that Phaleg and Joktan being both too young to go upon any new Adventures, when so many of the relidue of Noahs Posterity removed toward Shinaar, kept themselves under the tuition of their Grandfather Noah; or at least wandred not from the Plantation of their Father Arphaxad, till Joktan's Sonnes being grown to be Fathers of Families, were forced to cast about for new habitations. And when necessity compelled them to seek new seats, I would fain know, why they should think of making themselves a way to Arabia Felix, thorough Countreys peopled and possessed a long time before; when they had Elbow-room enough on the East of Tigris, and the unpeopled Countreys of some parts of India lay so neer at hand.

Nor want we as good evidence and as little forced for some of their Plantations in the Eastern parts, as Bochartus hath fancied for them in Arabia: For Almodad might probably be the Founder of Almodena, the Metropolis of Mesopotamia, not far from Mesha or Mons Masius the Western Boundary; and Jarach of the Nation of the Arachosians inhabiting neer Siphare the Eastern limit, assigned unto the Sonnes of Joktan. With what an easie change might Obal or Chobal be supposed to be the Father of the Cabolites of Paropamisus? Hadoram of the Orites an Indian people neer unto the other? But these North-Eastern parts being peopled, or not very pleasant, how many of the Sonnes of Joktan shall we find in the Southern parts of India? Bochartus himself confesseth that the Land of Ophir (another of the sonnes of Joktan) was a part of India, but whether Sumatra, Taprobane, or Aurea Chersonesus, I dispute not here. Like evidence there is for Saba, remembrances of whose name are found in Sabalassa, one of the mouthes of the River Indus, Sabana a City of the Golden Chersonese, a River in the same Tract named Sabanus, and a City called Sabe: besides the whole Nation of the Sabæi mentioned by Dionysius in his Periegesis. And though some late Criticks read it Siba instead of Sabæi, (as that there was an Indian Nation called Siba, is confessed on all sides:) yet seeing Eustathius finds the Saba in this Countrey also, I cannot see but that there should be room enough in India for both people to dwell in. For Abimail another of the Sonnes of Joktan we find more evident footsteps of him in the Mali or Malli an Indian people, in Maleta and Maliba two Towns of India, in Malæus an Indian Mountain, and finally in Malæi Colon a Promontory of Aurea Chersonesus, than in the Manitæ of Bochartus. For if Abimail signifie the Father of the Mali, as he saith it doth, he was more like to be the Father of the Mali, commonly and literally so called, whom we find in India; than that we should be forced to look for them in the Manitæ, or look for the Manitæ in the house of Abimail. If Dicla must be planted in Arabia Felix for no better reason, than because the word signifieth a Palm, whereof there is plenty in that Countrey; I doubt not to find as many Palms to plant by amongst the Indians, as Bochartus doth among the Arabians. And finally, if Chatramis, or Chatramatitis an Arabian Region, have such resemblance to the name of Chatsarmaveth, as to take that Appellation from him, as Bochartus telleth us it did, we may conclude with equall, if not better reason, that the Chadramotitæ an Indian people, seated upon the mouth of the River Indus, upon whose streams some of the refidue of his Brethren had their habitations, had their first Originall from that Chatsarmaveth. For Havilah or Chavilah the Antients generally set him in the Indies also, not far from Saba and Ophir two of his Brethren: to whose authority I submit, because I find a Province in the Golden Chersonese, called the Kingdom of Ava, and thought to be so called from this very man. And I conceive the like also of the rest of the Joktanites, whose habitations might be found in India, or neer Mesh and Sephar, if one would take that liberty of Critizizing, altering and transposing letters, as Bochartus doth, only to fix them in a place where they never were. Suffice it that this short Essay may inform the Reader, that Bochartus was too confident a lover of his own opinion, where he affirms, Nec locum alium Sephar nomine, nec ulla posterorum Ioktan in Aria aut India vestigia jam supereſſe; that is to say, that there is no such place as Sephar, nor any tract or footstep of the Sonnes of Joktan to be found in Aria, or the Indies. The contrary whereof is so clearly evidenced.

These were the Generations and Dispersions of the Sonnes of Sem, contracted in a narrower compass than either the Posterity of Cham or Japhet: of whom the first, besides the great footing which he had in Asia, did possess all Africk, and the other, besides his share in the greater Asia, filled almost all the lesser Asia, and the whole Continent of Europe with the Isles thereof, thereof, with his fruitfull Progeny. And first beginning with Cham, we find him the Father of four sonnes, that is to say, Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan; of which onely Phut the third Sonne hath no issue assigned him. To Chush the eldest Sonne were born Seba and Havilah, and Sabtah, Nimrod, Sabtecha, and Raamah, who was the Father of Sheba and Dedan. And unto Mizraim the second Sonne were born Ludim, and Amamim, Lehabim, Naphtuhim; Pathrusim, Caphtorim, and Casluhim, who was the Father of Philistim. Of Canaan and his issue we shall speak hereafter: In the mean time we will dispose of these first branches of the stock of Cham, beginning first with Chus the eldest, and so descending to the rest of this first Line. And first for Chush, though it be generally said both by the Greek and Jewish Writers, that he was the Father of the Æthiopians in the heart of Africa, yet upon better search he is found to have gone no further than Arabia, possessing himself of a good part of that which is called Petræa, and some part of Arabia Felix. For whereas Zipora the wife of Moses was daughter unto Jethro the Priest or Prince of Madian, Exod. 2. v. 16. &c. and yet is called an Æthiopian woman, in the 12. of Num. v. 1. it must needs be that by Æthiopian, in the last place, must be meant an Arabian; for Madian doubtless was a City of Arabia neer unto the Red Sea, as is apparent by Josephus for the Jewes, Ptolomie for the Grecians, and S. Hierome for the Latine Writers. But we shall canvass this more throughly in its proper place: the strength of reason serving for a supplement of that one main defect, which is, that there is no remainder of the name of Chus in any of the Cities, Promontories, Hills or Rivers of all that Countrey, by which his planting there might be made more evident. Seba, the eldest Sonne of Chus, sets himself down on the shores of the Red Sea, as neer his Father as he could, becoming the Originall of the great and wealthy Nation of the Sabæans; the so much celebrated City of Saba, memorable for abundance of the best Frankincense, being their Metropolis or head City. A Nation seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, subject in Solomons time to that famous Lady called in the old Testament from her Country, the Queen of Sheba, and in the new Testament from the situation of it, the Queen of the South: the holy Spirit in both places giving her an ample and remarkable testimony.

For Havilah or Chavilah the second of the Sonnes of Chus, most probable it is that he possessed himself of that part of Arabia which lay neerest unto Babylonia, and that he gave name to that Land of Havilah, which the River Pison is said to incompass, Gen. 2. v. 2. Some footsteps of whose name remain in the Chaulotæi of Eratosthenes, the Chaulasii of Festus Avienus, but more plainly in the Chavelei of Plinie; being all three but one people, though thus diversly named, and all of them planted towards the Persian Gulf, and so to Babylon. On the same shore of the Persian Gulf, we are to look for Sabta the third sonne of Chus, where Ptolomie informs us of a Citie called Saphta, and of an Iland in the same Gulf called Sopththa also. From whence in probabilitie some of this people might pass over into Persia, on the other side of the Gulf, and there give name to the Sabtæi, which by the transposition of the letter T. are by Ptolomie called the Stabæi. That Nimrod the fourth sonne of Chus did first plant himself in Babylonia, the Scripture is so plain and positive, that nothing need be added to it. Of Sabteca the fift sonne, I confess I can find no tract in any of the antient Authors. For why we should admit of so great a change, as first, of B. into M. and then, of T. into D. (which could not easily be done by very careless Transcribers) and so finde Sabteca in Samydace, a City or Country of the Carmanians on the Persian side of the Gulf, I can see no reason: And therefore rather chuse to mingle him and his posterity with the sonnes of Sabta, and the children of his brother Regma, all planted on the same shore of the Persian Gulf. For that Regma (our English Bibles call him Raama) was setled on the banks of the Bay of Persia, hath so good autority, that there is no dispute to be made of that: Ptolomie placing there the City of Regma (Regama it is called in the Latin Translation) by which name it occurreth in Stephanus also in his Book De Urbibus, Καὶ Ῥῆγμα ἐφ' ᾧ τὸν Περσικὸν κόλπον. And Regma, on the Persian Gulf, as his words there are. And not far thence we are to look for his sonne Sheba; both being joyned together in the Book of God; and both there said to busie and employ themselves in the trade of Merchandizing: The Merchants of Shebah, and Raamah (saith the Text) they were thy Merchants; they occupied in thy Fairs with chief of all Spices, and with all precious Stones, and Gold. Ezek. 27. v. 22. So that the Nations of the Sabæans, though descended at the first from severall parents, inhabited the lower parts of Arabia Felix from one Sea to the other; as evidently appeareth by those words of Plinie; where he informeth us most truly, that the Sabæans, or Arabian people, well known for their abundance of Frankincense, ad utraq; maria porrectis gentibus habitare, had spread themselves over all the Country, even from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Persia. Finally, in the same tract we find Dedan the other sonne of Regma, and the last of all the sonnes of Chus; there being on the mouth of the Persian Gulf (but on the Arabian coast thereof) not onely a City, but a Province called by the name of Dedan, which both Ortelius, and some other late Geographers do take notice of. And more than so, the Prophet Ezekiel joyns him with his brother Sheba, and makes them both to follow the same trade of Merchandise; The men of Dedan were thy Merchants, chap. 27. 15. Sheba, and Dedan, and the Merchants of Tarshish. chap. 38. 13. They brought thee hornes of Ivorie, and Ebonie, saith the Prophet in the former Text.

The head of the next house of the race of Cham, was Mizraim, the second sonne, of whom it is generally affirmed, that leaving his elder brother Chus and his posteritie in the rich and delectable Countries of Arabia Felix, and the next parts to Babylonia, or the land of Shinaar, he went with his own ſonnes, and his Brother Phut, into Africa, and there planted Egypt. Of this there is no queſtion amongſt the Learned, though all the tracts and footſteps of Miſraim be quite worn out; unleſs any thing of it were preſerved in the word Meſari, by which the Ægyptians antiently called the firſt Moneth in the year; or in that of Meſre, by which name the Arabians call Egypt to this day: But being Egypt is called Miſraim in the Hebrew Bibles, that onely is ſufficient without further evidence. And therefore leaving him in Egypt, let us look after his ſonne Ludim, whom he ſent out to people Æthiopia, the next Country to him. For that this Ludim was the Father of thoſe Ethiopians, many good reaſons are alleged. Firſt, from the Texts of Eſaiah cap 66. 19. and Jer. 46 9. where Lud is ſaid to be very skilfull in drawing the bow; which agrees punctually with the Character given unto the Ethiopians by Strabo, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and others of the antient Writers. Secondly, from the joyning of the children or people of Ludim with thoſe of Phul, in the place of Eſaiah before cited; which Phul may very probably be the Citie which the Gracians call Phila, ſituate not far from Syene, on the very borders of Ethiopia, and antiently inhabited both by the Ethiopians and Egyptians, as Strabo, and ſome others of the Antients witneſs. Thirdly, from the conjunction of the children of Lud or Ludim, with thoſe of Chus, on the Gulf of Arabia, and thoſe of Phut, or Lybians, on the other ſide of Mount Atlas, both next neighbours to them; as in Ezek. 30. ver. 5. and that of Jer. above mentioned; where our Engliſh very ſtrangely rendereth Ludim by the name of Lydians, which dwell too far off both from Chuſh and Phut, to be joyned together in one action. But of this, more than enough already, the Arguments being ſo ſtrong, and alſo moſt demonſtrative. I go on therefore to the next; onely obſerving by the way, that the Ethiopians mentioned in thoſe Texts of our Engliſh Bibles, are not theſe of Africa, but the Chuſites of Arabia Felix; our Tranſlators alwaies rendring Chus by Ethiopia. The Anamim, who come next, I know not where to find, or in what place to look for them, unleſs they were the ſame with the Amantes of Solinus, and the Hammanientes of Plinie, a people ſeated on the ſea-ſide neer the greater Syrtis; to which the neighbourhood of the Lehabim may give ſome countenance; who ſeem to be the ſame with the people of Libya, a Province ſeated betwixt Egypt and Cyrenaica, and were called Libyægyptii by the old Geographers, to difference them from the inhabitants of the greater Lybia, whereof more hereafter. For the Naphtuhim, I am alſo at a loſs, unleſs we find them ſomewhere in Cyrenaica; and that ſome remnant of the name be in Aptucht fanum, which occurs in Ptolomie. But for the Pathruſim, I think no queſtion need be made, but that they were the people of that Province of Egypt, which in divers places of the Scripture is called Pathros, as Eſay 11. 11. Jer. 44. 1. Ezek. 29. 14. and ſeems to be that part of Egypt, which is called Thebais, where Ptolomie placeth Pathyris, an In-land Town not far from Thebe. (And Pathuris the Greek or Septuagint term that, which in the Hebrew is called Pathros.)

Hitherto wee have found the Nations which deſcended from the ſonnes of Miſraim, in Egypt, and the Countries adjoyning to it. And there, or there abouts, wee are to looke for Caphtorim, and Caſluhim, the two ſonnes remaining. I know there hath been great paines taken to find the Caſluhim in Colchis, and the Caphtorim in Cappadocia, or Pontus, not far from Trabezond; where notwithſtanding there is no tract of the names remaining. But this being ſo far off from Egypt, in, and neer which, both Miſraim himſelf, and all the reſt of his ſonnes were planted, I can by no means yeeld unto it; though to content ſuch Learned men, as would faine have it ſo, I think it poſſible enough that ſome of the Egyptians in ſucceeding times, moved with the fame of that great wealth which Colchis was ſuppoſed to yeeld to ſome Adventurers, might leave their native ſoyl to inhabit there. And therefore I think rather, with the learned Junius, that the Caſluhim were firſt planted in the Region of Caſſiotis (not far from Damiata, a chief town of Egypt) which retains ſomewhat of the name; and ſo doth Coptus, an old Citie of Egypt, of the name of Caphtorim. Or if it did not, as it doth, why the name of Copti, which at this day is given to the Chriſtians of Egypt, may not be thought to have its firſt riſe from Caphtorim, rather than that they are ſo called quaſi Ægyptii, corruptly for Ægyptii, I muſt needs ſay I am not ſatisfied. Beſides, it being cleer in Scripture, that the Caſluhim, and Caphtorim dwelt neer together, and that the Philiſtims are ſaid to deſcend from Caſluhim, if Caſluhim ſhould go for Colchis, and Caphtorim for Cappadocia, we muſt firſt carry them I know not how far off from the reſt of their Brethren, againſt the method of all Plantations; and then bring the Philiſtims back again from Colchis, to find a dwelling on the borders of the land of Egypt, from whence their Anceſtors and Allies were ſo far remote. Whereas by ſetling theſe two Nations amongſt the reſt of their Brethren, the journey of the Philiſtims unto Canaan, and ſetling themſelves in the poſſeſſions of the Avim (a Canaanitiſh people) whom they had ſubdued, Deut. 2. 23. is both eaſie and naturall. But before we follow theſe Philiſtims further in their new Plantation amongſt the Canaanites, we will firſt ſee what became of Phut the third ſonne of Cham. And if we guide our ſelves in this Labyrinth by the clew of Antiquitie, we ſhall find him ſetled West of his Brother Miſraim, and ſo to the Atlantick Ocean, the Lake of Tritonis parting their dominions. Some Reliques of the name there were in the time of Joſephus, who telleth us of a River of Mauritania, which in his time retained the name of Phut: Plinie makes mention of it alſo. Ptolomie takes notice of a River in thoſe parts called Phuth, which comes very neer it. And ſo doth Iſidore, Origen. l. 9. 2. But St. Hierome in my mind puts it out of doubt, whose words I shall put down, and so leave Africa; Phut Libye, à quo & Mauritania finitimus usque ad præsens Phut dicitur, omnisque circa eum Regio Phutensis; cujus rei multi Scriptores tam Græci quam Latini testes sunt. Where we have not onely a River, but a Province of the name of Phut; and many antient Writers both Greek and Latin called to witness it.

And now we should proceed to Canaan and his sonnes (eleven in all) being the fourth and last branch of the house of Cham. But being they all kept together in or neer the land of Canaan, we shall find them there, or meet with them in such Plantations and Colonies as they sent abroad, under the title of Phœnicians. And therefore go we next to Japhet, whose Tents God promised to enlarge, as indeed he did; spreading his branches over Europe, the lesser Asia, and a great part of the greater also. To him were born seven sonnes in all, that is to say, Gomer and Magog, Madai and Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Thyras: Of which, the Issue of two onely are upon record, viz. Aschenaz, Riphath, and Togarma, the sonnes of Gomer: Elisha, Tarshish, Kittim and Dodanim, the sonnes of Javan. And first for Gomer and his sonnes, they first possessed themselves of convenient dwellings in the greater, and the lesser Asia. Gomer himself first planting in the mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long retained his name; and after changing that unpleasant, and unfruitfull dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, in which the Citie Cimmeris, in the daies of Plinie, did preserve his memory. For that the posteritie and people of Gomer, called at first Gomerians, came to take the name of Cimmerians, as of Cimbri afterwards, is generally agreed upon amongst the Learned. Now then, as Gomer fixt himself in the Greater Phrygia, so did his eldest sonne Aschenaz in Phrygia minor, and the Country of Troas, spreading himself along upon the Hellespont, and those Greekish Seas, as far as Bithynia. In all which places there were left some memory of this Plantation: For in Bithynia there is a Bay called Sinus Ascanius, together with a River, and a Lake of the same name also. And in the Lesser Phrygia, and the Country of Troas, there was both a Citie and a Province adjoyning, antiently known by the name of Ascania; and the Ascanie Insulæ also on the coasts thereof. Nor is it any thing unlikely, but that in honour of this Aschenaz, the Kings and great men of those parts took the name of Ascanius. Of which name, besides Ascanius the sonne of Æneas, we find a King mentioned in the second of Homers Iliads, which came unto the aid of Priamus at the siedge of Troy. In the same quarters of the World we find Riphath also, the founder of the Riphei; a people dwelling in the East parts of Bithynia, and spreading also over Paphlagonia: In both which Provinces there are some remnants of his name to be found amongst the Antients. For besides that Josephus saith expressly, that the Paphlagonians antiently were called Riphei; there is mention in Apollonius Argonauticks of the River Rhebaus, which rising in Bithynia, emptieth it self into the Pontus Euxinus, neer to Paphlagonia, of which River Plinie also doth inform us; and Stephanus doth not onely acquaint us with the River it self, but tels us also of a Region of the same name, and of a people thereabouts which is called Rhebai. Nor need we look much further to find out the seat of Togarma the third sonne of Gomer, whom the Prophet Ezekiel not onely joyneth with his Father as two neighbouring Nations, but makes both of them to lie Northwards of Judæa; Gomer and all his bands, the house of Togarma in the North quarters and all his bands, cap. 38. 6. So that they do not guess amiss, who place Togarma and his Progeny in Cappadocia; a Country not onely bordering neer to the Plantations of Gomer, and lying on the North of the land of Canaan, but very well stocked with an excellent breed of Mules and Horses, as Strabo testifieth in the 11 Book of his Geographie; with which commodities they traded at the Fairs of Tyre, as the same Prophet tels us of them, cap. 27. 14. But for a more evident proof of this, that Togarma's dwelling must be found in Cappadocia; we must first know that the Greek Translators call him generally by the name of Torgama; and then, that antiently there was a people in Cappadocia and Galatia, whom Strabo calleth Trocmi, and Tully, Trogmi; by Stephanus they are named Trocmeni, and Trogmades in the Councel of Chalcedon, in which Cyriacus Bishop of the Trogmades (Κυριακὸς Ἐπίσκοπος Τογμάδων) is often mentioned. Having thus done with Gomer, and the sonnes of Gomer, we will next pursue the rest of the sonnes of Japhet, except Javan onely, whom with his four sonnes we will keep together. And the next sonne of Japhet is Magog, concerning whom there hath been much dispute and difference amongst our Antiquaries; some making him the Father of the Scythians, some of the Goths, and others finally of the Tartars; all of them thinking that such terible names as Gog and Magog, could not belong to any but such terrible Nations. And possible enough it is, that some of his posteritie in succeeding times, finding their own seats too narrow for them, might remove further Northwards, and be founders of some Scythian and Tartarian Nations; but that Magog himself in his first Plantation should wander so far out of the way from the rest of his brethren, when he had elbow-room enough amongst them, I cannot easily imagine. When therefore I find a Region in Stephanus called Gogæus, betwixt Iberia and Colchis; and read in Plinie, that the Citie of Cœle Syria, which the Grecians call Hierapolis, was by the Syrians themselves called Magog; I shall not trouble my self to look for Magog any where else, than in those Countries where they have left such evident Land-marks to discern themselves by. But this we shall the better see by looking out the dwellings of his two brethren, Meshech and Tubal, who being joyned together with Gog and Magog, Ezek. cap. 38. 2. & 39. 1. are very unlike to have their dwellings far asunder: or that they could concur in any publick Action against the Jews, according to the scope and purpose of the holy Prophet. Now it is probable (if not more) that Meshech, whom the Antients named Mosoch, seated himself on the North and North-East of Syria, in the confines of Colchis and Armenia, and so unto the Caspian, or Hyrcanian Sea. For all along that tract runs a ridge of Hils, which Plinie, Ptolomie, and Pomponius Mela call Montes Moschici, determinating Colchis from Armenia, and both from Iberia; and most like to be the dwelling of Mesech, or Mosoch, and to take denomination from him. And this I am the rather induced to think, because Tubal, whom the Scriptures generally joyn together with Mesech, is by most Writers said to have setled himself in Iberia, the next Province to it. Josephus also telling us, that anciently the Iberi were called Thobeli, though called Iberians afterwards on some new occasion. And hereunto the constant tradition of the Spaniards gives some good authoritie, who boast of their descent from Tubal: which can no otherwise be granted, than as they were a Colonie of these Iberians, from whence the Continent of Spain was once called Iberia, and where one of the principall Rivers is still called Iberus. For Madai, the third Sonne of Japhet, it is most plain by the autority of Scripture (were there no proof else) that he was the Father of the Medes; who in the book of Daniel, and that of Hester, are represented to us by no other name than that of Madai.

Thus having took a view of those who first themselves in either, or in both the Asias; let us look on Thyras, Javan, and the sonnes of Javan, who not contented with their dwellings in the lesser Asia, filled all Europe by degrees with their numerous progenies. And first beginning with Javan as the Elder brother, most Authors make him the Originall of those Greek Nations which pass under the generall name of Iones; and there is very good ground for the assertion, considering that the Greek Translators of the Bible instead of Javan, read Jovan, and that all those, who elsewhere ordinarily are called Iones, are by Homer, one of the antientest of the Greeks, named Jaones. Now Javan and Jion sound so like each other, that one may very well conclude, that they were the same. A name not onely proper to the Athenians, and their Colonies, though probable enough first belonging to them of Attica, but comprehending the Baotians and Achaans also; yea, and extending also into Macedonia, as appears Dan. 8. 21. where Alexander the Great in the Hebrew is called King of Javan, which we English Grecia. Nor do we much dis-joyn Javan from the rest of that stock, by carrying him cross the seas into another part of the World; for he might go along with Gomer in his second Plantation; And leaving him well setled in the greater Phrygia, and his sonne Askenaz in the lesser; might then with very little trouble (and no improbalitie at all) pass over the Hellespont, and plant himself in Attica, called at first Ionia, saith Plutarch in the life of Theseus. Or if any one notwithstanding conceive this for too great a leap, and will rather think with Hecataeus, that the Iones came out of Asia into Greece (as Strabo cites him to that purpose) I shall not much contend against that opinion; so it be also granted on the other side, that Javan, not having room enough on the shores of Asia, passed over into Greece, as a land unoccupied. With Javan went Elisha his eldest sonne, the Father of the Æoles, or Æolians, on the Asian side, as Josephus hath it; and the founder of Elis in Peloponnesus, and planter of the Grecian Isles, which by the Prophet Ezekiel, 27. 7. are called the Iles of Elisha. And it agrees exceeding well with the Isles of Greece, which by the Prophet is affirmed of the Isles of Elisha; namely, that the inhabitants thereof did trade to Tyre with Blew and Purple; in which some of the Grecian Isles were such excellent Artizans, that Carpathus had the name of Porphyris, and Cithera was called Πορφυρίωσσα, onely from the abundance of Purple which they had amongst them. Not to say any thing of Coos, Nisyrus, and Gyarus, and some other of the Cyclades, renowned in good Authors for that commoditie.

A shorter journey, but withall a far shorter Territory fell to the lot of Tarshish the second sonne; whom Javan when he travelled further upon new discoveries, left setled in Cilicia, a Province of the lesser Asia, where either he, or some of his Posteritie in honour of him, built the City of Tarsus, the principall City of that Province. For that Tarshish in those early daies should go into Spain, and there build Tarnessus, I take to be a strange (if not idle) Romance; that Town being built by the Phœnicians many ages after, without relation unto Tarshish, or his memory either. What Voyages or Plantations those of Cilicia or Tarsus made in times succeeding, as I no where finde, so is not materiall to my present purpose; which principally is to settle the sonnes of Noah in their first habitations. On therefore unto Citim the third sonne of Javan, whom Josephus settleth first in the Ile of Cyprus, where he finds a Citie called Citium, the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, thence surnamed Κιτιεύς. Josephus is herein followed by St. Hierome in his Notes on Genesis, in whose time (as Pintus telleth us in his Comment on Ezekiel) the Town of Citium was still standing; so do Eustathius in his Hexameron, and divers others. The Author of the Book of Maccabees sets him further off, giving the name of Citim unto Macedonia. After that (saith the Author) Alexander the son of Philip, went forth of the land of Cethim, and slew Darius King of the Persians and Medes, cap. 1. v. 1. And after in the 18. Chapter of the same Book, verse 5. Perseus King of Macedon is called King of the Citims. But this doth no way contradict that of his first planting in Cyprus, where it is very probable that he made his dwelling for a time, by reason of the neighbourhood of his brother Tarshish (Cilicia and the Citie of Tarsus lying neer unto it;) But finding in time that Iland to be too small for his people; and that the other parts both of Greece and Asia were taken up already by the first Adventurers, he might finally fix himself, or some of his posteritie, in Macedonia, as a spare place which no body could lay claim unto. That either he or any of his ſonnes planted firſt in Italy, which I ſee Bochartus would fain have, were againſt the method of Plantations; and he muſt give them wings to fly that conveyeth them thither, when as yet Mankind was not taught the uſe of ſhipping, or not accuſtomed at leaſt to make long voyages. But that in courſe of time, as the World grew fuller, and that Greece was not able to contain its multitudes, ſome of the race of Cittim might paſs over into Italy, the paſſage thither from ſome of the Ports of Greece being ſhort and eaſie, I am apt enough to beleeve, and in its proper place ſhall declare my ſelf for it. Nor can I otherwiſe agree with him, as concerning Dodanim, whom againſt all right and reaſon he hath placed in Gaul; making the River Rhodanus, one of the principal of that Country, to be named of him; whom the Greeks, miſtaking the letter Daleth for that of Reſh (as indeed the letters are ſo like, that one may very eaſily be miſtook for the other) moſt commonly preſent unto us by the name of Rhodanim. Admitting which, it is more proper, in my mind, to ſettle Rhodanim for a while in the Iſle of Rhodes, lying ſo neer the dwellings of his other brethren; till wanting room for the increaſe of his poſterity in ſo ſmall an Iſland, he might coaſt along the ſhores of Peloponneſus, and fix himſelf finally in Epirus by his brother Eliſha, where in the Province of the Molloſſians, we ſhall finde a City called Dodona, without any ſuch miſtake or change of letters as before is mentioned. For that the three furtheſt parts of Europe in reſpect of Aſia ſhould be planted all at once by theſe ſonnes of Javan, is ſo incredible an imagination, that he muſt have a very ſtrong fancy, or be of very light belief, which can entertain it. Finally, as for Thyras the laſt ſonne of Japhet, having accompanied his brother Javan to the ſhores of Aſia, and ſeeing him paſſed over the ſeas to Greece, he took the opportunity of the next ſtreight or Fretum (ſince called Thracius Boſphorus) and fixed himſelf in Thrace, which Country he gave name unto, as moſt Writers teſtifie. Nor want there ſuch apparent footſteps of the name of Thyras, beſides the name of Thracia (as ſome ſpell the word) which may adde good autoritie to this generall teſtimony; there being both a River and a nHaven-town not far from Bizantium, which Plinie, Ptolomie, and Mela call Athyras: A River and Town called Tyras in the Province of Mœſia, bordering next to Thrace, whereof moſt of all the old Geographers have taken notice; and finally the Thracians calling their God Mars by the name of Thuras. Not to ſay any thing of Tereus, Therops, and ſome others of the Kings of Thrace, whoſe names come very neer unto that of Thyras, as the firſt founder of their Nation.

Thus have we ſeen the ſeverall Generations and Diſperſions of the Sonnes of Noah, ſo far forth as their names are regiſtred in holy Scripture: theſe being the Heads and Leaders of thoſe ſeverall Tribes which joyned together in the project of the building of Babel, and afterwards diſperſed themſelves, as before was ſhewn. But that no more than theſe (I mean Heads of Families) deſcended in ſo long a time from the loyns of Noah; that they ſhould have towards the new peopling of the world, in an hundred years (for ſo long it muſt be at leaſt from the Flood to the building of Babel) no more than ſixteen ſonnes in all; and ten of thoſe ſixteen go childleſs alſo to the grave, is not a thing to be imagined. Nor is it to be thought, that all the people which were born ſince the Flood till then, could meet together at one place as by inſpiration; or being met would joyn together in a work of ſo little profit; or that if Noah or Sem had been there amongſt them they would not have diſſwaded them from that fooliſh enterprize. And therefore I ſhould rather be of their opinion, which think that Noah fixed himſelf in thoſe parts which lay neereſt to the place where the Ark took land: and having planted as far Eaſtward as he thought convenient, ſent out the ſurpluſage of his people under the Conduct of one or more of theſe Undertakers; directing them perhaps to the Land of Shinaar, where himſelf had dwelt before the Flood. Where being come, and deſtitute of graver and more ſober counſells, they fell upon that vain attempt which became their ruin; and made them ſcatter and diſperſe themſelves into ſo many Companies. For in my minde Sir Walt. Ralegh pleads the point exceeding ſtrongly, that it muſt needs be that Noah was ſetled in the Eaſt, and had well peopled all thoſe parts which lay neereſt to him, before he ſent this Troop abroad upon new diſcoveries. For being it is expreſly ſaid in holy Scripture, that as they went from the Eaſt, they found a plain in the Land of Shinaar; it muſt needs follow without controverſie, that they came from the Eaſt Countreys into Shinaar or Babylonia, and not from any part of Armenia (as the Vulgar opinion is) which lay North thereof. Now that the Countreys whence they came were not left utterly deſolate upon this remove, but very ſufficiently provided both of men and Cities, appeareth by thoſe huge Armies which Zoroaſter the King of Baſtria, and Staurobates King of the Indians, were able to bring into the field. Of whom the firſt being invaded by Ninus the Aſſyrian Monarch, encountred him with an Army of 400000. fighting men; the other on the like occaſion out-vied Semiramis for numbers: and yet her Army did conſiſt, as we read in Diodorus Siculus, of three millions and an half of men, beſides 10000. armed Waggons; whereof if we believe but the third part, it may ſerve to prove that the Eaſt muſt needs be planted before this Expedition towards Babylonia. For conſidering that Ninus the husband of Semiramis was but the third in deſcent from Nimrod, that is to ſay, the ſonne of Belus, the ſonne of Nimrod, it had been a moſt impoſſible thing that ſuch a vaſt increaſe ſhould be made onely out of Colonies in ſo ſhort a time, as needs muſt be between the planting of the Countreys before ſpecified, and theſe two great Actions, unleſs God raiſed them out of ſtones, or by ſome ſuch miracle, to abate the pride of theſe Uſurpers over other Nations. Without a miracle of this nature (which I conceive no wise man would expect to find) it is I say, a thing impossible that Semirobates should exceed Semiramis in number of men, as Diodorus saith he did, he being but a Castling of a second Swarm, and she the great Commandress of that part of the world from whence he came upon a second or a third Plantation. Add unto this, that those who have recorded the Acts of Alexander the great, assure us that he found more Cities and sumptuosities in that little Kingdome of Porus, which lay side by side to the East of the River Indus, than in all his other travells and undertakings: And this may serve instead of a further evidence, that the East Countreys were not planted after this dispersion, but built, and peopled, and reduced under forms of Government as soon as any in the World. Nor know I else where to finde either Noah himself, or Sem and Japhet, unless they staid behind with their Father Noah, or were disposed of by themselves in their severall quarters: there being none of those, though most diligent men, who have writ of the Plantations of the World upon this dispersion, that either speak of any Nations planted by them, or of their setling in the Colonies of any one of their descendants. Which is to me a very strong Argument that they came not with the rest to the plains of Shinaar, but tarried still in those habitations wherein God had placed them. Against this I can see but two Objections of any moment; one from the Text, the other from an old Tradition amongst the Jews. That from the Text is gathered from those words of Moses, where having made his Catalogue of the Families of the Sonnes of Noah, he adds, And by these were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Flood, *Gen.*10.v.ult. But these words, as I take it, do relate onely unto that division which was made upon occasion of the confusion of Languages, when they were forced to give over their work, and sort themselves into severall Companies; and not to such Plantations as were made before, who being all of one tongue, though in divers dwellings, could not be looked upon as severall and divided Nations. For the Tradition of the Jews, tis this, that from the beginning of the world to the building of Babel, that language which in after-times was called the Hebrew, was the common language of Mankinde; and that it did continue uncorrupt in the house of Eber, (whence it had the name) because he joyned not with the rest in that proud and ungodly undertaking. Hence it may possibly be objected, that if there were any others of the off-spring of Noah which came not with the rest to the plains of Shinaar, and consequently had no hand in that vain attempt, they could not come within the curse of confounded Languages, but must needs speak the Hebrew Tongue, as well as those descended of the loyns of Heber. But against this Tradition, and the consequents of it, there are some things to be objected. For first it is but a Tradition, and therefore of no sure foundation to build upon. And secondly, it is such a Tradition as holds no good coherence with the truth of Story, it being a most clear and demonstrative truth, that the Hebrew Tongue was not the Language which Abraham brought with him out of Chaldea and Mesopotamia, but that which he found spoken in the Land of Canaan at his coming thither; to which both he and his Posterity did conform themselves. Or had it been the Language of Heber, as they say it was, (but most undoubtedly was not) Yet, Thirdly, had this been a privilege conferred on Heber, that he and his Posterity should speak the Originall Language, without alteration or corruption, it must have been extended to all those of the house of Joktan which descended from him; as also to the house of Laban in Padan Aram, and to the Moabites, and the Ammonites as the seed of Lot; and finally to the Ishmaelites and Idumæans, descended of Abraham and Esau, and not be limited and confined onely to the house of Jacob. Either all these must be partakers of so great a privilege, because their Father Heber had obtained it for himself and his; or else it was not such a prvilege, or given so universally and communicably to the house of Heber, as they say it was. So the Tradition falls to ground as to this particular. And then admitting it for true, that those who staid behind with Noah, spake the same Language which was common to the Fathers before the Flood, (be it the Hebrew, or what else soever it was) I see no reason to the contrary, but that it might in time be branched into severall Languages or Dialects of the same one Language, by the commerce and intercourse which they had with Nations of a different speech; as well as those of Judah in so short a time as the Captivity of Babylon, had lost the purity of that Language which they so much brag of, and could not understand their own Bibles at their coming home but by an Interpreter. Of which see *Nehem.c.*8.*v.*7,8.

But to proceed: On this dispersion of the Families of the sonnes of Noah, it came to pass, that though they all descended from one common Root, yet by the situations of their severall dwellings they came to be of severall tempers and affections; in which they were so different from one another, that it might seem they had been made at first out of severall Principles, and not at all derived from one common Parent. Of which thus Du Bartas.

O see how full of wonders strange is Nature,
Sith in each Climate, not alone in stature,
Strength, colour, hair; but that men differ do
Both in their humours, and their manners too.
The Northern man is fair, the Southern fowl;
That's white, this black, that smiles, and this doth scowl.
Th' one's blith and frolick, the other dull and froward;
Th' one's full of courage, th' other a fearfull coward, &c.

The ground or reason of which difference is to be attributed to the different tempers of those Countries in which they live, and to the different influences of the Heavenly Bodies on those severall Countries: which do continue still the same, though many times the Countries do shift and change their old Inhabitants. Hinc illa ab antiquo vitia, & patriâ sorte duramia, quæ totis in historiis gentes aut commendant aut notant, saith a Modern, but judicious Author. Two or three evidences of this truth wil make it cleer and evident to a practical judgment, which otherwise might appear obscure in the search of causes. Florus hath told us of the Gauls, Primum eorum impetum esse majorem quam virorum, secundum minorem quam fœminarum. Which is the same which Rob. Dallington hath told us of the Modern French, That he begins an action like thunder, and ends it in a smoak. Ut sunt Gallorum subita ingenia, saith Cæsar of the antient Gauls: and I believe the present French are altogether as rash and harebraind as the other were. Gallia fœcunda Causidorum, was part of the character of the Gauls in the time of Juvenal; and it is told us of the French by some late Observers, that there are commonly more Law-tryals amongst them in one year, than have been in England since the Conquest. And yet the old Gauls in a manner are wholy rooted out of the Country, the severall Nations of Franks, Burgundians, Britons, Normans, and Goths being in possession of their severall dwellings. Thus also it is said by Tacitus of the antient Germans, Diem noctemque continuare potando, nulli opprobrium; that it was no disgrace to any to spend the whole day and night in drinking: and more than so, De jungendis affinitatibus, de bello denique & pace in conviviis consultare, that they consulted over their Cups of their weightiest Businesses. Since which time though all Germany hath shifted almost all her old inhabitants, and taken in new Colonies of Sueves, Goths, Vandals, Sclaves, Hunnes, Saxons, and other Nations, yet still those ill customs are as much in use amongst them, as ever formerly. To go a little further off; the old Philosopher Anacharsis tells us of the antient Grecians, that at the beginning of their Feasts they used little Goblets, καὶ δίσκοις ἐν μεγάλοις πίνουσι, and greater towards the end when they were almost drunken; which custom still remains amongst them, as G. Sandys observeth, notwithstanding the great length of time, and all the other changes of state and people which have hapned since. I shall not speak here of the effeminateness of the Asiaticks, or the crueltie or implacableness of the African Nations, being as great now as in any of the former times, notwithstanding the great and numerous Plantations of the Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Saracens, Turks, and Tartars, successively, and respectively, in these severall Countries: And therefore I conclude this point in these words of Barclay, Hæret itaque in omni gente vis quædam inconcussa quæ hominibus pro conditione terrarum in quibus nasci contigerit sua fata diviserit. Nor is this all the consequent of this dispersion of the Families of the sonnes of Noah; the separation of their persons producing, first, an alteration of affections, and that engendring naturall Animosities, which seconded by their severall interesses and Reasons of State, hath left almost no people without some such enemy, as doth particularly and perversly cross them in all their Counsels. Concerning which, take here the Observation of that notable Statesman and Historian, Philip de Comines, which though it be with reference to the Meridian of his own time onely, yet it may be accommodated generally to all States and Ages. "In rebus humanis ita comparatum est, ut nullus fere sit populus quem non æmulus aliquis exerceat, &c. It is (saith he) so ordered in the state of humane affairs, that there "is almost no Nation without a more particular Enemy. The English are enemies to the "French, the Scots to the English; the Portugueze have the like inveterate hatred against the Spa"niards. The Princes of Italy enjoy great possessions without any good title; but are conti"nually opposed by the more potent Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, and Luca. The Arragonian "Kings of Naples, have found perpetuall Enemies of the Dukes of Anjou; as have the Dukes "of Millain of the house of Orleans. The Princes of Italy, and the Florentines, have a stich at "Venice; as the States of Genoa and Sienna have against the Florentines. In Germany the Ani"mosities have been great and of long continuance between the houses of Austria and Bavaria; "the hatred grown beyond all hopes of reconciliation which is between the Switzers and the "Austrian Family. The Dukes of Cleve and Gulick are alwaies upon ill terms with their neigh"bours of Gelderland: And in the North, the Cities on the Baltick Seas have their continuall "quarrels with the Kings of Danemark. Nor are the enmities any thing less, if they be not "greater, which are discernable amongst the people of Asia, and Africk, than those that are above "remembred. So far, and to this purpose saith that notable and judicious Writer.

The consideration of which points, if there were no other, were of it self sufficient to shew the necessary use of History and Geography, as well for the understanding the affairs of the Ages past, as for commerce and correspondency with the Nations present. For had no Histories been written in the former times, in what a dull ignorance had we lived of all those occurrences which do so much concern the whole state of Mankind, and are our principall directors in life and action; in which respect the Orator most truly calleth it, Magistram vitæ. For upon the credit of this History, the examples of our Ancestors, the grounds of civill prudence, and the fames of men do most especially depend. And certainly to draw back the mind to the contemplation of matters long ago passed; to search out with diligence, and to deliver with faith, freedom, and the life of expression, such things as are found out on a diligent search; to represent unto our eyes the changes of Times, the characters of Persons, the uncertainties of Counsels, ſels, and the conveyances of Actions, the ſubtilties of Pretenſions, and the ſecrets of State; muſt of neceſſity be a work of as publique uſe, as it is of great both pains and judgement. Beſides, it gives a kind of eternitie to all ſuch men, who by their Counſels or Atchievements have deſerved nobly of thoſe Kingdoms and Common-wealths wherein they lived. And thereupon the Orator doth not only call it Magiſtram vitæ, but Lucem veritatis, Teſtem temporis, Nunciam vetuſtatis, & Vitæ memoriam: According to which character, I find theſe Verſes ſet before a Chronicle of ſome Kings of England (more worth than all the Book beſides.)

For though in theſe daies Miracles be fled,
Yet this ſhall of good Hiſtories be ſed,
They call back time that's paſt, and give life to the dead.

Nor want there other motives to indear unto us the uſe of Hiſtory, beſides the light it gives unto all the remarkable Actions of preceding times, and the eternitie (if I may ſay ſo) which it conferreth on the Actors themſelves, by the preſervation of their names from the ruins of Time, and the pit of Oblivion. For Firſt, it ſtirreth men to Vertue, and deters them from Vice, by ſhewing forth the glorious memories of vertuous men, and the ill ſavour which is left behind men of ungodly life; and eſpecially keeps perſons of moſt eminent place from letting looſe the reins unto all licentiouſneſs, by repreſenting this to their conſideration, that all their actions ſhall be laid open one day to the view of the Vulgar. Secondly, it hath been a principall Conſerver of moſt Arts and Sciences, by keeping on Record the Dictates and Opinions of ſo many of the old Philoſophers, out of which a perfect Body of Philoſophy, and others of the Liberall Arts hath been collected and digeſted. Thirdly, it is the beſt School-maſter in the Art of War, and teacher of Stratagems; and in that can practically afford more punctuall directions than can be otherwiſe obtained; and is withall the beſt Aſſiſtant to the Stateſman or Politician, who from hence draw their Obſervations and Concluſions, and become thereby ſerviceable to their Prince and Country, though never travelled more than amongſt their Books. So Archimedes in his ſtudy, and Demoſthenes in his Orators gown, endangered more the enemies of their ſeverall Countries; than the Athenians or Syracuſans did by dint of ſword. And laſt of all, beſides theſe civill benefits and conſiderations, and the great help which it affords in the way of diſcourſe, there is no particular branch of knowledge more uſefull for the true and perfect underſtanding of holy Scripture, than that of Eccleſiaſticall and Profane Hiſtory; or which gives clearer light to many dark paſſages thereof, eſpecially in the Propheticall writings of either Teſtament.

This, as it ſhews the neceſſary uſe and benefit which redounds from Hiſtory, ſo doth it ſerve to uſher in that commendation which belongs to the ſtudy of Geography alſo; without ſome knowledge wherein, the ſtudy of Hiſtory is neither ſo pleaſant, nor ſo profitable, as a judicious Reader would deſire to have it. 'Tis true, Geography without Hiſtory hath life and motion, but very unſtable and at random; but Hiſtory without Geography, like a dead carkaſs, hath neither life, nor motion at all, or moves at leaſt but ſlowly on the underſtanding. For what delight or ſatisfaction can any man receive from the reading of Story, without he know ſomewhat of the places and the conditions of the people which are therein mentioned. In which regard Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath deſerved very well of all his Readers, premiſing to the Actions of every Country, ſome brief deſcription of the place, and chief Towns therein. For though the greatneſs of the Action doth ennoble and adorn the place; yet it is the knowledge of the place which addes delight and ſatisfaction unto the reading of the ſtory which conveighs it to us. Hiſtory therefore and Geography, like the two Fires or Meteors which Philoſophers do Caſtor and Pollux, if joyned together, crown our reading with delight and profit; if parted, threaten both with a certain ſhipwrack: and are like two Siſters dearly loving, not without pitie (I had almoſt ſaid impiety) to be kept aſunder. So as that which Sr. Phil. Sidney ſaid of Argalus and Parthenia,

Her being was in him alone,
And ſhe not being, he was none.

may be as juſtly ſaid of Hiſtory and Geography, as of thoſe two Lovers. And yet this is not all the benefit which redounds from the ſtudy of Geography, which is exceeding uſefull to the reading of the holy Scriptures, as in diſcovering the ſituation of Paradiſe, the bounds and borders of thoſe Countries which are therein mentioned; eſpecially with relation to the travels of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, yea of Chriſt himſelf, not otherwiſe to be comprehended and underſtood but by the help of Geographicall Tables and Deſcriptions. Beſides this, it is uſefull to moſt ſorts of men, as to Aſtronomers, who are hereby informed of the different appearances of Stars in ſeverall Countries, their ſeverall influences and aſpects, their riſing and ſetting, according to different Horizons. Secondly, to Phyſicians, who are hereby acquainted with the different temper of mens bodies, according to the Climes they live in; the nature and growth of many Simples and Medicinall Drugs, whereof every Country under Heaven hath ſome more naturall and proper to it ſelf, than to any others. Thirdly, to

Stateſmen,

States-men, who from hence draw their knowledge of the nature and disposition of those people with whom they are to negotiate, the bounds and borders both of their own Kingdoms and the Neighbouring Countreys, with the extent of their respective Dominions both by Sea and Land; without the exact knowledge of which there would be a perpetuall Seminary of wars and discord. Fourthly, to Merchants, Mariners and Souldiers, the severall Professors of which kinds of life, find nothing more necessary for them in their severall callings, than a competent knowledge in Geography, which presents to them many notable advantages, both for their profit and contentment. Finally, by the study of Geography, a man that hath not opportunity nor means of travelling, may with as much benefit, but far less danger and expence, acquaint himself with the particular descriptions of Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns and Castles, with all things considerable in the same, together with the customes, manners, and dispositions of all Forrain Nations: and that too in as full a manner, as if he had survey'd the one, and observed the other, by a personall visit of the places represented to him.

Such is the necessary use which men of ingenuous Studies and Professions do and may make of History and Geographie, in the course of their callings and imployments. And there are some things also necessary to the knowledge of each, that we may study them with the greater benefit and contentation. To History it is onely requisite that it be defined, distinguished from such writings as do seem to challenge the name of Histories, and that somewhat be premised of those severall Epochs, from which all people do begin their computations. But to Geography it is needfull not onely that we do define it, but that we explicate those Terms or second Notions, which are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First then for History, if we consult the name or Quid nominis of it, it is derived ἀπὸ τῆς ἱστορῶ, i. e. Videre, and therefore properly doth signifie a Relation of such remarkable actions at which the Author was an Eye-witness, if not an Agent. Apud veteres enim (saith Isidore) nemo scribebat Historiam, nisi is qui interfuisset, & ea quæ scribenda essent vidisset. But now the customary use of the Word hath taught it a more ample signification. History being defined to be a Perfect Relation of all Occurrents observable happning in the State whereof it is written, described by the Motives, Pretexts, Consultations, Speeches and Events, a speciall care being had both of time and place.

As for the writings which do challenge the name of History, but indeed are really distinguished from it, they are Commentaries, Annals, Diaries or Journals, and Chronologies. First Commentaries set down onely a naked cognisance of Events and Actions, without the Motives and designs, the Counsells, Speeches, Occasions, and Pretexts of businesses. So that Cæsar with more modesty than true propriety of speech, applied the name of Commentaries to the best History in the World. A History commended by King James to his Sonne Prince Henry, above all other profane Authors, both for the sweet flowing of the stile, and the worthiness of the matter it selfe. "For I have ever (saith he) been of this opinion, that of all Ethnick Emperors, or great "Captains, he hath farthest exceeded both in his practice and in his precepts for martiall affairs. Which makes me the more wonder at the strange and unjust Censure of Justus Lipsius, who calls them Nudam & simplicem narrationem, for being entituled Commentaries, they do (saith he) nil pollicieri præter nomen, with pride and arrogance enough. 2. For Annals next, they are a bare recitall onely of the Actions happening every yeer, without regard had to the causes and pretexts, or any of the chief Ingredients required in History. So that Tacitus had no other Reason to give the name of Annals to his excellent Work, than that it is distinguished by the yeers of the Consuls. Otherwise there is no great difference as unto the matter betwixt an History and an Annal, the subject of them both being matter of State, and not such triviall things as Triumphs, Pageants, and such like, which stand not with the gravity and authority of Historicall Annals: betwixt which and a Diary the same Tacitus (speaking of some magnificent Structures which were built that yeer) doth make this difference, Res illustres Annalibus, talia diurnis Urbis actis mandari, that matters of the greater moment were committed to Annals, and unto Diaries the Acts and Accidents of a meaner nature. 3. But Diaries, besides this difference in point of matter, are distinguished from Annals also in point of time; a Diary or Journal, as the name imports, containing the Actions of each day; of which kind was the Chronicle called for by Ahasuerus, in which the Actions of his Court were referred to Journals, and in the which he found the relation of the treason intended against him by his Eunuchs. And of this kinde was that of King Edward the fixt, mentioned in the History of his life by Sir John Hayward. 4. Last of all, for Chronologies they are onely bare supputations of times, with some brief touch upon the Actions therein hapning, such as are those of Eusebius, Funccius, Calvisius, and Helvicus; of which last I dare give that testimony which Paterculus affords to Ovid, viz. that he is perfectissimus in forma operis sui; though he and all the rest are debtors to Eusebius for the incredible pains taken by him in his excellent Chronicon. Out of these four, as out of the four Elements, the Quintessence of History is extracted: borrowing from Annals time, from Diaries and Commentaries matter, from Chronologies consent of time and co-etanity of Princes; and thereto adding of her own all such other Ornaments in which these four are found defective.

That which remains is to premise somewhat of these severall Epochs, from whence particular States, Nations and People, make their computations. These have been very different in former times, according to the severall occasions took in severall Countreys. The Jews had severall Epochs peculiar to themselves alone, and one in common with their Neighbours. Those which they had amongst themselves were First from the Creation of the World, or the beginning of time; Secondly, from the universall Deluge, which hapned A. M. 1656. Thirdly, from the Confusion of Tongues, A. M. 1786. Fourthly, from Abrahams journey out of Chaldea into Canaan, A. M. 2021. Fifthly, from their deliverance out of Egypt, A. M. 2453. Sixthly, from the first yeer of Jubilee, A. M. 2499. Seventhly, from the building of Solomons Temple, An. 2932. And lastly, from the Captivity of Babylon, An. 3357. That which they had common with other Nations, was the Æra or Epoche of the Victory of the Greeks, which took beginning on the first Victory which Seleucus had against Antigonus, which was in A. M. 3637. an Accompt much used by the Jews, Chaldeans, Syrians, and other Nations of the East. But the Chaldeans also had their own Epoche or Accompt apart, reckoning their time from the first yeer of Nabonassar (Salmanassar he is called in Scripture) which being 438. yeers before this of Seleucus, must fall in A. M. 3201. Next for the Grecians, they reckoned a long while by Olympiades, the first of which is placed in the yeer of the World, 3174. (of which more hereafter.) But this Accompt perishing under the Constantinopolitans, they reckoned after by Indictions (an Accompt devised by Justinian:) every Indiction containing 15. yeers, the first beginning A.Ch. 513. which amongst Chronologers is still used. The Romans reckoned first from the foundation of their City, which was A.M. 3213, and afterwards from the sixteenth yeer of Augustus his Empire, (being that which properly is called the Roman Æra) A.M. 3936. An Accompt used by the Spaniards (where it first began) till the Reign of Pedro the fourth of Aragon, who abrogated it in his Dominions, An Ch. 1350. followed therein by John the first of Castile, An. 1383. and at last by the King of Portugal also, 1415. The Christians generally do reckon from the Birth of CHRIST, but this they did not use till the yeer 600. following in the mean time the Accompt of the Empire. And finally the Mahometans beginning their Hegira (for so they call the time of their Computation) from the flight of their Prophet Mahomet from Mecca, when he was driven thence by the Phylarche; which hapned A.Ch. 617. Of these we shall make use generally but of two alone, those namely of the Worlds Creation, and our Saviours Birth; and of the building of Rome, and the flight of Mahomet, in things that do relate to those severall States.

Next for Geographie we will first define it, and after explicate such terms or second notions as are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First for the definition of it, it is said by Ptolomie to be a description of the whole Earth, or the whole Earth imitated by writing and delineation, with all other things generally annexed unto it. Ἡ γεωγραφία μίμησις ἐστὶ διὰ γραφῆς (and not διαγραφῆς, as it is commonly, but corruptly read) τῆς κατοικουμένης ἅπασ ης μέρους ὅλου μετὰ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ συνεχόντων, as his own words are. In which we look not on the Earth simply as it is an Element, for so it belongeth to Philosophy; but as it is a Spherscall body proportionably composed of Earth and Water, and so it is the subject of Geography.

First for the Earth, which is the first part of this body, it is affirmed by the best Writers to be 21600. miles in compass, which is demonstrable enough. For being there are in every of the greater Circles 360. degrees, every degree being reckoned at 60. miles: let 360. be multiplied by 60. and the Product will be 21600. as before is said. So that if it were possible to make a path round about the Earth, an able Footman going constantly 24. miles a day, would compass it in 900. days.

The Earth is divided { In respect of men, into the right hand and the left. / In respect of it self, into parts Reall and Imaginary.

To Poets, which turn their Faces towards the Fortunate Islands (so memorized and chanted by them) the which are situated in the West; the North is the right hand, and the South the left.

To the Augures of old, and in our days to Priests and Men in holy Orders, who usually in their Sacrifices, and divine Oblations, convert themselves unto the East; the South is the right hand, and the North the left.

To Astronomers, who turn their faces towards the South, because that way the motions of the Planets may be best observed; the West is the right hand, and the East the left.

Finally, to Geographers, who by reason they have so much to do with the Elevation of the Pole, do turn their faces towards the North; the East is the right hand, and the West the left.

The Reall parts of the Earth are divided commonly into { Continents, / Ilands.

A Continent is a great quantity of Land, not separated by any Sea from the rest of the World; as the whole Continent of Europe, Asia, Africa; or the Continents of France, Spain, Germany.

An Iland is a part of the Earth environed round about with some Sea or other; as the Isle of Britain with the Ocean, the Isle of Sicilie with the Mediterranean: and therefore in Latine it is called Insula, because it is situate in Salo as some derive it.

Touching the Continent I have nothing in general to inlarge, til we come to the particular Chorography & description of them. But for Ilands (leaving the disquisition of their being, or not being before before the Flood) there are four causes to which they may be thought to owe their Originall, 1. An Earthquake, which works two waies towards their production: First, when by it one part of a Countrey is forcibly torne away from the other; and so Eubœa was divided from the rest of Attica: And Secondly, when some vehement wind or vapour being shut up in such parts of the Earth as be under the Sea, raiseth the Earth above the Water; whereunto the Originall of most of those Ilands which are far remote from any part of the Continent is probably to be referred. 2. Great Rivers at their entry into the Sea carry with them abundance of gravell, dirt, and weeds; which, if the Sea be not the more working, will in time settle to an Iland. So the Corn which Tarquinius sowed in the Campus Martius, being cut down by the people, and cast into Tiber, setled together, and made the Holy Iland. So the River Achelous caused the Echinades, as anon we shall more at large declare. 3. The Sea violently beating on some small Isthmus, weareth it thorough, and turneth the Peninsula into a compleat Isle. Thus was Sicilie divided from Italie, Cyprus from Syria, England from France, and Wight from the rest of England. And 4. sometimes as it eateth and worketh on some places, so it voluntarily leaveth and abandoneth others, which in some time grow to be Ilands, and firm land under foot. So it is thought the Isles of Zeland have been once part of the main Sea: and Verstegan proveth it, because that the Husbandmen in tilling and manuring the ground, finde sometimes Anchors here and there fixt, but very often the bones of huge and great fishes, which could by no other accident come thither. To these kinde of Ilands Pythagoras in Ovid alluding, saith,

——Vidi factas ex æquore terras,
Et procul à pelago conchæ jacuere marinæ,
Et vetus inventa est in montibus anchora summis.

Oft have I seen that earth, which once I knew
Part of the Sea; so that a man might view
Huge shells of fishes in the upland ground;
And on the Mountain tops old Anchors found.

As concerning the situation of Ilands, whether commodious or not, this is my judgement. I find in Machiavel, that for a Citie whose people covet no Empire but their own Towns, a barren place is better than a fruitfull, because in such seats they are compelled to work and labour, by which they are freed from idleness, and by consequence from riotousness: But for a City whose Inhabitants desire to enlarge their confines, a fertile place was rather to be chosen than a sterill, as being more able to nourish multitudes of people. The like I say of Ilands. If a Prince desire rather to keep than augment his Dominions, no place fitter for his abode than an Iland; as being by it self and nature sufficiently defensible. But if a King be minded to adde continually to his Empire, an Iland is no fit seat for him; because partly by the uncertainty of Winds and Seas, partly by the longsomness of the waies, he is not so well able to supply and keep such forces as he hath on the Continent. An example hereof is England, which hath even to admiration repelled the most puissant Monarch of Europe; but for the causes above mentioned, cannot shew any of her winnings on the firm land, though she hath attempted and atchieved as many glorious exploits as any Country in the World.

The Continent and Iland are sub-divided into { Peninsula. / Isthmus. / Promontorium. }

Peninsula, quasi pene Insula, is a tract of land, which being almost encompassed round by water, is joyned to the firm land by some little Isthmus; as Peloponnesus, Taurica, and Peruana.

Isthmus is that little narrow neck of land, which joyneth the Peninsula to the Continent; as the Streights of Dariene in America, and Corinth in Greece.

Promontorium, is a high Mountain which shooteth it self into the Sea, the outmost end of which is called a Foreland, or Cape; as the Cape of Good Hope in Africk, Cape Comari in India, &c.

The Imaginary parts of the Earth are such which not being at all in the Earth, must yet be supposed to be so, for the better teaching and learning this Science; and are certain Circles going about the Earth, answerable to them in Heaven, in name.

These Circles are either the { Greater, / Lesser, } in both which there are 360. Degrees, which in the greater Circles are greater than those in the lesser; and every Degree in the greater is 60. miles.

The greater Circles are either { Immutable, as the Æquator / Mutable, as the { Horizon. / Meridian. } }

The

The Æquator is a great Circle going round about the Terreſtiall Globe from Eaſt to Weſt. It paſſeth through Habaſſia, Sumatra, Guiana, &c. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Latitude of any Town, Promontory, &c. Now the Latitude is the diſtance of a place South or North from the Æquator, or middle of the World; and muſt be meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees in the Meridian.

The Meridian is a great Circle rounding the earth from Pole to Pole. There are many Meridians, according to the divers places in which a man liveth; but the chief and firſt Meridian paſſeth through the Iſland St. Michael, one of the Azores. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Longitude of any place. Now the Longitude of a Citie, Cape, &c. is the diſtance of it Eaſt and Weſt from the firſt Meridian, and is uſually meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees of the Æquator.

The Horizon is a great Circle, deſigning ſo great a ſpace of the earth, as a quick ſight can ken in an open field. The uſe of it is to diſcern the divers riſings and ſettings of the Stars.

The leſſer Circles either are { Noted with ſome name, as { Tropicall of { Cancer. / Capricorn. } / Polar, either { Artick. / Antartick } } / Noted with no diſtinct name, and are the Parallels. }

The Tropick of Cancer (ſo called of the Cæleſtiall ſign Cancer) is diſtant from the Equinoctiall 23 Degrees Northward, and paſſeth through Barbary, and India, China, and Nova Hiſpania.

The Tropick of Capricorn, equally diſtant from the Æquator Southward, paſſeth through Ethiopia inferior, and the midſt of Peruana. And this is to be obſerved in theſe Tropicks, that when the Sun is in the Tropick of Cancer our daies are at the longeſt; and when he is gone back to the Tropick of Capricorn, the daies are at the ſhorteſt. The firſt they call the Summer, the laſt they call the Winter Solſtice; the firſt hapning on, or about St. Barnabies day in June, the laſt on, or about St. Lucies day in December.

The Artick Circle (ſo called for that it is correſpondent to the Conſtellation in Heaven called the Bear, in Greek Arctos) is diſtant from the Tropick of Cancer 45 Degrees, and paſſeth through Norway, Muſcovy, Tartary, &c.

The Antartick Circle (ſo called becauſe oppoſite to the other) is as much diſtant from the Tropick of Capricorn, and paſſeth through Terra Auſtrialis Incognita. The uſe of theſe four Circles is to deſcribe the Zones.

The Zones are ſpaces of earth included betwixt two of the leſſer nominate Circles. They are in number five, one over-hot, two over-cold, and two temperate.

The over-hot, or Torrid Zone, is betwixt the two Tropicks, continually ſcorched with the preſence of the Sun.

The two over-cold, or Frigid Zones, are ſituate between the two Polar Circles, and the very Poles, continually wanting the neighbourhood of the Sun.

The two temperate Zones, are betwixt the Tropick of Cancer, and the Artick, and 'twixt the Tropick of Capricorn, and the Antartick Circles; enjoying an indifferency between heat and cold; ſo that the parts next the Torrid Zone are the hotter, and the parts next the Frigid Zone are the colder.

Theſe five Zones are diſpoſed according to the order of the Zones in heaven; of which thus Ovid Metamorph. 1.

Utque duæ dextra cœlum, totidemque ſiniſtra
Parte ſecant Zonæ, quinta eſt ardentior illis;
Sic onus incluſum numero diſtinxit eodem
Cura dei, totidemque plagæ tellure premuntur.
Quarum quæ media eſt, non eſt habitabilis æſtu;
Nix tegit alta duas; totidem inter utramque locavit
Temperiemque dedit miſta cum Frigore Flamma.

And as two Zones do cut the Heavens right-ſide,
And likewiſe other two the left divide,
The midſt in heat excelling all the reſt;
Even ſo it ſeem'd to the Creator beſt,
That this our World ſhou'd ſo divided be,
That with the Heavens in Zones it might agree.
The midſt in heat; the outwardmoſt excell
In Snow and Ice, ſcarce fit for men to dwell.
Betwixt theſe two extremes, two more are fixt,
Where heat with cold indifferently is mixt.

Parallels, called alſo Æquidiſtants, circle the Earth from Eaſt to Weſt, and are commonly ten Degrees aſunder: Such are the Parallels which are ſet down in our Maps and Globes. But there are another ſort of Parallels, two of which go to a Clime: Theſe are called Artificiall Parallels

These Climats are supposed to passe by Diverse Ilands within the Artick circle, as Groenland, Island, Greenland, wherein, as yet, for the narrownes of these climates conming near together, and the uncertainty of observation, no speciall places have been assigned, as to the other.

, becauſe they ſhew the difference of the Artificiall daies; and are of an unequall bredth, we ſhall ſee in the Table following. The uſe of theſe leſſer Parallels is to ſhew the Cli-tes.

ow a Clime, or Climate, is a ſpace of the Earth contained betwixt three Parallels, the middle-oſt whereof divideth it into two equall parts; ſerving for ſetting out the length and ſhort-ſs of the daies in every Country. For under the Æquator the daies are of the juſt length of hours; but afterwards they increaſe the length of half an hour for every Clime, till they me to the length of 24 hours, without night at all; which length attained, they increaſe no re by hours, but by weeks and moneths, till they come to the length of half a year. So that are to reckon 24 Climes Northward, and as many Southwards: Thoſe Northward known by the oper name of the place or City over which the middle Parallel of the Clime doth paſs, as Dia Meroes, Dia Syenes, &c. Thoſe on the South by the ſame names, with the addition of Anti, as Anti-Dia-Syenes, Anti-Dia-Meroes, &c. 'Tis true, the antient Coſmographers made but 7 Climes all; at the moſt but nine; Nor needed they to adde more, as the caſe ſtood with them; e extent of the habitable World towards each of the Poles, not being ſo fully known to them, it is to us.

And here, becauſe thoſe Climes are not of equall bredth or extent of Latitude, but grow nar-ower and narrower towards each Pole; in which regard it is impoſſible to deſcribe them un-er any Rule; I have thought fit to adde this enſuing Table, partly framed out of the Com-nentaries of Clavius on the works of John de Sacro Boſco, and partly out of Hues his Book, Of he uſe of the Globes. The whole divided into 7 Columns. In the firſt whereof is ſhewed what limes are inhabited by the Amphiſcii, Periſcii, and Heteroſcii, which terms we ſhall anon ex-ound; In the ſecond is ſet down the number of the Climes themſelves; In the third the num-er of the Parallels; In the fourth the length of the daies in Summer; In the fifth the di-ance of every Clime and Parallel from the Æquator; In the ſeventh the name of the Town r place, thorough which the middlemoſt of the three Parallels doth paſs; in this manner ollowing.

Here followeth the Table of the Climes.

A ſecond uſe of theſe Parallels and other Circles, is for diſtinction of men in their ſeverall wellings, who are (according as they are treated of in Geography) divided in reſpect of their adows into Amphiſcii, Periſcii, Heteroſcii; and in reſpect of their ſite and poſition, into ntæci, Periæci, and Antipodes.

Amphiſcii are ſuch as dwell between the two Tropicks: ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are oth wayes: ſometimes (when the Sun is North) to the South; ſometimes (when the Sun is outh) to the North.

Periſcii are ſuch as dwell beyond the Polar circles: ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are on all ides of them.

Heteroſcii are ſuch as dwell in either of the two temperate Zones: ſo called, becauſe their adows reach but one way; viz. in our Zone to the North onely; as in the other, to the South nely.

Antœci are ſuch as dwell under the ſame Meridian, and the ſame Latitude or Parallel, equally iſtant from the Æquator; the one Northward, the other Southward: the daies in both laces being of a length; but the Summer of the one being the others Winter.

Periæci are ſuch as dwell in the ſame Parallel, on the ſame ſide of the Æquator, how diſtant oever they be Eaſt and Weſt: the ſeaſon of the year, and the length of dayes being to both alike; ut the ones midnight being the others noon.

Antipodes are ſuch as dwell feet to feet, ſo as a right line drawn from the one unto the other, aſſeth from North to South, through the center of the World. Theſe are diſtant 180 degrees, which is half the compaſs of the Earth. They differ in all things, as ſeaſons of the year, ength of daies, riſing and ſetting of the Sun, with the like. A matter reckoned ſo ridiculous, nd impoſſible (if not ſomewhat worſe) in the former times, that Boniface Arch-Biſhop of Mentz hapning to ſee a Tractate written by Virgilius Biſhop of Saltzburg, touching the Anti-odes, and not knowing what damnable Doctrine might be couched under that ſtrage name, nade complaint firſt to the Duke of Bohemia, and after to Pope Zacharie, An. 745. by whom he poor Biſhop (unfortunate onely in being learned in ſuch a time of ignorance) was condem-ned of Hereſie. But Boniface might the rather be excuſed in regard that many of his betters fell alſo on the ſelf-ſame error. For venerable Bede, a man whoſe books Arch-B. Boniface was not worthy to carry, eſteemeth the opinion touching the Antipodes, to be no better than a Fable, Neque enim Antipodarum ullatenus eſt fabulis accommodandus aſſenſus, in his Book de Ratione temporum, cap. 32. And yet the marvell is the leſs, conſidering that he lived in the darker times of he Church, when the ſtate of learning was in its declination; when S. Auguſtine and Lactantius, and ſome others of the Antient Writers, who lived when learning was at the very height, ondemn this point of the Antipodes for an incredible ridiculous Fable: whoſe words I could ut down at large, did I think it neceſſary. So that we of theſe Ages have very good cauſe to uſe the words of the late L. Verulam) to congratulate the preſent times, in that the World in these our dayes, hath thorough-lights made in it after a wonderfull manner, whereby we clearly see those things which either were unknown, or but blindly guessed at by the Antients.

But to proceed, the second part of the Terrestriall Globe is the Water, which making but one Globe with the Earth, is yet higher than it. This appears, first, because it is a body not so heavy: Secondly, it is observed by Saylors that their ships move faster on the shore than from it, whereof no reason can be given but the height of the water above the land. Thirdly, to such as stand on the shore, the Sea seems to swell from the form of a round hill, and it puts a bound upon our sight. Now that the Sea hovering thus over and above the Earth, doth not over-whelme it, must be ascribed only to his Power and Providence, who hath made the Waters to stand on an heap, who hath set them a bound that they shall not pass, nor turn again to cover the Earth. The other affections and properties of the Sea, as motion, saltnesse, and the like, I willingly omit, as belonging rather to Philosophers, than this present Argument.

The Sea or Water is divided into { 1. Oceanus. 2. Mare 3. Fretum. / 4. Sinus. 5. Lacus. 6. Flumen.

Of which and other Waters thus saith Ovid in his Metamorphosis;

Tum Freta diffudit, rapidisq; tumescere ventis
Jussit, & ambitæ circumdare littora terræ.
Addidit & Fontes, & Stagna immensa, Lacusq;
Fluminaque obliquis cuncta decliuia ripis, &c.

Which may be Englished to this purpose:

He spread the Seas, which then he did command
To swell with winds, and compass round the land:
To those he adds Springs, Pooles, and Lakes immense,
And Rivers which their winding Borders fence.
Of these not few Earth's thirsty jaws devour,
The rest their streams into the Ocean pour,
When in that liquid Plain with freer Wave,
The foamie Cliffs instead of Banks they have.

to 1

And first Oceanus the Ocean is that generall Collection of all waters, which encompasseth the Earth on every side. A point which Ovid hath determined right enough, but laugh'd at by Herodotus in the former times; who counted it a grosse absurdity for any man to write or write that the Earth was round, or encompassed about with the main Ocean. But modern Navigations have found that to be true, which he held ridiculous; and which the most learned in those times knew rather by conjecture, than by demonstration. Nor were those Ages so acquainted with those ebbs and flowings of the Ocean, and all those other Seas and Rivers which have intercourse with it, as the meanest Saylor at the present. The naturall causes of the which seeming so full of difficultie to the best of the Antients, Experience hath taught us to ascribe wholly to the Moon, at whose Full and Prime the Tides are ever highest, and the Sea most furious. For as soon as the Moon cometh forth from under our Horizon, the Sea beginneth to swell, and floweth towards the East, (as it were to wait upon her, or beare her company), till she come unto the height of our Meridian: after which either Setting or Western fall, the Sea abateth or decreaseth; which we call the Ebb. And when she passeth out of our Horizon towards the Antipodes, the Ocean begins to swell till the height of Midnight, and coming towards our Hemisphere doth again abate. In brief, from the New Moon till the first quarter the Sea decreaseth, from the first quarter to the full it is said to Spring; from the full to the last quarter it is said to neap; and from the last quarter to the new it Springs again. As for the uncertainty of the Tides, varying every day, it is not so perplexed and intricate, but that they which live on the Banks or Shores thereof, know well when to look for it, the next days Tide coming for the most part one hour, 10. minutes after the time it hapned on the day fore-going.

2. Mare, the Sea, is a part of the main Ocean, to which we cannot come but through some Fretum or Streight; as Mare Mediterraneum. And it takes name, First, either from the adjacent shore, as Mare Adriaticum, from the City of Adria, Mare Tyrrhenum, from the Coast of Tuscanie; Or, Secondly, from the first Discoverer, as Mare Magellanicum, from Magellanus who first found it; Or, Thirdly, from some remarkable Accident, as Mare Icarium, from the drowning of Icarus the son of Dædalus.

3. Fretum, a Streight, is a part of the Ocean, penned within narrow bounds, and opening a way into some Sea, or out of some Sea into the Ocean; as the Streights of Hellespont, Gibraltar, Fretum Davis, &c.

4. Sinus, a Creek, or Bay, is a Sea contained within a crooked or circling shore, wherewith it is almost environed; as Sinus Persicus, Corinthiacus, &c. and this is sometimes called a Gulf, as the Gulf of Lepanto.

5. Lacus, a Lake, is a great bodie or collection of waters which hath no visible intercourse with with the Sea, or influx into it, as the Lake of Thraſymene in Italie, the Lacus Aſphaltites, or the Dead Sea in the Land of Canaan. And of this kinde properly is the Mare Caſpium, though by reaſon of the greatneſs of it, it is called a Sea.

6. Flumina or Fluvius, is a water-courſe continually running, whereby it differeth from Stagnum, or a ſtanding Pool, iſſuing from ſome Spring or Lake, and emptying it ſelf into ſome part of the Sea, or ſome other great River, the mouth or out-let of which is called Oſtium, Tiberinaq; longe Oſtia, as the Poet hath it. Theſe are conceived in the Earth, and derive both their birth and continuall ſuſtenance from the Air; which piercing the open chinks or Chaſma's of the Earth, and congealed by the extreme cold of that Element, diſſolves into water (as we ſee the Air in winter-nights to be melted into a pearly dew, ſticking on our glaſs-windows) and being grown to ſome quantity, will (like Annibal in the Alpes) either finde a way, or make a way, to vent its ſuperfluity. Which beginning is ſeconded by the Ocean, which running thorough the hidden paſſages of the Earth, joyneth it ſelf with this aëriall vapour, and continueth the begun current. This Sea-water (though in it ſelf of a ſalt and brackiſh ſavour, yet) paſſing through divers windings and turnings of the Earth, is deprived of all unpleaſantneſs; and by how much the ſpring-heads of Rivers are remote from the Sea, by ſo much uſually are their waters affected with a delightfull reliſh. Rivers having thus entred themſelves into a good courſe, are never without the aſſiſtance of neighbouring ſprings and waters, by whoſe addition they augment their ſtreams, till they diſchannell themſelves into the Sea. Now there is of Rivers a treble uſe. Firſt, that out of them drink may be afforded to man and beaſt. Secondly, that running thorough the earth, as blood thorough the body, by interlacing it, and ſometimes overwhelming it, it might make the Earth able to produce thoſe fruits which are neceſſary for the life of man. The laſt uſe of Rivers is, eaſineſs and ſpeedineſs of conduct; and hereto are required four conditions. Firſt the depth, becauſe deep waters ſuſtain the bigger burdens, and on them navigation is more ſafe. Secondly, pleaſantneſs, whereby the paſſage is eaſie both with the ſtream and againſt it: whereas in Rivers of a violent current, or ſuch as fall down by great locks or Cataracts, the ſayling or rowing up the water is as dangerous, as laborious. Thirdly, the thickneſs of the water: for by how much the more ſlimie and groſs a water is, by ſo much can it carry the heavier burdens. So Tiber, a River of more fame than depth, or bredth, is better for navigation, by reaſon of its fatneſs, than the pure and thin waters of the large and excellent River Nilus. Fourthly, the broadneſs of the channell, that ſhips and other veſſells may conveniently wind and turn, and give way to each other. Some of the old Philoſophers reputed this conduct ſo dangerous, that one of them being asked whether he thought the living or the dead were the greater number, would not declare himſelf, becauſe he knew not in which rank to place ſuch as were at Sea. And Cato Major thought that men never committed greater folly in their lives, than in venturing to go by water, when they might have gone by land. I am none of that Sect, yet I cannot but hold with him that ſaid, Dulciſſima eſt ambulatio prope aquas, navigatio juxta terram.

The chief Rivers of Europe, are Danubius, and the Rhenus; of Africa, Nilus, and Niger; of Aſia, Ganges, and Euphrates; of America, Orenoque, and Maragnan. Of which and others, more in its proper place.

Thus have we gone over theſe particulars both of Earth and Water, which are conſiderable in Geographie, and come within the compaſs of thoſe Annexaries of each, which Ptolomy calleth τὰ συνημμένα: And having ſo done, may diſcover where the difference lieth between Geographie and Chorographie, which to ſome men, not rightly looking into the nature of both, ſeem to be the ſame. For howſoever a Chorographer doth deſcribe a Countrey by the bounds, rivers, hills, and moſt notable Cities; yet it is ſtill but the deſcription of ſome place or Countrey, and not of the whole Earth univerſally, which is the proper work of a Geographer. So that Chorography differeth from Geography as a part from the whole: that being as Ptolomy doth very handſomely expreſs it, like the painting of an eye or an ear, or ſome other member; this, as the picturing of the head or whole body of man. But Geographie in its full latitude comprehendeth not Chorography only, but Topographie and Hydrographie alſo. Of theſe the laſt is the delineation of the Sea by its ſeverall names, Ports, Promontories, Creeks and other affections, as alſo of great Lakes and Rivers. Which is moſt neceſſary for the uſe of Mariners, and is beſt done by Petrus de Medina, Peter Nonnius in his Regula Artis Navigandi, and Johannes Aurigarius in his Speculum Nauticum, the chief Writers in the Art of Pilotiſme.

2. Topographie is the deſcription of ſome particular place or City; of which kinde was the Book of Stephanus de urbibus, or De Vrbibus, among the Antients, and the Theatrum Vrbium written by Bruinus in theſe later times; Stowes Book of the Survey of London, the French Antiquities de Paris, and ſuch as theſe. And of this kinde is the deſcription of the Vale of Tempe, in the greater Ortelius; and thoſe of the Elyſian fields, the gardens of Alcinous, and the Heſperedes in the antient Poets.

3. Chorographie (as before was ſaid) is the exact deſcription of ſome Kingdom, Countrey, or particular Province of the ſame; unleſs this laſt may fall more properly under the notion of Chorographie. Of this kinde the deſcription of the ſeverall eſtates of Greece written by Pauſanias, is of moſt uſe and reputation of all the Antients: as that of Camden Glarentenx for the Ile of Britain, of Lewis Guicciardine for the Low Countreys, Leander for Italy, &c. are amongſt the Moderns.

Fourthly, Geography finally is an aggregate of all these together, borrowing from Hydrography the description of Seas and Waters. From Topography, that of Towns, Cities, and particular places: And from Chorography, the delineations of Regions, Provinces, and Kingdoms; which brought into a body, make up that Portraiture or Picture of the whole Earth, and every considerable part thereof, in writing, which, according to Ptolomies definition before mentioned, is properly and truly called Geography. In the advancement of which studies, those which have took most pains, with the greatest benefit to Posteritie, are the said Ptolomie, Plinie, and Strabo for the elder times, Mercator, Maginus, and Ortelius for the later Ages. Of which the two first lived in the times of Antonius Pius the Roman Emperour, Anno Chr. 141. or hereabours; the other in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, the unworthy Successor of Augustus: the three last flourishing in the daies of our Fathers, about some 80 years ago.

Thus have I briefly summed up those generall Præcognita, which I conceive are necessary to the knowledge and understanding as well of History as of Geography. Out of which two compounded and intermixt ariseth that universal Comprehension of Naturall and Civill story, which by a proper and distinct name may be termed Cosmography. And this may well be reckoned amongst mixed stories; for it hath from Naturall History or Geography, the Regions themselves, together with their Sites, and severall Commodities; from Civill History, Habitations, Governments, and Names; and from the Mathematicks, the Climates, and Configurations of the Heavens, under which the Coasts and Quarters of the World do lie. Of the Utilitie and excellencie of which study I need say no more than what hath been already spoken of the severall parts, whereof this is only the Result.: desiring pardon of the Reader, that I have christened these imperfect and unworthy Papers by so noble a name; which I desire they may deserve, though I fear they will not. However I will give the venture, and make as speedy and as profitable a discovery, as the times enable me, of the whole World, and the most observable things therein, according to the best light which the reading of Histories and Geographicall discourses hath supplied me with; beseeching him who made the World, and ordereth all the Governments and Affairs thereof as to him seems best, to bless me in the undertaking; and furnish me with fit Abilities both of strength and judgement to go thorough with it.

Ipse enim est qui operatur in nobis & velle & perficere;

The First Book,

Containing the CHOROGRAPIE and HISTORIE of ITALIE, the ALPINE Provinces, FRANCE, SPAIN, and BRITAIN, with the ILES thereof.

OF THE WORLD,

EUROPE.

OF the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantations of the same by the sonnes of Men, sufficient hath been spoken already. We are to look upon it now, as perfected and peopled in all parts thereof, but all those parts united into one Compositum; called therefore by the Grecians Τὰ Πάντα, & Τὸ Ὅλον, because the Summa totalis, and generall comprehension of all things existent. In which respect called by the Latins, Universum, a name of multitude; but of a multitude united, (Universi qui in uno loco versi, say the old Grammarians.) The great body of the World, like the body of man, though it have many parts and members, is but one body only. A body of so perfect and exact a form, of so compleat a Symmetrie in respect of the particular parts, and all those parts so beautified and adorned by the God of Nature, that from the elegancy and beauties of it, it was called Κόσμος by the Grecians, and Mundus by the Latins; both names declaring the Composure of it to be full of Ornament; and all those Ornaments conducting mankind to the knowledge of God. For (as the Christian Advocate reasoneth very strongly,) As he which comes into an house, and seeth all things in it ordered in a beautifull and comely order, utrisque praesse crederet Dominum, &c. Must needs conceive, both that the house had some wise Lord and Master who had so contrived it, and that such Lord and Master of it was of more worth and excellencie than the house and furniture: So (saith he) whosoever doth observe the most eminent beauties of the Heaven and Earth, most needs conceive there is some great and more glorious power who did first create it, disposing of all things therein in such excellent manner.

This contemplation, together with the notions of a Deitie which naturally are ingrafted in the soul of man, hath trained up all men in the practice of some Religion, though few (comparatively) so happy as to be practised in the true. For though the knowledge and worship of the true God, by reason of some accessions in America and the Indies, be more generally diffused than in former times, yet is the least part of the World possessed by them who make profession of that Worship. For, dividing the whole World into 30 parts, it hath been found by such as have laboured in this search, that 19 of them are inhabited by Idolaters, who either know no God at all, or worship stocks and stones for Gods, even the work of mens hands. Of the 11 parts which are remaining, six are possessed by Jews, Turks, and Saracens; who though they have the knowledge of God that made them, yet abnegating, or not worshipping the Lord that bought them, they have no part nor portion in the true Religion. Then for the five which are behind, two are conceived to be of the Greek Communion; the other three being divided betwixt those of the Church of Rome, and such as otherwise differing in some opinions, pass generally nerally by the name of Protestant, or Reformed Churches. Which as it sheweth how small a portion of the World is possessed by Christians, who only (though not all of them) have reason to pretend to the true Religion: So doth it shew (I note this only by the way) how falsly those of Rome make Multitude of Professors to be a sign of the True Church; and then conceive themselves to be such a multitude as corresponds unto that sign. Faultie alike both in the Position and the Application. For if the multitude of Professors be a sign of the Church, the true Church should be found rather amongst the Heathens or Mahumetans, than amongst the Christians; or if they do restrain their meaning (as I hope they do) to those who make profession of the Christian faith, those of the Greek Communion, possessing two whole parts of five, will be found more numerous than the members of the Church of Rome, though possibly of less esteem in the eye of the World. So infinitely vain was that Brag of Bellarmine (though otherwise more modest than the rest the Jesuits) affirming positively and expresly, Romanam Ecclesiam universum plane orbem possidere; i. e. That the Church of Rome is fully of as large a latitude as the World it self. This I have noted by the way, intending to take a more speciall notice of the state of Religion in the severall Provinces of the World, to which now I hasten, premising first this scheme of those severall parts into which it doth now stand divided.

THE WORLD is divided into two parts.

- Unknown, or not fully discovered; and is divided commonly into Borealis and Australis; the last taking up the whole Southern Continent; the other lying on the North of Europe and America; whereof we shall say somewhat at the end of this Work.
- Known either
  - Antiently, as Europe, Asia, Africa.
  - Lately, as America.

Europe is joyned to Asia by that space of earth which is between the heads of Tanais and Duina; Asia is joyned to Africk by the Egyptian Isthmus; America is divided (as most conjecture) from all of them. Europe is separated from Asia by a line drawn from the Bay of St. Nicolas, to the head of Tanais, from thence by that River it self all the length of his course; then by Palus Mœotis, the Euxine Sea, the Thracian Bosphorus, the Propontis, the Hellespont, and the Ægean. Asia is parted from Africk by the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: And Africa from Europe by the Mediterranean. Africa is greater than Europe, Asia than Africk, and America than Asia.

They which have entertained a fancy of resembling every Countrie to things more obvious to the sight and understanding, have likened Europe to a Dragon; the head of which they make to be Spain; the two wings Italy and Denmark. In like manner they have been curiously impertinent, in resembling France to a Lozenge or Rhomboides; Belgium, to a Lyon; Britain, to an Ax; Ireland to an Egge; Peloponnesus to a Plantane leaf; Spain, to an Ox hide spread on the grownd; Italy (which indeed holdeth best proportion) to a mans Leg; with divers the like phantasmes of a capricious brain: these Countries no more resembling them, than pictures made when painting was in her infancy; under which they were fain to write, this is a Lyon, and this is a Whale, for fear the spectators might have taken one for a Cock, and the other for a Cat.

EUROPE, though the least (as being in length but 2800, in bredth but 1200 miles) is yet of most renown amongst us. First, because of the temperature of the Air, and fertilitie of the soyl. Secondly, from the study of Arts, both ingenuous and mechanicall. Thirdly, because of the Roman and Greek Monarchies. Fourthly, from the puritie and sincerity of the Christian Faith. Fiftly, because we dwell in it, and so first place it.

EUROPE is generally said to be so called from Europa the daughter of Agenor King of the Phœnicians, brought thence by Jupiter (as the Poets feign) in the shape of a Bull; or as some Histories say, by a Cretan Captain named Taurus: as others, in a Ship whose Beak had the portraiture of a Bull upon it. But why the bringing of that Lady into the Ile of Crete, should give denomination to the whole Continent of Europe, whereof that Iland is so inconsiderable and so small a part, I must confess I see no reason. Goropius Becanus, who holds the high Dutch to be the primitive language which was spoke in Paradise, and loves to fetch all names from thence, not thinking it convenient, that Europe, being first inhabited by Gomerians or Cimbrians, should be beholding to the Grecians for its name; will have it called Europe, quasi Ver-hop, by the transposition of the two first letters: Ver signifying excellent, and Hop a multitude (whence we use to say, as thick as Hops) because Europe contains a multitude of excellent people. And on the other side, Bochartus a French Writer, loving as much to bring all names from the Phœnician or Punick tongue, will have it called Europe, from Ur-appa, which signifieth in that language, a beautifull countenance, because the Europæans much exceld the Africans in whiteness of skin, and clearness of complexion. But in my mind Herodotus hath best determined of the controversie, who telleth us plainly, Ὁ δὲ τοῦτο ἔλεξε τοῦτο, ὅτι οὐκ ἦν ὁ λόγιος, &c. That it is utterly unknown, both whence it had the name of Europe, and who first called it so. And yet considering there is a Province in Thrace called Europe, (whereof more hereafter,) why might not the Asiatick give the name of Europe to this part of the World, according to the name of that Province which lay neerest to them, as the Romans did the name of Africk to the other part of the World, after the name of that particular Province or part thereof which they first brought under their obedience? Or as the Europeans gave the name of Asia to the greatest of the three known parts of the World, which properly and originally belonged unto Asia Minor, (as it since was called;) or rather to those parts thereof which lay next to Greece; as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place.

The first Inhabitants of Europe, as hath been shewn in part already, and shall be shewn more fully in its proper place, were the sonnes of Japhet, amongst whom, as the Scripture telleth us, the Isles of the Gentiles were divided, *Gen.*10.v.5. which includes all the Continent of Europe and the Isles adjoyning. For besides that it is compassed about with the Cyclades and other Isles in the Seas of Greece, together with the Ilands of Candie, Sicilie, Sardinia, Corsica, the Isles of Britain and Zealand, with their young ones adjacent: Europe it self was formerly taken for an Iland, as being invironed round with water, saving where it is joyned on the North-East to Asia the great, which very few of the Antients were acquainted with. And what are the great Countreys of Anatolia, Greece, Spain, and Italy, all which did fall to the Posterity of Japhet, but so many Peninsula's or Demy-Ilands invironed almost round with one Sea or other? Nor was the name and memory of Japhet so much forgotten by the Children which descended of him; but that the Greeks who were the first of their European Plantations, retained it a long time in their Iapetus, whom they make to be the sonne of Cœlum and Terra, and the father of the wise Prometheus, whom Ovid therefore calleth Satus Iapeto, in the first Book of his Metamorphosis. So that we see how punctually the first part of Gods blessing was fulfilled upon him; which was, that he would inlarge the borders of Japhet, *Gen.*9.27. The second part thereof, that he should dwell in the tents of Sem, though it was long before it came to the accomplishment, yet it came at last, and that both in the literall and mysticall sense. First in the literall, when the posterity of Japhet both Greeks and Romans, made themselves Masters of Judæa or the Land of Canaan, and the Eastern parts, promised to and possessed by the seed of Sem: Next in the mysticall, when God was pleased to break down the partition-wall, and to incorporate the Gentiles of the house of Japhet into the body of the Church, which for a long time was restrained to the Line of Sem.

Europe may be considered as it stands divided into the Continent and the Ilands: the Continent lying altogether; the Ilands as they are dispersed in the Greek, Ægean, Cretan and Ionian Seas, the Adriatick and the Mediterranean; and in the British and Northern Ocean. But in this work we shall discover them, and discourse of them in this following order, dividing Europe into 1. Italy, 2. the Alpes, 3. France, 4. Spain, 5. Britain, 6. Belgium, 7. Germany, 8. Denmark, 9. Swethland, 10. Russia, 11. Poland, 12. Hungary, 13. Sclavonia, 14. Dacia, and 15. Greece; and speaking of the severall Ilands as they relate to some or other of these greater Countries.

In all which Countries and the Ilands belonging to them, besides the Latine Tongue which is the now rather Scholasticall than Nationall; and besides the Italian, French, and Spanish, being but as so many corruptions of the Latine; and besides the English which is a Compound of Dutch, Latine and French; there are in all 14. Mother-Tongues, which owe nothing at all to the Roman; that is to say, 1. Irish, spoken in Ireland, and the West of Scotland; 2. British, or Welch, in Wales, and some parts of Cornwall. 3. Cantabrian, or Basquish, in Biscay, about the Pyrenean hills, and neer to the Cantabrian Ocean. 4. Arabick in the Mountains of Granada, called Alpuxarras. 5. Finnish, in Finland and Lapland, Provinces of the Crown of Sweden. 6. Dutch, (though with different Dialects) in Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Swethland. 7. Cauchian, which the East Frieslanders (or Cauchi,) speak amongst themselves, though to strangers they speak the Common Dutch. 8. Sclavonish, in Sclavonia, Poland, Hungarie, and almost all the parts of the Turkish Empire. 9. Illyrian, on the East side of Istria, and the Ile of Veggia. 10. Greek, in most Provinces and Isles of Greece, by the Greeks themselves. 11. Hungarian; and 12. Epirotique, in the mountainous places of those Countreys. 13. Jazygian, on the North side of Hungarie, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus; and 14. Tartarian, in the Taurica Chersonesus, and other European parts of that barbarous people. And this shall serve for Europe in the generall notion. Descend we now to the particular Kingdoms, Regions, and Ilands of it; beginning first of all with Italie, contrary to the usage of most Geographers, who commonly begin with Spain or Ireland, as being the furthest Countreys Westward, and consequently neerest to the first Meridian from whence the Longitude was reckoned. Which we shall do by reason of that great influence which the Romans had in most parts of Europe, and many parts of the World besides, in matters as well Civill as Ecclesiasticall, which much depended on the power of that Empire formerly, and on the usurpations of that Church in the later days.

ITALIE, once the Empreſs of the greateſt part of the (then known) World, is compaſſed with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tyrrhenian Seas, except it be towards France and Germany, from which it is parted by the Alpes; ſo that it is in a manner a Peninſula, or Demy-Iland. But more particularly, it hath on the Eaſt, the lower part of the Adriatick, and the Ionian Sea, by which it is divided from Greece; on the Weſt the River Varus, and ſome part of the Alpes, by which it is parted from France; on the North, in ſome parts the Alpes which divide it from Germanie; and on the other parts the Adriatick, which divides it from Dalmatia; and on the South the Tyrrhenian or Tuſcan Seas, by which it is ſeparated from the main land of Africa.

It containeth in length from Auguſta Prætoria (now called Aoſt) at the foot of the Alpes, unto Otramo in the moſt Eaſtern point of the Kingdom of Naples, 1020. miles: in bredth from the River Varo which parts it from Province, to the mouth of the River Arſia in Friuly, where it is broadeſt, 410. miles; about Otranti where it is narroweſt, not above 25. miles; and in the middle parts, from the mouth of Peſcara in the Adriatick or Upper Sea, to the mouth of Tiber in the Tuſcan or Lower Sea, 126. miles. The whole compaſs by Sea, reckoning in the windings and turnings of the ſhore, comes to 3038. miles; which added to the 410. miles which it hath by land, make up in all 3448. miles. But if the Coaſt on each ſide be reckoned by a ſtraight Line, then it falls very ſhort of this proportion, amounting in the totall as Caſtaldo computes it, to no more then 2550. miles. The whole Countrey lieth under the fifth and ſixth Climates of the Northern temperate Zone, which it wholly taketh up: ſo that the longeſt day in the moſt Northern parts is 15. hours, and three fifth parts of an hour; the longeſt in the Southern parts falling ſhort a full hour and no more of that length.

But theſe dimenſions muſt be underſtood of Italy in the preſent latitude and extent thereof, and not as it was called and counted of in the times of the Romans, neither in the growth nor flouriſhing fortunes of that State: The bounds of Italy on the Weſt, and North-Weſtern parts being then the River Rubicon which runneth into the Adriatick, not far from Ravenna, and the River Arno, which runneth into the Tyrrhenian Seas, by the Port of Ligorn. All that lay Weſtwards toward the Alpes, as it was poſſeſſed by the Gaules, ſo had it alſo the name of Gallia, and for diſtinctions ſake, of Gallia Ciſ-Alpina, and Togata, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Lombardie. And it continued, (though a Province of the Roman Empire) diſtinct from Italie, untill the Empire of Auguſtus; who dividing Italie for the better Government thereof into eleven Provinces or Regions, divided Gallia-Ciſalpina into ſeverall parts, (whereof more anon) and reckoned them as Provinces or Members of the Body of Italie.

The names hereof ſo bounded as before, are ſaid to have been very many, according to the ſeverall Nations which were antiently of moſt power and authority in it; or to the ſeverall fancies of the Name-giver: whereof ſome being the names onely of particular Provinces, were by a Metaſemy taken for and applyed to the whole. Of this laſt ſort, to omit others of leſs note, were Latium and Auſonia, the Auſones being a people dwelling about Cales, a town of Campania; and Latium, that particular Province which lieth on the Eaſt of Tiber, ſo called as moſt Writers are of opinion, à latendo, from hiding, becauſe Saturn being driven from Crete by Jupiter, hic latebat abditus, did here live concealed; ——Latiumq́, vocari Maluit, his quoniam latuiſſet tutus in Oris, as the Poet hath it.

Nor was this Virgils fancy onely, but a Tradition generall, followed and allowed of by the greateſt Writers, as by Eutropius, and Herodian, and by Minutius Felix alſo: though Varro pretending to more than ordinary knowledge in Antiquity, would have it called Latium, quod lateat inter præcipitia Alpium & Apennini, as Servius in his notes on Virgil, becauſe it lieth hidden (as it were) under the præcipices of the Alpes and Apenine hills, which cannot poſsibly be ſaid of Italy properly and antiently ſo called, no part whereof came neer the Alpes. The more generall names of the whole Countrey, were, 1. Heſperia, from Heſperus the ſonne of Atlas, as the Poets ſay, or rather as Macrobius is of opinion, from Heſperus the Evening Star, as being ſeated Weſtward in regard of Greece. 2. Oenotria, either from the abundance and excellency of the wines, wine being called Οἶνος by the Grecians; or as moſt think from Oenotrus an Arcadian King, one of the firſt Planters of the Countrey; And 3. Italia, the name at firſt of that part of this Continent which was after called Calabria, as ſhall there be evidenced, and by degrees communicated to the reſt of the Countrey: So named from Italus, a cheif Commander of ſome Nations that ſetled here. Of theſe three thus the Poet Virgil.

Eſt

Est locus, Hesperiam Graii cognomine dicunt,
Terra antiqua, potens armis, atq; ubere glebæ,
Oenotrii coluere viri; nunc fama, minores
Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine, Gentem.

Which may be Englished in these words.

That Which the Greeks Hesperia call'd, a place Great both in Arms and Wealth, first planted was
By the Oenotrians; since, if Fame not lie,
Was from their Chief-tains name call'd Italie.

Who and from whence this Italus was, we shall see ere long. Mean-time we will take notice of those honourary Attributes which have been given unto this Country, so denominated from him: by Mathieu called Regina Mundi, the Queen or Empress of the World. By Mamertinus one of the old Panegyrists, Gentium Dominum, the Mistress of Nations; by others, Paradisus Mundi, the terrestriall Paradise. But what need more be cited than is spoken by Pliny, who hath adorned Italie with this following Panegyrick? Italia tamquam omnibus alumna, eadem & parens, numinis Deûm electa quæ Cœlum ipsum clarius faceret, sparsa congregare imperia, ritus mollires, tot populorum discordes linguas sermonis commercio ad colloquia domesticaret, & humanitate hominem daret. Italy (saith he) the Parent, and withall the Foster-Child of all other Nations, was elected by the providence of the Gods, to make (if possible) the very Heavens themselves more famous; to gather the scattered Empires of the World into one body, to temper the barbarous Rites of uncivillized people, to unite the disagreeing languages of so many men by the benefit of one common tongue; and in a word, to restore man to his humanity. A very high Encomion doubtless, and yet not much more than the place deserves, with reference to the times when the Author lived.

The people anciently, (and to this day they still partake somewhat of those qualities) were wary of behaviour, sparing of expence, and most greedy of glory, according unto that of Tully, Semper appetentes gloriæ graviter serendas nationes fuit Romana: by which he doth not mean those onely who lived within the walls of the Citie of Rome, but also their Italian neighbours and associates, Romans by privilege and freedom, though not by birth. They have twice given the Law to the fairest, and most opulent parts of the World, once by their Valour, when the greatest part of the (then known) World was brought under the obedience of the State of Rome, the standing body of whose Armies was principally compounded of Italian hands. And Secondly, by their Wit, by which they have subdued a great part of Christendom, to the obedience of the Pope and Court of Rome, the standing body of whose Counsell (though he have Ministers of all tempers and nations) do specially consist of Italian Heads. In former times here lived the renowned Captains, Camillus the Second, and Fabius Maximus the Buckler of Rome; the two Scipios, one of which subdued Africk, and the other Asia; Pompey the great, who extended the Roman Empire Eastwards to the banks of Euphrates; Cæsar, the greater of the two, enlarging it Westward to the British, and the Belgick Ocean; besides infinite others of less note in respect of these, though most deserving in themselves. Here flourished also the famous Orators, Cicero, Hortensius, and Antonius; the renowned Historians, Livie, Tacitus, and Salustius; the memorable Poets, Virgil, Ovid, Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius; Plautus and Terence the Comedians; the Satyrists, Horace, Juvenal, and Persius. So equally were they favoured both by Mars and the Muses, that it is not easie to determine whether they were most eminent in Arts or Arms. What men of speciall eminence it hath since produced, we shall see hereafter, when we are come to take a view of Italy as it stands at present; and to that place we shall defer our Observation of the Rivers, Air, and disposition of the soyl, with such other particulars as have received little or no alteration in the change of times.

Italy was anciently divided, as most Countries else, into Tribes and Nations, as the Latines, Sabines, Tuscans, Samnites, Campans, Picentini, Picens, Ligures, Lucanians, Lucani, and others of inferiour note, whom we shall meet with in the description of those several States into which it doth now stand divided. But all those Nations being severally vanquished by the Roman puissance, and made up into one body, whereof Rome was the head; it pleased Augustus to divide it into eleven Regions, as before was said, that is to say, Liguria, Hesperia, Latium, Campania, Umbria, Samnium, Picenum, Gallia, Italia Transpadana, Venetia and Histria. In the time of the Emperor Antoninus, the Provinces of Italy were increased to fifteen, the bounds of the former Region being some what altered; and the three Iles of Sicilie, Corsica, and Sardinia, with the two Rhetias first and second added to the number. But being that this distribution received some change in the time of Constantine the Great, who altering both the names and bounds of the former Provinces, and adding one more to them, made 17 in all, that is to say, Tuscia and Umbria, 2 Picenum Suburbicarium, 3 Campania, 4 Apulia and Calabria, 5 Valeria, 6 Samnium, 7 Lucania and the Bruttii, 8 Sicilie, 9 Corsica, and 10 Sardinia, which made up the prefecture of the City of Rome, 11 Flaminia and Picenum Annonarium, 12 Venetia, 13 Æmilia, 14 Liguria, 15 Alpes Cottie, 16 Rhetia prima, and 17 Rhetia secunda, which made up the Dioceſs of Italy, properly and especially so called, whereof Millain was the first Metropolitan Citie, Aquileia afterwards.

The

The Language heretofore was divers, according to the ſeveral Provinces and people of it. In Apulia they uſed the Meſapian tongue, in that which is now called Calabria, they ſpake the Greek; in Hetruria they uſed the Tuſcan, and the Latin in Latium: which laſt ſo altered in ſhort time, by reaſon of the commerce they had with the conquered Nations, that the Articles of the Peace made between the Romans and Carthaginians at the expulſion of the Tarquins, could not be underſtood (as Polybius ſaith) by the beſt Antiquaries of his time. And yet the time between the making of thoſe Articles, and the time of Polybius, who was Contemporary with Scipio Africanus, there paſſed not above 300 years. That the Latin tongue was afterwards at any time ſpoke generally in all parts of the Roman Empire, or of Italy it ſelf, as I ſee ſome hold, I can by no means be perſwaded; it being by ſpeciall favour granted to the Cimans dwelling but an hundred miles from the walls of Rome, that they ſhould uſe the Roman language; which had been a meer mockery, and no mark of favour at all, if theſe Italian people dwelling out of Latium had uſed it formerly. And yet this hapned not above 140 years before the times of the Emperors, at what time the Romans were Lords of Italy, Sicilie, Sardinia, Corſica, and great part of Spain. And though the Latin tongue in ſucceeding times came to be underſtood in moſt parts of Italy, by reaſon of the Roman Colonies which were planted amongſt them (being in all no fewer than 150) and their continuall reſort to Rome on their ſeverall buſineſſes: it being a great point of the Roman State, not only to have their Laws written, and judgment pronounced by the Prætors for the ſeverall Provinces, in the Latin only; but to give Audience in the open Senate to none who came thither from the ſubject Nations, ſave only in the Latin tongue, their own proper language. Yet for all this, it never grew to ſuch extent to be the Language of the whole Empire, no nor of Italy it ſelf; no more than the Engliſh tongue is naturall or nationall to the Welch or Iriſh, though it be generally underſtood (for the very ſame reaſons) by all of the better ſort both in Wales and Ireland. In which regard I am not of their opinion, who think that the Italian (as the French and Spaniſh) are nothing but corruptions of the Latin tongues occaſioned by the inundations of the barbarous Nations. But rather that the Latin words which occur therein, proceeded from that weak impreſſion which the Latin tongue had made amongſt them, whilſt they were under the obedience of that puiſſant Empire; and that the Italian tongue as it is now ſpoken, could not receive ſo great a change from the barbarous Nations, none of which tarried long amongſt them, but the Goths and Lombards; nor they ſo long (the Lombards not at all in the Eaſtern parts) as to be either the occaſions or authors of the alteration. So that the preſent language of Italy is a decompound, made up eſpecially of Latin and the old Italian, ſome notions of the Lombard being mixt with it in the North and Weſt, ſome of the Gothiſh in the middeſt, about Rome it ſelf; and not a little of the Greek in the Eaſt of Naples.

And as the Language, ſo the Religion of the Countrie hath received ſome change. The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached in Rome it ſelf, and in Rome firſt preached by Saint Peter, who came thither in or about the beginning of the Empire of Claudius. The two Apoſtles Peter and Paul, are generally ſayd by the antient Writers to be the firſt who preached the Goſpel in that City. A duobus Apoſtolis Petro & Paulo Romæ fundata & conſtituta eſt Eccleſia, ſaith the old Father Irenæus. Lib. 4. cap. 3. To one of theſe the firſt preaching of the Goſpel there is to be referred; both being Biſhops of that City: That is to ſay, St. Peter of the Churches of the Circumciſion, St. Paul of thoſe which conſiſted ſpecially of the Gentiles. Now that the Goſpel was preached there before Pauls coming, is evident by his Epiſtle written to the Romans at Cenchreæ the Port-town of Corinth, ſix years at leaſt before his being brought to Rome; in which he teſtifieth, that their Faith was famous over all the World, and therefore could not count him who had never been there, for the planter of it: And as St. Peter was the firſt preacher of the Goſpel at Rome, ſo ſent he his Diſciples to promulgate it in moſt parts of Italy. The Roman Martyrologies reckon up eight Biſhops of St. Peters making for ſo many of the principall Cities of this Country; that is to ſay, Ephaphroditus (not he whom Saint Paul ſpeaks of in his Epiſtle to the Philippians) for Terracina, of old called Anxur, Hermagoras for Aquileia, Paulinus for Lucca, Apollinaris for Ravenna, Marcus for Arina, Proſdocimus for Padua, Marcianus for Syracuſe, and Pancratius for Tauromenium in the Iſle of Sicilie: But whether St. Peter planted it, or St. Paul watered it, certain I am that GOD onely gave it the increaſe. It could not elſe have proſpered under ſuch a tyranny, as many, if not moſt of the Roman Emperours, did earneſtly endeavour to ſuppreſs it with. But ſanguis Martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ; the watering of it by the blood of ſo many Martyrs made it grow the faſter. And this ſmall grain of Muſtard-ſeed waxed to great a tree, as over-ſhaddowed all the Provinces of that mighty Empire, and did not onely ſtand it out againſt all Tempeſts, but in concluſion did ſuppreſs that Superſtition and Idolatry, for whoſe ſake all thoſe Princes till the time of Conſtantine, did, more or leſs, labour to deſtroy it. How much it hath receded ſince thoſe times from its primitive puritie, and how it did degenerate into Worldly pomp, and Secular policy, by the deſign and arts of thoſe who boaſt themſelves to be Succeſſors to that great Apoſtle, ſhall be a little touched at in the ſtory of the Roman Papacie. Suffice it in this place to ſay, that all the people of this Country, partly in reverence to the Pope, partly for fear of the Inquiſition, and partly by being kept in ignorance of the Proteſtant Doctrin (of which they are taught to believe many monſtrous things) are all of the Religion of the Church of Rome.

But though the Fountains of the waters of Eternall life, have either been ſtopped, or elſe corcorrupted by the Popes of Rome; the Rivers which do water this moſt flouriſhing Garden ſtill preſerve their beds, and run unmixed and uncorrupted in the ſame channels, as before they did. And of theſe Italy hath as many as any one Country, but none of any long courſe, by reaſon that all parts of it are ſo neer ſome Sea, moſt of which riſing from the Alpes, or the Apennine Hills, by melting of the ſnows in Winter, and caſualtie of Land-floods at other times of the year, do often over-flow the Country, and for the moſt part leave an ill Air behind them. Thoſe of chief note are, 1 the River Po, or Padus (the Greeks call it the Eridanus) into which Phaeton is ſayd to have been drenched when he fell from Heaven. It riſeth in the Alpes, runneth thorough Lombardy, which it divideth into Ciſpadanam and Tranſpadanam; and having taken in 30 leſſer ſtreams, falls with ſeven mouthes into the Adriatick Sea not far from Venice. 2 Rubicon, anciently the North-bound of Italy; Hic fluvius quondam Italiæ finis, as it is in Plinie. It runneth into the Adriatick Sea at Rimini, or Ariminum, the Port-town to Ravenna. 3 Arnus, on whoſe banks ſtands the Citie of Florence. 4 Ticinus, which gave name to the Citie of Pavie, called of old Ticinum; it riſeth in the Alpes, and emptieth it ſelf into the Lake called Lacus Verbanus. 5 Liris, now called Garigliano, ſtained with the blood of French and Spaniards in their quarrels for the Realm of Naples; nor no leſs unfortunately memorable for the drowning of Peter de Medices. 6 Cuique ſuit rerum promiſſa potentia Tibris;

And Tiber, unto which was given
The power of all things under Heaven.

It riſeth from the Apennine Hills, paſſeth by Rome, and falleth into the Tuſcan, or lower Sea, at Oſtia. Here is alſo the Lake of Thraſymene, neer which Annibal defeated Flaminius the Conſul, and his whole Army, opening thereby his paſſage to the gates of Rome; and the famous River of 7. Metaurus, where the Romans overcame Aſdrubal the Brother of Annibal; and thereby made a way to the ruin of Carthage. Others of leſs note ſhall be mentioned in their proper places.

As for the Mountains of this Country, thoſe of moſt note are the Alpes, and the Apennine, of which the reſidue in a manner are but ſpurs and branches. Of theſe, the Alpes being alſo appertaining to France and Germany; or rather containing many large and entire Provinces which belong to neither; deſerves a Tractate by it ſelf. The Apennine, being proper onely to this Country, but ſo that it relates to many and particular Provinces of it, ſhall be ſpoken of here. A ledge of Hils which take beginning neer Savona, a Town of Genoa ſituate on the Mediterranean, and fetching a little compaſs Northwards, extend to the furtheſt parts of Italy, dividing it almoſt in the very middeſt; that part thereof which lieth towards the Tyrrhenian or Tuſcan Sea being called Ciſapennina; Tranſappennina that which lay towards the Adriatick. Paſſing in one entire body as far as Aſcoli, in Apulia, a Province of the Realm of Naples; it is there parted into two horns or branches; whereof the one runs out to the Mount of Gargano, in the land of Otranto; the other ſpreadeth it ſelf as far as Calabria; thoſe being the moſt Eaſtern Provinces of this noble Continent. Called the Apennine, as ſome ſay, à Penna, by which word the Latins uſed to ſignifie the top or ſummit of an Hill, by reaſon of the height and ſharp points thereof: as others ſay, quaſi Alpes Pœnine, becauſe firſt overcome by Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Roman Writers call by the name of Pœni. The Inhabitants hereof, by Virgil named Apenninicolæ; otherwiſe reducible to ſome of the neighbouring Provinces. Of this large Mountain moſt of the Hils of Italy from Savona Eaſtwards, are but the excurſions; which being of leſs note, ſhall be ſpoken of as they lye before us in the way.

To proceed now to ſo much of the Hiſtory of Italy, as concerns the generalls; we are to know that the firſt Inhabitants of it (not to ſay any thing of the fiction of Frier Annius under the name of Berоſus, who will needs have Noah himſelf come hither ſhortly after the Flood) were doubtleſs of the race of Cittim or Kittim the fourth ſonne of Javan, one of the ſonnes of Japhet. Who being planted by their Father in that part of Greece, which was ſince called Macedon; and after ſpreading themſelves further as their numbers increaſed, peopled Ætolia and the Countries adjoyning to it: From whence, deſirous of a warmer and more fertile ſoyl, they came in tract of time to the Coaſts of Dalmatia, and thence to this Country ſince called Italy. That they did ſpring originally from the ſeed of Cittim (or Kittim as the Greek pronounce it) wants not very good Authors. For thus Euſebius, Ἔθνος ἐξ οὗ Λατῖνοι καὶ οἱ Ῥωμαῖοι; that is to ſay, from the Kitians, or children of Kittim, deſcended the Latins and the Romans. The ſame occurs alſo in the Chronicon of Alexandria. So alſo ſaith Cedrenus in his Annals, but with more punctuality. Telephus (ſaith he) the ſonne of Hercules, reigned in Italy, and after him his ſonne Latinus, ἀφ' οὗ Ἕλληνες ἐπωνόμασαν Λατίνους, from whom the Greeks were named Latins. The ſame in other words ſaith Suidas. Nor want there ſome remainders of this name in approved Writers, beſides theſe authorities; there being a Town in Latium called Ketea, mentioned in Dionyſius Hallicarnaſſeus; and a River named Ketus not far from Cuma, whereof Ariſtotle ſpeaketh in his book De Mirabilibus. And that they came immediately from the Ætolians, beſides the other Arguments which Reineccius uſeth in this point, the neerneſs, or identitie rather of the names doth ſeem to intimate. For Ætolia being written in the Greek Aitolia; and the letter O being changed into A according to the Æolick Dialect, which was that uſed by the Ætolians; the alteration of the name from Aeolia and Aeolians, to Italia and Italians, will be thought very eaſie, if not naturall; the rather, in regard there is an Iland neer Italie, in the Tuſcan Sea, peopled originally by theſe very Aeolians, which in antient times was called Aethalia. And ſo by ſuch an eaſie alteration of one Letter onely, Italus may derive its firſt Plantation from the Aeolians, as no doubt it may: then may that Italus, the Chiefrain of whom Virgil ſpeaks, be no other than Aetolus, ſome man of principall mark, and eminencie, amongſt that people, who had the conduct of this Colonie when they came for Italie. And this I ſhould believe muchmore ther, than that this Italus was the name of a King of Sicilie; It being more probable, that Sicilie ſhould borrow its firſt planters out of Italie, than Italie ſhould borrow either name or people from ſo ſmall a Kingdom: eſpecially conſidering, that the name of Aitolus was famous in theſe parts of Greece, ever ſince Aitolus the ſonne of a King of Elis, was founder of the Aeolian Kingdom. The way thus ſhewen, and the paſſages into Italie laid open, it was not long before the Pelaſgi, another Greek Nation, found the way into it; after whom Saturn out of Creta, and Evander out of Arcadia, with their ſeverall followers, came and ſetled there. Not to ſay any thing of thoſe ſeverall Colonies, which ſtreaming out of Peloponneſus, and the parts of Achaia, planted themſelves ſo thick in the Eaſt of Italie, now called Calabria, that of long time it had the name of Magna Graecia. So that the Grecians made the main groſs or body of the Italian people; to which the comming of ſome Tuſcans under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, a Prince of Lydia in Aſia minor, ſerved but as an Acceſſary, and altered nothing the Principall. The laſt that ſetled here, were ſome of the Reliſts of Troy, under the conduct of Æneas, who flying from their native Country, and enraged Enemies, were firſt caſt upon the coaſts of Africk; where having ſtayd a while to refreſh his companies (we ſhall hereafter take occaſion to conſider of the Fable of his loves with Dido) he ſet ſail for Italie, being the place aſſigned him by the Gods for his ſeat and Empire; whither he came with fifteen Ships, which might contain, according to the rate which Thucydides alloweth to the veſſels then uſed, to the number of 1200 men. And there he landed, as it proved, in an happy hour: For he was no ſooner arrived, but he was lovingly cheriſhed, and entertained by Latinus King of the Latins, or of Latium, whoſe chief Citie or Seat Royall was then called Laurentum; who much eſteeming of this Stranger as a man whoſe fame had been his Harbinger, thought he could neither manifeſt his love ſufficiently, nor binde him faſt enough unto him, but by betrothing him unto Lavinia his only daughter. Hence grew the Wars betwixt Æneas, and Turnus King of the Rutli, a former Suter; which being ended in the death of the Rutilian Rivall, confirmed Æneas and his Trojans in a ſure poſſeſſion. For now growing with the Latins or Laurentins, into a more conſtant bond of Friendſhip, by many Inter-mariages, and mutuall kindneſſes, they built the Town of Lavinium, called ſo in honour of their Queen, intending it for the Seat Royall of the Princes of the Trojan line. But long it did not hold that ſtate: For Aſcanius the ſonne of Æneas by his former Wife, to avoyd all occaſions of contention with his Mother-in-Law left her (Æneas being dead) in poſſeſſion of Lavinium, and built Longa Alba; which being ſurrendred by Julus the ſonne of Aſcanius to his half-brother Silvius, became the conſtant habitation of the Silvian Kings till the building of Rome, and finall ending of the race of the Latin Kings. The names of whom (for there occurs little of their actions) we are next to ſhew; taking along with us thoſe few Kings which reigned in thoſe parts of Italy before the comming of Æneas.

The old Kings of Italy of the Aborigines.

A. M.

2637. 1 Janus, the firſt King of the Aborigines, who lived in the ſame time with Boaz and Ruth. He received Saturn flying out of Creta from Jupiter, and left him his Kingdom at his death. He is ſayd to be the founder of the Citie of Genua, and to have given name to the Hill in Rome called Janicula, on which it was ſuppoſed that he had his dwelling.

2 Saturn, who taught the people the uſe of dunging of their lands, and for that cauſe was honoured by them as a God, under the name of Stercutius, as St. Auſtin hath it. He reigned firſt together with Janus, and afterwards by himſelf alone, the whole time of both their reigns was 33 years.

2670. 3 Picus, well ſkilled in divination by the flight and chattering of Birds, and therefore feigned by the Poets to be turned into a Pye. He entertained Evander and his Arcadians, giving them the Hill (called after Aventine) to build upon. 37.

2707. 4 Faunus, the ſonne of Picus, and the husband of Fatua, in whoſe time Hercules came into Italy, vanquiſhed the Giants of Cremona, and killed the Giant Cacus who had fled out of Spain. 44.

2751. 5 Latinus, the ſonne of Faunus, who entertained Æneas comming from the wars and deſtruction of Troy, and gave him his daughter Lavinia to wife, with his Kingdom, after him in Dower. 36.

2787. 6 Lavinia, daughter to Latinus, and Queen of the Latins, maried to Æneas, whom ſhe out-lived, he being ſlain in his Wars againſt Mezentius the King of Tuſcany, the ſonne or ſucceſſor of that Mezentius (an ungodly Tyrant) whom Æneas had before ſlain in his war with Turnus and the Latins. 7.

Kings

Kings of the Latins of the Trojan or Silvian race.

A.M.

1787. 1 Æneas, the sonne of Anchises, and Husband of Lavinia, slain in his wars against Mezentius King of the Tuscans or Hetrurians, as before is said. 3.

2790. 2 Ascanius, the sonne of Æneas by Creusa his former Wife, for fear of whom Lavinia being great with child, fled into a Wood, and was there delivered of a son called Silvius. He removed the Seat Royall from Lavinium to Longa Alba, a City of his own building. 38.

2828. 3 Silvius Posthumus, the sonne of Æneas by Lavinia, preferred unto the Kingdom by the love of the people before Iulus the sonne of Ascanius (the founder of the Julian family) from whom all the Kings of this Race had the name of Silvii; Iulus being honoured with the chief Priesthood (an office next in dignity to that of the King) which he translated afterwards unto his Posterity. 29.

2857. 4 Æneas Silvius. 31.

2888. 5 Latinus Silvius. 50.

2938. 6 Alba Silvius, so called because of his beautifying and repairing the City Alba, then in some decay. 39.

2977. 7 Capetus Silvius. 24.

3001. 8 Capys Silvius, said to be the founder of the Citie of Capua; which shewes that he extended his dominion further than the Province of Latium. 28.

3029. 9 Capetus Silvius. 13.

3042. 10 Tiberinus Silvius, from whom the River Tiber derives that name, being formerly called Albula. 8.

3050. 11 Agrippa Silvius. 40.

3090. 12 Alladius Silvius, who to make himself the more terrible to his subjects, studied a way to imitate the Thunder, but was killed at last by a reall Thunder-clap from Heaven. 19.

3109. 13 Aventinus Silvius, who gave name to the Hill Aventine. 37.

3146. 14 Procas Silvius. 23.

3169. 15 Amulius Silvius, the younger sonne of Procas, setting aside his Brother Numitor, obtained the Kingdom for himself; slain at last by Romulus, and Numitor setled in the Throne. 42.

3211. 16 Numitor, the 21 King from Janus, and the last King of the Latins, restored by Romulus to the Throne; and after the short reign of one year onely, deprived by him both of life and Kingdom. After whose death the Latins, or Albans, had no more Kings, but kept themselves as a Free-estate till subdued to Rome. 1.

Concerning this it is to be understood, that Amulius having chased his elder brother Numitor out of the Country, and possessed himself of the Throne, caused his brothers daughter Rhea (for preventing any issue by her) to be shut up in the Temple of Vesta. Where she proving the mother of two sonnes, was according to the Law buried quick, and her children by the cruel Tyrant cast out to be devoured of wild Beasts. They were found by Faustulus the Kings Shepheard, nurst by his Wife, for her infamous life called Lupa (whence came the Fable, that they were suckled by a Wolf) and being grown to mans estate, slew the Tyrant Amulius, placing their Grandfather Numitor in the Royall Throne, whom not long after they deprived both of life and kingdom. Of these, the eldest was named Romulus. and the younger Rhemus, who leaving Alba to the short possession of their Grandfather Numitor, layd the foundation of the most famous City of Rome: which Romulus first hanselled with the blood of his Brother Rhemus, who had disdainfully leapt over the walls of his new City. This City he made an Asylum, or place of Refuge for all commers, of what desperate estate soever, and having ranked them into order, made himself their King. A people of so base a nature, that their neighbours refused to give them any of their daughters in mariage: So they were destitute of Wives, and consequently not like to continue a people long; till on a proclamation made of some plaies and pastimes, many of the Sabine women flocked thither to behold the sports; whom the Romans seized on, and forced an unwilling consent from them to become their Wives. From such a base and low beginning did this City rise to be the Empress of the World.

The Kings of Rome.

A.M.

3253. 1 Romulus, the founder of Rome; He made peace with Tatius King of the Sabines, comming against him to revenge the ravishments of their women; incorporating him and his into his new Citie, and by that means adding thereto a fair and goodly Territory. 37.

3251. 2 Numa, the first Author of the Roman Ceremonies. 43.
3294. 3 Tullus Hostilius, who enlarged the borders of Rome by the conquest of Alba, the mother-Citie of the Latins, and vanquished the Fidenates. 32.
3326. 4 Ancus Martius, who built Ostia on the mouth of Tiber, to be an Haven to the City.
5 Tarquinius Priscus, who subdued many of the Tuscan Nations, encreased the number of the Tribes and Senators, and added the triumphall ornaments. 38.
3388. 6 Servius Tullus, who first caused the people to be inrolled, and brought into cense. 44.
3432. 7 Tarquinius Superbus, sonne to the former Tarquinius. He vanquished the Gabii, and took the Towns of Ardea, Ocriculum, and Suessa Pometia; but for his own insolent behaviour, and a Rape committed on Lucretia the Wife of Collatine by his sonne Sextus, he and his whole Race were driven out of the Town, Anno Mund. 3457. V.C. 268.

After this, the Romans loathing the name of King, caused two Officers to be chosen out of the Patricii or chief Citizens, to whom they gave the name of Consuls, à consulendo, from counselling of, and consulting the good of the Common-wealth, ut consulere se suis civibus meminerint, saith the Historian, their name being a memento of their charge or duty. And in this office they resolved to have alwaies two, and those but onely for a year, Ne vel solitudine vel morâ potestas corrumperetur. And though some had the fortune to be Consuls two or three years together; yet every new year they were a-new chosen, and so their Offices reckoned as severall; neither do we find any to have been elected for less than a year, unless upon the death or deposition of a former, untill the Civill wars. But then cum belli civilis præmia festinari cæperunt, when the services done in the Civill wars required a quicker turn in requitall, the Consulship was given only for some part of the year, and ordinarily for two Moneths: the first Consuls being named Ordinarii, in whose names the writings made for the whole year were dated; the other Minores, or Honorarii, which only served to make up a number. For so ambitious were the Romans of this honor, that when Maximus died in the last day of his Consulship, Caninius Rebilus petitioned Cæsar for that part of the day that remained: whence that so memorated jest of Tully, O vigilantem Consulem, qui toto consulatûs sui tempore somnum oculis non vidit. And when Cecina was by the Senate degraded from this honour on the day in which he was to have resigned it; one Roscius Regulus obtained the office from Vitellius for the day remaining: but as the Historian noteth, magno cum irrisu accipientis, tribuentisq;. Now as the Romans did thus exceed the first number of Consuls, so sometimes fell they short of it. The first that was sole Consul was Pompey, in the beginning of the Civill Wars, viz. A.V.C. 703. The next, one Varanes, A.C. 410. This Office, from the first institution to the finall period of it, continued at the least in name (for the Emperors had of long time assumed the Power and Prerogatives appertaining to it) the space of 1084. yeers, though not without many intermissions of the Name and Title, by the severall interposings of the Decemviri, the Dictators, and the Consular Tribunes, of which more anon. The last Consull was one Basilius, in the time of Justinian, A.Ch. 542. The two first, Collatinus the husband of Lucretia, and Junius Brutus, by whose instigation the people had took Arms against the house of the Tarquins. A man so zealous in defence of the common liberty, so resolutely bent to make good what he had begun, and so extremely opposite to the Royal Race, that he not only caused Collatine to resign his Office within the yeer, because he was of the blood of the Tarquins; but executed his own sonnes for holding correspondence and intelligence with them.

But though the Government were changed, the old design was followed which the Kings had laid for the inlarging of their Empire; but followed with so slow a pace, by reason of their factions and divisions, that it was full 500. yeers before they could be Masters of Italie. A matter not unworthy of our consideration, that the Italians should hold out so long a time against the puissance of the Romans; when in less than half that time ensuing, they did possess themselves of almost all Europe, and many goodly Kingdomes and Provinces both in Asia and Africk. So different a thing it was (as is said by Florus) domi caput Italiæ, to contract the many limbs of Italie into one body, and unite them under one head.

But to proceed; after Italy was fully conquered by them, they fell upon the Carthaginians, as their neerest Neighbours; whose overthrow, in the end of the first Punick War, A.V.C. 512. gave them the full possession of Sicil (except the State of Syracusa,) and the Isle of Sardinia. After that being molested in their Trade by the Illyrian Pirates, and finding them countenanced therein by the Queen of that Nation, they made a fortunate War against her, and brought that puissant people to become their Tributaries, A.V.C. 525. The second Carthaginian war, managed by Annibal in the bowells of Italie, had almost put a period to the glories of their Common-wealth. But that being also ended to their advantage by the conquest of Spain, they quarrelled Philip King of Macedon, who had aided Annibal, compelled him to accept of peace on their own terms, and after outed his sonne Perseus of all his Dominions, making Macedon a Province of Rome, and all the rest of Greece but their Tenants at will. Nor was it long before they picked a quarrell with Antiochus the great King of Syria, made him abandon his possession of the Lesser Asia; and finally prevailed so successfully in all their actions, that there was neither King nor Common-wealth that could stand in their way, untill the State being burdened with its too much greatness, began to totter of it self.

Two

Two things there were which much conduced to the advancement of the Romans to their power and greatneſs, beſides the providence of God which had ſo diſpoſed it; which were the great encouragements which they gave their Souldiers, and the Triumphant manner of reception which they uſed to beſtow upon their Generals, when they returned home with honor and victory. For when any of their Generals did ſo return, he was permitted to enter ſitting on a glorious Chariot, the ſpoils which he had got in war being carried before, the priſoners he had taken followving bound at the heels of his Chariot; his Souldiers compaſſing him about vvith their ſeverall Crowns, according to the quality of their well-deſervings; and all the Fathers of the City, attended by the Prieſts and principall Ladies, going out to meet him. The firſt beginning of vvhich cuſtome is aſcribed to Romulus, who in the war which Acron King of the Ceninenſes made againſt him in revenge of the rape committed by the Romans on the Sabine women, ſeeing his people give ground, called for help to Jupiter, and vowed if he overcame King Acron, to offer up his Armour to him. Acron being vanquiſhed, the Conqueror cutteth down a fair young Oak, and hangeth on it all the Armour of the vanquiſhed King; then girding his Gown cloſe unto him, and putting on his head a Garland of Lawrell, he laid the Oak upon his ſhoulders, and marched towards the City; his Army following him, and ſinging an Epinicion or ſong of victory. To this we muſt referre the originall and beginning of Triumphs. But nihil eſt inventum & perfectum eodem tempore, as the ſaying is. Tarquinius Priſcus long after Romulus, added hereunto the Purple Robe, and the Triumphant Chariot drawn with four Horſes. The other pomps came afterwards as they grew both in power and pride. Now of theſe Triumphs there were two ſorts, the Greater, which vvas properly called a Triumph; and the Leſſer, vulgarly called the Ovation, which differed from one another in many Circumſtances. For, 1. The Triumpher made his entrance in a Royall Chariot, and was met by the Senators in their Robes; but the Ovator made his entrance on foot, and vvas met only by the Knights and Gentlemen of Rome. 2. The Triumpher had a Lavvrell Crovvn, and entred vvith the noiſe of Drums and Trumpets; but the Ovator had onely a Garland of Fir, with Flutes and Hautboies playing before him. 3. The Triumpher was attired in a Garment of State, which they called Veſtis trabeata; but the Ovator in a plain Purple Gown only. 4. In a Triumph the Souldiers cried out, Io Triumphe; but in an Ovation they ingeminated onely O, O, O, from the often doubling of which word, it had (as ſome think) the name of an Ovation. 5ly. and laſtly, the Triumpher uſed to ſacrifiſe a certain number of Oxen; but the Ovator a Sheep only; from whence the name is properly to be derived.

Now there were three Caſes in which the Conqueror was to be content with this leſſer Triumph. 1. If the number of the enemies whom he ſlew in battell exceeded not 5000. men; or that he had not ſo much overcome them by force, as perſwaſion or ſubtilty: 2. If the War had been ſlight, curſorie, or not lawfully mannaged; And 3ly. If it were againſt an ignoble Enemy. And of this laſt we have a fair inſtance in P. Rupilius, who having got the victory in the Servile War, (a victory of great importance to the State of Rome) was yet content with an Ovation; nè Triumphi dignitatem Servili inſcriptione violaret, as it is in Florus. As for the greater Triumphs they were indeed very full of magnificence; the pomp whereof, who liſt to ſee, may find it in the Triumph of Paulus Aemilius deſcribed by Plutarch; though by that which hath before been ſaid, we may conjecture ſomewhat at the glories of it. And yet this honour was not alwayes vouchſafed to thoſe who had beſt deſerved it, there being many vvays vvhereby it might be forfeited or denied in a factious State, and jealous of the over-greatneſs of the Men of War. For, 1. Sometimes it vvas denied a victorious Generall, by the ſtrength of a contrary Faction: and ſo Pompey denied Metellus the honour of a Triumph for the conqueſt of Crete. 2. Sometimes the Conqueror himſelf vvas vvilling to decline it for fear of envy: And ſo Marcellus in Plutarch, after his conqueſt of Sicilie, having triumphed tvvice before, refuſed that honour, his reaſon vvas, [illegible], for fear his third Triumph might become a matter of envy. 3. Sometimes the Souldiers having been ill paid, or othervviſe not vvell treated by their Commanders, oppoſed them in their ſute for it: and this vvas the caſe of Paulus Aemilius, vvho queſtionleſs had miſſed this honor, for not dividing amongſt them the ſpoils of Greece, as he once had promiſed, if Servilius and others of the Senate, making it their ovvn caſe, had not ſtickled hard for him vvith the Souldiers. 4. It vvas ſometimes denyed, becauſe the Generall had borne no publick Office in the Common-vvealth. For ſo in Livie, vvhen Lentulus coming Proconſul out of Spain required a Triumph, the Fathers anſvvered, that he had indeed done things vvorthy of that honor, but that they had no preſident for it, ut qui neq; Conſul, neq; Dictator, neq; Praetor res geſſiſſet, Triumpharet. 5. Sometimes the Generals themſelves omitted it, for the furtherance of ſome of their other purpoſes. And ſo Caſar coming towards Rome, a Victor, at the ſame time the Conſuls were to be choſen, laid aſide his demand of the Triumph, to ſue for the Conſulſhip; it being the cuſtome that ſuch as demanded the Triumph ſhould abide without the City, and ſuch as ſued for the Conſulſhip muſt of neceſſity be within. 6. Sometimes it was denied, when the War had been undertaken without the Command of the Senate; in which reſpect the Triumph was denied unto Manlius on the conqueſt of Galatia by him, to the great inlargement of their Empire, quia cauſam Belli Senatus non approbavit, becauſe he had no Commiſſion from the Senate for it. 7. There was no Triumph granted if the War had been Civill, becauſe in all ſuch Wars whoſoever was Conqueror, the Common-wealth was a loſer by it. And therefore Pompey and Metellus having vanquiſhed Sertorius, and his party in Spain, would have it called a Forrain, not a Civill War, becauſe they would not loſe their Triumph. Externum magis id bellum quàm Civile videri voluerunt, ut Triumpharent. 8. If the victory had not been obtained without great loſs on the Romans ſide; in which regard Valerius after his conqueſt of the Galls was denied this honor; quia magis dolor civibus amiſſis, quàm gaudium fuſis hoſtibus prevaluit, ſaith Alexander ab Alexandro. 9ly. and laſtly, The Triumph was denied a Generall, if the ſervice had not been performed in his own Province: And ſo we find that when Livius and Nero being Conſulls had vanquiſhed Aſdrubal, Livius onely had the Triumph, though Nero was the man that had won the day, becauſe the field was fought in the Province of Livius, to which Nero came but as an Acceſſary, or Aſſiſtant.

And theſe are all, or at the leaſt the principall cauſes of hindering or omitting this great honor, indeed the greateſt that the Free-State could be capable of. But after when the Common-wealth was changed into a Monarchie, it began to be laid aſide for altogether, as too great for Subjects; and was firſt purpoſely neglected by Vipſanius Agrippa, the Eſtabliſher of Auguſtus in the Roman Empire, who when he had a Triumph decreed unto him, for quenching certain Rebellions in Aſia, and his quiet ſetling of that Countrey, to give Poſterity an example, refuſed to accept it. And this example being (as it were a rule) to others, occaſioned that this cuſtom was in ſhort time quite layd aſide, and that no man under the degree of an Emperour Triumphed ſolemnly; all others from thence forth, content with the triumphall Ornaments, μίτρας τῶν ἐπινικίων τιμῶν, in the words of Dion. And though Beliſarius having ſubdued the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk, is ſaid (600 years after the death of Agrippa) to have had the honour of a Triumph, yet in propriety of ſpeech, it was nothing but an honourable preſenting of himſelf and his priſoners before the Emperour; and was ſo far from the magnificence of a Roman Triumph, that it wanted many of the ſolemnities uſed in an Ovation. Nor did the Emperours themſelvs much affect this honour, either becauſe too popular, or too chargeable, or that they thought it was beneath the Imperiall Majeſty; the laſt (as I remember) that made uſe thereof to ſet forth his glories, being Valerius Probus, after his victories over the Germans, and the Blemya, a people of Africk, in or about the year 284 of our Saviours birth.

In the next place look we on the incouragements and rewards of the common Souldiers: beſides the ſetting out of Lands and dwellings for the poorer ſort, in which they might reſt themſelves when they were paſt ſervice; and beſides the large donatives which the Generall in his Triumph did beſtow upon them; they had their murall Crown, for him that firſt ſcaled the Walls; a navall Crown, for him that firſt borded the Enemies Ships; a Camp Crown, or Corona Caſtrenſis, for him that had forced a way into the Tents or Camp of the Enemy; a Citie Crown, or Corona Civica, for him that had preſerved the life of a Roman Citizen. Not to ſay any thing of thoſe Chains and Bracelets which ſouldiers of inferiour merit were adorned withall. By which encouragements, and the good conduct of their Counſels in the Senate, the Roman affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly, and their Dominions were enlarged ſo immenſly, that never any Common-wealth had ſo large a growth.

And yet the greatneſs of this ſtate is neither totally nor only to be attributed to the Conſular Government. For though the walls of this great building were raiſed by the Conſuls, yet the foundation of the ſame was layd by the Kings, and the roof thereof layd on by the Emperors. Nay, be it ſpoken to the honour of Monarchicall Government, whenſoever any great and imminent danger did ſeem to threaten them, they were fain to lay aſide their confidence in the rule of their Conſuls, and betake themſelves to the command of one Soveraign Officer, whom they called Dictator. Of which, and the other changes happning in the ſtate of Rome, take this ſhort abſtract from Corn. Tacitus. "Urbem Romam à principio Reges habuere, &c. The City "of Rome was in the beginning governed by Kings. Liberty and the Conſulſhip L. Brutus "brought in. The Dictators were choſe but for a time; The Decemviri paſſed not two years, "neither had the Conſular authority of the Tribunes of the Souldiers any long continuance, "nor Cinnas nor Syllas dominion. Pompey and Craſſus quickly yeelded to Ceſars forces; Lepidus "and Antony to Auguſtus. So Tacitus in brief of theſe publick changes: Of which, as to the Decemviri, which were inſtituted only on a particular occaſion for the reforming of the Laws by thoſe of Athens, and the Military Tribunes of Conſular Authority ordained to divert common people from ſeeking after the Conſulſhip; I ſhall here ſay nothing. But as for the Dictators, being Officers of a Supreme power, and ſuch as made way for the Emperors in the cloſe of all, I ſhall inlarge a little further. They were called Dictators à Dictando, becauſe they preſcribed what they pleaſed unto the people, which they were bound to execute and not diſpute. Hence that memorable jeſt of Julius Ceſar, who being told that Sylla had reſigned his Dictatorſhip, though by decree of Senate made perpetuall to him, returned this Anſwer, that Sylla was an unlearned man, dictare neſciit, and therefore knew not how to dictate, or to play the Dictator. They were alſo called Populi Magiſtri, or the peoples Maſters, becauſe from them lay no Appeal unto the people (as did from all the reſt of the Roman Magiſtrates) during the whole time of their command, which ordinarily continued for ſix moneths; yet ſo, that if they did did in the mean time settle the affairs of the Commonwealth, they resigned it sooner; if the necessities of the State required a longer continuance in it, they were chosen again. The names of as many of them as I have met withall, I have here sub-joyned, together with the services they did the publick in the time of their Office.

The Dictators of Rome.

A.V.C.

253. 1 Titus Largius, chosen upon occasion of a generall War, made by the Latins upon Rome; the first that ever had this Office.

257. 2 Aulus Posthumus, chosen to pursue that war, which he ended with the slaughter of 30000 of the Latins.

295. 3 L. Quinctius Cincinnatus, chosen to this office from the Plough, overcame the Volsci; chosen again An. V.C. 314, to suppress the sedition raised by Sp. Melius.

316. 4 Æmilius Mamercus, overcame the Veientes and the Fidenates, and was thrice in eleven years called unto this Office.

338. 5 Pub. Servilius, who finally vanquished the Fidenates, and the Latini.

354. 6 Furius Camillus, who finally destroyed the City of the Veii, and being chosen a second time, A. V. C 362. preserved his Country from the Galls: thrice chosen after this upon new occasions.

375. 7 Tit. Quinctius Cincinnatus, chosen in the War against the Latins.

385. 8 L. Manlius, elected in the time of a grievous Pestilence to find a way for the appeasing of the Gods.

396. 9 C. Sulpitius.

418. 10 Mamius Rutilius the first Dictator chosen out of the Commons.

11 L. Papyrius subdued the Samnites.

438. 12 Cossus, by whom the Samnites were again vanquished.

13 Æmilius, who also overcame the Samnites.

14 Lentulus, who triumphed also over the Samnites.

451. 15 I. Bubulcus, who finally subdued the Æqui and the Volsci.

16 Corn. Rufinus.

467. 17 Q. Hortensius, chosen for appeasing a difference betwixt the Senate and the Commons, who had fortified themselves in Janiculum, one of the Hils whereon Rome stood.

505. 18 Cl. Glicias, forced to resign his office to 19 Atilius Calatinus, the first that exercised his office out of Italy; he was chosen in the first Punick War.

536. 20 Fabius Maximus, chosen in the war against Annibal.

537. 21 M. Junius, chosen upon the great defeat which the Roman Forces had at the battell of Cannæ.

545. 23 L. Manlius Torquatus, chosen upon the death of Marcellus, the Consul slain by Annibal.

672. 24 L. Sylla (descended from that Corn. Rufinus, who had been formerly in this office) having by force of Arms suppressed the faction of Marius and Cinna, made himself master of the City, and caused himself to be chosen Perpetuall Dictator, which office having exercised with a great deal of cruelty, he resigned with as great a confidence.

707. 25 C. Julius Cæsar, descended from Julus the sonne of Æneas, who was the second King of the Trojan Race, having conquered Britain, and added all Gaule Transalpine to the Roman Empire, and finding himself unworthily requited by the faction of Pompey, passed with his Army after him into Greece; and having vanquished him in the fields of Pharsalia, and made himself absolutely master of the Roman Empire, took to himself the supreme Government thereof under the title of Dictator, which having managed for the space of five years, he was murthered in the Senate house by Brutus and Cassius.

Before the time of these Perpetuall Dictators, the Romans having some enemies or other that opposed the progress of their fortunes, had not the leisure to contend with one another in a publick way, or if they did, their differences and seditions were soon composed. But being grown so great as to fear no Enemy; and the Estate so vast, that it was grown too mighty for a popular Government; then they began to practise on the peoples patience, and to project the sharing of the Empire among the great ones. Concerning which, take here this short Epistle, which I find in Tacitus. "Rebus modicis æqualitas facilè inter bonos erat, &c. While (saith he) our "Dominions were but small, Equalitie was easily maintained among us. But after we had "subdued the World, and destroyed all Kings and Cities that stood in our way, or might world "our annoyance; when we had leisure to seek after Wealth without perill; there arose hot "contentions betwixt the Nobilitie and the Commons. Sometimes the factious Tribunes carried it away; sometimes the Consuls had the better: and in the City and common Forum, "some little skirmishes (the beginning of our Civil Wars) were sometimes seen. Afterwards "C. Marius one of the meanest of the Commonalty; and L. Sylla the most cruel of all the " Nobility, by force of Arms overthrowing the Free-State, reduced all to an absolute Govern" ment. To them succeeded Cn. Pompeius, a little closer in his projects, but nothing better mind" ed to the Common-wealth : Et nunquam postea nisi de Principatu quæsitum, and never after " that was any other point debated, than who should get the Soveraignty unto himself. So Tacitus, and he stateth it rightly. For after Pompey had revived the controversie, and had found Cæsar a better disputant than himself; Augustus, Antony, and Lepidus (on the death of Cæsar) made good the Argument; attracting all power unto themselves by the name of Triumviri; till Augustus having out-witted Lepidus, and vanquished M. Antony at the battell of Actium, became sole Soveraign of the State, by the name of Prince; Et cuncta bellis civilibus fessa, nomine Principis sub imperium accepit, as that Author hath it.

"Nobi-

But touching those great alterations in the State of Rome, the contentions for the chief command, and the Reduction of it to a Monarchy by Augustus Cæsar; I published a Discourse in the year 1631 (but written many years before) under the title of AUGUSTUS, or an Essay of those Means and Counsels whereby the Common-wealth of Rome was altered, and reduced to a Monarchy. Which being but short, so pertinent to the present business, and so well entertained when it came abroad; I hope it will not be improper or unprofitable to sub-joyn it here. The Reader may either peruse it, or pretermit it, as his fancy guides him. And here it followeth in these words.

THey which have heretofore written of Common-wealths, have divided them into three Species. The Government of the King; secondly, of the Nobles; and thirdly, of the People. Either of these is again subdivided into good and evill: The evill form being only the good corrupted; the bad nothing else but the good refined. So is the Government of a King divided into a Monarchy, and a Tyranny; Of the Nobles, into an Aristocraty, and an Oligarchy; Of the People, into a Republick, and a Democraty. All these, as well in generall, as in the severall couplets, have a secret Inclination to change the one into the other; and to make a Pythagorical transmigration (as it were) into each others being. I need not stand on many instances. The Common-wealth of Rome (into whose stories whosoever looketh, will judge them rather to contain the acts of the whole World, than a particular Nation) will serve for all. Romulus at the foundation of his City, reserved unto himself the chief Soveraignty, leaving it entire to his Successors. Numa, Ancus, Tullus, Tarquin the Elder, and Servius, governed themselves so moderately, and the people so justly, that they affected not Tyranny; nor the Commons Liberty. They appeared more desirous to fill the Coffers of their Subjects, than their own Treasuries: And when necessity compelled them to a Tax, they rather seemed to sheer their sheep than fleece them. But Tarquin the second, commonly called Superbus, a man of insupportable Vices, having by violence enthronized himself in that Chair of State, which (had not his ambitious spirit been impatient of delay) would have been his rightfull Inheritance; made his Government answerable to his entrance, cruel and bloody. How many men, eminent as well by their own vertue, as their Parents Nobilitie, did he cut off? How many did he for no cause promote, to make their fall the more remarkable? What part of the Senate was free from slaughter? What corner of the City from lamentations? Yet this was not all. The miserable Romans were visited with three Plagues at once; Pride in the Father, Cruelty in the Mother, and Lust exorbitant in their sonne Sextus, a true Copy of the old Originals. Either of these had been more than enough to exercise the peoples patience: But meeting all at one time, it seemed that nothing could now be added to the wretchednes of the one, and the wickednes of the other. Brutus (a name fatall to Tyrants) did easily perswade the Commons to shake off this yoak. For they, as well desirous of Novelties, as sensible of Oppressions, had long since murmured at the present State; and wanted nothing but a head to break out into actuall Rebellion. So the People got the Freedom, and the Kings lost the Soveraignty of the City.

A.V.C.244. 2. Brutus, although he wanted no fair title to the Crown, yet either perceiving how odious the name of King was grown; or perhaps willing to be rather the first Consul, than the last Prince; instituted a new form of Government: Wherein the sway of all was referred to the Fathers of the City; out of whom two were annually chosen as chief of the rest. And herein certainly he dealt very advisedly. For had he sought to confirm himself in the Kingdom, what could men judge, but that, not love to his Country was the cause that stirred him to take Arms, but desire of Rule. Again, besides that secure Privacie is to be preferred before hazardous Royalty; what hope had he to keep the seat long, having by his own example taught the people both the Theory and Practice of Rebellion. Under this new Aristocraty the Roman affairs succeeded so prosperously, their dominions were inlarged so immensly, that it may well be questioned, whether the Roman fortune caused their greatnes, or their valour commanded their fortune. For the Governours not seeking wealth but honour, or not their own wealth but the publick, did so demean themselves both in Peace and War, that there was between all, a vertuous emulation, who should most benefit his Countrey. An happines which was too great to continue long. The people had as yet no written Laws: Custom bearing most sway; and the rest of the Law locked up in the breast of the Judges. To avoyd such inconveniencies as might hence ensue, there were some men, conceived to be as sound in judgement, as honest in their actions, deputed by a generall Commission to take an abstract of the Grecian Laws; according to the tenor whereof, the people were to frame their lives, the Judges their sentences. Here followed the Oligarchy or Decemvirate State of Rome, but long it lasted not. For these new Lords joyning forces together, made themselves rich with the spoil of the people, not caring by what unlawfull means they could purchase either profit or pleasure. Appius Claudius, one of the Decemviri, was the break-neck of this Government. He unmindfull of Lucretia and the Tarquins, lusted after Virginia, a woman though of low condition, yet such a woman in whom beauty and vertue strove for the preheminence. The issue was, that she (to save her honour) was slain by her own Father in an open Assembly of the people; Appius forced to make away himself in prison; and the rest of that Magistracy abdicating their Offices, the Consuls were for a time restored. A.V.C. 304.

3. The people fleshed with this victory, and calling to mind how their Ancestors had in like manner banished the Kings, began to know their own strength, and stomacked it exceedingly, that they on whose shoulders the frame of the State was supported, should be so much under the Command of others; that they who were Lords abroad, should be below the condition of Slaves at home. Hereupon they raise a tumult under the Conduct of their Tribune Canuleius. Nor could they by any perswasions be induced to lay down Arms, till they had obtained a Decree, That from thenceforth, the Nobles and the Commons might promiscuously be maried. And this was the first step to the Republique. The gaining this new Privilege, put them in possibility of obtaining greater. They now sue to be capable of the Consulship. The Fathers consulting of this demand, wisely fore-saw, that to grant their Petition, or to deny it, was alike dangerous. For were it utterly dashed, it was to be feared the People would again forsake the City; and yet make their stay more insolent and insupportable, if it were granted. C. Claudius, one who by his honourable behaviour, was by both parties had in an equall degree of reverence, quickly proposed a middle course, whereby the fury of the multitude might be appeased, without blemish to the Consular dignity. He constituted six Annuall Officers, equally chosen out of the People and the Nobles, calling them Tribuni Militum Consularis potestatis. This Office continued, but not without many Interstitiums, the space of 78. yeers. Which time expired, and some experience being had of the peoples Government; the Lords of the Senate did decree, That one of the Consuls should from thenceforth be chosen by, and out of the Commons; that they should be capable of all Magistracies; yea, even of the Dictatorship. So that now Vertue was as speedy a Ladder to climb unto Honors, as Nobility of Birth; and a Good man as much respected as a Great. A rare felicity of the times. A.V.C. 308. A.V.C. 310. A.V.C. 388.

4. The People being thus mixt with the Nobles, as well in Mariages, as Honors; one would have thought that this Common-wealth, being thus equally poysed, had been immortall. But as in the Naturall Body, there can be no exact and Arithmeticall proportion of the humors and elements, without some predominancie: So in the Body Politique, can there be no equall mixture of Plebeians and Patritians, without the supremacy of the one or the other. The people had presently after the institution of the Consuls, raised a Commotion; and with-drew themselves into Mount Aventine. Nor could they be intreated to return into the City, till there were granted unto them peculiar Officers called Tribuni Plebis, or Protectors of the Commons. These being not long after by the Common Councell pronounced to be Sacrosancti, and inviolable, began to heave the Popular State too high, and thrust the Aristocraticall too low, not regarding to lose the love of the one, so they might get the applause of the other. Insomuch, that matters of judgment were devolved from the Fathers to the Commons; and the authority of the Senate trod under foot by the people. Nay, they proceeded so far, that Marius being Tribune, threatned to send Cotta the Consul unto Prison. And Sulpitius in the same Office, made the Consuls forsake the Senate-house, and slew one of their sonnes, whose heels were not nimble enough to flie away. And now were the Romans governed by that form of rule, than which there is no lower. So that as well by an inevitable necessity in Nature, as the ordinary course of Policies, there must be a reverting to the first, and Monarchicall Authority. For questionless it fareth many times with a Common-wealth, as with the Sun, which runneth through all the signs of the Zodiack, till it return to the place where its motion first began. And the Platonick year of reducing all things to the same beginning, continuance, and period; how false soever in the Books of Nature, is in some sort true in the change of Government. A.V.C. 26.

5. The way down-hill is ease and ordinary, but to ascend unto the top requireth both wit to frame the steps, and courage to give the attempt: So was it here also with the Romans. They had naturally, and almost insensibly fain from a Monarchy to a Popularity, or Democracy: But to ascend from a Popularity to a Monarchy, required many steps and degrees in many, much industry in all. Marius and Sylla, well skilled in feeding the humors of the people, were the first that attempted, and severally mounted to such a height of command, as never durst any promise to them, nor they hope for themselves. Marius was of an hasty and stern nature, equally cruell to the Enemies in war, and the people in peace; one whose birth the Romans might have had just cause to curse, had he not saved them from the Cimbri. Sylla was one whose carriage none could enough commend before, or sufficiently condemn after his prosperity. A man whose Peace was far more bloody than his Warr; a better Subject than a Prince. These two gave way each to other, and both to death. Next these, as well in faction and designs, as blood and alliance, ſucceeded Caſar and Pompey: Two men never truly paralleld ſince their own times. Caſar had a wit to invent ſo pregnant, a heart to execute ſo ſtout, and to both a Fortune ſo favourable, that he durſt undertake what no man dared; and his performances commonly were anſwerable to his undertakings. Pompey, a man greater than his own or his friends wiſhes, had triumphed over all the parts of the known World; and could he but have brooked an Equall, he had never met Superiour. Had theſe two lived in divers Ages, or exerciſed their valour onthe common Enemy, the World had been too little to yeeld them imployments. But turning their forces one againſt the other, Pompey overthrownin the Field, was baſely murthered in Egypt: and Caſar victoriouſly Conquerour in Theſſalie, was barbarouſly maſſacred in the Capitoll. And though none of theſe four Worthies could ſettle the Monarchy in himſelf; yet this ſhall be to their eternall memory recorded, that they firſt opened the paſſage to others, and firſt moved the ſtone, which rowling along tumbled the People out of the Government.

6 After the overthrow of Pompey, and death of Caſar, the Common-wealth might have recovered Liberty, if either Caſar had left no heir, and Pompey no children; or rather, if Antonius, a man of an unquiet and turbulent ſpirit, had not begun new troubles. For he, knowing the affection of the Common people unto young Octavius, Caſars heir; and hearing the continuall report of his approach to Rome for his Inheritance; did by Decree of the Senate reſtore Sextus the ſonne of Pompey to his blood and honours; Hoping that they two, inheriting their Fathers hatreds, would like Pellets in a Boys Pot-gun, drive out each other; and ſo he might remain Lord of the whole. But young Octavius was too old to be ſo fetcht over; and had moreover more deſire to revenge his Fathers death on Brutus and Caſſius, than turn himſelf upon an enemy, that neither had done, nor could doe him any hurt. At his firſt entrance into Rome, he declared himſelf Caſars heir; though ſome regarding more his welfare than honour, diſwaded him from it. His retinue at his entrance was but ſmall, his behaviour gentle and courteous: So that all had cauſe to love him, none to fear him. His firſt buſineſs was to Antonius, then poſſeſſed of all Caſars eſtate. His words as modeſt, as his Petition juſt. Antonies anſwer ſomewhat churliſh, forbidding him to meddle in matters of State, adding that he was too young to take upon him the Name of Caſar; and ſo diſmiſſed him unſatisfied, and with diſcontentments. AUGUSTUS (for by that name we mean to call him, though he was not yet ſo cal'ed) perceiving that Antonies anſwer, though in ſhew but a delay, was in effect a denyall; inſinuated into the acquaiutance of Cicero, then potent among the Senators, and a capitall Enemy of Antony; by whoſe means the Lords of the Senate began to caſt great affection towards him. Next in a ſolemn Oration to the People, he let them know, how he intended to have diſtributed his Fathers wealth among them; and how Antonius did unjuſtly detain it from them both. Certainly there is not any thing prevaileth ſooner with the ignoble many than hope of gain. No ſooner had he finiſhed his ſpeech, and given away that to them which he thought impoſſible to get for himſelf; but all was in a tumult. None was ſo ſparing of his words, but he had ſome curſe in ſtore for Antonius: Every one vowing the deſtruction of that man, whom they ſuppoſed to deprive them of AUGUSTUS Donative.

7 In this hurly burly Antony quits the Town, and is by the generall voyce of both houſes, declared an Enemy to the State. An Army is given to Hircius and Panſa then Conſuls. AUGUSTUS, aged but 18 years, being proclamed Imperator, and made head of the League againſt the common Foe. AUGUSTUS, as he loved not to be abſent from a neceſſary war; ſo he alwaies uſed to reſerve himſelf from the dangers of it; and therefore he committed the whole enterpriſe unto the Conſuls: Well knowing, that though the Officers and Souldiers took moſt pains to get the Victory; yet would the honour of it be referred to him, as Imperator; Whereas, if any thing fell out to the Army, not well; his being a Non-agent in the buſineſs, would bring his honour off without ſtain. The Conſuls therefore proceeded in the War againſt Antony: who ſeeing little poſſibility of prevailing, reſolved to ſell the loſs of his own liberty, and his Souldiers lives, at a dear rate. And indeed the fortune of the day was ſo equally ſhared, that as the Conſuls might boaſt of the vanquiſhment of Antony, ſo Antony might triumph in the death of the Conſuls.

AUGUSTUS had now as much as he could deſire, more than he expected; a victorious Army at his ſervice. He therefore applies himſelf ſo to them, that giving that among them which he had in preſent; and promiſing them greater favours, according as his fortune and their valour, ſhould advance him, he bound them unto him in an eternall bond of allegiance; and made them the firſt ſtep by which he aſcended the Royaltie. The Lords of the Senate hearing of the young mans fortune, thought it beſt to ſtrangle theſe hopes even in their Cradles; and to that end, Decree the honour of overcomming Antony, not to belong to AUGUSTUS, but to Decius Brutus; for whoſe defence (being beſieged by Antony in Mutina) their Army had been levyed. Nor did they think this froſt of unexpected unkindneſs, ſufficient to nip the bloſſome of his hopes; but they denyed him the Conſulſhip. Theſe harſh proceedings compelled AUGUSTUS (his honour now lying at ſtake) to enter Rome as Conquerour; and force the Fathers to grant him his deſires. Having thus gotten what for the time he aymed at; he generally ſhewed himſelf gratefull to all, and particularly to ſome of the Souldiers; paying them what was behind by promiſe; and openly proteſting that without their aid he durſt not have adventured into the Capitoll. So by keeping his day with the Military men, and shewing his noble and generous nature in a thankfull commemoration of their service, he added stronger bonds to such as were already his own; and won many daily to his side, which before were either neutrall or adverse.

8. Antony in the mean time was untidie, but knowing that Lepidus was beyond the Mountains with a puissant Army, he posted thither; and so far prevailed with the Souldiers, that he was admitted into the Camp, where the Generall entertained him with all expressions of love and welcome. Antony perceiving the facile nature of Lepidus, soon perswaded him to lead his forces into Italie, promising him no less than the Lordship of the world, if he durst but shew his face to the Romans. AUGUSTUS having continuall news of this combination, and fearing much the prowesse of Antony, now strengthened, conceived no counsell fitting and convenient to his ends, as to joyn friendship, and to enter into confederacy with them. And this he did, not for any good will to either, but because being destitute of meanes to resist them, and also to revenge the death of his Father Julius, which he much laboured, he might with their forces oppresse Cassius and M. Brutus, and after as occasion fell out, deal with them being severed. This League was solemnly confirmed by a bloody Proscription immediately following. Wherein to be revenged on their enemies, they betrayed their friends. A lamentable and ruefull time, good and bad, rich and poor, being alike subject to the slaughter. Now was the time of Julius Cæsars Government thought to be the Golden Age, and every one began to curse Brutus and Cassius as the Autors of these present miseries, whom they but lately honoured as the Restorers of the Common liberty. Nay the very Kings were deemed tolerable, and such as lived in their days, happy. The poor Romans had not changed the Tyrant, but the Tyrants. Yea, they had three for one into the bargain. Such is the condition of us men, that we know not our own happines in the fruition, but the want. Two of these Triumviri glutted themselves with blood, taking pride in hearing the lamentable cries and groans of the people. Augustus on the contrary, shewed himself much grieved at this barbarous cruelty; so that his consent seemed rather forced than voluntary. But this Proscription, though in it self cruell and tyrannicall, produced some good and profitable effects in the Republick. For when by this Proscription, and the insuing Civill war, the stoutest of the Nobles and Commons were made away, few being left which durst endeavour to recover the old Liberty; Augustus did the more easily establish his Monarchie, and restore peace to the City. Moreover the prosecution of this cruelty so incensed the people against Antony and Lepidus; that Augustus, whom most held excusable, found them always his fast friends; if not for love to him, yet in spight to them.

9. But to proceed; Antony and AUGUSTUS leaving the guard of the City to Lepidus, with joynt-forces march against Brutus and Cassius, both overthrown by Antony; whom AUGUSTUS did therefore put upon that service, as well to diminish Antonies forces, as to keep his own entire. As for himself, either he in policy suffered himself to be driven out of the field by Brutus, to make Antony more work; or else indeed durst not abide the battell. Such end had Brutus and Cassius, two men whom Fortune seemed to be in love with on the suddain, and did as suddenly forsake them, Brutus the more accomplished man; Cassius the more expert souldier. I pass over AUGUSTUS wars in Italie, Antonies in Asia; the discontents between them, and their reconciliation by the means of Octavia sister to the one, and wife to the other Emperor. As also how joyning forces together to oppresse Sextus, then Lording it over the Sea, and proud with the conquest of Sicilie; they received him into the Confederacy, and joyned the Iland of Sardinie to his other Conquests. To recompence which kindnes, Sextus invited the two Generals aboord his Admiral Galley: and after a bountifull entertainment, return'd them safe to their Camps. I scarce have ever heard of so great an over-sight, among so many able Politicians. And much I marvell with my self, upon what confidence AUGUSTUS and Antony durst so far trust their persons to a reconciled Enemy: or on what reason Sextus having both of them in his power, would let slip so slightly that advantage, greater than which was never offered to a discontented and ambitious person. This I am sure of, that he afterward repented it, and could have wished that he had hearkened to the voice of Menas his old servant, who had perswaded him to make his best of that oportunity. The Kings of France and Aragon, of old enemies made new friends, had the like enterviews at Savona: which that notable Historiographer and States-man Guicciardine, describeth with much wonder and commendation. Yet in the like case, have many, and as I think, worthily condemned Lewis the 11. of France, and Charles of Burgundy, the Arch-politicians of those days; in that Lewis at Peronne put himself into the hands of Charles his Enemy, who also after a short restraint, dismissed him.

A.V.C. 711.

10. These solemn expressions of amity between the three Generalls, being thus ended, and Antony gone for Egypt; AUGUSTUS then began to contrive his establishment in the State, though with the ruin of his Colleagues. He beginneth first with Sextus, having by gifts and promises drawn Menas unto his side; who by reason of his inwardness with his Master, knew most of his designs. By the directions of this Menas, and the assistance of Lepidus, he quickly overthrew Sextus; who flying death in Europe, by the hand of AUGUSTUS, found it in Asia, by the command of Antony. After this victory, AUGUSTUS, either having or pretending a quarrell against Lepidus, entreth into his Camp, seizeth his person, and depriving him of all honors, confineth him to Rome. A man that half against his will, stumbling upon the Government, had beyond any desert of his, enjoyed ten yeers continuance of Empire and prosperity. An action of a very high nature, and such as AUGUSTUS durst not have ventured on, if Antony had been in Italy. He therefore advisedly removed him out of his way, before he would attempt the same. It hath been ever a chief Maxim in Court-policy, to remove that man out of the way, under pretence of some honourable charge, whom we intend either to cast from his present honors; or else to make less potent with Prince and People. For which cause also AUGUSTUS perswaded Antonies absence from the City, to bring him at the last into discredit and contempt. For well he knew that his dotage on Cleopatra, could not but draw him into many inconveniencies: neither could his neglecting the State, to riot with his Leman, be other than distastfull to the Lords and People. Next, he commanded his Sister Octavia to leave her husband Antonies house; yet privately he perswaded her to live there still, and bring up his children; that so the Romans seeing her noble demeanor and love to her husband, might the more heartily detest him, who so ignobly and unkindly had rejected her. To adde more fuell to this flame of hatred, he readeth Antonies will unto the people; in which many of the Roman Provinces were bequeathed to Cleopatra's children, and other things ordained to the common prejudice. Antony likewise preferred many Bills against AUGUSTUS, as that he had deposed Lepidus from the Triumvirate; that he had divided Italy amongst his own Souldiers only; that he had not restored the ships borrowed to make war against Sextus.

11. These discontents seconded with an ambitious hope of prevailing, made them both resolute to refer all to the decision of a Battell. Antony had a Fleet consisting of 500. ships, high-built, and trimmed up rather for a Triumph, than a fight. His Land Forces consisted of 100000. Foot, and 12000. Horse; AUGUSTUS had the like number of Horsemen, 80000. Foot, and 250. good Men of War, snug and close, built more for use than ostentation. The Rendezvouz is Actium, a place seeming to be marked out for notable designs: here being fought also in our Fathers days that famous battell, wherein the Venetians gave the world to understand, that the Turks Forces by Sea were not invincible. Antony was on the Offensive side, therefore much doubted whether it were better to give the Onset by Sea or by Land. Cleopatra, whose words were Oracles, perswaded him to the Sea-fight; not that she thought it more safe, but that if Antony lost the day, she might with more facility escape. To this resolution, when most of the Captains had for fear agreed; one of the old Souldiers thus bluntly gain-said it. "What a miserable security art thou possessed with, most noble Emperor? Where is that "antient fore-sight wherewith thou hast formerly prevented all disasters, and turned the Ene-"mies devises on their own heads? Consider with thy self, most noble General, what uncertain "friends the Wind and Sea are? To how fickle an Element thou dost trust thy fortunes? Let "the Egyptians, and Phœnicians, old Mermaids born and nurst up in the Sea, follow this kind of "warfare: But let us thy true Roman spirits, try our valour on the firm Land, and there fight "for thy Empire and our own lives. Perhaps thou dost mistrust our faith, look here Antony (with "that he opened his bosome) and thou shalt see many an honourable scar got in thy service. "We are now too old to learn new Treasons: Alter therefore thy resolution, and to please a "woman cast not away so many of thy faithfull Followers. Certainly the unresistable powers of heaven when they decree a mans destruction overthrow those counsells by which he should escape it. Antony turneth a deaf ear to this Souldiers wholesome advice; and borrowing from Cleopatra two or three kisses (as if from the fountain of her lips he had derived all his courage) without any more ceremony prepareth himself unto the battell.

12. AUGUSTUS on the other side, seeing a necessity of a Sea-fight, was yet in this comforted, that his Vessels were more usefull and better manned, though fewer than his Enemies. that his men to him were faithfull, and by reason of their many Victories, in good heart; From Antony there daily revolted some Kings and Captains of note, to the great encouragement of the one side, and disheartning of the other. The whole charge of the war he committed to M. Vipsanius Agrippa, who failing in no duty of a good Captain, took from his Galleys whatsoever might be impediments to the valiant, or shelter to the Cowardly; all that was cumbersome to his own men, or advantagious to the Enemy. Things thus ordered, and the battells ready to joyn, Augustus Cæsar standing where he might see and be seen of all, is said to make this or the like Oration. "Fellows and Companions in Arms, I suppose it needless "to hearten you, which never were acquainted with fear; or bid you overcome, which never "yet knew what it was not to vanquish. Conquest hath always sate upon the edges of your "swords, and victory been written in your fore-heads. Be not now backward to add this one "to your other Triumphs. When after the death of my father Julius, of famous memory, I "first dealt in matters of War, I rather found, than made you good souldiers. And during "this twelve years service under me, neither have you been wanting in the duty of faithfull "followers; nor (I hope) of a vigilant and gratefull Leader. Sure I am, I expressed my self "as far as I could, and more I would, had I been able. Let not the number, nor the greatness "of the adverse Gallies any ways affright you. The hugeness of their Bulks maketh them unapt "for imployment; and the multitude one clogging and hindring the others, may as much "further our Victory as theirs. They exceed us in multitudes of Men, we them in number of "Souldiers. The meaning of the word Piles is unknown among them. And for their Mari- "ners,

"ners, the beſt of them are but Carters, Reapers, and Harveſtmen, raked out of the field; the reſt "the excrement of common priſons, wherewith their Veſſels are loaded, not manned. The Gene- "rall is indeed a fit Captain for ſuch a ſelected company. It is the ſame Antony whom you once "drave out of the Field before Mutina. I perſwade my ſelf, that neither he dares think of re- "covering, or you of loſing, your former glories. It is the ſame Antony who being ſhamefully "chaſed out of Parthia, only in that he was not vanquiſhed, proclamed himſelf Victor. It is the "ſame Antony who intendeth to make Rome ſubject to the Egyptians, and to diſtribute the Pro- "vinces, purchaſed with the blood and vertue of our Anceſtors, amongſt Iras and her fellow "Chamber-maids. Nay indeed, it is not Antony at all, but the ſhadow only of that ſubſtance "which now is hid in Cleopatra's Cabbin. Courage then brave men of Arms; be, as you have "ſtill been, Conquerors. To ſpeak more, were to detain you from Victory. Only this, call to "mind your antient valour. Remember that I am Caſar, you Romans.

13 This ſpeech animated the new Souldiers, and confirmed the old: So that with a generall acclamation they give the aſſault. Death, wounds, and blows diſhed in divers faſhions, and ſerved in by ſeverall men, were the beſt delicates prepared for theſe uuwelcome viſitants. Cleopatra beholding the Battell, and doubting the ſucceſs, through the thickeſt of Antonies Fleet, made away with the 60 Gallies appointed for her Guard. This diſorder made the breach at which the Victory entred. Antony ſeeing her flight, left his Squadron alſo; and being taken into her Galley, hoyſed ſail for Egypt: Herein playing the part of a cowardly Souldier; whilſt each of his Souldiers executed the office of a couragious Generall: For they ſo obſtinately perſiſted in the Fight, that AUGUSTUS was fain to offer them mercy ſooner than they would demand it; and divers times before they would accept it. At laſt they all ſware Allegiance unto him. The Victory being thus gotten, AUGUSTUS (no loſer of advantages) ſpeedeth into Egypt, which he reduceth into the form of a Province; making the people pay for fine twenty Millions of Gold. By receiving this mony he ſo weakned them, that they had no ability to raiſe an after-war; and by diſtributing part of it among his Souldiers, he confirmed them in obedience. As for Antony, he ſeeing his fortunes deſperate, redeemed the honour loſt in his life, by a noble and heroick death. And Cleopatra ended her life alſo not long after; a Woman more wel-favoured than fair; wel-ſpoken, rather than either. Antonies Courtiers had ſeen many Ladies more lovely, none more prevailing; men being chained to her by the ears, rather than the eys. A.V.C. 713.

14 I willingly omit AUGUSTUS entry into Rome; as alſo the ſtate and magnificence of his Triumph. His Victory he uſed ſo juſtly, that none felt the fury of the War but ſuch as were ſlain in the Battell. To aſſure himſelf of Antonies adherents, was his firſt care: to which end he burnt in the Common Forum, the Coffers of Antony, unopened; wherein all his Letters from his friends in Rome had been incloſed; well knowing, that as long as any thought themſelves ſuſpected adverſaries, they would never ſhew themſelves true friends. To the Senators and Magiſtrates he made ſumptuous Feaſts; to the Common people he exhibited magnificent and pleaſing Stage-plays; and with all variety of pleaſure, baniſhed from both, as well ſorrow for the old Proſcription, as fear of a new. But this was only as a preparation to his many deſigns. There were two men moſt dear unto him, and privy to his Counſels, Mecenas and Agrippa: which in the object of their love differed only in this, Mecenas was a lover of AUGUSTUS; Agrippa of the Emperour. Mecenas was of the rank of Knights, a man of good and bad parts equally compounded. When his buſineſs required care, vigilant and circumſpect; at leiſure time, exceſſively vitious. Agrippa was the firſt of his houſe: a man alike fit for Camp and Counſell; one neither careleſs of a good name, nor covetous of a great. For although he on y was the man which vanquiſhed Sextus and Antony; yet well skilled in the humours of Princes, he gave Auguſtus the honour of all his Conqueſts; making the vertue, not the reward, the end of his actions. So by doing nobly, and ſpeaking modeſtly of it, he was without envy, but not without glory. With theſe two AUGUSTUS withdrew into a private Cloſet, and then brake unto them in this ſort. He made firſt unto them a long diſcourſe of the Civill Wars, Then added, "That having by his own fortune, and the valour of his Souldiers, put "an end to the troubles; he was unreſolved what to do; Whether to reſign the Empire to the "People, or retain it ſtill in his own hands. That in a buſineſs of ſuch importance, he durſt "not rely altogether on his own wiſdom; That he had made them his Judges, as men that "could ſpeak ſoundly, and durſt ſpeak freely: That he knew them to have more care of his ho- "nour, than profit; but of the Common-wealth, more than both; That his Counſels, which courſe "ſoever he took, would not be by them eliminated: He therefore intreated them to conſider "what was to be done, and to give up their verdicts.

15 Agrippa after a ſhort ſilence thus began. "I know, thou canſt not but marvell, O Caſar, "that I, who under thine Empire, am ſure to be beyond precedent exalted; ſhould perſwade "thee to live private. But I eſteem more thy honour, than my profit; the publick good, than my "particular preferment. And yet perhaps my Counſell ſhall be as profitable, if not as plauſi- "ble as the contrary. I know thee to be no way delighted with lyes and flattery; and will "therefore deal with thee freely and plainly. Thou haſt indeed put a period to the Civill "Wars; but to what end, unleſs thou doſt reſtore unto the Common-wealth the Liberty for which "the Wars were raiſed? What benefit can the people reap from thy Victory, if thou doſt uſe it "only as an inſtrument for their greater bondage? Doſt thou think that the Romans having

"so many hundred years maintained their liberty; will now be willing to forego it? No, Cæ-
"sar, no: Flatter not thy self with these hopes. Marius the younger, and Sertorius, were "quickly cut off, when their ends were once known; and Julius thy Father of happy memory, "did not long live, after his actions seemed to bring the Common liberty in hazard. And shall
"we think that there is no true Roman spirit surviving; No Brutus living to attempt the like "against thee? Believe me Cæsar, believe me, it is far better not to meddle with the Empire at "all, than to be forced to abandon it. But say Divine Providence will so protect thee, that "thou mayst out-live such practices; and shalt thou also not out-live thy glories? This pre"sent age perchance will not censure thine actions, because it dares not: But Posteritie, free "from all respects of love or hatred, cannot but call them into question, and braud thy enter"prise with Ambition, and perhaps Tyranny. If thy designs prosper, they will judge thee to have "risen unjustly; if otherwise, to have fallen deservedly. How much better then were it, now
"when thine honour is without blemish, and thy reputation unstained, to resign thy authority?
"Indeed when Sextus lorded it over the Sea, and Antony over Ægypt, it might have been "thought want of spirit, to have deposed thy self from the Government: But now to doe it,
"when thou art without Rivall in the Empire; now, when thou art sole Commander of the "Worlds Forces; now when the People and Senate ly prostrate at the feet of thy mercy; were "to strike dumb detraction, and to make the World admire thy Temper. Thou art at this "present the joy and comfort of the World; there is wanting to thee neither Wealth nor Fame.
"Here then fix thy foot: For go but one step beyond this Non ultra, and thou wilt run "into a boundless Ocean of perils, which have no end, but the end of thy life and reputation.

16 "Not so, excellent Agrippa, replyed Mecenas. I never heard good Pilot find fault with "Sea-room; or of more vessels cast away in the Ocean, than in the Streights, and narrow pas"sages. Our Republick is a Ship fraught with divers Nations. She hath been long tossed on
"the waves of Civill dissentions, long driven up and down with the Wind of ambition; and there "is now no place so fit for her safety, as the unlimited Ocean of one mans power. This Empire at "first rising seemed not to require a Monarch; but it is now grown too unwieldy to be without "one. Take then upon thee, O Cæsar, this Empire; or to say better, do not forsake it. I "should never thus advise thee, did I conceive any possible inconveniences. The Senate doth allow "thee a competent guard of valiant and faithfull Souldiers; whom then shouldest thou fear?
"Nay, ill may I prosper if I see any cause of fear, were thy Guard cashiered. Enemies thou "hast none: For such as were, are either already slain by thy valour, or made thy fast friends
"by thy bounty and clemency. To omit Marius and Sertorius, I will a little touch at thy Father
"Julius. He too good a Souldier to be a Statist, was too heady and violent in establishing his "Government. Nor could he cunningly temporize, and suffer the people insensibly, and by de"grees, to drop into bondage; but oppress them all at once. Again, he committed a great So-
"lœcism in State, when discharging his Guard, he sought to retain that Empire by fair means,
"which he had gotten by violence. I know thee, O Cæsar, to be of a more wary and cunning "behaviour. Learn also to work out thine own safety, by Pompeys misfortunes. He after the "finishing of the Pontick War, at Brundusium, disbanded his Army; and thereby merited to be "accounted an honest and moderate man. Certainly, he shewed himself in the course of this "action, rather vertuous than fortunate or politick: For presently he began to be contemned,
"and by this improvident weakning of himself, made an open passage to his own ruin. I com"mend his modesty more than his brain; neither did he himself, on better considerations, ap"prove his own doings; and therefore he resolved, had he been Victor in Pharsalia, never to "have committed the like Oversight. So it is, and so it will fall out with thee, O Cæsar, if in "this action thou propose him to be thy pattern. It is not safe, Agrippa saith, to take the "Empire: less safe it is to refuse it. A settled and innative vice it is in man, never to "endure that any man above our own rank should over-top us. Romes second founder Camillus, "Scipio, that scourge of Carthage, were disgraced; and M. Coriolanus banished by our Ancestors;
"only because their worth had lifted them above the ordinary pitch of Subjects. Do not thou
"hope to fare better than thy Predecessors. Heretofore, perchance, thou mightest have sought
"the Empire, to satisfie thy ambition. The Empire must now be thy refuge and Asylum. Credit "me, the Lords of the Senate, after so many years Obedience, know not how to Govern; neither "canst thou having so long been a Governour, learn Obedience. True it is, that in matters of "domestical businesse, a man may stop and desist where he will: But in the getting of an Empire,
"there is no mean between the death of an Enemie, and the life of a Prince. Thou hast already "gone too far to retire. Now thou must resolve to be Cæsar or nothing. To say more were su"perfluous. Thine own discretion will suggest unto thee better Arguments. Onely this, I know "that thou hast in thee too much Julius, not to be an Emperour.

17 AUGUSTUS seemed to incline to this latter opinion; whether moved with Mecenas Oration, especially his instance in Pompey; or that he was before resolved to follow that course, is uncertain. Howsoever, seeming with great attention to observe their speeches, and gathering their severall reasons and motives together, he made this reply. "A most hard thing it is,
"for a divided mind, to make a well-joyn'd Answer. Divided I am, and troubled between "your two opinions; loath to follow either, fithence in so doing I must offend one. Yet
"fithence there is a necessity of Resolution, I intend, though I like well of thy advice, Agrippa, to "follow thine Mecenas. In doing which, I am but an instrument of the Destinies; to put their

"will in execution. Often have I heard my Father Octavius report, how Nigidius, famous for "his skill in Judiciary Astrologie, told him once in open Senate, That he had gotten an Empe-"ror for the Romans. As also, how M. Cicero, so renowned for Wit and Eloquence, dreamed "that he saw Jupiter place me on the top of the Capitoll, with a Whip in mine hand. Certain-"ly, if the powers of Heaven promise me so great an Empire; I will not be wanting to my "self. but will adde by my industrie to their influence. To further my designs, I do desire you, "nay I conjure you both, that as you have been ever ready in your Counsels, so you would "not now be backward in any necessary assistance. This said, they presently enter into a new conference, how to manage a business of this weight; what Senators to acquaint with their intent; how to dispose of the Army, not yet cashiered; with what Plummet were best to sound the minds of the common people, and to oblige all sorts unto him. This Consultation ended, AUGUSTUS continued his affability to the People, and respect to the Nobles. An opportunity he had to express himself to both. There was at that time a Famine, which shrewdly raged among the Commons. To the poorer sort, he distributed Corn, gratis; to others, at a mean price. Riches and honours he communicated to both sorts; the better to wipe out of their memories, the antient freedome. Such parts of the City as were destroyed by casualty of fire, ruined by length of time, or defaced during the Civill Wars; he re-edified. Houses of Common-assemblies he repaired; Temples, consecrated to the Gods, he spared no cost to adorn and beautifie. And finally, so freely diffused his bounty, that there was no part or member of the City, which had not some tast of it. Next, he dismissed his Souldiers, assigning them Lands and habitations in divers parts of Italy: That so the People might conceive his Resignation to be reall; and yet, if need were, his forces might be quickly reassembled. Nor were Agrippa and Mecenas wanting for their parts, to promote the cause; but carefully acquainted some of the Senate with it, who stood well affected to them; and cunningly prepared others, who had stood indifferent.

18 The foundation thus layd, and the Senate sate, AUGUSTUS rose from his seat, and spake to this, or the like effect. "When I consider with my self the infinite extent of the Ro-"man Empire; I protest I stand at a maze: Marvailing how such, as heretofore have raised com-"bustions in State, durst undertake the sole administration of it. What Nation in the World, "hath not either begged their Peace at our Gates; or felt the fury of our Wars at their own? "What Countries have we not harried with Fire and Sword, making the rising and setting of "the Sun the bounds of our Dominions? It must questionless proceed from an over-weaning "conceit in them, of their own abilities; who thought themselves so fit to undergo that bur-"den, which none but the immortall Gods can carry. Of my self I will not say much; "Onely, I hope I may say with modesty, that I am not inferiour to Cinna, nor it may be to Syl-"la; Yet have I found in my self, by late experience, how unable I was to manage the affairs "of State, even then when I had two Coadjutators. There is no Atlas of strength sufficient to "bear up this Heaven; No Star of influence sufficient to animate this Sphear; No one form of "vertue sufficient to actuate this matter. Neither indeed is it fit, that the Republique which "ought to be immortall, should depend only on the life and wel-fare of one man. There never "was, since the beginning of time, a City repleniished with greater store of worthy and able "men, either to consult or exercise. Never was there seen so grave and discreet a Consistory; "Never so many of both sorts so fit to govern. I have by your Directions, and the Valour of "your Souldiers, put an end to all homebred quarrels. I have been your instrument to reduce "Peace internall and externall, to your City, and desire now no other Guerdon or recompence "for any former services, than a quiet and a private life; free from all such dangers and incon-"veniences, as are inseparably annexed to the Soveraignty. Now therefore, and may my acti-"on be auspitious and fortunate to my Country, doe I resign my authority; committing my "self, and the Common-wealth, into the hands of the Senate and People of Rome.

19 This Oration ended, there followed a soft and silent buzzing in the house. Some supposed this speech not to have so much truth, as art and cunning, yet smothered their conceits for fear of after-claps. Others were Creatures of his own making; and they hoping to rise in the fall of their Country, would not hear of a Resignation. Some few of the wiser sort, thought it not expedient to put the Reigns again into the hands of the Multitude. The rest out of a sluggish and phlegmatique Constitution, chose rather the present estate with security; than to strive to recover the old, with danger. All therefore with a joynt-consent proclame him sole Emperor; and solemnly entreat him to save the Common-wealth, otherwise running to inevitable ruin. He for a while, as vainly denied to accept the Government, as they vainly persisted to desire him. At last, wearied with the clamours of all in generall; and importunity of some in particular; he by little and little yeelded to their requests, taking upon him the Empire for ten years, with this Proviso, that if before that time expired, he could fully settle and order the present State, he would give up his charge. This he gave out, not with A.V.C.725 a purpose of performance; (For at the end of every Decennium he renewed his Lease of the Government:) But that the people seeing so nigh a possibility of regaining their Liberties, might not practise against him. Whereas, had he for term of life received the supreme Authority, he had no doubt hastened his own overthrow. For well he knew, that not the Title of Dictator, but the Epithite Perpetuall, was the destruction of CÆSAR: And yet a great respect was to be had also in the choyce of the Title;

The name of King he refuſed, as being odious unto the Citizens. Neither would he be called Romulus, though he much deſired it, leſt they ſhould ſuppoſe that he did affect the Tyranny. When the people called him Dictator, he rent his Garments, deſiring them to diſcharge him of a name ſo hated; and being once called Lord, (Dominus) he forbad alſo that Title by publike Edict. Princeps Senatus was the only Title he admitted, well knowing, that the like glorious attributes were heaped on his Father Julius by them which leaſt loved him, onely to this end, that growing more and more into hatred, he might the ſooner be diſpatched. Nor was he ignorant that the Common people led more by appearances, than truth, diſcerned names more plainly than executions; and that the onely courſe to make greatneſs ſtand firmly, was to receive extraordinary power under a Title not offenſive. The name alſo of AUGUSTUS conferred upon him by the Senate, (as if there had been ſomething in him more than mortall) he refuſed not, as a Title expreſſing more dignity and reverence than authority. And having pleaſed himſelf in the choice of his Title, he next proceeded to the eſtabliſhment of his power, which he thus purſued.

20. When firſt at the hands of the Lords of the Senate, he had for ten years received the Government; there was appointed unto him two Cohorts of Prætorian ſouldiers for the guard of his perſon; to whom the Senate allowed the double wages of a Legionary ſouldier, to make them the more vigilant and heedfull in their charge. Over theſe he appointed two Prefects or Governors, (Captains of the Guard we may beſt term them.) To commit the charge to one only, might breed danger; to more, confuſion. Agrippina to ſettle Nero in the Empire, prevailed with Claudius, to make Burrus, whom ſhe had at her devotion, the ſole Captain, and Nimphidius, fallen from his hopes of ſetting Galba beſides the quiſhon, deſired the command of the Guard as the next ſtep to the Soveraignty. In choice of theſe Captains, he obſerved two Rules. Firſt, he ever choſe them, Ex ordine Equeſtri, not Senatorio; leſt that ſo high a dignity, joyned to ſo high a birth, might ſtartle their reſolutions to ſome deſigns againſt his quiet. Secondly, he made choice of two ſuch, which were of contrary humors, and ſomewhat at odds, that ſo the ill intents of the one (if they ſhould harbour any) might be thwarted and revealed by the other; and both in a noble emulation ſhould contend to be moſt forward in his ſervice. The next courſe which he took for his own ſecurity, was a law he made to curb the wills and attempts of the great ones. For whereas it had been formerly unlawfull to queſtion a Bondman in matters concerning the life and death of his Lord; AUGUSTUS paſſed an Act, that all ſuch Bondmen ſhould be firſt ſold to him, or the Common-wealth. By means whereof he kept the Lords, before preſuming on the ſecreſie of their ſlaves, from all cloſe and private Conſpiracies againſt him. Having thus ſtrengthened his perſon, he aſſumed to himſelf the Imperiall, Cenſoriall, and Tribunitian authority, together with the Sacerdotall dignity. As Emperor and Generall of the Men of War, he could preſs Souldiers, raiſe Taxes, proclame Wars, make Peace, yea, and put to death the very beſt and ſtouteſt of the Senators; as Cenſor, it was in his power, to reform corrupt manners, enquire after mens carriage, to take in and put out of the Senate whom he liſted, to place & diſplace the people from an honorable Tribe, to a leſs honorable. Yet would he not be called Cenſor, as a name too inferior; but accepted the Prerogatives of it, after the ſurrendry of Mamitius, and his aſſociate, two men ſo unfit for that Magiſtracy, that they could object no crime to old or young, of which themſelves were not guilty. The Tribunitian authority enabled him to hinder any thing attempted againſt his liking: It preſerved his perſon from all contumely and injury; giving him power to puniſh, as an exerable perſon, (yea, and without any formality of the Law,) whoſoever had offended him either in word or deed. As for the Pontificall Dignity, it made him a little more reverenced, not more potent. Onely it added to his title the ſtile of Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Biſhop, and made him of authority amongſt the Prieſts, and in ſacred matters, things that concerned Religion. The light of Reaſon taught him, that it was convenient for him, being a Prince, to have command on all his people; He had been els but half a Monarch, ſuch as ſome Princes are with us, who quit their Clergie to be governed by a Forrain Head.

21. Theſe ſeverall Prerogatives annexed together, ſeemed not yet ſufficient: and therefore he ſo cunningly dealt with the Senators, that they gave him a generall Exemption from the Coactive power of the Law. Which once obtained, he ſeriouſly bends his thoughts to ſettle the Common-wealth; and ſo to ſettle it, that by uniting all parties, and giving ſatisfaction to all Intereſſes, it might not be obnoxious to ſuch frequent and tumultuous alterations, as it had been formerly. But herein, when he had conſulted the antient Platforms, he found no ſmall difficulty. The Form deſcribed by Plato, ſhewed rather how a Citie ought to be governed, than how it may be. Ariſtotle, though bred in the Free States of Greece, was a friend to Monarchie; but his diſcourſes dark, and ſpeculative, and not eaſily reduced to practice. Solon afforded the People too much Authority, the Nobles too little, the King none. The old Carthaginian Legiſlator attributed too much to Riches, too little to Vertue. The Perſian Law-makers indulged the King too much, to the Subject nothing: And on the other ſide, Licurgus in his modelling of the State of Sparta, aſcribed too little to the King, and too much to the Senate. Zaleucus was rather the Author of ſome particular Laws, than the Framer of a Common-wealth. Phaleas and Hippodamus as unimitable altogether as Plato. Seeing therefore that none of the old Patterns did come home to his purpoſe; and withall conſidering with himſelf, that the unmixt Forms of Rule were not equally ballanced, and by conſequence ſubject unto change, he resolved to frame his Common-wealth out of the perfections of the three good Forms, their imperfection being rejected, reserving to himself the Supreme Majesty, to the Senate eminent Authority, to the People convenient Liberty, all in a just and fit proportion. And to say truth, he did so mix the Soveraignty of one with the Liberty of all, that both the Lords and People, without fear of bondage or sedition, injoyed their accustomed Freedoms. The Consulls and Nobles of the City assembled as formerly they used; matters of State they handled by themselves; Ambassadors of Forrain Nations they heard, and dispatched. The Commons assembled in the Comitia, to enact Laws and elect Magistrates, as in the free Common-wealth. Yet so that nothing was done without the consent and privity of the Prince, who for the most part, nominated the successive Magistrate, leaving the confirmation of him to that people. So that the change, as he contrived it, was not violent and at once, but by degrees, and by the silent approbation of both Estates, as seeming to consist more in the alteration of the Magistrate, than of the Laws.

22. But (to proceed more particularly) the first care he took, was to confirm Religion in the same state in which he found it. I mean Religion as the Romans used the word, for those particular though idolatrous Forms of Worship, which to their severall Gods had been used among them. This, though he might have changed, as the Pontifex Maximus, or chief Bishop of the City; yet very wisely he forbare it. It is not safe for Princes that are setled in a long descent of Government, to be too active in such changes: But it is dangerous to attempt it in a Green State, and in an Empire not well quieted, and inured to bondage. Men are more sensible of the smallest alterations in the Church, than greater changes in the State, and raise more frequent broils about it. The Romans specially were exceeding tender in this point. The antient Aediles formerly received it into their charge, that they permitted no externall, either Gods or Ceremonies, to be introduced into the City. And by Æmilius it was enacted for a Law, That none should offer sacrifice in any publike place, after a new and Forrain fashion. Excellent therefore was the counsell which Mecenas gave him, when he first undertook the Empire; viz. "That he "should follow constantly the Religion which he found established, and compell others also to "do the like: For Forrain and strange Rites (saith he) will offend the people, work many in- "convenient alterations in the Civil State; yea and most likely wil occasion many both seditions "and conspiracies. Words which he spake not to the air, but to a Prince exceeding apprehensive of the best advice: Nor did AUGUSTUS ever shew himself more carefull in any one Art of Empire, than he did in this. That which Mecenas noted, we find true in these later Ages; in times more skilfull of obedience, than the most quiet hour of AUGUSTUS Government. No one thing more hath caused so frequent and so generall Rebellions in the States of Christendom, than alterations of this nature. I cannot therefore but commend it, as a pious resolution in a late mighty Monarch: Better some few corruptions should be suffered in a Church, than still a change.

23. Religion thus established, in the next place the welfare of the whole Empire consisted chiefly in reforming of the City; from which, as from the heart, life was conveyed to all the Provinces abroad. And in the Citie the corruption was most apparent in the Senate it self. With them therefore he beginneth, well knowing that crimes in men of eminent place end not in themselves; but by degrees become diffused among their Clients and Followers. Now in the Senate were many and desertless men, who had been taken into it during the Civill Wars; as they could court the People, and humour such as were most potent. Of these he expelled none by his own power; but making a speech to them in the Senate, of the antient order and present confusion of the house, he first exhorted them to look back on their former lives, and to judge of their own abilities and merits, for so honourable a room. Then he desired some of them to pick out such among them, as were in disposition factious, and in life faulty, but loath to conceive so ill of their own actions; which they did accordingly. Yet as it often happeneth, that the great Thief leadeth the less to the Gallows; and as Commines observeth, that after the Battell of Monliherry Offices were taken from many for flying away, and conferred on such as ran ten miles beyond them: So remained many in the Senate neither less vicious, nor less violent; only more potent to maintain their doings, than some others whom they had removed. AUGUSTUS therefore joyning to him Agrippa, proceedeth to a new review: And certainly it much concerned him in the setling of his affairs, that none should have a voyce in that famous Councell, but such as were of able judgments, honest repute, and well-affected to his Service and the Common-wealth. An enterprise which he esteemed so dangerous, that he permitted entrance to no Senator till he were searched; himself wearing a Brigandine under his Gown; and being invironed with ten of the most couragious and best beloved of the whole company. Such as he found in either kind inexcusable, he discharged from their attendance, electing such in their places, which were either ennobled for their wisdom, of noted moderation, or otherwise strong in their dependants. Yet so that greatness of Revenue was esteemed neither a fit Patronage for any if they were offensive; nor a just cause to challenge interest in the house. Such of them as were rich rather in the gifts of the minde, than those of fortune, he relieved with honourable Pensions; and finally he bestirred himself so resolutely, that all confessed that they had need of such a wise Physician, to cure that dull Consumption, whereinto the Common-wealth was fallen.

24 In other things he seldom did proceed against them as of himself: But when that any of them had conspired his Ruin, he referred them to the judgment of their fellows. And this he did partly to reserve unto the Court the antient Prerogative; partly, not to be Judge and party in his own cause: but principally following the example of his Father Julius, who counterfeiting a wretchless contempt of his adversaries, used when he was least suspected, under-hand, and by publike Officers to work their destruction. Many also of them whom the Senate had condemned, he would freely pardon. Conceiving truly, that the questioning of men of high calling, would produce as much terrour; though it argued not so much rigor as the punishment. Yet if extremity of Law was used towards some few, it was to settle quietness in the whole; and as it were a particular bloud-letting for the generall health. Those who had followed the factions of Brutus and Antony, he forgave freely. And not so only, but by manifesting his words by his deeds, and adding trust and honours to his pardons: he made his Chair of State more setled, and immoveable. So Cæsar by erecting the faln and broken Images of Pompey, made his own statues stand more firmly. But the chief Act by which he brideled the Nobles, was an Edict by him promulgated, forbidding any of them, his leave not granted, to travell out of Italie. For well he knew that in an Empire unsetled, and Provinces not quieted, the presence and authority of men of that rank, might raise greater troubles, than could be easily suppressed. Examples he wanted not; that especially of Cato, who after the overthrow of Pompey, stirred such a War against Cæsar in Africk: that he never bought Victory at a dearer rate. Yet not altogether to imprison them, he licensed them at their pleasure to visit Sicilia, and Gaul Narbonoyse; Provinces close to the continent of Italie, altogether unfurnished for Wars; and indeed such, as by reason of the variety of pleasures in them used, were more likely to weaken their minds, than to arm their bodies. Now to give the Senate some sweet meat to their sowr sawce; he as much honoured and reverenced that Order, as ever it was in the Free-state: submitting himself to their Judgements, and appearing of his own accord, at most of their dayes of Session. Out of those he chose 15 alterable every half year, to be of his privy Counsell; but then changing them for others, that so all of them might participate that honour; and yet none of them be acquainted with too many of his secrets. At his entrance into the Senate, he used courteously to salute the Lords; and so likewise at his departure. He knew full well that it was noted for great pride in his Father Julius; so much to sleight the Lords of that House, as he always did: never making to them any obeysance, no not then, when they came to tell him what honours were decreed unto him.

25. This Reformation of the great Ones, soon made the lower sort more carefull; both to observe good order, and to learn obedience. Yet did not AUGUSTUS refer all to President, but somewhat to Precept. The Roman Knights he enforced to yeeld an account of their lives; an Ordinance full of health and wisdom: Idleness being the root of all private vices, and publike disorders. To the Commons in their Comitia and other meetings, he prescribeth Laws and Orders as himself listed. The old authority of the Tribunes, dashed in the Dictatorship of Sylla, he would not restore. He suffred them to intercede for the People, but not to prefer or hinder any Bill to the advancement or the prejudice of their Estate. Without this Curb, the Common sort would never have suffered him to sit fast in the Saddle. For had the people had their Tribunes, and had the Tribunes had their antient dignity and power, which they had usurped: there had been little or no hope of altering the form of Goverment. So different are the ends of the Common-people, especially if nualed in a factious Liberty; from the designs of Soveraign Princes.

26 The City thus reformed in the principall errors and defects of it; he again exhibiteth unto them divers pleasures: As Shews of Fencers, Stage-plays, Combats of wild beasts, publique Dancings, with variety of other delightfull spectacles. And this as well to breed in them a good conceit of the change, as fearing lest their cogitations, for want of other objects, would fix themselves upon his actions, and the old freedom. Horse-races, Tilts, and Tornaments, he gladly cherished; but he permitted them onely to the Inhabitants of Rome: That so that City being the Seat-Town of his Empire, might be stored with good Horses, and expert Riders. Such of the Commons as were behind hand, he relieved: and when that any of them had made him Heir to their goods; he well knowing that no good Father did appoint to his Heir any Prince but a Tyrant, presently restored to the Children of the deceased the whole Patrimony. An action truly worthy of AVGVSTVS; as true a Guardian of Orphanes, as a Father of his Country. Such Princes as gape covetously after other mens possessions, seldom enjoy the benefit of their own. The Treasures of Kings are then greatest, not when their own Coffers are full only, but their Subjects rich. Yet one thing more he seemed to leave unto the people, which they thought most pleasing; Liberty of speech: Wherein sometimes they were so licentious, that they spared not Agrippa himself, so potent with the Emperor. But he, good man, never using the Princes favour to the prejudice of any, seemed not to mark their taunts and slanders: whether with greater moderation or wisdom, I cannot tell. Neither did AVGVSTVS scape their foolish Pasquils and infamous Libels. All which he winked at, knowing, that Contumelies of that nature slighted and contemned, soon vanish of themselves; but if repined and stormed at, seem to be acknowledged. A temper which he learnt of his Father Julius, who was perfect at it. And certainly it was a notable point of wisdom in both of them. It is the misery of the best Princes, even when they do well, to be ill ſpoken of. And therefore many times ſuch follies, are with more politie diſſembled than obſerved, by the greateſt Kings.

27 As for this Laviſhneſs of the tongue, it is a humour that ſpringeth for the moſt part, rather from a delight in pratling, than any malice of the heart: and they which uſe it are more troubleſome than dangerous. Julius feared not the fat men, but the lean and ſpare. And ſo AVGVSTVS thought, that not men liberal of ſpeech, but ſilent, cloſe, and ſparing of their words, were moſt likely to raiſe tumults. Moreover, as long as the Common People retained Libertie of ſpeech, they were the leſs ſenſible of the loſs of Liberty in State. Whereas in the dayes of Domitian, when not only they were prohibited to commune together, but even their ſecret ſighs and tears were regiſtred; then began they to look back with a ſerious eye on the old and Common Liberty. Neglect is the beſt remedy for this Talking vein. When the humour is ſpent, the People will ceaſe on their own accords: till then, no forces can compel them. Tacitus taxeth Vitellius of great folly, for hoping by force to hinder the continuall reports of Veſpatians revolt; that being the only way to increaſe, not diminiſh the rumour. And as much he extolleth (I will not ſay how fitly) the Reign of Prince Nerva, wherein it was lawfull for the Subject to think what he would, and ſpeak what he thought.

28 Theſe courſes though he took to rectifie the Senate, and content the people, yet he ſtayed not here. There were too many of both ſorts, dangerous and unquiet ſpirits, who ſtomacked his proceedings; and under pretence of the antient Liberty, were apt to any bold attempt, and ſuddain alteration. Theſe as he winked at for the preſent, ſo he employed them (as occaſion ſerved) in his forreign Wars. Wherein he followed the example of his Father Julius, who when his Souldiers had diſpleaſed him, in their Mutinies and Tumults, would lead them preſently unto ſome deſperate and dangerous ſervice. So weakning both his Foes which lay next unto him, and puniſhing thoſe Souldiers which had diſobeyed him. For though AVGVSTVS had thrice ſhut the Temple of Janus, and cheriſhed Peace, no Emperor more, of ſo large a Territory: Yet when he ſaw his times, and that mens minds were active, and their thoughts diſquieted; he could find preſently occaſion for ſome new imployment. In this a Body Politique may be compared moſt fitly to the Body naturall. When we are full of blood, and our ſpirits boyling, there is not any Phyſick better than Phlebotomie. But if a vein be broken in us, and we bleed inwardly, our eſtate commonly is dangerous, and almoſt incurable. So Princes, when their people are tumultuous and apt to miſchief; or that their thoughts are working, and hearkning after action: do commonly imploy them in ſome ſervice far from home; that there they may both vent their Anger, and employ their Courage. For let them ſtay at home to confirm their practiſes, and grow at laſt into a Faction: the State will ſuffer in it; if it be not ruined. We cannot have a fairer inſtance of this truth than the proceeding of our firſt Henry, and of the times next following: Whoſe, forein Wars kept us all quiet here at home; waſted thoſe humours; and conſumed thoſe fiery ſpirits: which afterwards, the wars being ended, inflamed the Kingdom.

29 But his main work was to content the Souldiers, and to make them ſure. Some of which he diſperſed as before I ſayd, all about Italy, in 28 Colonies: as well for the defence of the Countrey, as for their more ſpeedy reaſſembly, if need ſhould require. Abroad amongſt the Provinces, were maintained upon the common charge 23 Legions with their ayds, beſides 10000 of his Guard, and thoſe which were appointed for the bridling and ſafety of the City. As to all of them he ſhewed an excellent thankfulneſs, for their faithfull ſervices. So in particular to Agrippa, and to one other, whoſe name the Hiſtories of that Age have not remembred. This latter had valiantly behaved himſelf at the battell of Actium: and being ſummoned to appear before the Lords of the Senate in a matter which concerned his life, cryed to AVGVSTVS for ſuccour; who aſſigned him an Advocate. The poor fellow not contented with this favour, baring his breaſt, and ſhewing him the marks of many wounds; Theſe (quoth he) have I received AVGVSTVS, in thy ſervice, never ſupplying my place by a Deputy. Which ſayd, the Emperor deſcending to the Bar, pleaded the Souldiers cauſe, and won it. Never did Soveraign Prince, or any that commanded in Chief, loſe any thing by being bountifull of favours to their men of War. For this act quickly ſpreading it ſelf over all the Provinces, did ſo indear him to the Military men, that they all thought their ſervices well recompenſed, in that his graciouſneſs to that one man. And now were they ſo far given over to him, that the honours conferred on Agrippa, could not increaſe their love; well it might their admiration. Agrippa was of a mean and common Parentage, but ſupplying the defects of his Birth with the perfections of his Mind; he became very potent with AVGVSTVS; who not only made him Conſul, but his companion in the Tribunitian authority, and Proveſt of the City. So many titles were now heaped on him, that Maecenas perſwaded the Prince, to give him his Daughter Julia to Wife; affirming it impoſſible for Agrippa to live ſafe, conſidering how open new Creatures lye to the attempts of Malitious men; unleſs he were ingraffed into the Royall ſtem of the Ceſars. On which cauſe queſtionleſs, for the ſtronger eſtabliſhment of his new honours; Sejanus afterward attempted, but not with the like ſucceſs, the like match with Livia, Tiberius Daughter-in-Law.

30 The Senate, People, and Men of War, thus ſeverally reduced to a Mediocrity of power and contents: The next labour is to alter the old, and eſtabliſh a new Government of the City it ſelf. To effect which, he daſhed all former Laws, by which the Allies and Confederates of the State were made free Denizens of the Town. That he conceived to be a way to draw the whole Empire into one City; and by the monstrous growth and increase of that, to make poor the rest. Therefore this Privilege he communicated unto a few only: partly that in the times of dearth, the City might not so much feel the want of sustenance; and partly that so ancient an honour might not be disesteemed; but principally lest Rome repleniſhed with so huge a multitude of stirring and unruly spirits, should grow too headstrong to be governed in due order. The greatest and most populous Cities, as they are proneſt unto faction and sedition; so is the danger greatest, both in it self, and the example, if they should revolt. This provident course notwithstanding, there were in Rome men more than enough; and among them not a few malecontents and murmurers at the present state, such as contemned the Consuls, and hated the Prince. To keep these in compass, AUGUSTUS (it being impossible for him to be still resident at Rome, and dangerous to be absent) constituted a Provoſt of the City, for the most part chosen out of the Senators: assigning him a strength of 6000 men, called Milites Urbani, or the City-souldiers. To him he gave absolute and Royal authority, both in the Town and Territory near adjoyning, during his own absence, To him were appeals brought from the other Magistrates: and finally to his Tribunall were referred all causes of importance, not in Rome only, but the greatest part of Italy. Meſalla was the first Provoſt, but proof being had of his insufficiency, the charge was committed to Agrippa, who did not only setle and confirm the City, but did the best he could to free the adjoyning parts of Italy from Theeves and Robbers, and stopped the courses of many other troublers of the present State. And yet he could not with that power either so speedily, or so thorowly reform all those mischiefs which in the late unsetled times were become predominant, as he did desire.

State

31 It is recorded that in the Civill wars of Marius and Sylla, one Pontius Teleſinus of the Marian Faction, told his Generall, that he did well to scoure the Country, but Italy would never want Wolves, as long as Rome was so fit a Forrest, and so near to retire unto. The like might have been spoken to Agrippa; That he did well to clear the common Rodes and Paſſages, but Italie would never want Theeves, whilst Rome was so good a place of Refuge. For though he did, as far as humane industry could extend, endeavour a generall Reformation both within the City and without: yet neither could he remedy, nor foresee all mischiefs. Still were there many, and those great disorders, committed in the night season; when as no eye, but that to which no darkness is an obstacle, could discern the Malefactors. For in the first Proscription, many men used to walk the streets well weaponed; pretending only their own safety; but indeed it was to make their best advantage of such men as they met either in unfrequented lanes and Passages, or travelling as their occasions did direct them in the Night. To repress therfore the foul insolencies of these Sword-men, AVGVSTVS did ordain a Watch, consisting of 7000 Freemen: their Captain being a Gentleman of Rome. In the day time, the Guard of the Town was committed to the Provoſt and his Citie ſouldiers: These Vigils resting in their standing Camps. In the night season, one part took their stations in the most suspitious places of the City: another, in perpetuall motion traversed the streets; the rest lying in the Corps du Guarde, to relieve their companions. By which means, he not only remedied the present disorders; but preserved the City from danger of Fire also. Yea and secured himself from all Night-tumults, which carried with them (though but small) more terror and affrightment, than greater Commotions in the day. Never till now were the common people Masters of their own, both lives and substance. And now was travell in the Night, as safe, though not so pleasant, as at Noon.

32 The People and City thus setled, his next study is to keep the Provinces in a liking of the Change. But little Rhetorique needed to win their liking, who had long desired the present form of Government: mistrusting the Peoples Regiment, by reason of Noblemens factions, Covetousness of Magistrates, the Laws affording no security, being swayed hither and thither by ambition and corruption. These Provinces when he first took the Government, he thus divided. Asia, Africa, Numidia, Betica, Narbonenſis, Sicilia, Corſica, Sardinia, all Greece, Creta, Cyprus, Pontus, and Bithynia, being quiet and peaceable Provinces, of known, and faithfull obedience, he assigned unto the Senate. But the new conquered Regions, such as had not digested their loss of liberty, with whom any Rebellion or War was to be feared, he retained under his own command. Such were Tarraconenſis, Luſitanica, Lugdunenſis, Germany, Belgica, Aquitanica, Syria, Silicia, Egypt, Dalmatia, Myſia, Pannonia, &c. And this he did, as he gave out, to sustain the danger himself alone, leaving unto the Senate all the sweets of ease: but the truth was, to keep them without Arms, himself alwaies strong and in a readiness. The notable effects of which Counsell did not discover themselves only by the establishment of the Empire in his own person during life, and the continuance of it in the house of the Cæsars (though men of most prodigious Vices) after his decease: but in some of the Ages following also. For when the Family of the Cæsars was extinct in Nero, the Imperiall Provinces being so strong, and perceiving the Consular so weak, assumed to themselves the creating, and establishing of the following Princes. Thus Galba was made Emperour by the Spaniſh and French Legions, Vitellius by the German, Veſpatian by the Syrian and Panonnian: The Conſular Provinces never stirring, either to prevent their attempts, or to revenge them. And when they adventured once to advance Gordian to the Throne, all they could doe, was but to betray the poor old man and all his Family to a tragick end.

end. And yet he did not ſo impropriate thoſe Provinces to the Senate, but that they alſo (as well as thoſe which he reſerved unto himſelf) were ſpecified particularly in his private Regiſter. In which (the better to manage the affairs of the Empire) he had ſet down what Tributes every of them payed, what Preſents they ſent in, what Cuſtoms in theu were levyed. That book alſo comprehended the wealth of the publike Treaſury, and neceſſary charge iſſuing out of it: What number of Citizens and Allies there were in Arms; What ſtrength there was by Sea, with all other circumſtances concerning the extent, ſtrength, riches, and particulars of his eſtate. William of Normandy did the like at his firſt entrance into England, when he compoſed that Cenſuall Roll of all this Kingdom, which we call Dooms-day Book, or the Roll of Winton; according unto which, Taxations were impoſed, and Aydi exacted. The greateſt Princes have not thought it a diſparagement to be good Husbands, to know the riches of their Crowns, and have an eye to their Intrado.

32. Britain was left out of this Bead-Roll, either becauſe from hence there neither was much hope of profit, nor much fear of hurt; or els becauſe being more deſirous to keep than inlarge the Monarchy, he thought it moſt expedient to confine it within the bounds appointed by Nature. Danubius on the North, Mount Atlas on the South, Euphrates on the Eaſt, and the main Ocean on the Weſt, did both bound his Empire and defend it. Some Kingdoms have their limits laid out by Nature, and thoſe which have adventured to extend them further, have found it fatall. The Perſians ſeldom did attempt to ſtretch their Territory beyond Oxus, but they miſcarried in the action. And what was that poor River, if compared unto the Ocean? Many who loved action, or expected preferment by the Wars, incited him unto the conqueſt and plantation of theſe Countreys. Affirming, "That the barbarous people were naturally bad "Neighbours, and though for the preſent not very ſtrong nor well skilled in Arms, yet might "a weak Enemy in time gather great ſtrength. That he ought to purſue the War for his Fa- "ther Julius ſake, who firſt ſhewed that Iland to the Romans; that it yeelded both refuge and "ſupply to the Malecontents of Gaul, and Enemies in Germanie. That he would loſe the bene- "fit of a wealthy Country, ſtored with all manner of proviſion, and the command of a valiant "Nation, born (as it were) unto the Wars. That it was an Apoſtacy from honor, to lye ſtill "and add nothing to the conqueſt of his Anceſtors. That he was in all equity bound as far as "in him was, to reduce to Civility from Barbraiſm ſo many proper and able men. But to theſe motives he replyed, "That he had already refuſed to wage war with the Parthian, "a more dangerous neighbour, and far woſe enemy than the Britains. That he had waſte and "deſart ground enough in his own Dominions for many a large Plantation, when he ſaw it "needfull. That he had conſtantly refuſed, though with great facility he might, to conquer "any more of the barbarous Nations. That as in the Natrall body a ſurfet is more dangerous "than faſting; ſo in the Body Politike too much is more troubleſom than a little. That the "Roman Monarchy had already exceeded the Perſian and Macedonian, and to extend it further "was the next way to make it totter and fall by its own weight. That he had learned in the "Fable not to loſe the ſubſtance, by catching at the ſhadow. And finally, that many puiſſant "Nations lay in and about Britany, againſt whom Garriſons muſt be kept; and he feared the Re- "venue would not quit the Coſt. And ſo the enterprize of Britain was quite laid aſide.

33. For the aſſurance of the Provinces already conquered, he diſperſed into them 23. Legi-ons, with their Ayds, whoſe pay onely, beſides proviſion of Corn, and Officers wages, amounting to five Millions and an half of our Engliſh pounds, and ſomewhat more, were ſo ſuddenly paid unto the Armies, that we read ſeldom in the Hiſtories of that Empire, of any Mutiny among the ſouldiers for want of pay. An happineſs whereof theſe ages have been little guilty. For the amaſſing of this treaſure, and defraying of this charge, AUGVSTVS made not uſe onely of his own revenue. Wars which are undertaken, and Souldiers that are levied for the Common ſafety, ought in all reaſon to be maintained on the Common purſe. The Grandour and ſecurity of an Empire, concerns in all reſpects, as much the People as the Prince. For which cauſe he erected an Exchequer in the Cutie, which was called Ærarium militare, or the Souldiers Treaſury, whereto the twentieth part of every mans eſtate was brought, according to the true and perfect valuation. This was eſteemed an heavy burden at the firſt, and indeed it was, but that the people felt the ſweetneſs and effects of it in the Common ſafety. In that reſpect, the intereſt was greater than the principall. Subjects that have a care either of the common peace or honour, will not repine at payments and taxations, though more than ordinary. It is a poor conceit to think that Princes either are able or obliged, to maintain the wars without aſſiſtance from their people: or that the treaſures which in theſe reſpects they give the King, they do not give unto themſelves. I may perhaps repute him for a cunning Sophiſter, but never for a faithfull Subject, which coyns diſtinctions betwixt the welfare of the King, and the weal of the Kingdom. Theſe Legions he imployed as occaſion was, either to curb the Natives, or ſecure the Borders. The Roman Empire ſeldom had ſuch perfect peace, but that there were imployments always for the Souldiers. If that they had in any place a ſhort Ceſſation from the wars, yet they were not idle. Idleneſs doubtleſs is the greateſt enemy to Martiall Diſcipline. Therefore he kept them at ſuch times perpetually buſied, either in paving Bogs, or in dreaning Mariſhes. By means whereof, he made not only many of the barbarous Countries, both fruitfull in themſelves ſelves, and profitable to the Chequer: but thereby alſo he ſecured his own affairs, and diſarmed his enemies. For many times the barbarous people truſting to ſuch advantages, were apt too often to rebell; and having got themſelves within thoſe Myres and Faſtneſſes, ſtood on their Guard, as in ſome faſhionable or defenſible Fortreſs. The ſureſt means to keep a conquered people from all occaſion of revolting, is to lay waſte their Wood-lands, and make all parts paſſable. The opportunity of a ſafe retreat, makes not more Theeves than Rebells.

35. Thoſe whom he placed over his Provinces and Armies, he neither would remove under three years Government, nor yet continue after five. A longer ſtay might teach them too much cunning in practiſing on the diſpoſitions of the people, and perhaps prompt them to work into the favour of the Natives, and the Men of War; and ſo at laſt to eſtabliſh in themſelves a Soveraigny. Ceſars long ſtay in Gaul, (a ſecond five years being added unto that which was firſt allowed him) made him ſo potent with the People, and gracious with the Souldiers, that in the end he brought the Roman Empire under his ſubjection. And on the other ſide, to take them from their charges under three years continuance, were to have called them home, before they were well learned in the Cuſtomes and the nature of the Provinces; ſo making them unable to inſtruct their Succeſſors. As for the men whom he imployed in thoſe Commands, he culled them always out of the moſt valiant and upright in Camp and Senate. A Prince more willing and deſirous not to imploy men likely to offend, than after the offence to puniſh and chaſtiſe them.

36. Beſides his forces by Land, he alſo maintained at Sea two invincible Armadoes: The one lay at Anchor neer Ravenna, in the upper Sea, to awe and defend Dalmatia, Crete, Greece, Cyprus, Aſia, &c. The other at Miſenum in the lower Sea, to protect and keep under Gaul, Spain, Africa, Egypt, Syria, &c. Neither was this the only uſe of two ſuch puiſſant Fleets, but in all probability they were to cleanſe the Sea of Pirates; to have a care to the conducting of the Tributes and Cuſtomes into the Exchequer; and ſerved alſo for tranſporting Corn, and other neceſſary proviſions, for the ſuſtenance and relief of the Citie. In the enſuing Civill Wars, theſe two Navies proved to be of great importance: The revolt of them giving as great a blow to the one ſide, as a comfort to the other. The principall aſſurance of Otho in theſe Wars, was the immovable fidelity of the Miſenian Fleet; and the ſiding of the other with Veſpatian, brake the hearts of Vitellins beſt followers.

37. Now as he thus ſtrengthened the Provinces in generall, ſo did he caſt an eſpeciall eye on three particulars, viz. Italie, Gaul, and Egypt; Italie rounded Rome the Metropolis of the Empire; and therefore he ought to be well aſſured of its good faith and allegiance to him. Nor was he ignorant that the Bellum Sociale raiſed by the people of that Countrey in the Free State, more ſhook and indangered the Empire, than the Invaſions of Pyrrhus or Annibal. Therefore as formerly he planted in it two and thirty Colonies of old and truſty Souldiers to keep it ſure unto himſelf; ſo now he did divide it into eleven Regions, each having peculiar Magiſtrates and Under-Officers. This not ſo much to eaſe the City Prætor, although he had imployment enough at Rome, but becauſe it was thick ſet, and as it were overlaid with People, whoſe riſing might indanger the Common-wealth. So by his Colonies he kept a Garriſon upon them, as it were, that they could not revolt: and by his Officers and Juſticiers (as I may call them) he ſet ſo ſtrait a Watch about them, that they durſt not practiſe.

38. Gaul, now called France, was both a large and fertile Countrey, ſtored with a people, valiant in all attempts, and in many deſperate. A people with which the old Romans fought rather to maintain their own liberty, than to increaſe their Dominions, a Tribe or Colonie of which had ſacked the City of Rome, and indangered the Capitol. A people finally with whom the Romans durſt not make war, till they had almoſt all the reſidue of the world in ſubjection. Remembrance of their antient Reputation, and ſtore of money might occaſion many deſperate practices againſt the quiet of the Empire. The readieſt way to keep them in obedience, was to keep them poor; for without wealth high ſtomacks may well feed on the hope of Liberty, but digeſt it never. Licinius his freed-man, was the fitteſt fellow for ſuch an Office, who is preſently made the Task-maſter of the Province. The Galls uſed to pay a Monethly Tribute, which he much inhaunced (beſides private and petty means of prevailing) by making fourteen Moneths in a year. The Solicitors of that people at Rome make complaint to AUGUSTUS. He ſometimes yeelded unto them, ſometimes excuſed his Freed-man; ſome things he would not know, many he would not believe, others he diſſembled. Licinius to make up his peace, ſent to the Emperor all his treaſure, and that huge Maſs of Gold and Silver by thoſe unlawfull means heaped up together; which he not onely willingly received, but his turn being ſerved, and the French not a little impoveriſhed, he recalled Licinius, and ſent Tiberius to ſettle the Province. So old and common a thing it is with great Princes, to ſuffer their Vice-Roys, and Under-Officers, to ſuck like Spunges, the Wealth of the Subject, till they are quite full, and then to ſqueeze them into their own Coffers.

39. But the Province whoſe tuition and defence he principally regarded, was Egypt; not ſo much for the valour and courage of the Inhabitants, as the naturall ſtrength and ſituation of the place. Alexander of Macedon having annexed it to his Empire, never committed the entire Government and Jurisdiction thereof to one man, fearing leſt he preſuming on the wealth of the People, and ſite of the Countrey, would ſettle the poſſeſſion in himſelf. And ſo AUGUSTUS GUSTUS calling to mind as well the multitude, as the levity and inconstancy of the natives; that it was very rich in coyn, and the Roman Granary (as serving the City four Months yearly with Corn) not only trusted not the rule thereof into the hands of any of the Senate, but expresly forbad any of that Order (without his speciall permission) to sojourn there. It is a principle in State, never to license men of great houses, and credit among the people, to have free access into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Wherefore it was a weakness doubtless in the Counsell of King Henry the sixt, to suffer Richard Duke of York, to pass at pleasure into Ireland, where he had harbour and relief, and whence he brought supply both of Men and Money. But to return to Egypt, Germanicus entring once into Alexandria, only to see the Antiquities of it, and return, stirred such suspitions and distractions in the jealous head of Tiberius, that he spared not sharply to rebuke him for it. Vespasian also being by the Syrian Legions chosen Emperour, first assured himself of Egypt, as the Key of the Sea and Land, with a small power against a strong host easily defended. This place he resolved to make his Sanctuary, if his designs succeeded not luckily. And to this place he hastened, after the defeat of the Vitellian Army; that so detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by Famine compell the City of Rome to stand at his devotion The Government of this Province was by AUGUSTUS alwaies committed to some one of the Roman Gentry, as less able, by reason of his low Condition, to work against the Princes safety. Neither would he allow his Deputy the glorious attributes of Lieutenant, Legatus, Proconsul, or Prætor: Captain or President of Egypt was their highest Title; there being even in Titles no small motives to Ambition.

40 AUGUSTUS having by these meaus reduced both the City and Provinces under his absolute command, and being now declining in strength, by reason of a sudden and violent sickness, began to call his wits to Counsell, how to dispose of the Estate after his decease. Male-child he never had any. His Daughter Julia, a woman of immodest carriage, never made further use of her Fathers greatness, than that she satisfied her Lusts with the greater insolence. Marcellus his Sisters sonne and Julias husband, was a young man of an ingenious disposition, and seemingly capable of the fortunes which attended for him. Him, being yet young, AUGUSTUS preferred to the Pontificall dignity, and Edileship; yet once upon his sickness, he privately determined to choose a Successor in the Common-wealth, rather than his own Family; and nor to leave the Empire to Marcellus, whom he held unable to undergo it, but to his companion in Arms, Agrippa, a man daunted neither with adverse, nor altered with prosperous fortunes. This Marcellus afterwards so stomacked, that he began to grutch at Agrippas greatness, and to bear a vigilant eye on his plots and actions. Contrarily, Agrippa unwilling to offend him, under whose future Government he was in all likelyhood to end the rest of his days, with much adoe obtained leave to retire unto Lesbos, that so his absence either might allay, or remove the displeasure conceived against him by the young Prince. An action full of wisdom, and magnamity. For though AUGUSTUS chief end was, to discountenance the popular dependancies of his sonne, by the favours heaped on his servant: Yet did Agrippa know, that a Favorite ought to have so much in him of the Persian Religion, as to worship the Rising Sun also; and that he should resemble old Janus with the two faces, with th'one looking on the King regnant, with th'other on the Prince successive.

41 Marcellus being dead, Agrippa returning, married his Widdow, and on her begat two Sonnes, Caius and Lucius; whose actions afterward afforded such variety for censure, that there was wanting neither much reason to commend, nor little to condemn them. On these two, or at the least one of them, AUGUSTUS now grown aged, resolves to settle the Estate, and if they failed, upon such others, as by the liberty of the Laws, he might Adopt: Adoption, in the estimation of the Roman Laws, being indeed another Nature. Posterity, whether it be naturall, or only legall, is the best supporter of the Arms Imperiall. Such as both fortifies the Prince, and assures the Subject. Yet this he did not without much reluctancy, and a great conflict in his mind. "Sometimes his thoughts suggested to him, that the designed Successors draw to them all the "attendance and respect, from the Prince in possession; That they have alwaies a lingring desire "to be actually seated in the Throne; That they suppose the life of the present Prince, too te"dious; not caring by what means it were shortned: That sometime it is pernicious, yea e"ven to the appointed Successor himself also. On the other side, his better thoughts prompted "him to consider in what a miserable distraction he should leave the Empire, if sudden death "should take from him an ability to nominate his heir; The fear conceived in the whole Ci"ty, at his last sickness; That Pyrrhus of Epirus, was of all hands condemned, for leaving his "Kingdom to the sharpest sword; That the Common-wealth falln into dissentions, could not be "setled again without a lamentable War, and a bloudy Victory; That the people seeing "him childless, would not only contemn him, but perhaps endeavour to recover the old li"berty, though with the ruin of the State; That it was the custom of Tyrants, to desire the e"ternizing of their deaths, by the downfall of their Countries. His mind thus distracted and perplexed, at last he brake in this manner. "Thou hast Octavian a Wolf by the ears; which "to hold still, or to let go, is alike dangerous. Many inconveniences may ensue, if thou dost "not declare thy Successor; More, if thou dost. The good of the Republique consisteth in know"ing the future Prince; Thine own welfare dependeth on the concealment. The Common good

" is to be preferred before any private: Yet ought Charity to begin at home. No, Octavian, no; " As thou haſt receiv'd, ſo ſhew thy ſelf worthy of the title of Pater Patriæ. Yea, and perhaps " this deſignation may ſecure thine own Eſtate. For what will it profit the people to conſult " againſt thee when they ſhall ſee a ſucceſſor at hand, either of thine own body, or thine own " appointment, ready to take thy place, and revenge thy wrongs.

40 Thus reſolved, he adopteth Caius and Lucius; deſiring, though he made ſhew to the contrary, they ſhould be Conſuls Elect, and called Princes of the Youth. Yet wiſely forecaſting the dangers incident to himſelf if they ſhould make their abode in Rome; he ſendeth them with honourable charge into the Provinces abroad; as well to exerciſe them in feats of War, as to take away all cauſe of faction in the Court, and ſedition in the City. Which myſtery of State as it was antiently practiſed by moſt Princes, ſo at this day by the Grand Seigneur; who alwaies ſendeth his eldeſt ſonne unto Amaſia, as Governour thereof; from whence till the death of his Father, he never returneth. In theſe journeys dyed the two young Princes, a misfortune which AUGUSTUS bare nobly; neither baniſhing grief with a Stoicall Apathy; nor ſpending the time in womaniſh lamentations. Having performed due rights to the dead, he adopted his Wives ſonne Tiberius: A man for the conveniency and ripeneſs of his age, not unfit, in feats of Arms not unexpert, in humane learning not ignorant; but withall ſuſpected to be cruelly given, and poſſeſſed with the hereditary pride of the Claudian Family. A ſtrange medley of vertuous and vicious qualities. Tiberius, ſuch was the will of his Father, to eſtabliſh the ſucceſſion, with more ſtayes than one, adopted Germanicus, his Brother Druſus ſonne; then commanding over eight Legions in Germany; which done, he ſpeedeth to his charge in Illyricum. This man AUGUSTUS appointed to be his Heir, as it was afterwards (and not improbably) conjectured, neither in care to the State, nor in love to the party; but to win honour to himſelf, and to make the Roman people again wiſh for him; when they ſhould ſee that infinite diſproportion in all royall and Kingly qualities, between the old and new Emperors. A fetch after imitated by Tiberius, in the adoption of Caius Caligula.

43 The laſt (though not the leaſt) help of the Empires eſtabliſhment, was the long life and reign of our AUGUSTUS: as having ruled the State 16 years before, and 34 years after his confirmation in the Soveraignty, by the Senate and People. All the young men in the City were born after the firſt Decennium of the Monarchy. Moſt of the old men during the Civill Wars. Few had ſeen what was the antient form of Government in the Common-wealth: Many did not deſire it. For at the preſent, enjoying Peace both at home and abroad; and hearing what ſad and tragicall reports their Fathers made of the former troubles and proſcriptions, they contented themſelves with the new Government; as more eſteeming a ſecure and happy ſubjection, than a dangerous and factious liberty. By which long time of Empire, and the policies already recited, beſides many others, which I can neither learn by relations, nor gather by preſumptions; did AUGUSTUS ſo firmly ſettle the Roman Monarchy, that it continued ſome hundred of years without alteration; though all his immediate Succeſſors were in a manner Monſters, incarnate devils, and indeed any thing rather than men. Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, both by their own Tyrannies, and their Bondmens Extortions, would have ruined any Monarchy not founded by AUGUSTUS.

44 To ſpeak concerning the domeſtical affairs of this Emperor, is beyond my Theme. As either how far he ſuffered himſelf to be ordered by his Wife Livia; or whether he uſed variety of women, not ſo much to ſatisfie a diſordinate appetite, as by ſo many women to fiſh out the ſecret deſigns of many men. He was too exact a Stateſman to be perfect in Souldiery; and in all his Wars was proſperous by Fortune rather than by Valour, or his Captains Valour than his own. The Common-wealth which he found weak and in Rubbiſh, he left Adamantine, and invincible. In behaviour he was affable and gracious; in his diſcourſe ſententious; to the good, of a moſt ſweet diſpoſition; to the lewd and diſhoneſt, harſh and unpleaſant. Friendſhip he contracted with few, and that ſlowly; but to them, whom he once loved, conſtant and bountifull to the laſt. Finally, ſuch a one he was, of whom I will only ſay what I find ſpoken of Severus; It had been an ineffable benefit to the Common-wealth of Rome, if either he had never dyed, or never been born.

Thus having drawn the Picture of this puiſſant and prudent Prince (though I confeſs with too much ſhadow) I now proceed unto the Catalogue of the Roman Emperours: in which I ſhall take notice of ſuch of their Actions only as had relation to the Publick, either in the improvement or decreaſe of their Power and Empire; or point to any ſignall matter which concerns the Church.

The Roman Emperours.

A.M.

3918. 1 Julius Cæſar, the laſt of the Dictators, and the firſt of the Emperours, in memory of whom the following Emperours were called Cæſars, till the time of Adrian, when it became the title of the heir apparent, or deſigned Succeſſor; the firſt who had it in that ſenſe being Ælius Verus, though he lived not to enjoy the Empire.

3923. 2 C. Octavianus Cæſar, to whom the Senate gave the name of Auguſtus, who added unto the

57. 6 Domitius Nero, ſon of Ænobarbus, and Agrippina daughter to Germanicus the laſt of the Ceſars; he made the Celtian Alpes a Province of the Empire; and brought the Armenians to receive their Kings from the Roman Emperours; and was the firſt that raiſed any publick perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 67. 13.

71. 10 Flavius Veſpaſianus, choſen by the Syrian and Judaan Armies, ſubverted utterly the Common-wealth of the Jews, by the valour and proweſs of his ſonne Titus; and brought Achaia, Lycia, Rhodes, Samos, Thrace, and Syria Comagene, under the form of Roman Provinces. 9.
80. 11 Titus Veſpaſianus, the fortunate Conqueror of the Jews.
82. 12 Fl. Domitianus, who raiſed the ſecond perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 96. 15.
97. 13 Nerva Cocceius, a noble Senator, but no Roman born, as all the reſt had been before him, but not many after him.
99. 14 Ulpius Trajanus, by birth a Spaniard, adopted by Nerva, he made Dacia a Province of the Empire, carried the Roman Armies over Euphrates, ſubduing Armenia, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria; and raiſed the third Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 110. 19.
118. 15 Ælius Adrianus, who utterly exterminated the Jewiſh Nation, and continued the Perſecution begun by Trajan. 20.
138. 16 Antoninus Pius, whoſe friendſhip was ſought by the very Indians. 24.
162. 17 Marcus Antoninus, ſurnamed the Philoſopher, aſſociated L. Verus in the Government, by whoſe valour he ſubdued the Parthians; he raiſed the fourth Perſecution againſt the Church. An. 167. 19.

wards Galerius of Dacia, and Constantinus Chlorus by the name of Cæsars. He had continuall Wars against the Persians, and raised the tenth Persecution against the Church, An. 295. Which held so long, and was so vehement withall, that as St. Hierom writes, there were 5000 slain for every day in the year save the first of January. He afterwards resigned the Empire, and lived in private at Salona. 20.

308. 41 Constantinus Chlorus, a friend to Christians. 2.

310. 42 Constantine sonne of Chlorus, surnamed Magnus, or the great; the first Emperor that countenanced the Gospel, and embraced it publickly, which he is said to have done on this occasion. At the same time that he was saluted Emperor in Britain, Maxentius was chosen at Rome by the Pratorian Souldiers, and Licinius named Successor by Maximinus, the associate of his Father Chlorus: Being pensive and solicitous upon these distractions, he cast his eyes up towards Heaven, where he saw in the Air a lightsome Pillar in the form of a Cross, wherein he read these words, ἐν τούτῳ νίκα, in hoc vince; and the next night our Saviour appearing to him in a Vision, commanded him to bear that figure in his Standard, and he should overcome all his Enemyes. This he performed, and was accordingly victorious; from which time he not only favoured the Christians, but became a very zealous professor of the Faith and Gospel. I know Zosimus an Heathen Historian, partly out of malice to the Christians in generall, and partly a particular grudge to the Emperor Constantine, reporteth otherwise of the causes of his Conversion: But the authority and consent of all Christian Writers, who deliver it as before is told, is far to be preferred before the testimony of one single Heathen had he not been biassed (as he was) by his disaffections.

Before this time it is observed, that few (if at all any) of the Roman Emperors died a naturall death, as after they generally did. From Julius Cæsar unto Constantine there were 40. in all: Of which, Julius was openly murdered in the Senate; Augustus made away in his wife Livia, as Tiberius afterwards by Macro; Caligula was slain by Cassius Chæreas; Claudius poysoned by his wife Agrippina; Nero and Otho layd violent hands upon themselves; Galba and Vitellius massacred by the Souldiers; Domitian by Stephanus, Commodus by Latus and Electus, Pertinax and Julianus by the Souldiers of their Guard; Caracalla by the command of Macrinus; Macrinus, Heliogabulus, Alexander, Maximinus, Maximus, and Balbinus, successively by the men of War; Gordianus by Philip, Philip by the Souldiers; Hostilianus by Gallus and Æmilianus, and they by the Souldiers; Valerianus dyed a prisoner in Parthia; Florianus was the author of his own end; Aurelianus murdered by his houshold servants; Gallienus, Quintillus, Tacitus, and Probus, by the fury of the military men. And yet I have omitted out of this Accompt such of the Emperors as were tumultuously made by the Army, without the approbation of the Senate; as also the Cæsars, or designed Successors of the Empire; most of which got nothing by their designation and adoption, but ut citius interficerentur. Some of these were cut off for their misdemeanours; some for seeking to revive again the antient Discipline; and some, that others might enjoy their places. The chief cause of these continuall massacres, proceeded originally from the Senate and Emperors themselves. For when the Senators had once permitted the Souldiers to elect Galba, and had confirmed that election; Evulgato (saith Tacitus) imperii arcano, principem alibi quàm Romæ fieri posse; more Emperors were made abroad in the field by the Legions, than at home by the Senators. Secondly, from the Emperors, who by an unseasonable love to their Guard-souldiers, so strengthened them with privileges, and nussled them in their licencious courses, that on the smallest rebuke, they which were appointed for the safety of the Princes, proved the Authors of their ruin: so truly was it said by Augustus in Dion, Metuendum est esse sine custode, sed multò magis à custode metuendum est. The last cause (be it causa per accidens, or per se) was the largess which the new Emperors used to give unto the men of service; a custom begun by Claudius Cæsar, and continued by all his Successors: insomuch that the Empire became saleable, and many times he which had most had it. As we see in Dion, when Sulpitianus offering twenty Sestertiums to each souldier, was (as if they had been buying of a stock at Gleek) out-bidden by Julianus, who promised them five and twenty Sestertiums a man. So that Herodian justly complaineth of this Donative. Id initium causaq. militibus fuit, ut etiam in posterum turpissimi contumaciss imiq. evaderent, sic ut avaritia indies, ac principum contemptus, etiam ad sanguinem usq. proveherent. That is to say; From this occasion and beginning the souldiers every day grew more shameless, and less regardfull of their Prince; so that their covetousness increasing, and the contempt they had of their Emperors waxing more and more, ended at last in the frequent shedding of their bloods, in hope to have a better Market of the next Successor: So as the Emperor Constantine wanted not good reason, besides their siding against him for Maxentius, to cashier these Guards, as grown more dangerous than useful to Imperial Majesty. And so accordingly he did levelling their standing Camp to the very ground, disbanding the whole company, or putting them under other Officers and to other Services; by means whereof they were not able to create the like disturbances, or dispose of the Empire as before. And for the Captains of these Guards which before were two (Præfecti Pratorio in the Latine) he increased their number unto four, (one for each quarter of the Empire) giving them a Civil Jurisdiction in exchange for the Military Command which they had before; and casting them behind in place after the Patricii, an Order of his own devising.

As for the extent and latitude of the Roman Empire, whilſt it remained one entire Body (as it was before the time of Conſtantine, who at his death divided it among his ſonnes) it was in length about three thouſand miles; namely, from the Iriſh Ocean Weſt, to the River Euphrates on the Eaſt; and in breadth it reached from the Danubius Northward, to Mount Atlas on the South, about two thouſand miles. And though the Romans had extended their Dominions ſometimes farther Eaſt and North, yet could they never quietly ſettle themſelves in thoſe conqueſts. Nature (it ſeemeth) had appointed them theſe bounds, not ſo much to limit their Empire, as to defend it. For the enemies found thoſe Rivers, by reaſon of the depth of the Channell, and violent current of the ſtream, as a couple of impregnable Fortreſſes, purpoſely as it were erected to hinder them from harraſing the Roman Countries.

The Revenues of it Lipſius in his Tract de Magnitudine Romanâ, eſteemeth to be about one hundred and fifty millions of Crowns; and that they were no leſs, may be made more than probable by theſe reaſons. 1. It is affirmed by divers, and among others, by Boterus, that the yearly Revenues of the King of China amount unto one hundred and twenty millions of Crowns, and if this be true (as few queſtion it) we cannot in proportion gueſs the whole Empire of the Romans to yeeld leſs than one hundred and fifty millions, eſpecially conſidering what Arts-Maſters the Romans were in levying and raiſing their Taxes and cuſtomary Tributes. 2. The Legionary Souldiers which were diſperſed over the Provinces, received in ordinary pay (beſides proviſion of corn, apparell, and Officers wages) five millions, 516062. pound, and ten pound of our money, which amounteth unto ſixteen millions of Crowns or thereabout. In the City it ſelf there were kept in continuall pay ſeven thouſand ſouldiers of the Watch, four thouſand or ſix thouſand for the defence of the City, and ten thouſand for the Guard of the Emperors perſon. The two firſt had the ſame wages, the laſt the double wages of a Legionary Souldier. Add hereto the expences of the Palace, and other means of diſburſalls, and I think nothing of the ſum can be abated. 3. We read that C. Caligula ſpent in one yeer two millions, and ſeven hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; how Nero moſt laviſhly gave away two millions and one hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; and how Vitellius in few moneths was nine hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums in Arrearages, every Seſtertium being valued at ſeven pound ſixteen ſhillings three pence: all of them huge and infinite ſums. 4. When Veſpaſian came to the Empire, the Exchequer was ſo impoveriſhed, that he profeſſed in open Senate, that he wanted to ſettle the Common-wealth forty millions of Seſtertiums, amounting to three hundred and twelve millions of our Engliſh money; which Proteſtation (ſaith Sueton) ſeemed probable, quia & malè partis optimè uſus eſt. Now unleſs the ordinary Revenues came to as much, or more than we have ſpoken, by what means could this extraordinary ſum be raiſed? 5. We may gueſs at the generall Revenue by the moneys iſſuing out of particular Provinces; and it is certain that Egypt afforded to the Ptolomies twelve thouſand talents yeerly: neither had the Romans leſs, they being more perfect in inhancing, than in abating their Intrado. France was by Ceſar ſeſſed at the yeerly tribute of twenty millions of Crowns. And no doubt the reſt of the Provinces were rated accordingly. 6ly. and laſtly, the infinite ſums of money given by the Emperors in way of largeſs, are proofs ſufficient for the greatneſs of the in-come. I will inſtance in Auguſtus only, and in him, omitting his Donatives at the victory of Actium, and the reſt, I will ſpecifie his Legacy at his death: He bequeathed (by his Teſtament, as we read in Tacitus) to the common ſort, and the reſt of the people, three pound eight ſhillings a man, to every ſouldier of the Pretorian bands, ſeven pounds ſixteen ſhillings three pence, and to every Legionary ſouldier of the Roman Citizens, four pound ten ſhillings ſix pence, which amounted to a mighty maſs of money.

The Arms or Enſign of this Empire when it was up and in the flouriſh, was the Eagle, not born, as now, in colours, and a banner, but in an Image or Portraicture on the top of a Spear, or other long piece of Wood, to be fixed in the earth at pleaſure. This Enſign, Spear and Eagle together, they called the Labarum: Quæ ſigna, quòd quaſi labantia hortis appenderentur, labara dixerunt, ſaith Lipſius, Epiſt. Quæſt. Ep. 5. The uſe, as of this, ſo of other ſtandards, Lyra giveth us in his Notes on the ſecond of Numb. namely, ut ad eorum aſpectum, bellatores dividantur & uniantur, to call together, and diſtribute the ſouldiers according to occaſions. And certainly for this end and purpoſe were thoſe Enſigns firſt invented: Afterwards they were applied to the diſtinguiſhing of Tribes and Families, and at laſt beſtowed by Kings and Princes as the honorary marks of well-deſerving: thoſe which had been the Enſigns of War, ſo becoming the Ornaments of Peace. At what time the form of this Labarum was altered, and began to be born in colours, I have not yet read. It is now an Eagle Saturn, in a Field Sol, which kind of bearing the Heralds call moſt rich. It was firſt born by Ca. Marius in his ſecond Conſulſhip, and in his Wars againſt the Cimbri, from him conveyed to J. Ceſar who was allied to him in deſign and perſon, and ſo derived unto the Emperors, his Succeſſors.

But to proceed, Conſtantine having ſetled his affairs in peace, and caſhiered the Pretorian Guards, fell to new modelling of the Empire, which he conceived to be too cumberſom and unwieldy to be governed by the former Politie, as indeed it was. And firſt of all he augmented the Roman Provinces to the number of one hundred and twenty, or thereabouts, over every one of which he ordained a particular Preſident, that had his reſidence in the chief City of that Province. Then he reduced theſe Provinces under fourteen Dioceſes, (for ſo he called the greater distributions of his Empire) seven of which were in the East parts thereof, that is to say, the Diocese of Egypt, of the East, of Asia, of Pontus, Thrace, Dacia, and Macedon; and as many also in the West, viz. the Prefecture of the City of Rome, (which I count for one) the Diocese of Italie, Africk, and Illyricum, of France, Spain, and Britain. Finally instead of the Prefecti Pretorio which had the command of the Pretoriant, he ordained four for the four quarters of the Empire, that is to say, the Prefectus Pretorio Italiæ, under whom were the Dioceses of Italie, Africk, and Illyricum; 2. Prefectus Pretorio Galliarum, who had under him the Dioceses of France, Spain, and Britain; 3. The Prefectus Pretorio Orientis, who had command over the Dioceses of Egypt, the Orient, and the Asian, the Pontick, and Thracian Dioceses; And 4ly. The Prefectus Pretorio Illyrici, under whose super-intendence were the Dioceses of Macedon, and Dacia only; each of these Prefects having a Vicarius, or Lieutenant in the severall Dioceses under his authority, who fixed their residence in the head City of the Diocese. And this I have the rather noted, because of the Relation which the Politie of the Christian Church had to this Division: it being so ordered in the best and purest times thereof, that in every City where the Emperors had an Officer, whom they called Defensor Civitatis, the Christians should have a Bishop; in every chief City of the Province a Metropolitan; and over every Diocese an Arch-bishop, or Primate, from whom lay no Appeal unto any other. And so far Constantine did well: But he committed divers errors which did more prejudice the Empire, than any thing that had been done by his Predecessors. First in translating the Imperiall Seat from Rome to Byzantium; by which transplantation the Empire lost much of its naturall vigour: as we see by the experience of Plants and Flowers, which being removed from the place of their naturall growth, lose much of their vertue which was formerly in them. On which reason Camillus would not suffer the Romans to remove their Seat unto the City of the Veii, newly conquered by him: but to prevent them in it set fire on the Town, and so consumed it, ut nunc Veios fuisse laboret Annalium fides, as my Author hath it. A second fault of this Constantine, was the dividing of the Empire amongst others, which only concerned himself. For though it was quickly reunited in the person of Constantius (his brethren dying without issue) yet his example being followed by others, the Empire was after torn into many pieces, to the destruction of the whole. 'Tis true, the former Emperors used sometimes to associate some partner with them; but so that they did manage it as one sole Estate: Constantine (if I remember rightly) being the first, which parcelled it into severall Soveraignties, each independent of the other. The third fault of this Emperor was his removing the Legions and Colonies which lay before on the Northern Marches, into the Eastern parts of his Dominions, pretending to use them as a Bulwark against the Persians, laying thereby those passages open, at which not long after the barbarous Nations entred and subdued the West. For though instead of these Colonies he planted Garrisons and Forts in convenient places; yet these being filled with Souldiers, for the most part out of other Countreys, fought not as in defence of their native Soyl, (as the Colonies would and must have done) but on the first onset of those Barbarians abandoned them to the will of the enemy. So that Zosimus (though in other of his reports about this Prince he bewraieth much malice) doth call him, not untruly, the first Subverter of that flourishing Monarchy. To these three we may add a fourth, which concerns the Emperors in generall; namely, their stupid negligence and degenerate spirits which shewed it self most visibly in the last of

The Western Emperors.

341. 1. Constans the sonne of Constantinus Magnus, his brother Constantine being dead, remainned sole Emperor of the West.
2. Constantius the other of Constantines sonnes, succeeded Constans in his part, after his decease.
3. Valentinian Emperor of the West, his brother Valens ruling in Constantinople, and the Eastern parts.
4. Valentinian II. youngest sonne of the former Valentinian.

399. 5 Honorius the second sonne of Theodosius the Emperor, in whose time Alarick the Gothe invaded Italie, sacked Rome, and made themselves Masters of the Countrey, which afterwards they left in exchange for Spain. 26.

425. 6 Valentinian III. during whose time the Vandals seized upon Africk, as they did on Italie and Rome also after his decease: Murdered by Maximus a Roman (whose wife he had trained unto the Court, and ravished) as shall be shewn hereafter on another occasion.

455 7 Maximus having slain Valentinian the third, succeeded in the Empire; but on the coming of the Vandals, whom Eudoxia the wife of Valentinian (who had some inkling of the manner of her husbands death) had drawn into Italie, he was stoned to death by his own souldiers. 1.

456. 8 Avitus, chosen Emperor in a military tumult.

457. 9 Majoranus. 4.

461. 10 Severus. 6.

467 11 Anthemius, who at the end of five years was slain (as were the three before him) by

Recimer

Ricimer (a Suevian born) the chief Commander of the Armies; who had an aim to get the Empire for himself, but died as soon as he had vanquished and slain Anthemius.

471. 12 Olybrius, an Emperor of four moneths only.

472. 13 Glycerius, another of as little note: As also was 14 Julius Nipos, deposed by Orestes a noble Roman, who gave the Empire to his sonne, called at first Momillus, but after his assuming the Imperiall title, he was called, as in contempt, Augustulus.

473. 15 Augustulus, the last of the Emperours who resided in Italie, vanquished by Odoacer King of the Heruli and Turingians. An omnious thing, that as Augustus raised this Empire, so an Augustulus should ruin it.

But though Augustulus lost the Empire, yet Odoacer was not suffered to enjoy it long: Zeno the Emperour of the East sending Theodorick King of the Gothes to expell him thence; and to possess himself of Italie, the reward of his valour. And this the Emperor did the rather, partly because the Gothes were Christians, and in good terms of correspondency with him: but principally to remove that active Nation somewhat further off, who lay before too neat the borders of his own Dominions. And that he might dismiss them with the greater content and honour, he made Theodorick a Patrician of the Roman Empire, an honour first devised by the Emperour Constantine, and of so high esteem from the first Institution, that they who were dignified therewith were to have precedency of the Pretorio Prafecti, who before took place next to the Emperour himself. Nor did the famous Charlemain set upon it any lower estimate, in case he did not adde much unto it; when to the Title of Emperour of the Romans, he added that of a Patrician in the stile Imperiall. Theodorick thus authorized and incouraged, marches toward Italie, and having vanquished Odoacer, secures himself in his new Conquests by divers politick proceedings; first by Alliances abroad, and then by Fortresses at home. To fortifie himself abroad, he took to Wife Adelheida, daughter to Clodovaus (or Clovis) King of the French; marying his sister Hemmelfride to Thorismund King of the Vandals in Africk; Amalasunta, a second daughter to Eutharicus a Prince of the Gothes in Spain; and Ammelberge his Neece, to Hermanfridus King of the Turingians. Being thus backed with these Alliances with his neighbour Princes (all equally concerned in the subverting of the Roman Empire) he built Towns and Forts along the Alpes, and the shores of the Adriatick, to impeach the passage of the Barbarous Nations into Italie. His Souldiers and Commanders he dispersed into most parts of the Country; partly to keep under the Italians, of whose wavering and unconstant nature he was somewhat doubtfull; partly to unite both people in a mixture of Language, Mariages and Customs; and partly that he might more easily in War command them, and in Peace correct them. Italie, which before was made a thorow-fare to the Barbarous Nations, and quite disordered by the frequent inundations of Lust and Rapine, he teduced to such a peaceable and setled Government, that before his death they had quite lost the memory of their former miseries, instead whereof a generall felicity had diffused it self over all the Country. Such Cities as had been formerly defaced, he repaired, strengthned, and beautified. In his Wars he was victorious, temperate in his times of Peace, and in his private carriage discreet and affable. Finally (as Velleius saith of Mor oboduus) he was Natione magis quam ratione Barbarus: And went the most judicious way to establish his dominion in Italie, of any of the Barbarous Princes that ever had invaded the Roman Provinces; which he left thus confirmed and setled unto his Successors.

The Kings of the Goths in Italie.

A.C.

495. 1 Theodorick, of whom before; who to his conquest of Italie added that of Illyricum, as also the appendant Ilands to both those Countries; and wrested Provence in France, from the Gothes in Spain.

527. 2 Athanaricus, Nephew to Theodorick by his daughter Amalasunta, who in the minority of her sonne managed the affairs of the Gothes in Italie. Fearing some danger out of Greece, she restored Provence to the French, and by their aid drove the Burgundians out of Liguria. A Lady skilfull in the Languages of all those Nations which had any commerce with the Roman Empire, insomuch, that pro miraculo fuerit ipsam audire loquentem, saith Procopius of her.

534. 3 Theodatus, the sonne of Hammelfride the Sister of Theodorick, succeeded on the untimely death of Athanaricus. Who being in War with the Romans, and desiring beforehand to know his success, was willed by a Jew to shut up a certain number of Swine, and to give to some of them the names of Gothes, and unto others the names of Romans. Which done, and going to the styes not long after, they found the Hogs of the Gothish faction all slain, and those of the Roman half unbristelled, and thereupon the Jew foretold, that the Gothes should be discomfited, and the Romans lose a great part of their strength; and it proved accordingly. Which kind of Divination is called Oroquarla, and hath been prohibited by a Generall Counsill 3.

537. 4 Vitiges. 3.
540. 5 Idobaldus. 1.
541. 6 Ardaricus. 1.
542. 7 Totilus. 11.
553. 8 Teyus, the laſt King of the Gothes in Italy, who being vanquiſhed by Narſes in the fourth year of his Reign, An. 567. ſubmitted himſelf to the Eaſtern Emperours; after which time the Gothes and the Italians mingled in bloud and language became one Nation.

But the miſeries of Italie, and thoſe Weſtern parts were not ſo to end. No ſooner had God freed them from the rod of his viſitations which he had layd upon them in the times of Perſecutions formerly remembred, and given them peace within their dwellings, but they became divided into ſchiſms and faſtions; and after wallowed in thoſe ſins which a continuall ſurfeit of proſperity hath commonly attending on it. Inſomuch that devout Salvian, who lived much about theſe times, complains of that high hand of wickedneſs, wherewith they did provoke the patience of Almighty God; the lives of Chriſtians being grown ſo deplorably wicked, that they became a ſcandall to the Faith and Goſpel. In nobis patitur Chriſtus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Chriſtiana maledictum, ſaith that godly Biſhop. So that their ſins being ripe for vengeance, God ſent the barbarous Nations as his Executioners, to execute his divine juſtice on impenitent men; and made them ſenſible, though Heathens, that it was Gods work they did, and not their own, in laying ſuch afflictions on theſe Weſtern parts. Ipſi fatebantur non ſuum eſſe quod facerent, agi enim ſe & perurgeri divino juſſu, as the ſaid godly Biſhop doth inform us of them. On this impulſion the Vandals did acknowledge that they firſt waſted Spain, and then harried Africk: And on the ſame did Attila the Hun inſert into his Royall Titles the ſtile of Malleus Orbis, and Flagellum Dei, acknowledging thereby his own apprehenſion of ſome ſpeciall and extraordinary calling to this publick ſervice. Nay as Jornandes doth report, ſome of theſe barbarous people did not ſtick to ſay, that they were put on this imployment by ſome Heavenly viſions, which did direct them to the work which they were to do. In proſecution of the which, in leſs time than the compaſs of 80 years, this very Italie (though antiently the ſtrength and ſeat of that Empire) was ſeven times brought almoſt unto deſolation, by the Fire and Sword of the Barbarians, viz. Firſt by Alarick King of the Gothes, who ſacked Rome, Naples, &c. 2 By Attila King of the Hunnes, who razed Florence, waſted Lombardy, and not without much difficulty was diverted from the ſpoil of Rome, by the interceſſion of Pope Leo. 3 By Genſericus King of the Vandals, who alſo had the ſackage of Rome it ſelf. 4 By Beorgus King of the Alani, in the time of the Emperor Maioranus. 5 By Odoacer King of the Heruli, who drove Auguſtus the laſt Weſtern Emperor out of his eſtate, and twice in thirteen years layd the Country deſolate. 6 By Theodorick King of the Gothes, called in by Zeno Emperour of Conſtantinople to expel Odoacer and the Heruli: And 7 by Gundebald King of the Burgundians, who having ranſacked all Lombardy, returned home again leaving poſſeſſion to the Gothes. As for theſe Gothes, being the firſt and laſt of thoſe barbarous Nations who had any thing to do in the ſpoil of Italie, after they had reigned here under eight of their Kings, for the ſpace of 72 years, they were at laſt ſubdued by Beliſarius and Narſes, two of the braveſt Souldiers that had ever ſerved the Eaſtern Emperours; and Italie united once more to the Empire in the time of Juſtinian. But Narſes having governed Italie about 17 years, and being after ſuch good ſervice moſt deſpightfully uſed by Sophia (never the wiſer for her name) the wife of the Emperor Juſtinus, abandoned the Country to the Lombards: For the Empreſs envying his glories, not only did procure to have him recalled from his Government, but ſent him word, That ſhe would make the Eunuch (for ſuch he was) come home and ſpin among her maids. To which the diſcontented man returned this Anſwer, That he would ſpin her ſuch a Web, as neither ſhe nor any of her maids ſhould ever be able to unweave; and thereupon he opened the paſſages of the Country to Alboinus King of the Lombards, then poſſeſſed of Pannonia, who comming into Italie with their Wives and Children, poſſeſſed themſelves of all that Country which antiently was inhabited by the Ciſalpine Galls, calling it by their own names Longobardia, now corruptly Lombardy. Nor ſtaid he there, but made himſelf maſter of the Countries lying on the Adriatick, as far as to the borders of Apulia; and for the better Government of his new Dominions, erected the four famous Dukedoms, 1 of Friuli at the entrance of Italie, for the admiſſion of more aids if occaſion were, or the keeping out of new Invaders 2 of Turlu, at th foot of the Alpes againſt the French, 3 of Benevent, in Abruzzo, a Province of the Realm of Naples, againſt the incurſions of the Greeks, then poſſeſſed of Apulia, and the other Eaſtern parts of that Kingdom: and 4 of Spoleto in the midſt of Italie to ſuppreſs the Natives; leaving the whole, and hopes of more unto his Succeſſors.

756. 23 Desiderius, the last King of the Lombards, of whom more anon. In the mean time we will look into the story of some of the former Kings, in which we find some things deserving our consideration. And first beginning with Alboinus, the first of this Catalogue, before his comming into Italie he had waged war with Cunimundus, a King of the Gepida, whom he overthrew, and made a drinking cup of his Skull. Rosamund daughter of this King he took to Wife; and being one day merry at Verona, forced her to drink out of that detested Cup; which she so stomacked, that she promised one Helmichild, if he would aid her in killing the King, to give him both her self and the Kingdom of Lombardy. This when he had consented to, and performed accordingly, they were both so extremely hated for it, that they were fain to fly to Ravenna, and put themselves into the protection of Longinus the Exarch. Who partly out of a desire to enjoy the Lady; partly to be possessed of that mass of Treasure which she was sayd to bring with her; but principally hoping by her power and party there to raise a beneficiall War against the Lombards, perswaded her to dispatch Helmichilde out of the way, and take him for her husband; to which she willingly agreed. Helmichilde comming out of a Bath called for Beer, and she gives him a strong poyson; half of which when he had drunk, and found by the strange operation of it how the matter went, he compelled her to drink the rest: so both died together. 2 Clephes the 2d King extended the Kingdom of the Lombards to the Gates of Rome: but was so tyrannical withall, that after his death, they resolved to admit of no more Kings, distributing the Government among 30 Dukes. Which division, though it held not above 12 years, was the chief cause that the Lombards failed of being the absolute Lords of all Italy. For the people having once cast off the yoak of obedience, and tasted somewhat of the sweetness of licentious Freedom, were never after so reduced to their former duty, as to be aiding to their Kings in such Atchievements as tended more unto the greatness of the King than the gain of the subject. 3 Cunibert the 14 King, was a great lover of the Clergy, and by them as lovingly requited: For being to encounter with Alachis the Duke of Trent who rebelled against him, one of the Clergy knowing that the Kings life was chiefly aimed at by the Rebels, put on the Royal Robe and thrust himself into the head of the Enemy. where he lost his own life, but saved the Kings. 4 Aripert the 17. King, gave the Celtian & Ipes containing Piemont, and some part of the Dutchy of Millain to the Church of Rome; which is observed to be the first Temporall Estate that ever was conferred upon the Popes, and the foundation of that greatnes which they after came to. 5 The 19 King was Luitprandus, who added to the Church the Cities of Ancona, Narnia, and Humana, belonging to the Exarchate, having first wonne Ravenna, and the whole Exarchie thereof. An. 741. the last Exarch being called Eutychus. But the Lombards long enjoyed not his Conquests: For Pepin King of France, being by Pope Stephen the third sollicited to come into Italy, overthrew Astulphus, and gave Ravenna to the Church. The last King was Desiderius, who falling at odds with Adrian the first, and besieging him in Rome, was by Charles the great, successor to Pepin, besieged in Pavie, and himself with all his children taken prisoners, An. 774. and so ended the Kingdom of the Lombards, having endured in Italie 206 years. Lombardy was then made a Province of the French, and after of the German Empire: many of whose Emperours used to be crowned Kings of Lombardy, by the Bishops of Millaine, with an iron Crown, which was kept at Modoecum, now called Monza, a small Village. This Charles confirmed his Fathers former donations to the Church; and added of his own accord, Marca Anconitana, and the Dukedom of Spoleto. For these and other kindnesses, Charles was by Pope Leo the fourth, on Christmas day crowned Emperour of the West, An. 801, whose Successors shall be reckoned when we come to the story of Germany. At this division of the Empire, Irene was Empress of the East; to whom and her Successors was no more allotted than the Provinces of Apulia, and Calabria, and the East parts of the Realm of Naples, being then in possession of the Greeks. To the Popes were confirmed or given by this Emperour and his father, almost all the Lands which they possesse at this day, though afterwards extorted from them by the following Emperours, or under colour of their Title; by many severall wayes and means brought again unto them, as shall be shewen hereafter in convenient place. The Venetians, in that little they then had, remained sui juris. The rest of Italie, containing all the other Provinces of the Kingdom of Naples, together with Tuscanie, Friuli, Trevigima, and whatsoever is at this day in the possession of the Dukes of Millaine, Mantua, Modena, Parma, Montferrat, and the Duke of Savoy as Prince of Piemont, together with Liguria, or the State of Genoa, was reserved by Charles unto himself, and in his lifetime given by him to Pepin his second sonne, with the stile or title of King of Italie. But long it did not rest in the house of France, the Princes of the Lombards wresting it from the line of Charles, and after weakning and dividing it by their severall factions; till in the end, instead of an united Kingdom, there rose up many scattered Principalities, as shall hereafter be declared.

red. But first we must proceed to the Kings of Italie, of which we shall endeavour as exact a Catalogue as the confusions of that State can be capable of.

The Kings of Italie, of the French, Italian, and German Lines.

1 Pepyn, sonne of Carolus Magnus, died before his Father.
2 Barnard, sonne of Pepyn.
3 Ludovicus Pius, Emperor, and King of France.
841. 4 Lotharius, Emperor, eldest sonne of Ludovicus 15.
856. 5 Ludovicus II. Emperor, eldest sonne to Lotharius 20.
876. 6 Carolus Calvus, Emperor, the youngest sonne of Ludovicus Pius. 2.
7 Caroloman, nephew to Ludovicus Pius by Ludovicus his second sonne surnamed the Antient.
8 Carolus Crassus, or the Fat, Emperor, brother of Caroloman, the last King of Italie of the house of Charles, he died A°.888.
888. 9 Guy, Duke of Spoleto, contends with Berengarius Duke of Friuly, both of the Longobardian Race, for the Kingdom of Italie, and in fine carrieth it against him.
894. 10 Lambert, the sonne of Guy, crowned by Pope Formosus.
11 Ludovick, sonne of Boson of Ardennes, King of Arles and Burgundy, by some Writers called onely Earl of Provence, upon the death of Lambert invadeth Italie, and is made King.
917. 12 Berengarius, Duke of Friuly, vanquisheth Ludovicus, is made King of Italie, and at last overcome by the Hungarians, who having wasted the Countrey returned back again.
13 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy Transjurane, called into Italie against Berengarius, resigned it in exchange for the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy to his Cousen.
926. 14 Hugh D'Arles, King of Arles and Burgundy, who held the Kingdom of Italy upon this resignation; but after many troubles was at last outed of it by Berengarius, and returned into France.
946. 15 Berengarius II. sonne of the former Berengarius, on the retreat of Hugh, received by the Italians as Protector to Lotharius the son of Hugh; besieging Adelhais the next heir of Italie (on the death of Lotharius) was taken prisoner by the Emperor Otho.
16 Otho, called into Italie by Adelhais, daughter to Rodolph King of Burgundy and Italie, marieth the Lady, and in her right is King of Italie.
974. 17 Otho II. son of the former Otho, marieth Theophania neece to Nicephorus Phocus, Emperor of Constantinople, and hath Calabria for her Dower. 20.
984. 18 Otho III. Emperor, and King of Italie, in whose minority the Kingdom was usurped by 19 Harduicus, a man of great power in Italie, who kept it all the time of Otho, till being broken with long wars by Henry the succeeding Emperor, he was forced to quit it.
20 Henry, the second Emperor of that name, having thrice vanquished Harduicus, got the Kingdom of Italie, and left the same unto the Emperors his Successors; the Title of Italie after this time being drowned in that of the Empire, and the Countrey governed as a part and Member of the Empire, by such Commanders and other Officers as the Emperors from time to time sent thither. But long it staid not in that state: For the Popes of Rome knowing how much it did concern them in point of Politie to weaken the Imperiall Power in Italie, without which their own Grandour could not be maintained, stirred up continuall factions and wars against them; and by that means, and by the Censures of the Church which they denounced according as they saw occasion, did so astonish and distract them, that in the end the Emperors began to lay aside the affairs of Italie, by which they reaped more trouble than the profit came to. Insomuch that Rodolfus Habspurgensis, a valiant and a politike Prince, finding the ill success which Henry the fourth and fifth, and Frederick the first and second, Emperors of more puissance than himself, had found in their Italian actions and pretensions, resolved to rid his hands of that troublesom and fruitless Province, and to that end made as much money as he could of that commoditie, which he saw he was not like to keep. And yet he sold good penny-worths too, to them that bought them; the Florentines paying for their Liberties but six thousand Crowns, the Citizens of Luca ten thousand, others as they could make their Markets. And being once required the reason why he went not into Italie to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predecessors had done before him, he is said to have returned for answer that conceit of the Fox for his not going to attend (as the other beasts did) at the Lyons Den.

——— Quia me vestigia terrent
Omnia me adversum spectantia, nulla retrorsum.

That

That is to say,

I dare not go, because no tract I see
Of any beast returning towards me.

Which faulty and improvident resolution being followed by too many of his Successors, not onely gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themselves the great disposers of the affairs of Italie, but many petit Princes thereby took occasion of getting all they could lay hold on for themselves and others. For by this means the Scaligers made themselves Masters of Verona; the Passarines of Mantua, the Carrarians of Padua, the Baillons of Bononia, and by the same the Florentines got Pistoia, and Ferrara was possessed by the Venetians. And although Henry the 7th. provoked by these indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of the revolted Cities to their former obedience, and was crowned King at Millain with the Iron Crown, as were also Ludovicus Bavarus, and Charles the 4th. two of his Successors; yet found they in conclusion such small benefit by the enterprize, as did not quit the charge and trouble which it put them to. So in the end Italie was left wholly in a manner to the Popes disposing, who gave away to others what they could not manage, or otherwise confirmed those men in their usurpations, whom they found already possessed of the Emperors Countreys, and bound them by that means the faster to the See of Rome, of which they were to hold their estates in fee: the Emperors having nothing left them but the empty Title, nor exercising the Imperiall Power there any other way, than by changing Earldoms into Marquisates, Marquisates to Dukedoms, which they often did either for ready money, or reward of Service, or to preserve some shadow of their antient Interest.

And now we are to look on Italie as under a new face of things, not only in regard of severall Principalities and forms of Government, but as replenished with new Colonies or sets of people, differing from the old in manners as well as language. And though the Soyl be now as it was before, yet hath that also found some change in the different production of the naturall fruits, as well as in the Manufactures and works of Art. For now besides their Corn and Wine which antiently were the staple Commodities of this Countrey, they supply the rest of Christendom with Rice, Silks, Velvets, Taffaties, Satans, Grograins, Rash, Fustians, Goldwire, Allom, Armour, Glasses, and such like commodities, which make their Merchants very wealthy, who being for the most part Gentlemen of noble houses, not onely lose not the esteem of their Nobility by following the Trade of Merchandize (as in other places;) but by reason that they are possessed of estates in land, which they manage by their Baylifs and other Servants, they are become the wealthiest Merchants in all Christendom.

Nor do the Gentry come behind them in all manner of affluence, which can be possibly enjoyed in so rich a Soyl. Their Lands they set not at a rent, but at thirds or halfs, according as the Soyl is more or less fruitfull, seldom abiding in the Countrey, but only for a moneth or two in the Summer times; but then they entertain themselves with their Musick and Mistresses under the fragrant hedges and shadie bowers, in as much solace and delight as may be desired. The residue of the yeer they spend in Cities, and places of the most resort, for change of company. But on the other side, the Countrey Farmer lives a drudging and laborious life, liable to all the Taxes and Impositions which are laid on the Land; the Land-lords part comming in clearly without any disbursements or defalcation; insomuch that it is proverbially, but most truly said, that the rich men in Italie are the richest, and the poor men the poorest in all the world.

The people generally are grave, respective, and ingenious. Excellent men (said once an Hispaniolized Italian) but for these three things; that is to say, in their lusts they are unnaturall, in their malice unappeasable, in their actions deceitfull. To which might be added, that they will blaspheme rather than swear, and murder a man sooner then slander him. But this perhaps may be the fault but of some particulars, it being observed by moderate and impartiall men, that they are obedient to their Superiors, to Inferiors courteous, to their Equalls full of all Civilities, to Strangers affable, and most desirous by all fair and friendly offices to win their loves. In apparell they are said to be very modest, in the furniture of their houses sumptuous, at their Tables neat, sober of speech, enemies of all ill reports of others, and of their own reputation so exceeding tender, that whosoever slandereth any one of them, if it come unto the parties ear, he is sure to die for it. Of mony and expence he is very thrifty, and loves to be at no more cost, than he is sure to save by, or receive great thanks for: but otherwise for civill carriage and behaviour, surpassing all the Gentry of the World besides. Onely in strictness to their wives they exceed all reason, of whom they are so extremely jealous, that they shut them up all day from the common view, and permit them liberty of discourse with few or none. The lock used by a Gentleman of Venice to be assured of his wives chastity in the time of his absence, is so known a story, that it needs no report. But touching the predominancie of this jealous humor in most Southern Nations, we shall speak more hereafter when we come to Spain. And yet if that be true, which is proverbially spoken by the women of Italie, the husbands have more reason for this strict restraint, than other Nations are aware of. For though they be for the most part witty in speech, and modest in the outward appearance as much as any; yet

Naples. it is ſaid of them in the way of Proverb, that they are Magpies at the door, Saints in the Church, Goats in the Garden, Devills in the houſe, Angells in the ſtreets, and Sirens in the windows.

The language of both Sexes is very Courtly and fluent, all of them ſpeaking the Courtezan, or Court language, notwithſtanding the diverſity of Dialects which is amongſt them. For though there be a remarkable difference betwixt the Florentine and Venetian, the Millaneſe and the Roman, the Neopolitan and the Genoeſe; yet it is hard to be diſcerned by the tone or pronunciation, what language any Gentleman is of. But generally it is beſt ſpoken in the great Dukes Countrey, in the Cities of Florence and Sienna, but in Florence eſpecially, in which City Guicciardine the Hiſtorian, Boccace the Author of the Decameron, and other great Maſters of the Italian language, did live and flouriſh in their times.

For other men of note both for Arts and Arms, Italie hath afforded many ſince the fall of the Empire, viz. Aeneas Silvius, afterwards Pope, by the name of Pius the ſecond. 2. Marſilius Patavinus, a ſtout defender of the Imperiall Rights. 3. Petrarch, a Roman born. 4. Angelus Politianus, the Reſtorer of polite Literature in Italie. 5. Rodolphus Volaterranus; and 6[ly]. Picus Mirandula, two great Humanitians. 7. Guido Bonatus a famous Aſtrologer. 8. Arioſto, and 9[ly]. Taſſo, the moſt renowned Poets of their times, and the later never followed ſince. 10. Sixtus Senenſis, one of the beſt Antiquaries of the Nation, and a great Divine. 11. Bellarmine, and 12. Baronius, the Buttreſſes and Pillars of the Church of Rome. And then for Arms, 1. Ludovicus Conius, the firſt Reſtorer of the honor of the Italian Souldiery. 2. Forti-Bracchio, and 3. Nicolao Picinino, two of his training up in the feats of Chivalry. 4. 5. Sforza the father and the ſonne, of which the ſonne attained by his valor to the Dukedom of Millain. 6. Chriſtopher Columbus, a Genoeſe. 7. Americus Veſputius, a Florentine, and 8. Sebaſtian Cabot, a Venetian, the fortunate Diſcoverers of America. 9. Andrea D'Oria, Admirall of the Navie to Charles the fift, and 10. Ambroſe Spinola (both Genoeſe) Commander of the Armies of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain: Which laſt being once upbraided by Maurice, Prince of Orange, as iſſued from a Race of Merchants (though otherwiſe of a very antient and noble Family) returned this tart and ſudden Anſwer, that he thought it a greater honour to him, being a Merchant, to have the command of ſo many Princes, than it could be unto the other, though a Prince by birth, to be under the command of ſo many Merchants.

The uſuall Diviſion of Italie is into ſix parts, 1. Lombardie, 2. Tuſcany, 3. the Land of the Church, 4. Naples, 5. Riviere de Genoa, and 6. the Land of Venice: and of them there is paſſed this Cenſure according to the principall Cities; i.e. Rome for Religion, Naples for Nobility, Millain for beauty, Genoa for ſtatelineſs, Florence for Policie, and Venice for riches. But take it as it ſtands at the preſent time, and

The Kingdom of NAPLES.

THe Kingdom of NAPLES is invironed on all ſides with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tuſcan Seas, excepting where it joyneth on the Weſt to the Lands of the Church: from which ſeparated by a line drawn from the mouth of the River Tronto (or Druentus) falling into the Adriatick, to the Spring-head of Axofenus. By which accompt it taketh up all the Eaſt of Italie, the compaſs of it being reckoned at 1468. miles.

It hath been called ſometimes the Realm of Poville, but moſt commonly the Realm of Sicil, on this ſide of the Phare, to difference it from the Kingdom of the Iſle of Sicil, lying on the other ſide of the Phare or Streit of Meſſana. The reaſon of which improper appellation proceeded from Roger the firſt King hereof, who being alſo Earl of Sicil, and keeping there his fixed and ordinary reſidence, when he obtained the favour to be made a King, deſired (in honour of the place where he moſt reſided) to be created by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And that indeed is the true and antient name of the Kingdom, the name or Title of King of Naples not comming into uſe till the French were diſpoſſeſſed of Sicil by the Aragonians, and nothing left them but this part of the Kindom, of which the City of Naples was the Regall Seat, called therefore in the following times the Kingdom of Naples, and by ſome of the Italian Writers, the Kingdom onely.

This

This is esteemed to be the most fertile place in all Italie, abounding in all things necessary for the life of man, and in such also as conduce to delight and Physick; viz. Many Springs, and Medicinall waters, Bathes of divers vertues, sundry Physicall herbs. It hath also an excellent breed of Horses, which may not be transported but by the leave of the King, or at least the Vice-Roy; great store of Allom, Mines of divers Metals, and the choicest Wines, called antiently Vina Massica, and Falerna, frequently mentioned by the Poets. And as for Merchandise, to Alexandria they send Saffron, to Genoa Silks, to Rome Wine, and to Venice Oyl. Naples.

The Noblemen or Gentrie hereof, live of all men the most careless and contended lives; and like the Tyrant Polycrates in the elder stories, have nothing to trouble them, but that they are troubled with nothing. And there is a great number of them too, there being reckoned in this Realm in the time of Ortelius, 13 Princes, 24 Dukes, 25 Marquesses, 90 Earles, and 800 Barons, and those not only Titular, as in other places, but men of great power and revenue in their severall Countries; insomuch that the yearly income of the Prince of Bisignan is said to be an hundred thousand Crowns, one year with the other; the Princes of Salern, and St. Severine being near as great. They are all bound by their Tenure to serve the King in his Wars, which gives them many privileges, and great command over the common subject; whereby as they were made the abler to assist the King upon any foren invasion, so are they in condition also of raising and countenancing such defections as have been made from King to King, and from one Family to another, as sorted best with their ambitious and particular interesses. For not alone the Nobles, but in generall as many of the common people as can be spared from Husbandry, are more addicted to the Wars than they are to Merchandise: The Nobles in pursuit of honour, and the Paisant out of desire of being in action; so that the greatest part of the Forces which serve the Spaniard in the Low Countries, are sent from hence. To which, the humour which they have from the highest to the lowest, of going bravely in Apparell, serves exceeding fitly: An humour which is so predominant, in both sexes, that though the Paisant lives all the rest of the week in as great servility and drudgery, as his Lord doth in pride and jollity, yet on the Sundayes and Saints-daies, he will be sure to have a good Suit to his back, though perhaps he hath no meat for his belly. And for the women, she that works hard both day and night for an hungry living, will be so pranked up on the Sundaies and other Festivals, or when she is to shew her self in some publick place, that one who did not know the humour, might easily mistake her for some noble Lady.

The principall Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1 Sibaris, 2 Basentus, 3 Pescara, 4 Trontus, 5 Salinellus, 6 Vomanus, 7 Salinus, and 8 Gariglian. On the banks of this last River, many battels have been fought between the French and the Spaniards for the Kingdom of Naples; especially that famous Battell between the Marquess of Saluzzes, Generall of the French, and Gonsalvo, Leader of the Spaniards; the loss of which Victory by the French, was the absolute confirmation of the Realm of Naples to the Spaniards. More famous is this River for the death of Peter de Medices, who being banished his Country at the comming of King Charles the 8. into Italie, and having at divers times in vain attempted to be reimpatriate, followed the French Army hither; and after the loss of the day, took ship with others, to fly to Cajeta, but over-charging the vessel, she sunk and drowned them all. But most famous is it, in that Marius, that excellent, though unfortunate Captain, being by Sylla's faction driven out of Rome, hid himself stark naked in the dirt and weeds of this river, where he had not layen long, but Sylla's Souldiers found him, and carried him to the City of the Minturnians, being not far off. These men, to please Sylla, hired a Cimber to kill him, which the fellow attempting (such is the vertue of Majesty even in a miserable fortune) run out again, crying, he could not kill C. Marius. This river was of old called Liris, and towards its influx into the Sea expatiated into Lakes and Fens, called the Lakes of Minturni, from a City of that name adjoyning.

It is divided into the Provinces of 1 Terra di Lavoro, 2 Abruzzo, 3 Calabria inferior, 4 Calabria superior, 5 Terra di Otranto, 6 Puglia, and 7 the Iles of Naples. Some of which have some smaller Territories adjoyning to them, which we shall meet withall as they come in our way.

1 TERRA DI LAVORO is bounded on the North and East, with the Apennine Hils; on the South, with the Sea; and on the West, with St Peters Patrimonie; called antiently Campania Felix, in regard of the wonderfull fertilitie of it, and that it was the seat or dwelling of the Campans; by some modern Latinists named Campania Antiqua, to difference it from Latium, which they now call Campagna di Roma, or Campania Nova. And for the other name of Terra di Lavoro, or Terra Laboratoris, it was given to it, from the continuall labour of the Husbandman in cultivating the ground, and carrying in the fruits thereof: but neither the reason, nor the name so new, as some men suppose. But I am sure, as old as Plinie, who calleth these parts sometimes by the name of Laboria, sometimes of Campus Laborinus, and gives this reason of the name, quod ingens in eo colendo sit labor, because of the great pains it requires to till it, and the great profit reaped by them who did till and manure it.

The Country so exceeding fruitfull in Wines and Wheat, that by Florus the Historian, it is called Cereris & Bacchi certamen, and deservedly too. For in this noble Region one may see large and beautifull fields overshaded with rich Vines, thick and delightfull Woods, sweet Fountains, and most wholsome Springs of running water, usefull as well for the restoring of mans Campania mans health, as delight and pleasure ; and in a word, whatsoever a covetous mind can possibly aim at, or a carnall covet.

Towns of note here were many in the elder times. The principall whereof, 1 Cajeta, seated on a fair and capacious Bay, from the crookedness whereof it is thought by Strabo to have took the name: the word in the Laconian language signifying crooked. Others will have it so called from Καιω, Uro, with reference to the burning of the Fleet of Æneas by the Troian Ladies; for fear of being forced again to go to Sea, where they had been so extremely tossed in their former voyages. But why that Fact committed on the furthest coasts of Sicil, should be so solemnly commemorated here on the shores of Italie, I can see no reason. And therefore we may far more probably derive it from Cajeta, the Nurse of Æneas, in memory of whom, being buried here, or hereabouts, Æneas is affirmed to have built this Town. Of which thus the Poet, Æneid. lib. 7.

Æternam moriens famam, Cajeta, dedisti.

That is to say,

Æneas Nurse, Caieta, by her death,
Did to these shores an endless fame bequeath.

But on what ground soever it first had this name, it is assuredly a place of great strength and consequence; and of so special importance for the estate of this Kingdom, that (as Comines hath observed) if King Charles the 8. had but only fortified it, and the Castle of Naples, the Realm had never been lost. 2 Naples, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, a beautifull City, containing seven miles in compass. It was once called Parthenope, and falling to ruin, was new built, and called Neapolis. Among other things, here is an Hospital, the revenues whereof is 60000 Crowns, wherewith, besides other good deeds, they nourish in divers parts of the Kingdom 2000 poor Infants. In this City the disease called Morbus Gallicus, or Neapolitanus, was first known in Christendom. This City is seated on the Sea-shore, and fortified with 4 strong Castles, viz. 1 Castle Capodua, where the Kings Palace was. 2 Ermo. 3 Castle del Ovo, or the Castle of the Egge; and 4 Castle Novo, or the new Castle. But nature hath not done much less to her Fortifications than the hand of Art; the Town being for the most part environed by Sea, or Mountains not to be ascended without great difficulty and disadvantages. Which Mountains, as they seem on that side as a bank to the City, so do they furnish the Citizens with most generous Wines; and being once ascended yeeld a gallant prospect both for Sea and Land. A City honoured by the seat of the Vice-Roy, and the continual resort, if not constant residence of most of the great men of the Realm: which makes the private buildings to be very gracefull, and the publick stately. And yet it had increased much more in buildings than it is at present, if the King had not forbidden it by speciall Edict. And this he did, partly at the perswasion of his Noblemen, who feared that if such a restraint were not layd upon them, their vassals would forsake the Country to inhabit here, so to enjoy the privileges and exemptions of the Regall City: but principally upon jealousie and poynt of State, the better to prevent all revolts and mutinies, which in most populous Cities are of greatest danger. 3 Capua, once the head of the Campans, seated in a delicious and luxurious soyl, and one of the three Cities which the old Romans judged capable of the seat of the Empire; the other two being Carthage and Corinth. Being distressed by the Samnites, they were fain to cast themselves into the Arms of the Romans, who did not only take them into their protection, but suffered them to live according to their own Laws, as a Free Common-wealth; rather like a Confederate than a Subject-State. Which Freedom they enjoyed, till after their revolt to the Carthaginians; when being reduced to their obedience by force of arms, they lost all their Liberties, and hardly scaped its fatall and finall ruin. The pleasures of this place was it which enervated the victorious Army of Annibal, who wintered here after the great defeat given to Terentius Varro at the battell of Canna; whence came the saying, Capuam esse Cannas Annibali. 4 Cuma, a City once of great power and beautie, till Campania was subdued by the Romans, after which it decayed in both. Near hereunto was the Cave or Grot of one of the Sibyls, called from hence Cumæa; and not far off the Lake called Lacus Avernus, the stink whereof is said to have poysoned Birds as they flew over it; supposed by ignorant Antiquity for the entrance of Hell. And finally, from this place it was, that Æneas is fabled by the Poets to have gone down to the infernall Ghosts to talk with his Father. 5 Nola, where Marcellus discomfited the forces of Annibal, and thereby gave the Romans to understand, that he was not invincible. 6 Puteolis, a small Town standing on a Creek of the Sea, just opposite to Baule, on the other side of it; from which distant about three miles and an half. Both Towns remarkable for the Bridge built betwixt them by Caligula, composed of sundry vessels joyned together in such sort, that there was not only a fair and large passage over it, but victualling houses on both sides of it: Over which Bridge thus made, he marched and re-marched in triumphall Robes, as not only the Earth, but the very Seas were made subject to him. And he did (as himself afterwards affirmed to some of his friends) to awe the Ocean, and imitate (if not exceed) the like acts of Xerxes and Darius, mentioned in the antient Writers; as also to terrifie the Britans and the German Nations, with the report of such a notable exploit; or (as some thought) to fulfill the prophecie of one Thrasibulus a Fortune-teller of those times, who had been often heard to say in the life time of Ti- berius (his next immediate Predeceſſor) that it was as impoſſible for Caius to ſucceed in the Empire, as it was for him to ride on horſeback from Baule to Puteolus. 7 Not far hence, on a Semicircular Bay, ſtnads the City of Baie (whereof Baule before mentioned is a part) ſo called, as the Poets ſay, from Baius one of the companions of Ulyſſes in his Navigations. A City in the flouriſh of the Roman Empire of five miles in length, and two in bredth; ſo wonderfully endued by nature, and adorned by Art, that no place in the World was thought comrable to it: Abruzzo.

Nullus in Orbe locus Baiis prælucet amœnis.
Few places in the World there are
With pleaſant Baie to compare. As it is in Horace.

A City beautified with magnificent Temples, multitudes of Baths, or Bannidi, Imperial Palaces, ſtately buildings, and the adjoyning Mannor-houſes of the principall Romans, whom the pleaſures of the place invited hither; and was indeed too great and ſenſible a monument of the laſciviouſneſs and luxury of that proſperous people (of which the Ambubaia mentioned in the Satyriſt is ſufficient proof;) now ſo demoliſhed by War, and devoured by water, that there is nothing of it to be ſeen but ſome ſcattered ruins. 8 Miſenus, ſeated near a great hiil or Promontory of the ſame name, at the foot whereof there is a large and capacious harbour, where Auguſtus keeping one Navy, and another at Ravenna in the upper Sea, awed the whole Roman Empire. But theſe were places of renown in the former times, all which, excepting Naples, are now only known by what they have been, not by what they are. The principall Cities at this time, are (next to Naples it ſelf) Seſſa, the Sinneſſa or Suiſſa of the antients, and now the title of a Dukedom, 2 Ceano, 3 Salvi, 4 Averſa, 5 Venafre, and 6 Caſerte, with others, to the number of 22, beſides 166 Caſtles or defenſible places. Here is alſo in this Tract the Hils called Gallicanum, where Annibal that great Maſter in the Art of War, frighted that wary Captain Fabius Maximus, by the ſtratagem of two thouſand Oxen, carrying fire in their horns, by which device he freed himſelf out of thoſe difficult Streights in which he was at that preſent. And in this Country there is alſo the Hill Veſuvius, that caſteth out flames of fire, the ſmoak of which ſtifled Plinie ſenior, coveting to ſearch the cauſe of it. The flame hereof brake forth cruelly alſo during the reign of Titus, caſting out not only ſuch ſtore of ſmoak, that the very Sun ſeemed to be in the Eccliplſe, but alſo huge ſtones, and of aſhes ſuch plenty, that Rome, Africk, and Syria, were even covered, and Herculanum and Pompeii, two Cities in Italy, were overwhelmed with them. There were heard diſmall noyſes all about the Province; and Gyants of incredible bigneſs ſeen to ſtalk up and down about the top and edges of the mountain; which extraordinary accident, either was a cauſe, or preſage of the future Peſtilence which raged in Rome and Italy long after.

On the Eaſt ſide of this Campania, and properly (as antiently it was eſteemed) a part thereof, lieth that little Territory, which Alfonſo King of Naples cauſed to be called the Principate, extending in length 33 miles, and 16 in bredth, and was of old the ſeat of the Picentini, a Colony of the Piceni dwelling on the Adriatick. Principall places of it, 1 Maſſa, by the Italians called Marſo, of more note for the Hils adjoyning, than any great beauty or antiquity it hath in it ſelf. Thoſe hills now called Monte Marſo, but known to the Romans by the name of Montes Maſſici, of ſpeciall eſtimation for the rich Wines, called Vina Maſſica. 2 Nucéria, nine miles from the Sea, in a very plentifull and delicious ſoyl. 3 Rivelli, a City not long ſince built, which for the elegancy of the buildings hardly yeelds to Naples. 4 Malfi, or Amalphi, an Arch-Biſhops See, in which it is ſuppoſed that the Mariners Compaſs was firſt found out. It is ſituate on the Sea ſide, and giveth name to the coaſt of Amalfe, fenced with Hils or Mountains of ſo great an height, that to look down into the Vallies or the Sea adjoyning, makes men ſick and giddy. A Town of great note (were there nothing elſe to commend it to our obſervation) for the finding out of the Mariners Compaſs, deviſed and contrived here about the year 1300, by one Iohn Flavio, a native or inhabitant of it. 5 Salern, about a mile from the Sea, the title of the Prince of Salern, and an Univerſitie, but chiefly for the ſtudy of Phyſick, the Doctors of which wrote the Book called Schola Salerni, dedicated to a King of England: not to K. Henry the 8. as it is conceived, for then the Commentary on it written by Arnoldus Villanovanus, who lived about the year 1313, muſt needs have been before the Text. And therefore I conceive it dedicated either to King Richard the firſt, or King Edward the firſt, who in their journeys towards the Holy Land, might beſtow a viſit on this place, and give ſome honourary incouragement to the Students of it. Through this Principate, or this part of Campania, runs the River of Silarus, croſſing in a manner the very midſt of it. There are ſayd to be in this ſmall Territory, fifteen good Towns, and two hundred and thirteen Caſtles or walled places.

2 North of Campania, lyeth the Province now called ABRUZZO, bounded on the Eaſt, with Puglia or Apulia; on the Weſt, with Marca Anconitana; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; and on the South, with the Apennine. It is called Aprutium by the Latins, the Country heretofore of the antient Samnites; a people which held longer wars with the ſtate of Rome, than almoſt all Italy beſides, as keeping them in continuall action for the ſpace of 70 years together, beſides many after-claps. In which long courſe of Wars, the Romans were ſo hardly put to their ſhifts, that they were four times fain to have recourſe to the laſt refuge, which was the chooſing of Dictators; and yet came off ſo often with ſucceſs and victory, that it afforded them the honour Abruzzo of thirty Triumphs. But theſe Samnites, as they were a potent, ſo they were alſo a compound Nation; conſiſting of the Ferentani, Caraceni, Peligni, Præcatini, Veſtini, Hirpini, and Samnites properly ſo called; into which name the reſt of the inferiour Tribes were after ſwallowed. The chief City of the whole was called Samnium, whence they had their name; which in the concluſion of the War was ſo defaced by Papyrius the Roman Conſul, ut hodie Samnium in ipſo Samnio requiratur; that not improperly (ſaith Florus) a man might ask where Samnium ſtood, even in the middle of the City. How it came by this new name of Aprutium, I am yet to learn.

The River of Peſcara runneth thorow the midſt of it, and divideth it into two parts, whereof the one containeth 5 Cities, and 150 Caſtles, or walled places; the other, 184 Caſtles, and 4 Cities. The principall Cities of the whole, 1 Beneventum, heretofore called Maleventum, as we find in Pliny, becauſe the Windes hereabouts were ſo fierce and violent, that men could not ſit upon their horſes; but had at laſt that name of Beneventum from the pleaſant Plains and ſpacious Vallies which ly round about it; in like manner as the Country of the old Allobroges exchanged the name of Malvoy into that of Salvoy. It was one of the four Dukedoms which the Lombards erected when they firſt came into Italie, for the better aſſuring of their Conqueſt; and was given to the Church of Rome by the Emperor Henry the fourth, in exchange of a certain Tribute remitted by Pope Leo the ninth to the Church of Bamberg, where the ſaid Emperour was born, and is ſtill under the command of the Popes of Rome. 2 Aquila, built by the Emperour Frederick the ſecond, King of Naples, to aſſure the Realm upon that Quarter. 3 Lanliano, four miles from the Adriatick, a Town of great Trade, and much reſorted to by Merchants at her Annuall Marts. 4 Ortona, the Port-town unto Lanciano. 5 Teranum, or Teran (Ptolomy calls it Inter-amna) antiently the Metropolis of the Præcatini. 6 Citta di Chieti, ſituate on a Hill ſome ſeven miles from the Sea, heretofore known by the name of Theate. Here is in this Tract 7 Aquino, the Birth-place of Thomas Aquinas the great School-man, who firſt brought the ſcattered limbs of Popery into a body. And 8 Sulmo, honoured with the birth of Ovid, that renowned Poet, as himſelf teſtifieth.

Sulmo mihi Patria eſt, gelidis uberrimus undis, Millia qui novies diſtat ab Urbe decem.

Full of cool ſtreams Sulmo, my native land,
From the great City ninety miles doth ſtand.

There belongeth alſo to Abruzzo the Country of Moliſis, in which are 104 walled places or Caſtles, and four conſiderable Towns; the principall of which is Boviamum, or Boiano, now a Biſhops See. In this Country alſo (I mean Abruzzo) are the ſtreights called Furcæ Caudinæ, in which when the Samnites and their confederates had ſo incloſed the Romans, that there was no poſsibility to eſcape, they ſent to Herennius, a man for his Age much honoured, and for his Wiſdom much followed by them, to know what they ſhould do with the captive Enemy. Word was returned, that they ſhould ſend them home ſafe, and without diſhonour. Thinking the old man had not been well informed of the ſtate of the buſineſs, they ſent to him again, and he adviſed, that they ſhould put them all to the ſword. Theſe contrary Anſwers made them judge amiſs of the old mans brain; and therefore following their own fancies, they ſpoyled the Romans, and diſarmed them, and deſpightfully uſed them, and ſo ſent them home. Which when Herennius came to know, he much lamented the imprudence of ſo raſh an action; but much more the deſtruction of his Countrey, as a conſequent of it. Telling them, after their return, that had they given the Romans a ſafe and honourable deliverance from the preſent danger, they had made them their friends for many Ages; or had they put unto the ſword ſo many of their Souldiers and chief Commanders, they had diſabled them for long time from purſuing the War: The middle way which they had taken, would be their undoing; and ſo accordingly it proved: For the Romans not being made their Friends by ſo odious a benefit, but hatching Revenge for the diſgrace, ſoon renewed the War; and under the conduct of Papyrius ſubdued the Countrey, and handled the poor conquered people with the like deſpight. An excellent preſident unto Princes and thoſe in power, how to proceed towards men of Quality and Rank, when they have them under, which muſt be, either not to ſtrike at all, or to ſtrike home and to the purpoſe. Nic. Machiavil in his Florentine Hiſtory taxeth Rinaldo of Albizi for committing a great Soloecism in point of State, in that hating Coſmo de Medices, and deſiring to remove him from the publick managery of affairs, he thought it was ſufficient to procure his Baniſhment: which Coſmo, afterwards returning, payd in better coyn. Whereupon he inferreth this notable Aphoriſm, that Great Perſons muſt not at all be touched, or if they be, muſt be made ſure from taking Revenge. Yet do I not interdict a Prince, or any ſupreme Governours, the uſe of Mercy. I know it is the richeſt Jewel which adorns the Crown. Nor dare I take upon me to direct the uſe of that excellent vertue. Only I ſhall obſerve what uſage hath been commonly afforded towards ſuch perſons after their Delinquencies; whoſe liberty or life may create danger to the publick. The firſt is preſent Execution; for Mortui non mordent, as the ſaying is: a courſe more to be allowed of where it cannot, than commended where it may be ſpared. The ſecond is either cloſe impriſonment under truſty Guards, or elſe confinement to the houſe and cuſtody of ſome truſty Stateſman: in which great caution alſo is to be obſerved: For beſides that nothing thing is more ordinary than the eſcape of great Priſoners, either by corrupting or deceiving their Keepers. We find in our own Hiſtories, how Dr. Morton Biſhop of Ely, being committed to the Duke of Buckingham by King Richard the 3. not onely procured his own liberty, but brought about that Duke to the contrary faction. The laſt, which is in all times the gentleſt, and in ſome caſes the ſafeſt, is not only an abſolute pardon of life, and a grant of liberty, but an endearing of the party delinquent, by giving him ſome place of honour, or committing unto his fidelity ſome office of truſt; it being the nature of moſt men, that where they are not truſted, they are never true; and that as long as they ly under ſuſpect and jealouſies, they will be apt to entertain ſome thoughts of their loſt condition. And of this kind of dealing with a perſon Delinquent, we have a pregnant inſtance in the Emperor Otho, who not only pardoned Marius Celſus one of Galba's faction, and a chief one too, but put him in place neareſt to him, and made him one of his principall Leaders in the following War againſt Vitellius. His reaſon was, Ne hoſtis metum Reconciliationis adhiberet, leſt lying aloof as a pardoned Enemy, he might conceive the breach were but badly made up. And on the other ſide, Marius Celſus proved ſo ſenſible of the obligation, that he continued faithfull to him to the very laſt, and loſt his life in the purſuance of his quarrell; ſhewing thereby, that perſons of a generous and noble diſpoſition, are more obliged by favours, than reſtrained by terrour. But it is now time I ſhould free my ſelf of theſe Furcæ Caudinæ, and ſport my ſelf a while in the Plains of Calabria. Naples.

But I muſt note, before I take my leave hereof, that theſe two Provinces of Campania and Abruzzo, make up the greateſt, richeſt, and beſt peopled part of the Realm of Naples. And therefore when the Kingdom was divided between the French and the Spaniards, it was allotted to the French, as having the priority both of claim and power. The Provinces remaining, although more in number, yet are not comparable to theſe two for Wealth and Greatneſs; and were aſſigned over to the Spaniard, as lying moſt conveniently for the Realm of Sicilie.

Of theſe, the firſt are the CALABRIAS, ſo called from the Calabri an antient people of this tract, which take up totally that Peninſula, or Demi-Iland, which lyeth at the South-Eaſt end of Italie, near the Fare of Meſſana. Amongſt ſome of the Antient Writers, the name Italie did extend no further than this Peninſula, bounded by the two Bayes called Sinus Scilleticus, and Sinus Lameticus; becauſe firſt peopled out of Greece, or otherwiſe firſt known unto the old Writers of that Country. For ſo ſaith Ariſtotle in his ſeventh Book of Politicks, cap. 10. Τὴν ἀκτὴν ταύτην τῆς Εὐρώπης Ἰταλίαν τόποτε λεχθῆν, &c. That part of Europe which is comprehended betwixt the Bay Scilleticus, and Lameticus, took the name of Italie; and this Tradition he received (as he there affirmeth) from the beſt Antiquaries of that Country. The like occurs in Dionyſius Hallicarnaſſeus out of Antiochus Syracuſanus a more antient Author; the like in Strabo, Lib. 6. But by what name ſoever it was called at firſt, that of Calabria hath held longeſt and moſt conſtantly to it, as being known by that name in the times of the Romans, and ſo continuing to this day; Ennius the old Poet being a native of this Country, and ſo called by Ovid in his 3d de Arte.

Old Ennias his Garden tills
Among the ſteep Calabrian hils.

But leaving theſe matters of remote Antiquity, let us behold the Country as it ſtands at the preſent; and was the title of the eldeſt ſonnes of the Kings of Naples, who heretofore were called Dukes of Calabria, divided of late times into inferior, and ſuperior; in which diſtinct capacityes we ſhall look upon it. Premiſing only by the way, that this Country was the Title of the eldeſt ſonnes of the Kings of Naples, who were from hence called the Dukes of Calabria; and that before it was ſubjected to thoſe Kings, it had a King of its own; Holofernes whoſe daughter Flora was married unto Godfrey of Bovillon, being King hereof, An. 1098. 3 CALABRIA INFERIOR, the habitation of the Brutii, whom the Greek Writers generally call Bretti, and their Country Brettania: upon which ground ſome of our modern Criticks (envying ſo great an honour to the Ile of Great Britaine) have transferred to this Province the birth of Conſtantine, the firſt Chriſtian Emperour. Theſe Brutii being firſt conquered by the Romans, with the reſt of Italie, after the great defeat of Canne took part with Carthage, and was for a long time the retreat of Annibal, whom the Romans had ſhut up in this corner. It hath on the Eaſt a branch of the Adriatick Sea, on the Weſt, that part of Campania which is called the Principate; on the North, Calabria ſuperior; and on the South, the Tyrrhenian Seas, and the ſtreight of Meſſana. A Country not much ſhort in fruitfulneſs of the reſt of the Kingdom; and having the advantage of ſo much Sea, is the better ſituate for Traffick. At one extremity hereof is the Promontory called by Ptolomy Lenco-Petra, now Cabo di Spartimento; all along which, eſpecially in the moneth of May, are taken yeerly great ſtore of Tunnies (a fiſh which much reſembleth mans fleſh) which being barrelled up are ſold to Mariners. Here are two Rivers alſo of a very ſtrange nature: of which the one called Crathis, makes a mans hair yellow, and dies ſilk white; the other named Buſentus, cauſeth both hair and ſilk to be black and ſwarthy.

The principall Cities of it are, 1. Conſenſia an antient Town, comprehending ſeven little Calabria. hills, and a Castle on the top of one of them, which commandeth both the Towu and the Countrey adjoyning. It is built betwixt the said two Rivers, and is still reasonably rich, though not so wealthy now as in former times. 2. Rhegium, or Rhezo, on the Sea shore, opposite to Messana in the Ile of Sicilie, which is supposed to have been broken off from the rest of Italie, and that this Town had the name of Rhegium from the Greek word ῥήγνυμι, which signifieth to break off, or to tear asunder. A Town in former times very well traded, but left desolate in a manner since the yeer 1594. when it was fired by the Turks. 3. Castravillare, seated upon the top of a very high Mountain. 4. Belmont, and 5. Altomont, two very fair Towns, whose names sufficiently express their pleasant and lofty situations. 6. S. Euphemie, from whence the Bay which anciently was called Sinus Lametinus, or Lametirius, is now called Golfo de S. Euphemie. 7. Nicastro, three miles from the Sea, the same with Newcastle in English.

On the West side of this Calabria, and properly a part thereof standeth that mountainous Countrey, which in the Subdivision of these Provinces by King Alfonsus, was called the BASILICATE, anciently the Seat of the Lucani: A Countrey heretofore very unsafe for Travellers, by reason of the difficult wayes, and assured company of Theeves, but now reduced to better order. It containeth in it ninety three walled places, and nine Towns or Cities, the chief whereof are Possidonia, or Pest, a City situate in so clement and benign a Soyl, that Roses grow there thrice a yeer. 2. Poly Castrie on the Sea shore, (as the former is) honoured with the Title of a Dukedom. And 3. Dian, or Dianum, a more midland City, neer which there is a valley twenty miles in length, and four miles in bredth, which for all manner of delights and fruitfulness yeelds to none in Naples.

4. CALABRIA SUPERIOR, called formerly Magna Gracia, from many great and famous Cities founded there by the Grecians, hath on the East the Adriatick; on the West, Campania; from which it is divided by the Apennine and the River Crathis; on the North, Sinus Tarentinus, or the Gulf of Tarento; and on the South and South-East, Calabria inferior, and Golfo di Chilaci, of old called Sinus Scilleticus. The principall Cities at this time are, 1. Belcastro, eight miles from the Sea, where once stood Petilia. 2. Bisignan, the title of a Prince, fortified with a very strong Castle, and endowed with the best Revenues of any principality or other Nobleman of Title in all the Kingdom. 3. Matera an Arch-Bishops See, a rich Town and well peopled. 4. Rosanum, three miles from the Sea, a well fortified City, and situate in a very fruitfull and pleasant Soyl. 5. Altavilla, which gives title also to a Prince. 6. Terra Nova.

As for the chief Cities of the Greeks in the former times, they were Locris founded by the Locrians, a people of Achaia. Here lived the Lawmaker Zaleucus, who ordering Adultery to be punished with the loss of both eyes, was compelled to execute the Law on his own Sonne, as the first offendor. Therefore to shew the love of a Father, and the sincerity of a Judge, he put out one of his Sonnes eys, and one of his own. He also provided in his Laws, that no woman should be attended in the street with more than one Maid, but when she was drunk; that she should not go abroad at night, but when she went to play the Harlot; that she should not wear gold or embrordered apparell, but when she meant to set her self to open sale; and that men should not wear rings and tissues, but when they went about the prostituting of some woman; and many others of this mould. By means whereof both men and women were restrained from all extraordinary trains of Attendants, and excess of Apparell; the common consequents of a long and prosperous tranquillity. It was also famous in old times for the victory which Ennomus an excellent Musician, obtained against Aristonus of Rhegium, another of the same profession. For though Aristonus had made his prayers unto Apollo the God of Musick for his good success; yet Ennomus plainly told him, that Nature was against him in that contention, which had made all the Grashoppers mute on that side of the water. And so accordingly it happened. For when the day appointed came, Ennomus had the ill hap to break one of his Harpstrings, even in the middle of his Musick, when presently a Grashopper leaped upon his Harp, and supplied most melodiously the place of the broken string; and by that means obtained the victory to Ennomus. An accident not unworthy of the Muse of Strada, in his personating of the Poet Claudian. And though I bind not any man to believe this Tale (though of Strabo's telling) yet there are very good Authors for thus much thereof, that on the one side of the River Alax, which parteth Locris from Rhegium, the Grashoppers do merily sing; but on the other side, which is that towatds Rhegium, they are always silent. 2. Tarentum, a Town of no less note, situate on the Bay called Sinus Tarentinus, first built by the Spartans: the people whereof having a great command on the Countrey adjoyning, were one of the last Italian Nations taken in by the Romans. Nam quis post Tarentinos anderet. For who durst stir when once the Tarentines were vanquished? saith the Historian. In defence of this people did Pyrrhus war against the Romans; the hopes of getting this place by Annibal, was the loss of Capua; and finally here lived Architas so famous for his flying Dove. 3. Crotona, the Inhabitants whereof were once so active, that at one Olympick meeting the Victors were all of this one Town. Their glory much decayed in a battell against the Locrians, in which one hundred and twenty thousand of them and their Confederates were vanquished by fifteen thousand of the enemy. 4. Amycle, a Town inhabited formerly by Pythagoreans, who having been often terri-terrified with a falſe report of the approach of their enemies, publiſhed a Law prohibiting all ſuch reports: by which means their enemies comming unawares, poſſeſſed themſelves of it. Hence grew the Proverb, Amyclas ſilentium perdidit; and hence that notable ſaying of Lucilius, who being commanded to be ſilent, returned this anſwer, Mihi neceſſe eſt loqui, Scio enim Amyclas ſilentio periiſſe. 5. Sibaris, a City built by the Grecians after the deſtruction of Troy, the people whereof were Lords of five and twenty good Towns, and could arm thirty thouſand men. A people ſo effeminate, that they permitted no Smith nor Brazier, no nor ſo much as a Cock, to live amongſt them, becauſe they would not have their ſleeps diſturbed; but the Cookers, and Muſicians were in high requeſt: which advantage the Crotonians taking (with whom then in hoſtility) they entred the Town in the habit of Muſicians, and ſo maſtered it. Before which accident there had been a Prophecy, that the Town ſhould never be taken, till men were more eſteemed than the Gods themſelves. It hapned that a Slave being grievouſly beaten by his Maſter, and obtaining no pardon for the Gods ſake, upon whom he called, fled to the monument of ſome of his Maſters Anceſtors, and was pardoned by him; which coming to the ears of Amyris the Philoſopher, he forſook the Town, moſt men holding him mad, in a time of no danger to leave ſo delicate a Seat: Whence came the Proverb, Amyris inſanit, applied to ſuch as under the pretence of madneſs or folly do provide for their ſafety. Terra di Otranto.

5. TERRA DI OTRANTO, as it is now called, was once the Eaſtern part of Apulia Daunia, the ſeat and habitation in theſe times of the Salentini, the Japyges, and the Meſapians, and is accordingly entituled in antient Authors by the ſeverall names of Japygia, Meſapia, and Salentina. They were the laſt people of Italie which held out againſt Rome, and ſunk immediately after the Tarentini, upon whoſe fate they did depend. Of theſe three Nations the Japyges were of greateſt fame, or of greateſt infamy. Cretans originally, ſent in queſt of Glaucus the ſonne of Minos, whom when they could not finde, and durſt not return without him, they fixt here their dwelling; Japyx the ſonne of Dedalus being their Captain and Conductor, and from him denominated. Growing into eſtate and power, they became not only ſo luxurious in their courſe of life, and effeminate in their dreſs and habit, that they were a ſcorn and ſcandall to their Neighbour-Nations; but ſo regardleſs of their Gods, that in the end they threw down all their Images, and deſtroyed their Temples. Puniſhed at laſt for theſe high inſolencies by balls of fire falling on them from the heavens, with which the whole ſtock of them were almoſt extirpated. The Promontory called Japygium did take name from this people, and from thence the North-Weſt wind (or the Weſt-North-Weſt) which the Latines generally call Caurus, frequently blowing from this Coaſt, had the name of Japyx, occurring by that name in the 8th. of the Æneids, and in Horace, Carm. l. 1. Ode 4.

But to proceed; This Countrey is invironed on all parts with the Adriatick, ſaving where it joyneth with Apulia by an Iſthmus of about thirty miles in bredth, reaching from Brundiſium to Tarentum, and is from land to land as you go by water about two hundred miles in compaſs. It hath the name of Terra di Otranto, in Latine Terra Hydruntina from the Town of Hydruntum; the ſoyl thereof is very fruitfull if well manured, abounding in Corn, Oyl, Melons, Citrons, Saffron, and other Commodities of good price, for which they never want the company of the Merchants of Genoa. They are many times much indangered by Graſhoppers, which commonly devour all whereſoever they come, and would in one night conſume whole fields of ſtanding Corn, if Divine Providence by ſending the birds called Gaives amongſt them, did not provide a remedy for ſo great a miſchief. The greateſt defect hereof is the want of water, which notwithſtanding, they have very rich paſtures; the people are conceived to be the ſimpleſt, or moſt void of craft of any in Italie, perhaps becauſe they have ſo little commerce with their own Countrey-men, and ſo much with Strangers.

The chief Towns are, 1. Lecci, Aletium in Latine, a rich Town, well built, and very well peopled. 2. Caſtro, a Sea Town, but not well fenced by art or nature, which hath made it very often a prey to the Turks. 3. Gallipolis, a Town built on ſo craggy a Rock, that it is conceived to be unconquerable. 4. Brunduſium, the head Town of the Salentini, once glorying in the moſt capacious Haven in all the World; from whence there was continuall paſſage into Dalmatia, Epyrus, Macedon, and the reſt of Greece. Here was it that Pompey took ſhip to flie from Cæſar, and Cæſar took ſhipping alſo to purſue after him, when to incourage the Pilot who was afraid of the ſtorm, he cryed out, Cæſarum vehis & fortunam ejus. It was firſt built by the Ætolians under the conduct of one Diomedes, and called Bronteſion, which in the Meſapian Tongue ſignifieth the horn or head of a Stag, which it much reſembleth, from whence the Latines gave it the name of Brunduſium. At this day it is but a mean Town, the Haven of it being ſo choked, that a Gally can very hardly enter. 5. Hydruntum, a very antient Town, and yet ſtill reaſonably well peopled, having a ſtrong Caſtle upon a Rock for its defence, and a capacious port for Traffick, It is now called Otranto, and is ſtill a place of ſuch importance, that the taking of it by Mahomet the great, An. 1481. put all Italie into ſuch a fear, that Rome was quite abandoned; not well inhabited again till the expulſion of the Turks, in the next year following.

6 PUGLIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Terra di Otranto; on the Weſt, with Abruzzo; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; on the South, with Calabria. It contains the whole Country called of old Apulia, from whence the Puglia of the Italians, and the Poüille of the French are to be derived.

Apulia. It is divided by Leander, into Apulia Peucetia, and Apulia Daunia, the reason of which names I am unresolved of. That of Peucetia some derive from Peucetius the Brother of Oenotrus, which may be probable enough; this being the first Country at which Oenotrus touched, when he brought his people into Italie. Bochartus, a great Enemy to all Traditions, will have it called Πευκετια ἀπὸ τῶν πεύκων, from that great plenty of Pitch which these Countries yeeld (as that word ignifieth in the Greek.) But as for that of Daunia, I have yet found no more probable conjecture of it, than that it should be called thus of Daunus, the sonne of Danae by Pilumnus, once the King of this Country; it being reported in the Legends of those elder times, that Danae being delivered of Perseus whom she had by Jupiter, was by her Father the King Acrisius, exposed to the mercy of the Seas; by which she was wafted with her young sonne to the coasts of this Province, here taken up by a poor Fisher, and by him carried to the Court, where the King became so enamoured of her, that he took her to Wife, and by her was Father to this Daunus. But Daunus had not long enjoyed it, on the death of his Father, when either by force or composition he was fain to leave it to Diomedes King of Ætolia, who at the end of the Trojan War, wherein he was a principall Actor, hearing of the libidinous courses of his Wife Ægiale abhorred the thought of living with her, and so came with his people to this Country, where he fixt his dwelling, and built the City of Argyripa, whereof more anon. But as for Daunus, though he was not able to keep the possession of this Country, yet he bequeathed his name unto it; and afterwards withdrawing into Latium with such of his subjects as were willing to follow his Adventures, he became there the chief or head of the Rutuli, and built among them the Town of Ardea, his chief seat at the comming of Æneas into Italie; betwixt whom, and Turnus the sonne of this Daunus, grew that deadly fewd, so celebrated in the Works of Virgil.

To proceed now in the description of this Province, in the full latitude thereof it comprehended also the Salentini, and other the inhabitants of the land of Otranto; for by no other names than those of Apulia and Calabria, was all the East part of Italie held by the Constantinopolitans; and by those names was it transferred on Otho the third of Germany, on his Mariage with Theophania, as before is sayd. But take it in the present bounds and acception of it, and it containeth the three Provinces of Bari, the Capitanate, and Pouille the plain, according to the subdivision made by King Alfonsus: Pouille comprehending the greatest part of Apulia Daunia, the rest thereof, which is only the command of the Hill Garganus, or the Mount St. Angelo, being called the Capitanate; and Bari comprehending all Peucetia. The people both of this Province and the land of Otranto, though in other things agreeing with the rest of this Kingdom, have a disease peculiar only to themselves, occasioned by the biting of a little Serpent, whiah they call a Tarantula, not curable. There are in the whole, besides the Villages and Towns unfortified, 126 Castles or walled places, and 13 Cities. The principall of which are, 1 Manfredonia, built and fortified by Manfred the bastard King of Naples and Cicilie, the better to assure these parts of his Kingdom; a stately and magnificent City, and the seat of the Arch-Bishop of Sipont; having a very safe harbour for Ships, and an impregnable Citadel for defence thereof. 2 Barlette, reckoned one of the 4 most noted Cities of Italie; the other three being Crema in Lombardy, Prato in Tuscany, and Fabrianum, now called Fabiano, in Marca Anconitana. 3 Bitontum, an Arch-Bishops See; one of which was a famous stickler in the Councill of Trent. 4 Asculum, or Ascoli, the Title of a Duke, called by the Antients Asculum Satrianum, to difference it from another of the same name in Anconitana. 5. Tranum an antient City, better built than peopled, for want of a commodious Haven. 6. Bari, a fair City, well inhabited, and seated in a very fruitfull soyl, which gives name to one part of the Country, as it is now divided. Here stood in former times the poor Village of Canna, ignobilis Apuliæ vicus, as it is in Florus; sed quæ magnitudine cladis emersit, but such a one as afterwards grew famous for the great victory which Annibal there got against Paulus Æmilius, and Terentius Varro the Romon Consulls, of whose Army he slew 42700. men upon the place. Which Victory had he husbanded as he should have done, he had utterly subverted the Estate of Rome; so that it was most truly (as most tartly) said by Maherbal, Generall of his Horse, Vincere scis Annibal, victoria uti nescis. In this Countrey also stood Venusia, whence Horace who was there born, is called Venusinus; And 2. Arpinum, the birth-place of M. Tullius that famous Orator.

Here also is Mount Garganus, (known by that name in the times of Virgil, now called Mount S. Angelo) one hundred and twenty miles in compass, defensible both by Art and Nature, insomuch as it is commonly the last place in the Realm of Naples, which is given up to the Invader. This evident by the keeping of it by the Greeks and Saracens for many yeers after the Normans had possessed themselves of the rest of the Countrey. Within the Captainship or command of this Fastness, besides many inferiour Towns and Villages, are, 1. The City of Troia, the Title of a Duke, and the See of a Bishop. 2. Luceria, a rich old City; and 3. Ascoli before remembred.

But of most note in this part of Apulia was the Town of Argyripa, or Argyroppa, as some would have it, founded by Diomedes in the skirts of this Mountain towards the See, and in that part of it then possessed by the Japyges near the land of Otranto, as now called. The site thereof so set down by Virgil in the 11 of the Æneid.

Iſles of Naples.

By which we alſo may conclude, that it took this name with reference to ſome Town of Ætolia, which was the native Country of Diomedes. For though I know that many of the antient Writers ſuppoſe it to have been firſt called Argos Hippium, with relation unto a famous City of that name in Peloponneſus, and after by contraction or corruption to be named Argyrippam; yet theſe words of Patria de nomine Gentis, do perſwade me otherwiſe: Diomedes having nothing to do in the Country of Argolis where that City ſtood, nor in the whole Demy-Iland of Peloponneſus, whereof Argolis was a part or Province. It was called alſo Diomedia, and Urbs Diomedis, becauſe of his foundation, and his Royall ſeat, after his fixing in this Country; but at the laſt it came to be called Arpi, and by that name was known in the time of the Roman greatneſs; now no where to be found but in the ruins of time, and the Records of Antiqnity.

But not to tarry longer on theſe matters of decayed Antiquity, that which is moſt obſervable in this Province for theſe latter times, is that the greateſt riches of it doth conſiſt in the Tribute of Cattell, worth 80000 Ducats yearly in the time of Guicciardine, and by him reckoned one of the faireſt Revenews of the Realm of Naples. Of which when the French could have no part, this Province, after the diviſion which they made with Ferdinand the Catholick (whereof more anon) being fallen to the Spaniard, they brake out into open War, and ſeeking thereby to improve their Patrimony, loſt their whole intereſs in this Kingdom.

The ISLES of NAPLES are either in the Adriatick and Tuſcan Seas, or in the Bay of Puteolis. In the Adriatick Sea, are the Ilands of Diomedes, right againſt Apulia, where it encountereth with Abruzzo, ſo called from Diomedes King of Ætolia, who after the end of the Trojan War (in which he was ſo great a ſtickler) ſettled himſelf in ſome part of Apulia; the principall whereof are St. Maries, St. Dominico, and Tremitana. 2 The Iland of Acates over againſt the Town of Gallipolis. 3 St. Andrews in the Bay of Tarentum; 4 and finally the two Ilands of Dioſcoros and Galypſo, over againſt the Cape of Lacinia now called Colonnes in the upper Calabria; of all which there is little famous. In the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas, are the Ilands of Pontia and Panditaria (now called Palmarde) as little famous as the other; ſave that the laſt is memorable in the Roman Stories for the confinement of Agrippina the wife of Germanicus, and mother of Caligula, by the appointment of the Emperor Tiberius Nero.

Thoſe in the Gulf or Bay of Puteoli are of better note. The principall whereof are 1 Iſchia, heretofore called Oenotris from its plenty of Wine wherewith it aboundeth to this day, as alſo with Allom, Sulphur, and moſt excellent Fruits. It is in compaſs 18 miles, and ſo begirt with Rocks and dangerous Cliffs, that it is acceſſible at one entrance onely, and that too fortified with a ſtrong and impregnable Citadell; and therefore choſen by King Ferdinand for his place of refuge, when he was outed of his Kingdom by Charles the 8. Here is alſo good plenty of Hares and Conies. 2 Prochita, now called Procita, about ſix miles in circuit, wherein are very wholſome Bathes, good ſtore of Conies, Hares, and Pheaſants; the ſhore repleniſhed with Fiſh, and the land with Fountains. John de Prochita, who plotted the Cicilian Veſpers, was once Lord of this place; but afterwards, for a reward of that ſervice, made Vice-Roy of Valentia, a Kingdom of Spain. 3 Caprea, a ſmall rocky Iland, having no Haven, nor convenient ſtation for Ships, but of a mild and temperate Air; much beautified by Auguſtus Caſar, in regard that an old ſapleſs tree upon his caſual landing here, did bud forth afreſh; and after that it was much honoured by his retirement from affairs of State; and as much diſhonoured by Tiberius his next Succeſſor, who withdrawing hither many times from his Court at Rome, made it the Theatre of his Cruelties and moſt filthy Luſts. It hath a little City of the ſame name, having a ſtrong Fortreſs, and a Biſhops See; and another Town called Anacapra, inhabited by Fiſhermen, and Ship-wrights belonging to the Navy of Naples. Into this Iland they uſed to confine offendors in former times, and ſometimes alſo at this day. 4 Ænaria, a ſmall Iland, given by Auguſtus to the Neapolitans, in exchange for Caprea, whoſe before it was.

There are few Nations under the Sun, who have ſuffered under more changes and alterations of State than the inhabitants of this Kingdom. For being at the firſt a mixture of ſeverall Nations, ſome of them preyed upon the others, till they were all ſubdued by the power of Rome. In the declining of her fortunes, they followed for the moſt part the Carthaginians, and took part with Annibal; and he being called home, they returned again to their old obedience. When Italie was ſubdued by the Gothes, it became ſubject to that people, as Sicil, and the reſt of thoſe Ilands did; and when the Lombards Lorded it in the Roman Provinces, all Naples fell into their hands except Apulia and Calabria, which the Greek Emperors having conquered from the Gothes with the reſt of Italie, kept (but with much difficulty) to themſelves. In the diviſion of the Empire betwixt Carolus Magnus and Irene, theſe two laſt Provinces only were aſſigned to the Conſtantinopolitans, the reſt to Charles and his Succeſſors: both outed of their ſeverall parts by the prevailing Saracens, under the conduct of Sabba, and other ſucceſſive Ge-neralls.

Naples. neralls. Theſe partly diſpoſſeſſed by the Emperour Otho the firſt and his Almain forces; and they again expelled by the Greeks and Saracens, joyning together againſt them as a common Enemy, who afterwards held bitter wars againſt one another for the ſole command. During theſe wars it happened that one Drangot a Gentleman of Normandy, having in the preſence of Duke Robert (the Father of William the Conqueror) ſlain one Repoſtel a Gentleman of like quality, to avoid the juſtice of the Prince, and the practices of Repoſtels kindred, fled into this Countrey, attended by ſuch of his followers, as either did depend upon his fortunes, or had been medlers in the Fray. Where being come, the Duke of Benevent, Vicegerent to the Eaſtern Emperor, took them into pay. Their entertainment being bruited in Normandy, and a report raiſed withall that the Greeks hearkened after men of valour and action, cauſed many private Gentlemen to paſs over the Alpes, and there to hew themſelves out a more proſperous fortune than formerly they had injoyed. The fortunate ſucceſs of which laſt Adventurers drew thither alſo Tancred, the Lord of Hauteville, who with his twelve ſonnes came into Apulia, A°. 1068. and in ſhort time not only drove the Saracens thence, but the Grecians alſo, as men that had broke Covenant with them in the diviſion of the Bootie. For William the ſonne of Tancred combining with Melorco, Governour of Apulia for the Greek Emperour, and with the Princes of Capua and Salern, men of power and honour, for the conqueſt of Sicil (which the Saracens then wholly held) agreed amongſt themſelves to divide the places conquered by them into four equall parts, one for each Adventurer. But when the Saracens were driven out, Melorco having new ſupplies ſent him out of Greece, ſeized on the poſſeſſion of the whole Iſland in the Emperors name. Which injury William cunningly diſſembled till Melorco's Forces were diſperſed, and then he ſuddenly ſet upon him; firſt took the City of Melfi, and after by degrees moſt of the other Towns and places which the Greeks held in Italie: of which both he and his Succeſſors kept poſſeſſion, by the Title of Dukes of Calabria only. Of theſe (though all of eminent vertue) there were two beſides this William, of ſpeciall fame, 1. Robert Guiſcard the third ſonne of Tancred, the moſt valiant Captain of his time, and chief eſtabliſher of the Normans power in Italie, to which he added in concluſion the Iſle of Sicil, together with the citie of Naples it ſelf, and all the Lands which lie betwixt it and Rome. 2. Bohemund the eldeſt ſonne of this Robert, who going with Godfrey of Bovillon and others of the Weſtern Chriſtians to the Holy Land, was for his ſignall merits inveſted with the Kingdom of Antioch, inherited by his children after his deceaſe.

But to proceed, this Guiſcard at his death, (but not without ſome wrong to the children of his Brother William, whom he had diſpoſſeſſed of all by the Popes Authority) gave Sicil, with the title of Earl to his ſonne Rogero; and his eſtates in Italy to his other ſonne William: who going to Conſtantinople to mary with the Emperors daughter, was outed of his part by his brother Roger; made not long after, by the Pope, the firſt King of this Familie.

The Kings of Naples of the Norman Line.

1125. 1 Roger, Earl of Sicil, created by Pope Anacletus 2d. King of both the Sicilies at the Town of Benevent; which City, in requitall of ſo great a favour, he reſtored again unto the Church, from which it had been taken (after the firſt Donation of it) by the German Emperors. 24.

1149. 2 William, the ſonne of Roger, who to aſſure himſelf of his Kingdoms, was content to take them as a gift from the hands of Pope Adrian the 4th. to be holden for ever in Fee of the Church of Rome. 21.

1170. 3 William II. ſonne of the former William, who left a daughter called Conſtance, who became a Nun. 26.

1196. 4 Tancred, the baſe ſonne of William the 2d. excluded his Siſter from the Crown, but was ſententially depoſed by Pope Celeſtine the 3d. who had an aim to get the Kingdom for himſelf. But when he ſaw that Tancred was too ſtrong for him, out of meer ſpight to be defeated of his purpoſe, he called in the Germans, the antient Enemies of his See, and gave the Lady Conſtance, then almoſt fifty yeers of age, in mariage unto Henry the 6th. 2.

1198. 5 Henry, the ſixt of that name, Emperor, and Duke of Schwaben, ſucceeded on his mariage with the Lady Conſtance. 4.

1202. 6 Frederick, ſonne of the Emperor Henry and Queen Conſtance, crowned at the age of three yeers, afterwards Emperor by the name of Frederick the 2d. He had to wife the daughter of John de Brenn, the titulary King of Hieruſalem, of which the Kings of Naples have ever ſince had the title of Kings, and in the rights of this Kingdom, the Kings of Spain.

1250. 7 Conrade, the ſonne of Frederick, King of Naples and Sicil, as alſo Emperour and Duke of Suevia, or Schwaben, poiſoned (as it was conceived) by his baſe brother Manfred. 4.

1254. 8 Muenfroy, or Manfred, baſe ſonne of Frederick, and Duke of Benevent, firſt governed the Kingdom as Protector unto Conradine the ſonne of Conrade, but after took it to himſelf againſt the will of Pope Urban the 4th. who being weary of the Germans called in Charles Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, brother to Lewis the 10th. of France: it being uſuall with the Popes (as Machiavel very well obſerveth) to call new men into Italie, and ſtir up new wars for their own ambition; not ſuffering any to poſſeſs that long which themſelves (through their weakneſs) could not hold, and practiſing the over-throw of thoſe very men, whom themſelves had raiſed to power and greatneſs. Naples.

The French Line.

1261. 9 Charles, Earl of Anjou and Provence, overcame King Manfred, and was after crowned by Pope Urban the 4th. who conditioned with him, that neither he nor his Succeſſors ſhould aſſume the Empire; and that they ſhould pay fifty thouſand Crowns per annum as a Rent to the Church. This Charles did alſo vanquiſh Conradine the ſonne of Conrade, the laſt of the royall houſe of Suevia, whom he cauſed to be beheaded at Naples. After which bloody Act, neither he nor any of his poſterity did either quietly or long injoy theſe Kingdoms: For in his own time Peter King of Aragon, clamed the Kingdom of Naples in right of Conſtance his wife, the daughter of Manfred, betwixt whom and Charles a ſingle combat was appointed to be fought in Bourdeaux, before King Edward the firſt of England, to decide the Controverſie. But whileſt Charles there expected him, he ſeized on Sicil, A°. 1281. This Charles reigned three and twenty yeers.

1284. 10 Charles II. ſonne of Charles the firſt, formerly priſoner in Sicil to Peter of Aragon, was ranſomned by the procurement of King Edward above-named for 30000. Marks. By Marie, daughter of Stephen, King of Hungary, he had fourteen children: the moſt pertinent of which (to our purpoſe) were Charles ſurnamed Martel, King of Hungary in right of his Mother; Robert King of Naples, John of Durazzo, and a daughter (whoſe name I finde not) maried to Charles, Earl of Valois, who in her right obtained the Earldom of Anjou. 26.

1310. 11 Robert, the ſecond ſonne of Charles the 2d. 32.

The Hungarian Line.

1371. 13 Charles III. ſonne to Lewis, and nephew of Prince John of Durazzo before mentioned, by the power of Lewis, King of Hungary, and the favour of Pope Urban the fift, was made King of Naples. He overthrew and killed in battell Duke Lewis of Anjou, his competitor, and after the death of King Lewis of Hungary, ſucceeded in that Kingdom alſo; but long he had not reigned therein, when poiſoned (as it was ſuppoſed) by the old Queen Mother. 15.

1386. 14 Ladiſlaus, ſonne of Charles the 3d. having a quarrell with the Pope, made a voyage Royall unto Rome, where he forced his entry, and was there triumphantly received: on which diſpleaſure the Pope called in Lewis the 2d. Duke of Anjou, who gave Ladiſlaus a great overthrow. Inſomuch, as Ladiſlaus uſed to ſay, that if Lewis had followed his victory the firſt day, he had been Maſter of his Kingdom and Perſon too; if the ſecond, of his Kingdom, but not of his Perſon: but not purſuing it till the third day, he failed of both. So in the end he was compelled to flye to Rome, and give over the Enterprize. 29.

1415. 15 Joane II. Siſter of Ladiſlaus, of as much levity, but not altogether of ſo ill a fame as the former Joane, obſerving the unproſperous ſucceſſes of the houſe of Anjou, ſhe adopted for her heir Alphonſo the fift of Aragon, who had ſome clame unto the Kingdom as the direct heir of Pedro, or Peter the 3d. and Conſtance the daughter of King Manfred ſpoken of before. But finding him to ſtand too much on his own right, and to be too forwards in taking a poſſeſſion of it before her death, ſhe revoked that Adoption doption, and made a new Grant of the Eſtate to Lewis the fourth, Duke of Anjou, and after his deceaſe to his Brother Rene, or Renatus; both vanquiſhed by the Aragonians.

The Aragonian line.

1434. 16 Alfonſo King of Aragon, partly by Conqueſt, and partly by Adoption, having got the Kingdom, left it well ſetled unto Ferdinand his Natural ſonne. 24.

17 Ferdinand the Baſe ſonne of Alfonſo (the lawfull ſonnes inheriting the Realm of Aragon, Sicil, &c.) ſucceeded in the Realm of Naples. 36.

1494. 18 Alfonſo II. ſonne of Ferdinand, in whoſe time the French began to aim at the Realm of Naples. This King and his Predeceſſors were of the Order of the Garter.

1494. 19 Ferdinand II. Sonne of Alfonſo the ſecond, outed of his Eſtate and Kingdom by Charles the eighth, ſonne of King Lewis the eleventh of France, whom Rene the laſt Duke of Anjou had made the ſole Heir of all his Titles and Poſſeſſion. And though Charles upon this Conqueſt was ſolemnly crowned, yet poſting back again into France before he had ſetled his affairs in this Kingdom, and having much diſcontented the chief men of Anjouvin Faction, he loſt it ſuddenly to the ſame Ferdinand from whom he had ſo ſuddenly won it.

1497. 20 Frederick II. brother of Alphonſo the ſecond, and Uncle of this laſt Ferdinand, ſucceeded him in his Eſtates; and was the ſixt King that had reigned in Naples within the compaſs of three years, that is to ſay, Ferdinand the firſt, Alfonſo the ſecond, Ferdinand the ſecond, Charles of France, the ſecond Ferdinand again, and then this Frederick. Finding himſelf betrayed by the Spaniards, ſubmitted himſelf to Lewis XII, King of France, and yeelded up his kingdom to him. And indeed what elſe could the poor Prince do, when he ſaw his own blood, and ſuch as had taken his Realm into their protection, conſpiring againſt him.

For when Charles made his paſſage towards Naples, Ferdinand the Catholique, ſent Gonſalvo, (who was afterwards for his valour ſurnamed the Great Captain) with ſome Forces to reſiſt the French Invaders: But when the French were expelled, Gonſalvo would not leave the Country, becauſe his Maſter had not as yet ſent for him. In the mean time it was agreed between Lewis of France, and this Ferdinand, that they ſhould joyntly ſet upon the Kingdom of Naples: and having won it, the French ſhould poſſeſs Abruzzo and Lavoro; the Spaniards, Puglia, and both Calabria's: That the firſt ſhould be entituled King of Naples; the other, Duke of Apulia. This Confederacy was kept ſecret till the French Forces were come to Rome, and Gonſalvo poſſeſſed (under pretence of defending it) of all Calabria. So that it was no marvell that they made themſelves Maſters of the Country. An Action in which the French dealt very unadviſedly, in bringing into Italie where he was before the ſole Moderator, another King as great as himſelf, to whom as to his Rivall, his Enemies might have recourſe on all occaſions; and the Spaniard as unnaturally, in betraying for the moity of a Kingdom, a Prince of his own bloud, under pretence and promiſe of ſuccours. But the two Kings did not continue long in good terms of Partnerſhip. For the Spaniards being more intent upon their advantages, ſoon picked a quarrell with the French, within two or three years drave them out of all, and to this day keep it; though both this Lewis, and his ſucceſſors Francis the firſt, and Henry the ſecond, have divers times, and with great effuſion of blood, attempted the recovery of it.

The Spaniſh or Caſtilian Line.

1503. 22 Ferdinand III. ſurnamed the Catholick, King of Caſtile, Arragon, &c. and Naples. 13.

1516. 23 Charles V. Emperor, King of Spain, and the IV of that name in Naples. 43.

1558. 24 Philip the 2d of Spain, and th firſt of Naples. 40.

1598. 25 Philip the 2d of Naples, 3d of Spain. 22.

1621. 26 Philip the 3d of Naples, 4. of Spain.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or, a File of three Labels, Gules.

The Revenues of it are two Millions and a half of Crowns; whereof 20000 are due to the Pope for Chief-rent; and the reſt ſo exhauſted in maintaining Garriſons upon the Natives, and a ſtrong Navy againſt the Turks, that the King of Spain receiveth not a fourth part de clare.

The Kingdom of SICILIA.

BEfore we can come into the Ile of Sicilie, we muſt firſt croſs that branch of the MEDITERRANEAN Sea, which is called the Faro, or Streight of Meſſana, where the paſſage is ſo ſtrait and narrow, that it exceedeth not in breadth a mile and an halt. In other parts, as the Sea grows wider, it is diſtant from the main land of Italie neer 200 miles, that is to ſay, from the Town of Drepanum in Sicilie, to the City of Napler. As for the Mediterranean Sea, it is ſo called becauſe it interlaceth the middeſt of the earth, extending from the Streights of Gibraltar on the Weſt, to the Coaſt of Paleſtine on the Eaſt, and ſo dividing Africk both from Europe and Aſia Minor. In the Scriptures, Joſhua 1.4. it is called by the name of Mare magnum, or the great Sea; great in compariſon of the dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee, lying on the other ſide of the land of Paleſtine, but ſmall enough if compared to the Ocean, with which in probability the Writer of that Book might have no acquaintance. Beſides which generall name of the Mediterranean, it hath alſo many particular names, as the Adriatick, Ægean, Ionian; and Carpathian Sea, where it bordereth upon Greece, and Anatolia; Mare Lybicum, where it runneth by the ſhores of Africk: with reference to Italie called in ſome places, Mare Tyrrhenum, in others Mare Liguſticum; in ſome parts Mare Siculum, and in others Mare Sardoum, Lybicum, &c. And as the Chameleon is ſaid to apply it ſelf to the colour of the neareſt adjacent body; ſo this Sea taketh its particular denominations from the neereſt ſhores. Theſe Seas are alſo called by ſome modern Writers, in imitation of the French, by the name of the Levant, or the Seas of the Levant; becauſe in reſpect of France, Spain, Britain, Germany, &c. they lie towards the Eaſt; the word Levant ſignifying in the French, a riſing up after ſleep, and more eſpecially the Sun-riſing. The principall Ilands of this Sea which relate to Italie (for of others we ſhall ſpeak in their proper places) are thoſe of Sicil, Sardinia, Corſica, and ſome Iſles adjoyning unto theſe.

SICILIE, environed round with the lower, or Tyrrhenian Sea, contains ſeven hundred miles in compaſs, and is ſuppoſed to have been joyned to Italie in former times, being then a Peninſula, or Deny-Iland, ſuch as Peloponneſus, and joyned unto the Continent by as narrow an Iſthmus.

The ſeparating of it from the main Land of Italie, is by the Poets aſcribed to Neptune, who with his three-forked Mace or Tridens broke it off from the land in favour of Jocaſtus the ſonne of Æolus, that ſo he might inhabit there with the greater ſafety, being inviroued round with waters. Which though it be a Fable or Poeticall fiction, yet with ſome help from the Mythologiſts may be made a ſtory. For if by Æolus and Neptune we underſtand Winds and Seas, it intimates that it was divided from the reſt of Italie, either by the fury of the Waves, or by the violence of ſome Earthquakes, to which this Iland is ſtill ſubject, which might in time conſume and wear away the Earth. Nor want there very good reaſons for this ſuppoſition; as, 1. The narrowneſs of the Streight, exceeding not a mile and a half, inſomuch as at the taking of Meſſana by the Carthaginians, many of the people ſaved themſelves by ſwimming over this ſtreight into the oppoſite parts of Italie; 2dly. the ſhallowneſs of it, being found upon a diligent ſounding, not to be above eight fathom deep. Then 'tis obſerved, that the land on both ſides is very brittle, full of caves and chinks made in it by the working of the Sea, on this ſeparation; and that on the Italian coaſt where the ſtreight is narroweſt, there ſtands a City of old called Rhegium, which ſignifieth a breach or a cutting off, from the Greek word Ῥήγνυμι, which ſignifies to break off, or violently to pull aſunder, and is ſuppoſed to be ſo called upon this occaſion. And indeed the violence of the Sea is ſo great and dangerous in this narrow channell, ſo ſubject unto bluſtering winds iſſuing out of the hollow caverns of the earth, that the breaking off of this Iland from the reſt of Italie is a thing moſt credible. Which dangerous nature of the paſſage, being alſo full of Rocks, and unſafe by reaſon of the Whirl-pools, occaſioned it to be called by Florus the Hiſtorian, Fabuloſis infame monſtris fretum, chiefly ſo called with reference to Scylla and Charybdis, of which ſo many fabulous things are reported by the antient Poets. Charybdis is a Gulf or Whirl-pool on Sicily ſide, which violently attracting all veſſells that come too nigh it, devoureth them, and caſteth up their wrecks at the ſhore of Tauromeni, not far from Catina. Oppoſite to this in Italie, ſtandeth the dangerous Rock Scylla, at the foot of which many little Rocks ſhoot out, on which the water ſtrongly beating, make that noiſe which the Poets feign to be the barking of dogs. The paſſage between theſe two being to unskilfull Mariners exceeding perillous, gave beginning to the Proverb;

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.

Who ſeeks Charybdis for to ſhun,
Doth oftentimes on Scylla run.

But there are other things which made Sicilie famous in old times, beſides theſe two, as viz. the puniſhment of the Giant Enceladus, for his attempt againſt the Gods: the frequent burnings of Ætna (under which he is fabled to be ſhut up) being ſuppoſed to proceed from his ſulphurous breath. Secondly, the birth of Ceres in this Iſle; and Thirdly, the Rape of Proſerpine. To theſe two laſt the Iſle was conſecrated in thoſe days; to Ceres, in regard ſhe firſt taught the people to ſow Corn, whence the word Ceres is often uſed in the Poets to ſignifie Bread, and other necessary provisions for life, as Sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus: To Proserpine, because bestowed upon her by Pluto, to please her after the Ravishment committed on her.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, the longest day being 13 hours and an half. And was once called Trinacria, because it shoots forth into the Sea with three Capes or Promontories: viz. 1 Pelorus, now Capo de Faro, to the North; 2 Pachinus, now Cape Passero, to the West; and 3 Lilybæum, now Capo Boii, or Cabo Coro, to the South. This last looketh towards Carthage, and the shores of Africk, from which distant 180 miles. And of this Strabo doth affirm, that a man of a quick and strong sight, getting up into a Watch-tower that stood in this Cape, descryed a Fleet setting sayl out of the Haven of Carthage; and told the Lilybitanians their bigness and number. That this is true, I dare not say: for besides the unlikelihood of kenning at so great a distance, we are taught by Philosophy, that the Sea being of an orbicular form, swelleth it self into the fashion of a round Turret or Hill, till it put bound to the eye-sight. From these three corners, this Country was (as we have said) called Trinacris or Trinacria, according to that of Ovid. Terra tribus scopulis vastum procurrit in æquor;

Trinacris à positu, nomen adepta, loci.

An Iland with three corners braves the main,
And thence the name of Trinacris doth gain.

The first Inhabitants that we find to have dwelt in this Country, are the huge Gyants so often mentioned in the Odysses of the divine Poet Homer, called Lastrygones and Cyclops; of which last rank was the so much famoused Polyphemus, who with so much humanity entertained Ulysses and his companions. These were afterward rooted out by the Sicani, a people of Spain, who called it Sicania. As for the name of Sicilia, some derive it from Siculus, a supposed King of Spain, who is fabled to have conquered this Country; but the truth is, it came from the Siculi, who being by Evander and his Arcadians driven out of Latium, came into this Iland: to which, having mastered the Sicani, and driven them from the West and the Northern part, to the East and South, they left their name. At their first landing they built the City of Zancle, called afterwards Messana, together with Nea, Hybla, Catana, and Leontium. After them came another Italian people named the Morgetes, being driven thence by the Oenotrians; and sate down in that part of the Iland where stood the City of Morgentum, built by them at their first arrivall. The first of all the Greeks who set footing in it (not to say any thing of the coming of Minos hither in the pursuit of Dedalus, having more in it of the Fiction than Historical truth) were the Chalcidians, a people of the Ile Eubœa, now called Negropont, who built the City of Naxos; and after them Archias of Corinth with his fellow Adventurers, by whom Syracuse was either first built, or very much beautified and repaired. Next them the Rhodians and Cretans sent some Colonies hither, the first founders of Gela, and after of the renowned City of Agrigentum: And not long after a new Plantation sent from Sparta built Heraclea. The Citizens of Megaris, another state of Greece, sent a Colony also, who built Selinus. And so did those of Messene also, who taking the Town of Zancle from the Siculi, new built or beautified it, and gave unto it so repaired the name of Messana. Nor is it to be thought, that the Tyrians and Phœnicians, being so great undertakers of publick businesses, and very powerfull in shiping, would sit still when so fair a booty did invite their industry; who seising on the Promontories of Pachinus and Lilybæum, and some of the adjoyning Ilands, did fortifie them for the better securing of the Trade which they had in Sicilie. But all these severall Adventurers having severall interesses, joyned not together in the work of an absolute Conquest; but planting themselves only on the Sea-shores, altered not the name by which they found it called at their coming thither.

The people are ingenious, eloquent, and pleasant, but withall very unconstant, and so full of talk, that from thence came the Proverb, Gerra Sicula. They are also said to be of a very envious, suspitious, and distrustfull nature, uncapable of injuries, and vehement in pursuit of revenge, as appears by that great slaughter which they made of the French; yet withall courteous enough to strangers, and Parasyticall enough to their superiors. They have been famous heretofore for many notable inventions, Aristotle ascribing to them the Art of Oratory, and first making of Pastorall Eclogues; Plinie of Clocks (or rather of Hour-glasses; for Clocks were but a late invention, and that of the Flemmings) and Plutarch of Military Engines; which last were brought by Archimedes unto great perfection.

The Christian Faith was first preached here by some of the Disciples of St. Peter, whom he sent hither at his first comming to Rome; of which Pancratius (whom we call commonly St. Pancrace) is sayd to have been the first Bishop of Tauromenium, and Marcianus of Syracuse. They are now generally of the Religion authorised by the Popes of Rome; that of the Greek Church being rather connived at than allowed of, in the Communion whereof here are thought to be ten thousand soules, but looked on by the rest as schismaticall people. For the most part they use the Italian Language, but very much altered, the Greek, Arabian, Norman, French, and Spanish tongues, to which Nations they have been severally subject since the time of the Romans. The totall number of the people is thought to be about a Million and a half.

The soyl is incredibly fruitfull in Wine, Oyl, Honey, Minerals of Gold, Silver, and Allom, together with plenty of Salt and Sugar; which last commodity the Natives sell in the Canes unto the Venetians, and buy it again of them when it is refined, and thereby letting strangers go away away with the best part of their gains; as generally they do in all other Merchandize, which they permit to be exported, rather than put themselves to the trouble of Trafficking abroad in Foren Nations; there are also Gems of Agates, and Emeralds. It yeeldeth also great store of the richest Silks, which grow plentifully about Messana; variety of most excellent and delicious fruits, both for taste and colour, with such abundance of all sorts of Grain, that it was called in old times Horreum Romani populi, or the Granary of the Roman Empire; and doth now furnish some parts of Italie, Spain, and Barbary, besides Malta, and the adjacent Isles, with that which she can spare of her superfluities. Nay Tully doth not only call it the Granary and store-house of the City of Rome, in regard of Corn, but adds, that it was accounted for a well-furnished Treasury, as being able of it self without charge of the State, to cloath, maintain, and furnish the greatest Armie, with Leather, Corn, and Apparrell. And if Diodorus Siculus may be credited in it, he telleth us, that about Leontium and some other places, Wheat did grow of it self, without any labour of the Husbandman. At this day in some parts of the Isle, the soyl is so exceeding Fruitfull, that it yeelds unto the Husbandman an hundred measures of Corn for one. And certainly the Corn of this Country must needs yeeld a wonderfull increase, the King of Spain receiving an hundred thousand Crowns yearly for the Custom of Wheat. In this Country is the Hill Hybla, so famous for Bees and Honey, near which there was a City of the same name also, which afterwards was called Megara. And here is also the Hill Ætna, now called Mongibal, which continually sendeth forth flames of Fire, to the astonishment of all beholders. The most famous conflagrations in the former times were presently before the breaking out of the War in Sicil, which the Roman Writers call Bellum servile; not pacified but by the slaughter of 70000 of the Slaves which had taken Arms against Rome; and shortly after the death of Julius Cæsar, portending those proscriptions and bloody Wars which did after follow. And to this day such extraordinary eruptions of it are accounted ominous. The Hill it self is of that height, that it is ten miles from the top to the bottom, and may be easily discerned by Saylers at an hundred miles distance; the lower parts thereof being very fruitfull, the middle shaded with Woods, and the top covered with Snow a great part of the year, notwithstanding the frequent vomiting of flames and cinders. But these eruptions of fire are not now so ordinary as they have been formerly; the matter which gave fuell to it being wasted by continuall burnings; so that the flames which issue hence are hardly visible but by night, though the smoak shew it self the most part of the day. And when it doth break out, which is commonly once in three or four years, it falleth in great flakes on the vales adjoyning to the destruction of the Vintage, and great loss of the Country. But that, they say is recompensed by the plenty of the following years; the ashes thereof so batling and enriching the soyl, that both the Vines and Corn-fields are much bettered by it. And this report I am the apter to believe, in regard we find by late experience here amongst our selves, that the Turf taken from the ground and burnt to ashes, and so spread on land and ploughed into it, doth yeeld a very great improvement, even to barren soyls. Which kind of Husbandry is called the Devonshiring of land, because there first used; but in Hampshire it was called, as I remember (having been unfortunately too long a stranger there) by the name of burning and beaking. But to return again to Ætna. Into this fiery Furnace the Philosopher Empedocles cast himself, that he might be reputed a God. Sicil.

——— Deus immortalis haberi
Dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem frigidus Ætnam
Insilnit ——— as Horace in his Book de Arte Poetica.

Empedocles to be a God desires,
And cast himself into th' Ætnean fires.

The reason of these fires is the abundance of Sulphure and Brimstone, contained in the bosome of the hill, which is blown by the wind, driving in at the chaps of the Earth, as by a pair of bellows. Through these chinks also there is continually more fuell added to the fire, the very water adding to the force of it: as we see that water cast on coales in the Smiths Forge, doth make them burn more ardently. The reason of this flame is thus set down by Ovid:

Ista bitumineæ rapiunt incendia vires,
Luteaq; exiguis ardescunt sulphura flammis.
Atq; ubi terra cibos alimentaq; debita flammæ
Non dabit, absumptis per longum viribus ævum;
Naturaq; suum nutrimen denique edaci;
Non feret Ætna famem, desertaq; deseret ignes.

A rotten mould these fiery flames begin,
And clayie brimstone aids that fire within:
Yet when the slimie soyl consumed, shall Yeeld no more food to feed the fire withall:
And Nature shall restrain her nourishment,
The flame shall cease, hating all famishment.

Under this Hill some Poets feign the Gyant Enceladus to have been buried, as before is sayd, whose hot breath fired the mountain lying on his face. Others suppose it to be the shop of Vulcan and the Cyclops; and the gross Papists take it for the place of Purgatory; all alike infallible.

Sicil. The principall Rivers hereof, 1. Taretta, antiently. called Terias. 2. Himera, neighboured by Mount Hybla, much famed for honey. 3. Isaurus. 4. Hypsa. 5. Acasius, of great note for its precious stones, none of them much observable for length or bredth, but that defect supplied by the commodiousnes of Bays and Creeks, which are very frequent in this Iland, and by the benefit of Fountains and fresh-water Lakes. Most memorable amongst these, 1. The Lake called Palicoro, (now Naptbia) which for three moneths doth cast forth water very hot, but of very ill smell; of which there is mention made in Plinie by the name of Ephimia. 2. A Fountain neer the foot of Ætna, the water whereof is sharp like Vinegar, and sometimes boyleth; into which a piece of cloth cast, being before steeped in water mixed with gall, becomes suddenly black. 3. Another Fountain neer Drepanum, the water of which assoon as drunk, provoketh loosnes. All which effects proceed from that sulphureous and bituminous matter, of which the whole Iland is exceeding full. 4. Arethusa, of greater fame among the Antients than all the rest, especially in that the River Alpheus (a River of Greece) having swallowed up one hundred and forty lesser streams, and losing it self under the ground, is thought to empty it self into it. The thing affirmed by Seneca and Strabo both, and seems to be sufficiently proved by the severall instances of a wooden dish or cup lost in the River Alpheus, and found rising up in this River, and by the leaves of certain trees growing on the banks of that Greek River, and swimming on this in great abundance, there being none of these trees in all Sicil. Dicitur Alpheus (saith Mela) se non consociare pelago, sed subter maria, terrasq; depressus, huc agere alvenm, atq; hic se rursus extollere.

This Iland is famous for the worthy Scholars she once produced, viz. Æschylus, the first Tragedian of fame, who being bald through age, once walked in the fields, where by chance an Eagle taking his bald pate for a white Rock, let a shell-fish fall on it, of that bignes, that it beat out his brains. 2. Diodorus Siculus, that famous Historian. 3. Empedocles, the first Inventer of Rhetorick, and his Fellow Gorgias. 4. Euclide, the textuary Geometrician, who taught in Megaris. 5. Archimedes, a most worthy Mathematician, the first Author of the Sphere, of which instrument he made one of that art and bignes, that one standing within, might easily perceive the severall motions of every celestiall orb. He made also divers military engines, which in the siege of Syracusa sorely vexed the Romans, and was at last slain in his study by a common souldier in the sack of the town, to the great grief of the Generall Marcellus. 6. Epichmus, the first Inventer of Comedies; and 7. Theocritus, the first Author of Pastorall Eclogues. In the later times Nicolas, Abbot of Palermo, a learned Canonist, and Cardinall of the Church of Rome, commonly called Panormitanus, was of greatest fame.

In Plinies time there were reckoned in this Iland seventy two Cities, of which only twelve are now remaining. The whole divided at this time into three small Provinces, that is to say, 1. Vall de Noto, 2. Mazara, and 3. Mona; to which the Ilses adjoyning may add a fourth.

1. VALLIS DE NOTO taketh up the Eastern parts of the Iland. The chief Cities of which are, 1. Syracusa, once the Metropolis of the whole Iland, and a most flourishing Common-wealth; It was (as Tully reports) the greatest and goodliest City of all that were possess'd by the Greeks, for situation very strong, and of an excellent prospect, from every entrance both by Sea and Land. The Port thereof which had the Sea on both sides of it, was for the most part invironed with beautifull buildings, and that part of it which was without the City, was on both sides banked up, and sustained with very fair walls of Marble. Nor was it only the goodliest City of the Greeks, as Tullie tells us, but the greatest also of the world, as is said by Strabo, by whom it is affirmed, that without the outmost wall thereof (for it was invironed with three walls) it contained one hundred and eighty Furlongs in compass, which of our measure cometh to eighteen miles, it being compounded of four Towns made up into one, that is to say, Insula (or the Isle) Acradina, Neapolis, and Tyche, besides the Fort called Hexapla, which commanded the rest; the greatness of all which, the ruins and foundations of it do still demonstrate. It standeth North of the Promontory called Pachinus, and was built by Archias of Corinth, about the time of Jotham King of Judah, who being for an unnaturall rape committed on a young Gentleman, banished his Country, together with his Friend and Companion Miscellus, consulted with the Oracle at Delphos, how and in what place they should dispose of themselves. The Oracle demanding whether they most affected wealth or health, Miscellus answered health, and Archias wealth; and thereupon the former was directed to setle himself at Cortona in Italie, and the other here. Nor did the Oracle deceive him in his expectation, this Town by reason of its beautifull and commodious Port, proving of greatest trade and wealth next to Carthage it self in those times of the world. It was the custom of this Town when any of the Citizens grew too potent, to write his name in an Olive leaf, which being put into his hand, did without more ado condemn him to banishment for five years, and was called Petalisme, from the Greek word [illegible] signifying a leaf; yet could not this device so much secure them in the possession of their so much desired Freedom, but that this City fell oftener into the power of Tyrants, than any one City in the world. That which is now remaining of it, is the work of Augustus, who after a second destruction of it in the time of Pompey, sent a Colonie hither, and built upon the Isle and the parts next to it. But now the whole Isle (Ortygia the Antients called it) is taken up with a very strong Castle, the whole City alſo being very well walled, and held by a Garriſon of Spaniards. 2. Noto, which gives name to this whole Diviſion. A City which heretofore contended with Syracuſe in point of greatneſs; ſituate on a very high Rock, unacceſſible on all ſides but by one narrow paſſage; and having under the Cape of Paſſari a very fair and capacious Harbour, the Key of Sicil on that ſide. 3. Auguſta, ſituate on the ſhore alſo, and of ſo large a Haven that it could never be fortified. 4. Caſtro Giovanni, a Town of about four thouſand Families, ſituate in a wholeſom air, and a fruitfull ſoyl, which they hold to be the very Navell and exact middle of the Iland. It is alſo much prized for mines of moſt excellent Salt. 5. Lentini, famous for its Lake, whoſe fiſhing is farmed for eighteen thouſand Crowns yeerly. It was antiently called Leontium, and ſtood ſomwhat North of Syracuſa, with which continually in war, either to preſerve their own Liberties, or get the Soveraignty of the other. 6. Enna, a midland Town, whence Pluto is ſaid to have raviſhed Proſerpine: In after times the dwelling of that Syrus Ennus, who ſtirred up the Roman Slaves againſt their Lords, and having broke open the common priſons, and received all ſuch as came unto him, patched up an Army of forty thouſand. This war the Roman Writers call Bellum Servile, ended at laſt, but with no ſmall difficulty, by the valour and good fortune of P. Rupilius. Sicil

2. MAZARA containeth all the Weſt parts of the Iland. The chief Cities whereof, 1. Agrigentum, now called Gergenti, famous for Phalaris the Tyrant, and his torturing Perillus in a Brazen Bull, which he had made for the deſtruction and torture of others. Of which aptly Ovid.

——Nec enim lex iuſtior ulla eſt
Quam necis Artifices arte perire ſua.
Moſt juſt it is, a man ſhould be tormented
With that which firſt his cruell wit invented.

It was ſaid antiently of the people of this City, that they built as if they ſhould never dye, and eat as if they were ſure to live no longer. 2. Palermo, antiently called Panormus, and then a Colony of the Phœnicians, now the chief City of Sicil, and the ſeat of the Spaniſh Vice-Roy. Situate on the Weſt Cape of the Iland looking towards Sardinia, beautified with large ſtreets, delicate buildings, ſtrong walls, and magnificent Temples. It hath no naturall Port appertaining to it, (Drepanum ſerving antiently as the Port thereof:) but of late there is an Haven forced out by a mighty Pierre; a work of vaſt expence, and worthy of the greatneſs of Rome. It is alſo an Arch-biſhops See, and an Univerſity. 3. Monreal, commonly called Motreal, famous for the Church, the Archbiſhops See. It is called in Latine Mons Regalis. 4. Drepanum, now called Trapani, ſituate on a Promontory thruſting into the Sea, not far from that of Lilybæum, a Town well fortified, in regard of the ill neighbourhood of the Moors, who do often pillage on theſe coaſts, and having the command of a very fair Port. The Inhabitants of this place are ſaid to be the beſt Seamen of Sicil. 5. Mazara, which gives name unto all this Vale, ſituate South of Lilybæum, and not far from Selinus. 6. Eryx, ſituate on a mountain over-looking the Sea, ſaid by the Antients to have took this name from Eryx the ſonne of Venus, ſlain here by Hercules: memorable in thoſe elder times for being the Seat of K. Aceſtes, who ſo kindly entertained Æneas and his wandring Trojans; and a magnificent Temple in which Venus was worſhipped, who from hence was called Erycina; as ſive tu mavis Erycina rides, in the Poet Horace. This was the laſt Town which the Carthaginians held in Sicil, on the ſurrendry whereof by Amilcar the Father of Annibal, at the end of the firſt Punick War, it was conditioned by the Romans, amongſt other things, that the Carthaginians ſhould relinquiſh all the clame or title which they had to any part of this Iland: which thereby fell unto the Romans (the State of Syracuſa excepted onely.) Who, whatſoever colour they were pleaſed to put upon that action, were principally tempted to it by ambition and covetouſneſs. And therefore in my minde Florus ſtates it rightly, who ſaith, that it was undertaken ſpecie quidem juvandi Socios, re autem ſollicitante præda; i.e. under pretence of aiding the Mamertines, who had put themſelves into their protection, but in plain terms to get poſſeſſion of the Iland which lay fit for Italie. Now and long ſince a ruin onely, the place on which it ſtood being called Mount S. Julian. 7. Segeſta, on the Sea-ſide, not far from Eryx, neer unto which the Trojan Ladies weary of their many long and dangerous voyages, and fearing to go again to Sea, burnt the Fleet of Æneas, on which occaſion it was built. Peopled at firſt by ſuch of the more old and feeble Trojans, (Longa voſq; ſenes, & feſſas aquore matres, as the Poet hath it) who choſe rather to fix their dwelling here, than to follow the fortunes of Æneas in his queſt of Italie. Called then Aceſta, in honour of King Aceſtes ſpoken of before, part of whoſe Kingdom it was made; afterwards Egeſta, from Ægeſtus one of Trojan race, born here, by whom it was repaired and beautified; and at laſt Segeſta.

3. MONA lieth on the North-Eaſt of the Iland, oppoſite unto Vallis de Noto. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nicoſia, in the midland. 2. Milaſe, on the Northern Promontory. 3. Meſſina, a City of great ſtrength and beauty, juſt oppoſite to Rhezo in Italie. It was the firſt Town which the Romans had in this Iland, being put into their hands by the Mamertines, a Troop of Souldiers brought thither out of Campania for defence of the City, who finding themſelves too ſtrong for the Citizens, made themſelves Maſters of the place; but being withall too weak to hold it, choſe rather to ſurrender it to the Romans, than to its true and proper Owners. Hence Sicil. the beginning of the first war betwixt Rome and Carthage. A City it is at this time of the most beautifull building of any in Sicil, and peopled by the wealthiest sort both of Merchants and Gentlemen, who live here in great pleasure (if not voluptuousness) as having plenty of all necessary provisions, fruits of all kinds, delicious wines, and snow to moderate and qualifie the heats thereof, at cheaper rates than any elsewhere in the Countrey. On the West side there stands a strong Citadell highly mounted and well Garrisoned, which commands the Town, and not far off a very high Lanthorn, where lights are kept burning all night long for the direction of such Mariners as are to pass those dangerous Streights, which from this Phare or Watch-Tower, is called commonly the Phare of Messana. The Haven of this Town is the fairest of Sicil, whose entrances are so strongly sconced and bulwarked, that the people let their Gates (in derision of the Turks) stand alwayes open. It is also an Archbishops See.

4. Catina, so often vexed by Dionysius the Tyrant of Syracuse: more antient than beautifull; seated on the North side of a great (but hollow) Bay, not easily approached by ships, and therefore neither held by any Garrison, nor much Traded by Merchants; the riches of the place consisting principally in the fruitfulness of the Soil, the habitation of many of the Gentry, and by being a small University. It was once a Colonie of the Naxians. And so was also Taurominum, the first Town of note in this part of the Iland, called sometimes from its Founders Naxos, but now Thermino, a ruine onely of what was in the former dayes, a place by nature of great strength, but over-topped by Syracusa and Messana, betwixt which it standeth. It was in this part of the Countrey that the Cyclops dwelt, there being three little rocky Ilands (now not inhabited) not far from this Town, which for a long time were called Cyclopum Scopuli.

IV. On the West part of Sicil lie the ÆOLIAN or Vulcanian Ilands, heretofore onely seven, and all almost of equall bigness, now eleven in number. The first name derived from Æolus, once Lord of them, who being well skilled in divining from what coast the winds would blow, (which he conjectured by the smoke ascending from them) occasioned the Poets to make him the God of the Winds. The other is derived from Vulcan, the God of Fire, by reason of the continuall flames of fire from thence evapourating in those elder dayes. But now the matter of these flames being wasted in long tract of time, there is onely one of them which burneth, now called STROMBOLO, by some Writers Strongyle, from the roundness of it. An Iland of about ten miles compass, but such as seems to be no other than a large round Mountain. Out of the top whereof issueth continually a flame like a burning Beacon, easily discernable far off, but at nights especially: a place so full of horrour to the neighbouring Ilanders, that they and many others of the Romish Catholicks conceive it to be Hell it self; and yet in those parts where the rage of the fire offendeth not, it is of a very fruitfull soyl, and apt for tillage.

2. But the fairest and best peopled of those Ilands, is that of LIPARA, some ten miles in circuit, (from whence the rest are called the Liparean Isles) so named from Lipara the chief Town, said to be built in the time of Josiah King of Judah; the See of a Bishop, under the Archbishop of Messina. The Iland generally fruitfull, well furnished with Allom, Sulphur, and Bitumen, and some hot medicinall Bathes, which are much frequented; and from thence called Thermessa by the antient Writers. It was formerly of so great wealth, that falling into the displeasure of Agathocles (then the Tyrant of Syracuse) they were able to buy their peace of him at the sum of one hundred Talents of Gold; which sum they had no sooner paid, but the Tyrant for a farewell robbed their very Temples. Unprosperous in his Actions always after that adventure. Nor sped it better with the Turks, who in the yeer 1544. laid the Countrey desolate; in which condition it remained till Charles the fift replenished it again with Spaniards, and fortified it very strongly against all invasions.

3. Not far off lieth another of these Ilands, now called FAVOGNANA, or Fauciana, but antiently Ægusa, conceived to be the same which Livie, and Florus call Ægates; in which there is a fair and capacious Bay able to receive the greatest Navies, and neer to which Lutatius Catulus the Consul gave the Carthaginians their last blow at Sea, which drew along with it the surrendry of Eryx, and the loss of Sicil. Dedyme, Ericosa, Eunymos, and Phinirusa, four other of these Ilands, but of lesser note, I pass over willingly, and make hast to

4. HIERO, the 7th. and last of these Ilands of any consideration, and the eigth in tale, called also Vulcania, in which Vulcan was worshipped; said to have first appeared above the water at such time as Scipio African died. A barren, stony, and uninhabited place, by reason of the fires which formerly have flamed so hideously (especially in the yeer 1444.) that it made not only the rest of these Ilands but all Sicilie tremble. Neer unto this Isle was fought the first Navall fight betwixt Rome and Carthage. Before which time the Romans had never used the Seas, as being totally imployed in the conquest of Italie; insomuch that when they had built their Gallies they were fain to exercise their men in rowing, by placing them on two Seats neer the water with Oars in their hands. Which notwithstanding, having devised an Engine like a Grapling-hook, they so fastened the Adverse Fleet unto them, that the whole fight seemed a Land-battell fought upon the Sea. The victory fell unto the Romans, C. Duilius the Consul then commanding in Chief, and was honoured with the first Navall Triumph that was ever solemnized at Rome.

After

After this Iland was once known to the Greeks, they ſent from all their chief Cities ſeverall Colonies, who planted in the Sea-coaſts of the Country, as before we noted. But ſo as they never united themſelves in a body together, but had their ſeverall eſtates and particular ends, whereby they came to be divided into many factions, and at laſt made themſelves a prey to as many Tyrants. Phalaris lording it at Agrigentum, Panetius at Leontium, Gelon at Syracuſe, Cleander at Gela; and when one Faction grew too weak to reſiſt the other, they called in ſeverall Forein Nations to abet their quarrel. For on this ground the Carthaginians were firſt called into Sicilie by the Meſſenians againſt the Agrigentines, and on the ſame was managed here a great part of the Peloponneſian wars; the Athenians ſiding with the Leontines, and the Spartans with he Syracuſans: in which the whole power of Athens was broken by Sea and Land, and their two Generals Nicias and Demoſthenes murdered in priſon. But becauſe Syracuſe was a Citie of the greateſt authority, and of greateſt influence over the reſt of Sicilie, we ſhall more punctually inſiſt on the State and affairs thereof; the government of which at firſt was popular, as it was in moſt of the Greek Colonies, according to the platforms which they brought from home; and was but newly altered to the Ariſtocraticall, when Gelon made himſelf King of it, about 26 years after the expulſion of the Tarquins at Rome, whom with as many as ſucceeded in the Royal dignity, take along as followeth. Sicil.

The Tyrants or Kings of Syracuſe.

A. M.

3465. 1 Gelon, the Prince or Lord of Gela, taking advantage of the quarrels in Syracuſa betwixt the Magiſtrates and people, made himſelf Maſter of the Citie, and was choſen King. A valiant and prudent Prince, by whom 150000 Carthaginians were ſlain in battle for their welcome into Sicil. 7.

3472 2 Hiero, the brother of Gelon, a valiant King alſo, but a rude and covetous man, whereby he loſt the love of his people. 11

3484 3 Thraſibulus, brother of Hiero, whoſe Government proved ſo cruell and unſupportable, that he held it not above 10 moneths; who being forced into Exile by the Syracuſans, the people did a while enjoy their libertie; but withall fell into thoſe Factions, which after 60 years made them loſe it again.

3544 4 Dionyſius, that ſo famous Tyrant, from being Generall of the Forces of the Syracuſans, made himſelf their King; A man of great vices, but great vertues withall. He brought almoſt all Sicilie under his obedience, and the Town of Rhegium in Italy, reigning in all 38 years.

3582 2 Dionyſius II. ſucceeding his Father in his Kingdom and vices, but not in valour or wiſdom, was firſt outed by Dion a noble Gentleman of Syracuſe, and afterward taken Priſoner by Timoleon of Corinth; to which Citie he was ſent, and there dyed in exile.

3635 6 Agathocles, by trade a Potter, after that a Souldier, 20 years after the death of Timoleon, made himſelf King of Syracuſa. To draw the Carthaginians out of Sicil, he paſſed over into Africk and beſieged Carthage, which example Scipio after followed, but with better fortune. 29.

3681 7 Hieron II. of a Commander of their Armies choſen King of Syracuſe by a party which he had made amongſt them. In his time brake out the firſt Punick War, the Romans being called in by the Mamertines, who held Meſſana againſt the Carthaginians, the Lords at that time of the greateſt part of the Iland. 56.

3737 8 Hieronymus, the ſonne of Hiero, after whoſe death Syracuſe and all Sicil became ſubject to Rome, by the fortunate conduct of Marcellus.

Of theſe eight Kings, the ſix firſt commonly paſs under the name of Tyrants, from whence, and from ſome others of like diſpoſition, who Lorded it over the reſt of the Free Cities of Sicil, the name of Siculi Tyranni grew into a Proverb. But of all, none more hated than the two Dioniſii, who were ſo odious, that there were continuall execrations poured on them; only one old woman praying for the life of the later. Who being asked the cauſe, made anſwer, that ſhe knew his Father to have been a monſtrous and wicked Tyrant, on whom when the curſes of the people had prevailed, and obtained his death, this his ſon ſucceeded, worſe by far than he, for whoſe life ſhe was reſolved to pray, leſt after his death the devill himſelf ſhould come amongſt them. But to proceed, after theſe Tyrants, as they called them, were rooted out, and the Iland was conquered by Marcellus, it alwaies followed the fortune of the Roman Empire, till in the partition of that Empire it fell together with Apulia and Calabria into the power of the Greeks. In the declining of whoſe greatneſs, this Iland having been miſerably pilled and ſpoyled by the Emperor Conſtans, An. 669. became a prey to the Saracens; from them recovered again by the help of the Normans, who held both this and the Realm of Naples, in Fee of the Church, under the title of Kings of both Sicils. From that time forwards it ran the fortune of that Kingdom, ſubject unto the Princes of the Norman and German lines, till the death of Conrade, no interruption intervening. After whoſe death when Mumfroy, or Manfrede, the baſe ſonne of the Emperor Frederick, and Brother of Conrade, had forcibly made himſelf King of theſe Countries, it was offered to Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother to Henry the third of England; a Prince of ſuch riches, that he was able to diſpend an hundred Marks per diem, for ten years together; which according to the Standard of thoſe times was no ſmall ſum. But the condi-

Sicil tions which the Pope ptopoſed were ſo impoſſible for the Earl to perform, that his Agent told him, he might as well ſay to his Maſter, I will give thee the Moon, climb up, catch, and take it. The Earl refuſing it, it was offered the King for his ſecond ſonne Edmund, who was inveſted by the gift of a Ring, and money coyned in his name by the Popes appointment, with the inſcription of Almundus Rex Siciliæ. But the King not being able to purſue the buſineſs, becauſe then overburdened by his Barons Wars, and the Pope having ſucked no ſmall ſtore of Treaſure from him; it was in the year 1261, given unto Charles Earl of Provence and Anjou, brother to Lewis the 10th. Under him thoſe Countries jointly continued ſubject till the year 1281, in which time his Competitor Peter of Aragon promiſing him to fight a ſingle combat before our K. Edward the firſt at Burdeaux; fail'd of his word; and in the mean time ſo contrived it, that at the found of a Bell tolling to prayers, all the French-men in Sicilie were cruelly Maſſacred. This exploit is known now under the name of Veſperi Siculi, and was managed by John de Prochyta, a Gentleman of the Reaim of Naples, whom Charles had diſpoſſeſſed of the Ile of Prochyta, whereof he had been formerly Lord; and not content to do him ſuch a piece of injuſtice, added a further inſolencie to it, in the forcing of his Wife. Provoked with theſe two injuries, the abuſed Gentleman plots with King Pedro of Aragon, to make him Maſter of the Ile of Sicilie, where he had very good intelligences; and where the French by reaſon of their Luſts and Inſolencies had ſo exaſperated the Natives, that they were capable enough of any ſuch impreſſions, as a man ſharing with them in their ſufferings could imprint upon them. According to the compact made, Don Pedro riggeth out his Navy, under pretence of ſome exploit againſt the Moores, and anchoreth in the port of Sardinia, there to expect how well the Tragedy would be acted; which fell out ſo agreeably to his expectation, that in one inſtant as it were, on the ſignall given, the French were univerſally murdered in all parts of the Iland; the people being ſo inraged, that they would not ſpare women great with child, if ſuppoſed to have been got by any of that hated nation: And Pedro comming in with his Navy as the deed was done, was by the generall conſent of all ſorts of people, crowned King of Sicilie. A bloody policy, I confeſs, which as the Actors learned of the Engliſh Saxons, who had made like riddance of the Danes, ſo did they teach it to the French, who practiſed it on the Hugonots of France in that horrid Maſſacre of Paris, An. 1572. An Act which ſo provoked the Pope, that he ſolemnly accurſed the King, and cauſed many of the neighbouring Princes to arm againſt him: But the Fox fared never the worſe for that; who did ſo order his affairs, that he did both clear his own Country of thoſe Enemies which on the Popes curſe had come in againſt him, and ſetled Sicilie more firmly in obedience to him. Since which time this Iland hath belonged to the Houſe of Aragon, but not alwaies in poſſeſſion of the Kings thereof, being a while governed as a State apart by its own Kings, whoſe ſucceſſion followeth.

Kings of Sicilie of the Houſe of Aragon.

1 Pedro, or Peter the 3d. King of Aragon by birth, of Sicilie in the right of his Wife, the choyce of the people, and the Legacy of Corradine, the laſt of the Royal line of Suevia, but principally by the power of the ſword.
2 James, the ſecond ſonne of Pedro, King of Sicilie, after the death of his brother Alfonſus, ſucceeded in Aragon, to which Crown he added the Ile of Sardinia.
3 Frederick, the brother of James, on his Brothers taking the Crown of Aragon, got poſſeſſion of Sicilie.
4 Peter, or Pedro II. Sonne of Frederick.
5 Frederick II.
6 Peter, or Pedro III.
7 Lewis, ſonne to Peter III.
8 Frederick III. in the life of Lewis, Duke of Athens, after his death ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Sicilie.
9 Martin, ſonne to Martin the firſt, King of Aragon, ſucceeded in the right of his wife Blanch, daughter of Frederick the third, and dying without iſſue gave the Kingdom unto Martin his Father.
10 Martin II. of Sicilie, and the firſt of Aragon, of which laſt he was King by birth, and of the former by the gift of his ſonne. After which time the Ile of Sicilie being again united to the Crown of Aragon, was never ſeparated from it, except it were when John King of Aragon gave it to Ferdinand his ſon, the better to fit him for the bed of Iſabel Princeſs of Caſtile, with whom the match was then in treaty; and when the Emperour Charles the fift gave it, with Naples, unto Philip his eldeſt ſonne, on his Mariage with Mary Qu. of England, who thereupon was ſtiled King of Naples, Sicilie, and Hieruſalem. But this held onely for a year; his Father dying ſhortly after, and reſigning to him all his Kingdoms, whereby it became joyned to Spain again.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are by ſome ſayd to be but 800000, but as others ſay, a Million of Ducats; moſt of which is again diſburſed on the entertainment of the Vice-Roy, and the defence of the Iland. The Arms are Aragon, 2 Flanches Argent, charged with as many Eagles Sable, beaked Gules.

This Iland for the number of its Nobility compares with Naples, as having in the time of Ortelius telius, 80 years ago, 7 Princes, 4 Dukes, 13 Marqueſſes, 14 Earls, 1 Vicount, 48 Barons; men of authority and power in their ſeverall Territories, and therefore not permitted to live much in the Iland, the greateſt part of their time being ſpent in the Court of Spain; but more to ſatisfie that King upon reaſon of State, than any affection of their own to ſo long an exile. And for the Government of the Church, Sardinia.

Here are

The Kingdom of SARDINIA.

THe Iland and Kingdom of SARDINIA lieth Weſt from Sicilie, from the neereſt point whereof called Cape Boii, or Cape Coro, it is diſtant about 200 miles. It is in length 180 miles, 90 in bredth, 560 in the circuit; and is ſituate under the 4th Climate, the longeſt day being 14 houres.

In the time of Ariſtotle it was called Ichnuſa, next Sandaliotis, from the reſemblance which it hath to a mans ſhooe or Sandals; and finally Sardinia from Sardus the ſonne of Hercules, who comming out of Africk poſſeſſed the ſame. For this there is ſufficient authority amongſt the Antients. Of the firſt names ſaith Plinie in as plain terms as may be, that Timæus called Sardinia Sandaliotis, and Myrſilus, Ichnuſa, from the ſimilitude which it hath to the Shooe-ſole, or impreſſion of a mans Foot on the ground; Sardiniam Timeus, Sandaliotin appellavit, ab effigie ſolea; Myrſilus Ichnuſam à ſimilitudine veſtigii. And for the laſt nothing can be more plain than that of Pauſanias, who tels us that the firſt who came by ſhipping into Sardinia, were certain Africans under the conduct of Sardus the ſonne of Maceris, whom the Egyptians called by the name of Hercules; who comming into this Iland then called Ichnuſa, τὸ ὄνομα ἀπὸ τῦ Σάρδε τότε μεταβαλεῖν ὁ τῦτο, cauſed it after his own name to be called Sardinia. For further evidence whereof, the people in the Latin tongue are called Sardi; the adjoyning Sea, Mare Sardoum. And to this name it was ſo conſtant, that no following Plantations from other Countries, were ever able to alter it. Some Companies of Attica, led by Iolaus, came and ſetled here, where they built Olbion and Agryllis, leaving a memory of Iolaus their Captain in ſome places, which remained in the time of Pauſanias, called Iolaia; and taking to themſelves for his ſake, the name of Iolatenſes. And after the deſtruction of Troy, ſome of that ſcattered Nation came and planted in ſome voyd parts of the Iland, kept to themſelves the name of Ilienſes, and by that name are mentioned both by Plinie and Livie. But neither of theſe Nations did attempt the change of the name, becauſe not of ability to ſuppreſs or out-power the Natives. Nor could the Carthaginians do it, though a more puiſſant Nation than the former were, and ſuch as by the neerneſs of their habitation (Sardinia being diſtant but 160 miles from Africk) had all advantags to make (as at laſt they did) a full Conqueſt of it; building therein the Cities of Charmis, Chalaris, and Sulchi; and holding it untill it was unjuſtly extorted from them by the Romans, at the end of the firſt Punick War; at what time Carthage was in danger to be ruined by the revolt of her own Mercenaries, and ſo not able to reſiſt.

But of the name and firſt Plantations of this Iland we have ſaid enough. Let us now look upon the place; in which it is reported that there is neither Wolf nor Serpent, neither venomous nor hurtfull Beaſt, but the Fox onely, and a little Creature like a Spider, which will by no means endure the light of the Sun, except held by violence. Some Pooles it hath, and thoſe very plentifull of Fiſh, but generally ſo deſtitute of River-water, that they are fain to keep the rain which falls in Winter for their uſe in Summer. By means whereof, and for that there is no paſſage for the Northern Winds, being obſtructed by the high Mountains near Cape Lugudoni, the Air is generally unhealthy, if not peſtilentiall: Inſomuch that Tully writing to his Brother Quintus being then in this Iland, adviſeth him to remember, as in point of health, that he was in Sardinia; and ſpeaking of Tigellius, a Sardinian born, ſaith of him, that he was more peſtilent than the Country which bred him.

The ſoyl is very fertile in reſpect of Corſica, but barren if compared with Sicil; which yet may rather be imputed to the want of good manuring in the Husbandman, than any naturall defect in the ſoyl it ſelf. Well ſtored with all ſorts of Cattel, as appears plainly by that plenty of Cheeſe and Hides which are ſent hence yearly into Italy and other places. The Horſes hereof, hot, head-ſtrong, and hard to be broken, but will laſt long: The Bullocks naturally amble, ſo that the Countrey-man rideth them as familiarly as they do in Spain on Mules and Aſſes. Here is alſo the Beaſt called Muſmons, or Muſcrones, found in Corſica alſo, but in no other part of Europe, ſomewhat reſembling a Stag, but of ſo ſtrong an hide, that it is uſed by the Italians in ſtead of Armour: Of the skins of which carried to Cordova in Spain, and there dreſſed, is made the right Cordovan Leather. Finally, here is an Herb, of which if one eat, it is ſayd that he will dye with laughter: Whence came the Proverb, Riſus Sardonicus. The truth of which report I ſhall not diſpute, though it be by others more probably conjectured, that the Herb being of a poyſonous nature, cauſeth men to dy with ſuch a Convulſion or attraction of Sinews, that they ſeem to grin, or laugh at the time of their death.

Sardinia. The people are ſmall of ſtature, of complexion inclining unto ſwarthineſs, and that either by reaſon of the heat of the Sun, or more probably from their African extraction, their behaviour much participating of that people alſo. So ſlothfull in the times of the Romans, that they were grown into a Proverb, and a Law made to compell them to work; but now eſteemed a very painfull and laborious Nation. Much given to hunting, and ſo prone to Rebellion, that the Spaniard permitteth no Cutler to live among them; yet peaceable amongſt themſelves, and in ſome meaſure courteous unto Strangers alſo. Their language a corrupt Catalonian; their diet on meats common and groſs; their apparell in the Towns (eſpecially that of the women) gorgeous, in the Villages ſordid.

In matters of Religion they are little curious. That which they make moſt ſhew of, is according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which both their neighbourhood to the Pope, and their ſubjection to the Spaniard, have impoſed upon them. But in their practiſe of it they are looſe enough, going to Maſs on Sundays and Saints days, which done, they fall to dancing in the middeſt of the Church, ſinging in the mean times ſongs too immodeſt for an Ale-houſe. Nay, it is thought that their Clergy it ſelf is the moſt rude, ignorant, and illiterate of any people in Chriſtendom, ſaying their Maſſes rather by rote, than reaſon, and utterly unable to give any accompt of their Religion.

It is divided commonly into two parts, viz. Cape Lugudore, towards Corſica, and Cape Cagliari, towards Africk: the firſt the leaſt, and withall mountainous and barren; the laſt the larger, levell, and by much more fruitfull. Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Calaris, firſt built by the Carthaginians, and ſituate in that point of the Iland which lieth neereſt to Africk; which from hence took the name of Cape Cagliari, by which it is at this day called. A City of ſuch fame when it was firſt taken by Gracchus for the uſe of the Romans, that it is called by Florus, Urbs Urbium, and was deſtroyed by the ſaid Gracchus, the better to diſable the Natives from rebelling againſt the Conquerors. Being new built again in more ſetled times, it was a ſecond time deſtroyed by the Saracens; and finally re-built and beautified by the Piſans, at ſuch time as they were Maſters of this part of the Iland. Very well fortified by Nature, as ſeated on the top of an hill, and hath under it a ſpacious and goodly Haven much frequented by Merchants. The Town it ſelf adorned with a beautifull Temple, being the See of an Arch-biſhop, many fair Turrets, and the conſtant reſidence of the Vice-Roy, from whoſe authority it is exempt by eſpeciall privilege, as to the legall Government of it, and ordered by a Common Councell of its own Citizens. 2. Boſſa, on the Weſt ſide of the Iland, another Arch-epiſcopall See. 3. S. Reparata on the North, looking towards Corſica. 4. Aquilaſtro, on the Weſtern ſhores. 5. Saſſari, a Town of conſequence, where they have an Aqueduct twelve miles long, reaching from thence unto S. Gaivius. 6. Alghes-Boſa, a good Town, ſituate in a wholeſome air, and a fertile ſoyl, and having a fair Haven of ſix miles in length, in which the ſhips of Genoa and Catalonia do moſt commonly ride. 7. Oreſtagne, a large Town, but very ill peopled, by reaſon of a bad air which proceeds from the Fens, the Countrey about which gives title to the Marqueſs of Oreſtagne. 8. Turrita, once a Roman Colonie, now little better than a ruin; yet giving title to the third Arch-biſhop of this Iland, who is called in Latine Turritanus. Here are alſo in divers parts of this Iland the remainders of ſundry Towers and Forts, which the people call Noracks, from Nora, one of the ſonnes of Gerion, who (as they think) came into this Countrey, and built the firſt dwelling or manſion in it. And this Tradition of the Vulgar hath ſo much in it of Hiſtoricall and undoubted truth, that certain Colonies from Spain came and planted here, under the conduct of one Nora; ſomewhat before the expedition of the Atticks under Iolaus, as Pauſanias teſtifieth.

This Iland taken by the Romans from the Carthaginians, as before is ſaid, was firſt under the immediate Juriſdiction of the Præfect of the City of Rome: but after by Juſtinian was made a Province of his new Dioceſe of Africk; and as a part thereof, or rather an Appendix to it, was challenged, invaded, and finally conquered by the Saracens, An°. 807. From them recovered by the joynt-forces of the Piſans and Genoeſe, who divided it betwixt them: the Southern part, called Cape Cagliari, being alotted to the Piſans, and the Northern towards Corſica, to thoſe of Genoa. But the Genoeſe not content with the partage, their portion of the Iland being leſs in quantitie, and worſe in quality, began to quarrell with the Piſans, and at the laſt to break into open wars. To part the Fray, Pope Boniface the 8th. beſtowed it on James King of Aragon, who driving thence the Genoeſe, An°. 1324. became Maſter of it. The Aragonian before that did pretend ſome Title to it, in right of the Kingdom of Sicil then in his poſſeſſion, to ſome preceding Kings whereof it had once been ſubject: and having backed that Clame by the Popes Donation, who challenged it as a part of S. Peters Patrimony, incorporated it for ever to the Crown of Aragon. Once indeed it was offered unto Anthony of Burbon, in exchange for his Title to Navarre, but without any purpoſe of performance; that being onely a device to fetch him off from the party of the Reformed in France, to which he formerly adhered; and was as ſuddenly laid by, as it had done the feat intended in the Propoſition.

The Government hereof is by a Vice-Roy, who reſides at Calaris, and muſt of neceſſitie be a Spaniard, under whom are two Deputy Governors Spaniards alſo; the one for Cape Caliari, the other for Cape Lugudori. Inferior Officers of command may be of the Natives. What profits ariſe

hence to the Crown of Spain, I have no where found. The Arms hereof are said to be Or, a Croſs Gules, betwixt four Saracens heads Sable, curled Argent. Which Arms were given upon the taking of it from the power of the Moors: but firſt taken (as ſome ſay) for the Arms of Aragon, on occaſion of the heads of four chief Princes of the Moors which were found ſevered from their Bodies in the battell of Alcoraz, An°. 1094. won by Don Pedro King of Navarre and Aragon. LAND of the Church.

There are divers ſmall Ilands about Sardinia, as, 1. Iſola Roſſa, heretofore called Phintonis. 2. The Ile of Hercules, now called Aſinaria. 3. S. Peters, antiently Hieracum, or Accipitrum, with others of as little note: all which, as the Appendants of Sardinia, do belong to the Spaniard.

There are in this Iland,

The Land of the CHURCH.

WEſt of the Realm of Naples lyeth the LAND OF THE CHURCH, extended North and South from the Adriatick to the Tuſcan Seas: bounded on the North-East with the River Tronto, on the South-East with the Axoſenus, by which two parted from that Kingdom; as on the North-Weſt by the river Po, and Fiore, by which ſeparated from the State of Venice; and on the South-Weſt with the river Piſtu, by which it is divided from the Modern Tuſcany, or the State of the Florentine. By this Accompt the Popes dominion taketh up the whole middle of Italie, having in bredth from the one Sea unto the other above one hundred miles, and in the length above three hundred. By which advantages it lieth moſt fitly for the command of all the reſt, it being verie eaſie for the Popes to convey their forces by Sea or Land into what part thereof they pleaſe. And were it not, that the Popes commonly are of ſeverall factions, and that the Succeſſor purſueth not the deſigns of his Predeceſſors, but hath his own ends to himſelf, which for the moſt part are driven on without conſideration of increaſing the publike Patrimony, it is not poſſible but that the Pope long before this time had been Lord of all. And this may be conceived the rather, conſidering the extraordinary fertility of the ſoyl, able to ſpare proviſions for the greateſt Armies; the multitudes of people which it may afford, in regard they are ſo ſeldom conſumed by warr; and that the men of this Dominion (but chiefly thoſe of Rome, and the parts adjoyning) are conceived to be the beſt Souldiers of Italie, as retaining ſome ſparks of their Anceſtors valour, together with their gravity, magnificence, and a certain greatneſs of courage, which ſeems to be particular to them of this Nation. And they preſerve alſo to this day ſo much of the antient Roman, as to prefer any kind of life before Trades or Merchandiſe. For though their Lands be very well tilled, and their Vines well dreſſed, and all things done exactly in the way of Husbandry: yet for their Manufactures they are brought from other places, as Venice, Naples, Florence, Genoa. And though they have the Sea on both ſides, and the advantage of many fair and commodious Rivers and Havens, which with little coſt might be made very uſefull: yet do they no way improve their fortunes, or the publick Patrimony in the way of Traffick; which is the main defect of the Papall Politie, and filleth a rich Countrey full of poor and indigent perſons. But to proceed to the deſcription of the Popes eſtate; it containeth the Provinces of 1. Romandiola, 2. Marca Anconitana, 3. the Territory of Ferrara, 4. Ducato Spoletano, 5. S. Peters Patrimony, and 6. Campagna di Roma.

1. ROMANDIOLA extendeth from the Rubicon Eaſt, to the Venetians on the Weſt; and from the Apennine on the South, to Padus and the Adriatick on the North. It was called antiently Flaminia, from Flaminius the Roman Conſull, who having won it from the Galls, planted Colonies in it, and had the honour (though he purſued this war againſt the will of the Senate) to have it called by his own name: and for the better paſſage betwixt Rome and this, made a very large Cauſey, which for a long time was called Via Flaminia.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Bononia, (or Boulogne) ſeated in a ſpacious plain neer the Apennine hills, a very populous City, of a round form, and a great circuit: the building antick, ſeeming for the moſt part to be the work of the Lombards; the foundation of the houſes of Free-ſtone, the reſt of Bricks; built with Arched Cloyſters towards the ſtreet, under which one may walk dry in the greateſt rain. A City honoured with many Palaces of the neighbouring Nobles, the chief Univerſity of Italy, and the retiring place of the Popes. The Civill Law is much ſtudied here, inſomuch that from hence proceeded the famous Civilians, Johannes Andreas, Azo, Bartolus, and Bactus. I believe they have built Caſtles in the air, which aſcribe the founding of this Univerſity to Theodoſius the 2d. The Charter of this foundation dated An°. 423. is an idle and fooliſh thing. For there it is ſaid, that at the inſtitution there were preſent Gualter Earl of Poictiers, Embaſſador for the King of England; and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, for the King of France: when at that time, neither thoſe Earldoms, or thoſe Kingdoms were in rerum natura. It is ſituate on the river Apoſa, and was by former Writers called Felſina. Neer unto this Town in a Demy-Iland called Forcelli, was that meeting between between Auguſtus, Antony, and Lepidus, wherein they agreed on the Trimvirate, dividing the Empire and City of Rome, among themſelves: Which combination was confirmed by the enſuing Proſcription; wherein, that they might be revenged on Cicero, Lepidus proſcribed his Brother; Antonius, his Uncle. 2. Rimini, antiently called Ariminum, ſeated on the mouth of the River Rubicon, which in thoſe times divided Italie from Gaule: upon the bank whereof neer unto this Town, there was an old Marble Pillar having on it a Latine Inſcription to this purpoſe, viz. Leave here thy Colours, and lay down thine Arms, and paſs not with thy Forces beyond the Rubicon; whoſoever goeth againſt this command, let him be held an Enemy to the people of ROME: Which Rule when Cæſar had tranſgreſſed, and ſurprized this City, he ſo frighted Pompey and his faction, that they abandoned Italie and Rome it ſelf, and withdrew themſelves into Epirus. It is ſaid that Cæſar dreamed the night before, that he carnally knew his own Mother: whereby the South-ſayers gathered, that he ſhould be Lord of Rome, which was the common Mother of them all. Which dream, and ſeverall prodigies happening at the ſame time with it, did ſo incourage him in his enterprize, that he is ſaid, at the paſſing over Rubicon, to have ſaid theſe words, Eamus, quo nos Divum monita, &c. Let us go, whether the ſins of our Enemies, and the prodigies of the Gods do call us. In memory of which venturous, but fortunate action, he cauſed a monument to be erected in this City, with his name and Titles. It was antiently a Roman Colony, and in the buſtles happening betwixt the Pope and the Emperor, was ſeized on by the Malateſti, as Bononia was by the Bentivoli, two potent Families of theſe parts; who held them in defiance of the Powers of Rome, till they were reduced again unto the Church by Pope Julio the ſecond. 3. Cervia, on the Adriatick Sea, where there is made ſo much Salt, that they furniſh therewith all their neighbours of Marca Anconitana, and a great part of Lombardie: the Pope receiving for his Cuſtomes of this one commoditie, no leſs than 60000. Crowns per annum. 4. Furli, (called of old Forum Livii) one of the Towns belonging properly to the Exarchate of Ravenna, ſeated in a very pleaſant air, and a fruitfull ſoyl, betwixt two freſh ſtreams; of which the one is called Ronchus, and the other Montonus. 5. Faventia, now called Faenza, on the banks of Anemus, a calm gentle River; an antient City, but well peopled; much beneſited by the Flax which groweth in the adjoyning fields, and the Earthen Veſſells which they vend to moſt parts of Italie. It was firſt given unto the Popes by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, whom they but ſorrily requited for ſo great a curteſie. 6. Sarſina, an old City, ſeated at the foot of the Apennine, the birth place of Plautus the Comædian. 7. Imola, antiently called Forum Cornelii; and 8. Ceſena, Cities both of them of no ſmall Antiquity; but this laſt the fairer built, the better peopled, and the more ſtrongly fortified. 9. Ravenna, once beautified with one of the faireſt Havens in the world, and for that cauſe made the Road of one of the two Navies, which Auguſtus kept always manned to command the whole Empire of Rome: the other riding at Miſenus in Campania. This of Ravenna, being in the upper Sea, awed and defended Dalmatia, Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Aſia, &c. the other at Miſenus, in the lower Sea, protected and kept under France, Spain, Africk, Ægypt, Syria, &c. The walls of this City are ſaid to have been built or repaired by Tiberius Ceſar; the whole Citie to have been much beautified by Theodoricus King of the Gothes, who built here a moſt ſtately and magnificent Palace, the ruins whereof are ſtill eaſily diſcernable. The private buildings are but mean, the publick ones are of a grave, but ſtately ſtructure. Of which the principall heretofore was the Church of S. Maries the Round, whoſe roof was of one entire ſtone, and honoured with the rich Sepulchre of the ſaid King Theoderick: which the ſouldiers (in the ſack of this City by the French) pulled down, together with the Church it ſelf, onely to get the Jewells and Medalls of it. The principall at the preſent, is the Church of S. Vitalis, the pavement whereof is all of Marble, and the walls all covered with preeious ſtones of many ſorts, but unpoliſhed as they were taken out of Mines, which ſheweth as well the magnificence as Antiquity of it. The Patriarchs of this City, in regard it was ſo long the Regall and Imperiall Seat, have heretofore contended for precedency with the Popes themſelves: this City having been antiently the Metropolis of the Province called Flaminia, afterwards honoured with the Seat of the Emperor Honorius, and his ſucceſſors; next of the Gothiſh Kings; then of the Exarchs; and laſt of its Patriarchs. And it was choſen for this purpoſe, becauſe of the plentifull Territory, ſince covered with water, and the conveniency of the Haven, at this day choaked: though lately by expence of a great deal of treaſure, the Fens about the City have been very much drained, and the Bogs in ſome places turned to fruitfull Fields, to the great benefit hereof both for health and pleaſure.

As for the Exarchs, who had their reſidence in this City, they were no other than the Vice-Roys or Lieutenants of the Eaſtern Emperors. Concerning which we are to know, that the Kingdom of the Gothes in Italie was no ſooner deſtroyed by Narſes, but the Lombards entred. To give a ſtop to whoſe ſucceſſes, and preſerve ſo much unto the Empire as was not already conquered by them, it was thought good by Juſtine the ſecond, to ſend thither an Imperiall Officer of principall command and note, whom he honoured with the title of Exarch. His reſidence ſetled at Ravenna, as ſtanding moſt commodiouſly to hinder the incurſions of the barbarous Nations; and withall to receive ſuch aids from the Eaſtern parts, as his occaſions did require. Theſe Exarchs having divided Italie into many Governments, appointed over each ſome ſupreme Commander, dignified with the name of Dukes. And even the City of Rome it self (so far then was it from being subject to the Pope in Temporall matters) had a chief Officer of this kinde (accomptable to the Exarch, and subordinate to him) whose Government was called the Roman Dukedom. They which they kept unto themselves, as their own peculiar, contained the Cities of Ravenna, Rhegium, Mutina, Bononia, Classi, Furli, Forlimpoli, Sarcino, Parma, and Placentia: which ten Cities with the Territories belonging to them, made up that District, which properly was called the Exarchate of Ravenna, much mentioned in the Histories of the middle times, by reason of the continuall wars which they had with the Lombards; but newly entred when this Magistracy had its first beginning. The names of these Exarchs are as followeth. Romandiola.

King of the Lombards, An°. 740. but regained by Charles the Great, and by him given to the Bishops of Rome, together with Anconitana and Spoleto: as a requitall for the Kingdom of France, confirmed unto King Pepin his Father by the consent and authority of the Popes. The donation of this Exarchate to the Popes, partly to blot out the memory of the Exarchs, and partly to make the people obedient to those Prelates, changed the name of the Countrey from Flaminia (by which name it was formerly known) to Romandiola, and now to Romagna. Notwithstanding which Donation, or Originall Grant, the Popes injoyed not long the possession of it; the Emperors of Germanie, and their Viee-gerents in Italie, wresting it by strong hand out of the possession of the Church, and giving it to such as deserved well of them, and were most likely, or most able to uphold their Faction. And so it stood, till the last Popes conspiring with the French Kings, Lewis the twelfth and Francis the first, brought them into Italie: and by their aids, and by the censures of the Church, so prevailed in fine, that they extorted Ravenna, and some other places out of the hands of the Venetians, erected many petit Princes out of other Cities, which they pretended to belong to S. Peters Patrimony; and thereby got possession of all those Territories which lie betwixt the State of Venice, and the Marches of Ancona.

2. The Territory of FERRARA lieth in the very skirts of Romandiola towards the Venetian, extending one hundred and sixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth; the soyl thereof exceeding rich, but subject to the overflowings of the River Po, which makes the air in many places to be somewhat unwholesome. And though as well the former Dukes as the Popes who are now Lords hereof, have been at great charge in raising high Banks and Ramparts to keep in the waters; yet could not this resist the violence of the River, falling from so high a Spring, and seconded with so great Land-floods (as sometimes it is) but that it makes many breaches in them, do they what they can. The places of most note herein, are 1. Graffignan in the borders of Tuscany neer the Apennine. 2. Carpi, a place of great importance, seated in the midst of this Dukedom; belonging heretofore to the House of the Pici, but partly by exchange made with Marcus Picus, partly for one hundred thousand Crowns in ready money, given unto Lionel Pico, once the Lords hereof, it was by Charles the 5th. incorporated into this estate. 3. Commachia, seated in the Marshes of the Adriatick, from which the Princes of this Family of Este, were at first called only Lords of Commachio; a place which yeelded great profit to the former Dukes by the fishing of Eels. 4. Saxole, given by Duke Alphonso in exchange for Carpi. Here is also the Territory and Lordship of the Polesine, the cause of so many quarrells and contentions between the antient Dukes of Ferrara, and the State of Venice. But the chief honor of this Dukedom, is in the Capitall City, that which denominates the whole, Ferrara; a City of five miles in compass, so called from the Iron Mines which are about it, commodiously seated on the River Po, which by reason of its breadth, depth, and violent swiftness of the current, is a sufficient rampart to it on that side; the other sides being fortified with a strong wall, and a spacious mote. In the middle of the City is a fair and spacious Market-place, into which do open on all sides about twenty streets, all of them half a mile in length, and all so strait and evenly built, that the furthest end of each of them may be easily seen. Neer to this Market-place is a little Iland, in which the former Dukes had a stately Palace, called Belvidere, from the fair prospect which it had or gave to the whole City; and on the North side of the City a large Park for pleasure. The other houses are for the most part built of fair Free-stone, not joyning unto one another as in other Cities, but at a pretty distance with neat Gardens between. Ariosto, the Author of that ingenious Poem called Orlando Furioso, and Hieronimo Savanarola the Prophetical Friar, were both of them Natives of this place: of which the first dieth here entombed, the last for preaching against the Pope was burnt at Florence.

In

Ferrara. In the declining of the power and Empire of the Lombards, this City, together with Faventza, was given by Deſiderius, their laſt King, to the Church of Rome, the better to oblige the Popes by ſo great a benefit. But being taken from them by the Emperors of the Houſe of Schwaben, it was again recovered by the proweſs of the Counteſs Mathildis, An°.1107. who took it, with many other Towns in Italie, from the Emperor Henry the 4th. and at her death conferred the ſame upon the Church. The Popes once more poſſeſſed hereof, and not able to hold it, gave it in Fee for ever unto Azo of the Houſe of Eſte, a man of great ſway in the affairs of Italie, who valiantly had defended it againſt Ezelinus Vicegerent of Frederick the 2d. This was the firſt of this Family who had Ferrara in propriety: His Anceſtors being called before the Marqueſſes of Eſte, and ſometimes Marqueſſes of Ferrara, (but in title only) as Governors hereof in behalf of the Popes of Rome. Obizo the Grand-child of this firſt Azo, obtained of Rodolfus the firſt (who was willing to make what money he could of his lands in Italie) the Cities of Regium and Modena, that Grant confirmed by Guido Legat of Pope Benedict the ninth, with the Popes conſent, An°.1304. Other improvements there were made by the following Princes, according to the chance of war, but none of them continued conſtant in their poſſeſſion, but theſe three Cities and the Territories adjoyning to them. As for this Family de Eſto, (Familia Ateſtina it is called in Latine) it took this name from Eſto, or Ateſte, a ſmall Town in the Signeury of Venice, conferred upon the Anceſtors of this Azo, by Charles the Great. And for the chiefs or Princes of it, they have been men of great authority and power in their ſeverall times, commanding ſometimes the Venetian Armies, and ſometimes the Popes; great favourers of learned men, and advancers of learning, inſomuch that the Renaldo's and Rogero's of Eſte, make up a great part of the Poems of Arioſto and Taſſo, two of the greateſt wits of Italie; and finally allied to many of the beſt Houſes of Chriſtendom. The Catalogue of whom ſince they were made the hereditary Lords and Princes of this noble City, I have here ſubjoyned.

1361. 9 Nicolao the 2d. of Eſte, and firſt of Ferrara, brother of Alabrandino, whoſe children being young, he diſpoſſeſſed of the Eſtate.

1388. 10 Albertus, brother of Nicolas, the Founder of the Univerſity of Ferrara, An°.1392.

1393. 11 Nicolas II. baſe ſonne of Albertus.

1441. 12 Leonellus the baſe ſonne of Nicolas, in the minority of his brother Hercules, begot in lawfull Wedlock, invaded the Eſtate, and held it.

1450. 13 Borſius, another of the baſe ſonnes of Nicolas 2d. ſucceeded Leonel in the Eſtate; who being made Duke of Mutina by Frederick the 3d. was by Pope Paul created Duke of Ferrara alſo, An°.1470.

1471. 14 Hercules, the lawfull ſonne of Nicolas the 2d. made Knight of the Garter by King Edward 4th.

1534. 16 Hercules II. ſonne of Alphonſo.

1559. 17 Alphonſo II. who dying without lawfull iſſue, An°. 1595. Pope Clement the 8th. challenged this Eſtate in the right of the Church; and partly by force, partly by compoſition (whereof we ſhall ſay more when we come to Modena) united it for ever to the See of Rome.

The yeerly Revenues of this Dukedom were heretofore two hundred and fifty thouſand Crowns; now not ſo much worth unto the Pope, by reaſon of the Alienation of Modena and Regio; of which more hereafter.

The Arms of theſe Dukes (which for the honour of this noble and illuſtrious Family, and for the ſtrangeneſs of the Coat, I ſhall here put down) were Palewiſe of three pieces, 1. Parti per Feſſe, in the chief Or, an Eagle diſplayed Sable, membred, langued, and crowned Gules; and in Baſe Azure, three Flowers de Lys Or, within a Border indented Or and Gules. 2. Gules, two keys in Saltier, the one Or, the other Argent, charged in Faſſe with an Eſchocheon of pretence Azure, ſupporting an Eagle of the third, membred and crowned of the ſecond; over all in in chief a Papall Crown Or, garnished with sundry Gems Azure and Purple. 3 The third as the first, counter-placed Which Coat upon the failing of the house of Ferrara, doth now belong to that of Modena and Reggio.

Anconitana, & Spoletano

2 MARCA ANCONITANA is bounded on the East with the River of Trontus or Druentus, by which it is parted from Abruzzo; on the West, with the River Isaurus (now Foglio) which divides it from Romandiola; on the South, with the Apennine Hills; on the North, with the Adriatick. It was formerly the dwelling of the Picentes, who possessed all these parts on the coast of the Adriatick, from the River Rubicon on the East, to that of Aufidus on the West. For aiding the Tarentines their Allies, in their war against Rome, they were invaded and subdued by the Romans, about five years before the first Punick war, under the conduct of Sempronius; at which time they were so great and multitudinous a nation, that they were numbered to amount to 360000, which were then brought under the command and vassalage of the Roman Empire. When Italie was divided into no more than eight Regions, these Picentes only made up one; so did they also when divided into eleven. Afterwards, in the time of the Antonini, they made up one of the sixteen Provinces into which Italie was divided by those Emperours; and the same repute it held in the time of Constantine; Picenum being alwayes one: Asculum caput gentis, as Florus calls it, which was the head of their Nation, being the Metropolis of the Province. In the declining of the Empire it was first called Marcha Firmiana, from Firmo, once a Roman Colony, and at that time of most importance in the Country; but by transferring the chief seat from Firmo to Ancona in the time of the Lombards, it came to have the name of Anconitana. The chief Rivers, besides those named already, which are only borderers, are, 1 Chientus, 2 Sentinus, and 3 Potentia; all rising in the Apennine, and passing with a swift course to the Adriatick.

The chief Towns, 1 Ancona, seated on the Hill Cimmerius, shooting into the sea, glorying in giving name to the Province, and in her Haven built by Trajan the Emperor, one of the faireſt in the world, not so much for capacity, as the pleasantness and beauty of it; the descents down unto the water being made of Marble, and very delectable walking on all sides of it. The City it self is begirt with hils, on one of which Pope Clement the seventh built a very strong Castle, An. 1532. under pretence of defending the Town against the Turks, but indeed to keep the people in more full subjection, who till that time did yearly chuse their own Magistrates, and lived according to their own Laws like a Commonwealth. 2 Recanati (heretofore Ælia Recina) seated upon the banks of the River Mulsio, renowned for the great concourse of Merchants from all parts of Europe at her Annuall Marts, and a vein of the most excellent Wines. 3 Firmo, surnamed the Strong, in former times of most esteem in all the Province, which was hence called Marca Firmiana, and to this day a place of great strength, and consequence. 4 Macerata, now of most credit, by reason that the Popes Legate keeps his residence there, and with him the Chancery for this Marquisate. 5 Loretto, called in Latin, Lauretana, a little City betwixt Recanati and the Sea; well fortified against the Turkes and other Pirates who once spoyled the same, and might be easily tempted thither on the like occasions: The Church here being admirably rich, and frequented by Pilgrims from all parts, to pay their devotions unto our Lady of Loretto, and behold her Miracles. Concerning the removall of whose Chamber hither, in our description of Palestine, you shall meet with a very proper Legend. 6 Ascoli, surnamed the Fair, seated at the influx of the River Druentus, and on the furthest side of it towards Abruzzo, and so the furthest City Eastwards, of old called Asculum, conquer'd by the Romans, under the conduct of Sempronius, A.V.C.685. Nigh unto this City, as Florus relateth, was fought the second battell between C. Fabricius and the Romans on the one side, and Pyrrhus with the Epirots on the other; wherein the Victory fell to the King, having slain 6000 of his Enemies, yet with such apparencie of valour and vertue in the Romans, that he could not but break forth into this acclamation; O quam facile esset orbem vincere, aut mihi, Romanis militibus; aut me rege, Romanis. This Town also was the seat of the War called Bellum sociale, raised by the people of Italie against the Romans; Popeidius being both Author of the Rebellion, and Captain. They, for a while, sorely shaked the state of Rome; but at last were vanquished, and this Town by Strabo Pompeius forced and spoyled. 7 Adria, now not otherwise famous, than that it gave denomination to the adjoyning Sea, and the Emperor Adrian. 8 Humana, which last Town, together with Ancona, was given to Pope Zachary, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, about the year 741. The succeeding Popes after the giving of this Inch, took the whole Ell.

Having surveyed the Provinces of the Church along the Adriatick, we must next cross the Apennine, which parts the Marches of Ancona from the Dukedom of SPOLETO (DUCATO SPOLETANO the Italians call it.) A Territory taking up the Western part of the Province of Umbria, so called, because being situate under the shade of the Apennine Hils, it was Regio umbrosa. Some give another reason of it, and think that the Inhabitants were called Umbri, quasi Ὄμβροι, as men that had escaped the Deluge; because so antient a people, that no body could tell the originall of them. But whatsoever was the reason of the name, they were a stout and valiant people, and gave the first check to Annibals careere, after his great Victory at Trasymene, repulsing him with loss and shame from the walls of Spoleto. And for their Country, which was this Region of Umbria (being one of the eleven into which Italie was divided by Auguſtus Ceſar,) It hath on the Eaſt the River of Anio, or Aniene, dividing it from the Eaſt parts of Latium; on the Weſt the Tiber ; on the North, the Apennine; on the South, a reach or winding of the Tiber, and the main body of Latium. A Country it is of a mixt nature, equally compoſed of very rough hils, and yet moſt delectable vallies ; exceeding plentifull of all neceſſaries, and much commended heretofore for the extraordinary foecunditie of the women. The Wine hereof is much commended by Martial, as the beſt of Italie.

Malueris, quam ſi muſta Falerna bibas.

That is to ſay.

If with Spoleto bottles once you meet,
Say that Falerno Muſt is no ſo ſweet.

Here are ſaid to have been once three hundred good Towns and Cities, all deſtroyed by the Tuſcans. The principall of thoſe now extant, are 1 Spoletum, built partly on the hill, and partly on the lower ground, the reſidence heretofore of one of the four Dukes of the Longobardians, who governed as Vice-Roys or Lord Preſidents of the remoter parts of that Kingdom, from whence the Country round about it was called Ducato Spoletano. It is ſtill a Town of good eſteem, populous, and of handſome building, and hath a ſtrong Fortreſs for defence thereof, built upon the ruins of an old Amphitheatre, to which men paſs over a great bridge of ſtone, upheld by 24 great pillars, which joyns two Mountains together, having between them a deep Vallie, but narrow and without any water. Theodorick the Goth built a fair Palace in this Citie, rebuilt by Narſes, but ſince ruined. 2 Eugubium (now called Angubio) ſeated on the foot of the Apennine, in or near that place where antiently ſtood that City which Plinie calls Iuginium, Ptolomie, Iſunium, utterly ſubverted by the Gothes. A Town well ſeated in a fruitfull and wealthy ſoyl, and bleſſed with an induſtrious people. 3 Nuceria, in Plinies time called Alfatenia, at the foot alſo of the Apennine ; the people of which in former times much traded in their wooden veſſel. 4 Aſſiſium, or Aſſiſe, deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Civill Wars of Italie, and only famous at this time, in being the birth-place of S. Francis, the founder of the Franciſcans, or Cordeliers, as the French call them; but we in England the Gray Friers. 5 Citta de Caſtello, antiently Tiphernum, on the banks of Tiber. 6 Tudertum, now called Todi, ſeated near the Tiber on the declivitie of a rich and fruitfull hill.

The reſt of Umbria towards the Eaſt, not being within the compaſs of the Spoletane Dukedom, but under the command of the Popes of Rome, is by late Writers called SABINIA, becauſe the dwelling in times paſt of the antient Sabines ; but in the diviſion of Italie made by Antoninus, it was called Nurſia ; and in that made by Conſtantine, it was contained within the new Province of Valeria, Reate being the Metropolis, or head City of both. A Territory of no great circuit, but abundantly Fruitfull in Oyl or Olives, Vines, and Fig-trees ; watered with the River Farfarus, which cutteth thorough the very middeſt of it, and with the Lake called antiently Lacus Velinus (now Lago di Pedeluco) eſteemed to be the Center or Navell of Italie by ſome antient Writers ; the waters of which are of ſuch a nature, that in ſhort time they will cloth a peece of wood with a coat of ſtone, and yet yeeldeth excellent Trouts, and other good Fiſh. The Towns and Cities of moſt note, are, 1 Reate (now called Riete) an antient City, and the Metropolis heretofore of all this Tract, as well when it was called Nurſia, as when it paſſed under the name of Valeria. 2 Nurſia, a City no leſs antient, ſeated amongſt the Hils, which for the moſt part are covered with ſnow ; from which Town, being heretofore of more reputation, the Province of Nurſia, ſpoken of in the Itineravie of Antoninus, took denomination. 3 Magliano, a pleaſant and well-peopled Town, at this time the principall of this Territory. 4 Ocriculum, built amongſt many Fruitfull hils, a mile from Tiber. 5 Narnia, the Country and Birth-place of the Emperor Nerva, the firſt of all the Emperors not born in Rome, as after him there were few born in it. The ſoyl about it is of ſo different and ſtrange a nature, that it is ſaid to be made dirty by the Sun and Winds, and duſty by Rain ; the City is well-peopled, and a Biſhops See, ſeated upon a very ſteep and craggy Hill, not far from the River Nar (now Negro) from which perhaps it took the name. A City given unto the Church of Rome by Luitprandus King of the Lombards ; of which the Popes of Rome having got poſſeſſion, never left practiſing till they had got into their power all the reſt of the Country. Little is famous elſe in the whole Region of Umbria, but that in the Weſtern part thereof, is the Lake called Lacus Vademodius, neer to Ameria, now called Amelia, a town of the Dukedom, where Dolobella overthrew ſuch of the Galls as had eſcaped the ſword of Camillus ; Ne quis extaret in ea gente (ſaith the Hiſtorian) qui incenſam à ſe Romam gloriaretur ; a former ſlaughter being made by Camillus on the banks of Aniene, the Eaſtern limits of theſe Umbri.

5 S. PETERS PATRIMONIE, properly and ſpecially ſo called, is that part of Tuſcanie, which appertains unto the Church ; bounded upon the Eaſt with Tiber, which divides it from Latium, or Compagna di Roma ; on the Weſt, with the River Piſco, which falleth into the Sea near the Mountain of Argentario, and parteth it from the eſtate of the Duke of Florence ; on the North, with the Apennine ; on the South, with the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. It took this new name preſently on the donation of the Counteſs Mathildis, who gave it for ever unto the Church, An. 110. Paſchal the ſecond ſitting in the Chair of Rome, to be the Patrimonie trimonie of S. Peter, and his ſucceſſors in that See. A Country not inferiour unto any in Italie, for the fertility of the ſoyl; but for the moſt part of an unhealthy Air, by reaſon of the frequent overflowings of Tiber, and the thick woods which hinder that the winds cannot purge and clenſe it. Compagna di Roma.

The principall Cities, and places of moſt obſervation, are 1 Periglia, formerly called Perusia; a famous Town, in which Auguſtus beſieged L. Antonius the brother, and Fulvia the wife of M. Antony the Triumvir, who when they had in vain attempted to ſeduce Rome from his party, repaired to this Citie, which alſo at the laſt yeelded to the more fortunate Emperor, who afterwards, having much adorned and beautified it, cauſed it to be called Auguſta; but it returned not long after to its antient name. It is ſeated very pleaſantly on the banks of Tiber, not far from the Apennine, in a very rich and fruitfull ſoyl, well built both for the publick and private ſtructures; a Biſhops See, and made an Univerſity An. 1090. In the diſtractions of Italie betwixt the Emperours and the Popes, this City was ſeized on by the Baillons, who held it as Vicars of the Church. The Oddies, an oppoſite Faction to them, having got together a ſtrong party of Malecontents, ſo ſuddenly entred one night into the City, that the Baillons began to fly, nor was there any thing to hinder them from being maſters of the Palace, but the chain which was drawn croſs the gate. One of the ſouldiers going about to cut this chain, and wanting room to wield his arm, cryed aloud, Give back; which words being heard, but not well underſtood by thoſe furtheſt off, put them to their heels, and the foremoſt, which thought they fled not for nothing, ran away too. So the City was ſaved. 2 Orvieto, ſeated on ſo high a Rock, that it is no ſmall terrour to look down from the top of it into the vallies beneath; in which there is a Church of a wondrous lightneſs, and yet the windows of the ſame (if we may credit Adrianus who reports it) are made of Alabaſter in ſtead of Glaſs. 3 Viterbo, famous for the long reſidence of the Popes, at ſuch time as they were affronted by the Roman Senators. 4 Civita Vecchia (called antiently Centumcellæ) the only uſefull Haven that belongeth to Rome; which being ruined by the Saracens, was rebuilt by the Popes, new named, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle for the defence of their Shipping. 5 Porto, ſeated on the mouth of Tiber, over againſt Oſtia; but cannot make one good Haven betwixt them both; a Biſhops See, and one of the ſeven Cardinals which is alwaies aſſiſtant to the Pope. 6 Farneſe, the antient ſeat and Patrimony of the Farneſis, now Dukes of Parma. 7 Bracciano, which gives the title of a Duke to a branch of the Urſins, a well-known Family of thoſe parts. 8 Bacchano, neer the laſt in ſound, although not in ſite: compaſſed round about with Hils, in the form of a Theatre, having a fair Lake in the middeſt, out of which runneth the River Cremera, neer which the Fabii were ſlain.

Here was in this Country alſo the City of the Veii, of great wealth and power, in a War againſt which, managed for the moſt part by the aforeſayd Fabii, 306 of them were ſlain in a day; onely one little child of them being left at home, who reſtored the Houſe, and was the Anceſtor of that Fabius Maximus who preſerved Italie in the Wars with Annibal. Of which great ſlaughter, thus ſaith Ovid: ——— Veientibus Arvis

On the Veientine plain
Three hundred and ſix Fabii were ſlain.

This City of the Veii was at laſt, after a ten years ſiege, taken by Furius Camillus, and by him levelled with the earth, becauſe he found that the common people of Rome had a mind to leave their own City, and inhabit here. Here is alſo that fatall River of Allia, nigh unto which Brennus and his Galls, being drawn into Italie by the ſweet taſt of the Italian wines, ſlaughtered the Romans. The Roman Army conſiſted of 40000 Souldiers, moſt of them being raw and unexperienced. The Galls were not more in number, but were naturally of a fierce and hardy courage, and withall ſo big-boned, that it ſeemeth they were born to be the terrour of mankind, and the ruin of Cities. Having wonne the day, the Barbarians march towards Rome, forſaken of its chiefeſt ſtrength; the Capitoll only being manned by Manlius; which alſo they had maſtered if the geeſe had not been more vigilant than the Watch. When they had failed of this enterprize, they began a treaty with the Fathers of the Town, agreeing with them for a thouſand pound weight of Gold to forſake the City: But before the delivery of this mony, they were aſſaulted and vanquiſhed by Camillus; who for this is called Romes ſecond Founder. The overthrow at Allia, and the vanquiſhmrnt of the Fabii, hapned in one day, though in divers years, which was therefore by the old Romans put among the unfortunate daies; they never on that day attempting any buſineſs of importance. The like cuſtom, whether on ſuperſtition, or fear of ill luck, is uſed by many Chriſtians; and eſpecially on Childermas day; wherein Philip de Comines telleth us, that Lewis the 11. uſed not to debate any matter; but accounted it a ſign of ſome great misfortune towards him, if any man communed with him of his affairs; and would be marvailouſly diſpleaſed with thoſe that were near him, if they troubled him with any matter whatſoever.

And finally, here is the famous Lake called Thraſymene (now Lago di Perugia, from the neerneſs of it to that City) where Annibal ſlew Flaminius the Conſul, and 15000 of his Romans; which fight continued three houres, with ſo great an eagerneſs, that the Souldiers perceived not a terrible Earthquake which at that time hapned.

Compagna di Roma. 6 COMPAGNA DI ROMA, containeth that part of Italie which antiently was called Latium, the habitation of the Latins, and seat of Rome; so called for that it is adjoyning to that Famous City, as the more proper Territory, and precinct thereof. It is sometimes also called Campania nova, to difference it from Campania properly so called, the seat and dwelling of the Campans. It is bounded on the East with the said Campania, from which it is parted by the River Axofenus; on the West, with Tiber; on the North, with Umbria, or the new Ducato Spoletano, and Sabinia; and on the South with the Tyrrhenian or Tuscan sea: and came unto the Popes by no other Title than as they had the soveraignty and possession of the City of Rome, to which it alwaies did belong.

The chief place of it in old times was the City of Alba, then the Seat-Royall of the Latin, or Silvian Kings, ruined by Tullus Hostilius the third King of Rome; in which war Rome and Alba being laid at the stake, the whole action was committed by the Romans to the Horatii, to the Curatii by the Albans, being three Brethren of each side; in which it hapned that two of the Horatii were first slain, and the third counterfeiting a flight severed his Enemies, and so slew them; whereby the Albans ever after became subject to Rome. 2 Lavinium, built by Æneas in honour of his wife Lavinia. 3 Antium, honoured many times with the seat and retirement of the Emperours; the Country round about affording variety of Recreations. The people once very strong in shipping, till the taking of the Town by Mævius a Roman Consul, who having broke their Forces at sea, brought with him into Rome the Beaks of their ships and other vessels, with which he decked and beautified the Pulpit for Orations (in the common Forum) which have generally ever since been called Rostra. This was the chief City of the antient Volsci, a people very strong in shipping, though without an Haven; afterwards much frequented by the principall Romans in their retirements from the City; so that for pompous and stately buildings it might compare with any other. Out of the ruins of this Town long ago destroyed, sprang the new City called Neptunum, situate on a rock near unto the sea, the steepness of which gives it naturall strength enough, and yet it is Fortified besides with two strong Castles, surveying the sea, and commanding the shore. 4 Ardea, the chief Town of the Lentuli, and seat of Turnus the Rivall and Competitor of Æneas; afterwards taken by Superbus the last King of the Romans; to which when the Galls had taken Rome, the miserable Citizens were compelled to fly. 5 Gabii, taken also by the same Superbus, whose sonne Sextus counterfeiting some dislike of his Fathers cruelties, fled to the Gabii, by whom improvidently entrusted with the command of their City, which he betrayed unto the Romans. 6 Ostia, antiently the Port-Town to Rome, built at the mouth of Tiber, by Ancus Martius, the 4th King of Rome; but the Haven hath been long since dammed up, to stop the passage of the Enemies ships unto the City. The Bishop of this Town useth to consecrate the Pope. 7 Præneste, first conquered by the Romans under Qu. Cincinnatus the Dictator. Nothing so much endammaged this City as its naturall and artificiall Fortifications; for when the Romans in the times of sedition abandoned the Town, they used to make this place their refuge. Among others, Marius the younger made it the seat of war against L. Sylla, but perceiving the unsuccessfulness of his affairs, here killed himself; and Sylla entring it as Conqueror, put 12000 of the Citizens to the sword. It hath since been so often sacked, that it is very short now of its former lustre; but still it holds the reputation of a Bishops See. 8 Tibur, an antient City also, and seated in an healthy Air. It is now called Trivolis, where there is a Fountain, which with Artificiall Engines moved with water, representeth the notes of divers Birds. A device very rare (it seemeth) in the time of Adrianus, who reporteth it; but now grown ordinary. In the perfection of which Art, as almost all Civill Nations may pretend a share, so I conceive that the priority herein doth belong of right unto the French, whose Master-pieces in this kind do far exceed the rest of Europe: For in the Kings house at S^t. Germains, seven miles from Paris (if it be lawfull for me to digress a little on this Argument) one may behold the Statua of a Nymph, sitting before a pair of Organs, whose fingers by the help of water, are taught to manage the Keys in so due an order, and the instrument to yeeld such a Musick to it, as comes exceeding near the Organ, if it be not the same; her head in the mean time jolting from one shoulder to another, like an old Fidlers at a Wake; there being also not far off the counterfeits of divers Mils, who very busily plyed their work till the Musick sounded, and then stood still as if inchanted with the noise. In another place, upon the drawing of a Curtain, one may see two Tritons riding on their Dolphins in a Sea of water, each of them with a shell in his hand, which enterchangably and in turns served in stead of Trumpets: In a third, the story of Perseus and Andromeda most lively acted; and in a fourth, Orpheus in sylvis positus, Orpheus playing on a Violl, the Trees moving, and the wild Beasts dancing in two rings about him, by the artificiall guidance of the waters only; the prettie Birds in every place so chirping out their several and respective notes, that the hearer would conceive himself to be in some pleasant Grove. But it is time to go from Trivoli to 9 Velitri (called antiently Velitræ, and then a City of the Volsci) famous for the birth of the Emperor Augustus, and the dwelling of the Octavian Family; a place most delectably seated amongst the Vines, which yeeld as rich Wines as most in Italie. 10 Anxur, so called of the Temple which was here dedicated to Jupiter, surnamed Anxurus, that is, Beardless; first built by the Spartans, who flying from the severity of Lycurgus his Laws, did here seat themselves; after, a Colony of the Volsci, and after of the Romans. But this town being destroyed by the tyrannie of time, there started up

Tara-

Taracina in the place thereof, ſeated upon a Mountain, but neer the Sea, which it embraceth like a Half Moon (it is now called the Bay of Mola) this City lying on the one horn thereof, in the very extremity of the Popes Dominions; and that of Cajeta on the other, which is the firſt Port-Town of the Realm of Naples. The Country hereabouts hath moſt pleaſant Orchards, of Citrons, Oranges, and Limons; the Oranges having at the ſame time both ripe and green Fruits, and repreſents a kind of Summer in the dead of Winter. Such other things as are remarkable in this Campagna (heretofore called Latium) but more by what they have been, than they are at the preſent, are 1 Tuſculum, a village which belonged to Tullie, who here compoſed his excellent Book called the Tuſculan Queſtions. 2 Formiæ, built by the Laconians, heretofore the delight and ſolace of the antient Romans, now viſible only in its ruins. 3 Privernum, once the chief City of the Volſci, and the ſeat of Camilla, a noble Amazonian Lady, who aided Turnus the Rutilian in his ſharp war againſt Æneas and the Troians, where ſhe loſt her life. 4 Circe, an old City (in the place whereof now ſtands S. Felix) the habitation of Circe, that ſo much celebrated Sorcereſs, of whom, and her chanting of Ulyſſes and his companions, there is ſo much upon record in the antient Poets. Neer to which is the head-land called the Circæan Promontory, the repercuſſion of the Waves by whoſe Southern Baſis, makes a dreadfull noiſe, and gave occaſion to the fabulous inventions of the roaring of Lyons, howling of Dogs, &c, which were heard about that Witches dwelling. Campagna di Roma.

But the great glory of Latium, and indeed of Italie, was that the famous City of Rome was ſeated in it, being built on the Eaſt ſide of Tiber, now much inlarged by the increaſe of 42 leſſer ſtreams or Rivers. It is diſtant from the ſea about 15 miles, firſt built, as Fryer Leander a great Italian Antiquary is of opinion, by Roma, Daughter or Wife to one of the Latin Kings. But being forſaken and forlorn, by reaſon of the unwholſom air comming from the Fens, was rebuilt by Romulus, much pleaſed with the naturall ſtrength of the ſituation, and therefore like to make a good town of war. And this tradition I ſhould rather ſubſcribe unto, than that it was called Rome from Romulus; who had he pleaſed to challenge the honour to himſelf, might better have cauſed it to be called Romulea (of which name there was a Town among the Samnites) than to call it Roma. But whatſoever greatneſs it did after come to, it was ſmall enough (God knows) at firſt; the City comprehending the Mount Palatine only, and therefore not a mile in compaſs; the Territory not extending, as Strabo witneſſeth, above ſix miles from the City; and the Inhabitants thereof at the firſt generall Muſter amounting at the moſt to 3300 men. So inconſiderable they were as well in quality as numbers, that their neighbours thought it a diſparagement to beſtow their daughters on them; and therefore they were fain to get themſelves wives by a ſlight of wit; proclaming ſolemn Playes and Paſtimes to be held in Rome, and raviſhing the women which came thither to behold the ſports. The Kings ſucceeding much enlarged it. Mount Aventine, and the hill Janiculum on the other ſide of the water being walled and added to it by Ancus Martius; as Quirinalis, Eſquilinus, and Viminalis, were by Servius Tullus; Capitolinus and Mount Cœlius came not in till afterwards. But at the laſt it was improved to ſuch an height, that in the flouriſhing times of that Commonwealth, the men increaſed to the number of 463000, and the compaſs of the Town unto 50 miles; there being on and about the walls 740 Turrets. And in this number of 463000 men, I reckon neither ſervants, women, nor children, but men able to bear Arms, Free Denizens, and ſuch as were inrolled into Cenſe, or the Subſidie Books. To which if we ſhould adde their wives, children, and ſervants, we cannot probably conjecture them to have been fewer than three or four Millions: and ſo Lipſius is of opinion his Tract de Magnitudine Romana. The moſt memorable buildings of it, were 1 the Capitol, founded by Tarquinius Superbus, and beautified with the ſpoyles of their conquered Neighbours; ſaved from the fury of the Gulls by the cackling of Geeſe. Tacitus calleth this houſe, Sedem Jovis optimi maximi, aſpicato à majoribus pignus imperii conditum. It was twice burnt, once in the Civill Wars of Sylla and Marius; and again in the wars of Veſpaſian and Vitellius. In the third building of it, Veſpaſian carried the firſt basket of earth, after him the Nobility did the like, to make the people more forward in the ſervice: and perhaps the cuſtom of laying the firſt ſtone in a building, or driving the firſt nayl in a timber-work, by him whoſe edifice it is, hath from hence, if not beginning, yet growth. 2 Here was the Temple of Janus, open in the time of wars, and ſhut in the time of peace; which, during all their Monarchy, hapned but thrice: namely, during the reign of Auguſtus, after the Punick war, and in the time of Numa. 3 Here was the Bridge called Pons Sublicius, on which Horatius Cocles reſiſted the whole Army of King Porſena, Tarquin, and the Tuſcans, till the Citizens behind had broken down the bridge, received him ſwimming to the bank with joyfull acclamations, and ſaved their City from preſent ruin. Here lived the famous Warriers, ſo much renowned in the ſtories of elder times; here flouriſhed the exact Martiall diſcipline ſo memorized by antient Hiſtoriographers; and finally here were layd up the ſpoyles and Tropheys of all Europe.

ROME, as now it ſtandeth lower on the bank of Tyber, upon Campus Martius, where it was built after the inundation of the Gothes and Vandals, is in compaſs about eleven miles, within which compaſs is not a little waſt ground. The Inhabitants of all ſorts reckoned to amount to 200000, two parts whereof are Clergy-men and Courtiers, that is to ſay, ſuch as have their dependance on the Court of Rome, either by holding offices and places of employment under the Popes, or by attending on his perſon, or waiting on the Cardinals and eminent Prelates

ROME lates who are there abiding; or otherwiſe being of the retinue of ſuch Forein Ambaſſadors as are alwaies commorant in the City to follow the Negotiations of their ſeverall Maſters; all which muſt needs amount to a very great number. It was firſt built on the Eaſt ſide of the River, in the Territory of Latium, but now there is little left of the old City but the goodly ruins, and here and there ſome Churches and ſcattered houſes (except it be a little on the North-Eaſt of the River from the Gate called Del Populo to the Iland of Tiber) the reſt, eſpecially towards the South, being taken up with Paſtures and fields of Corn. The main body of the City, as now it ſtands, is on the Weſt ſide of the water, and the Holy Iland, conſiſting of three diſtinct parts or members. Of theſe the leaſt is that which they call La Iſola, but antiently the Holy Iland; firſt made an Iland by the Corn, Straw, and other Goods of the Tarquins, which the Senate not vouchſafing to convert to any publick or private uſe, commanded to be flung into the River, where it ſunk and ſetled to an Iland; and after called the Holy Iland, from a Temple herein built unto Eſculapius, brought hither from Epidaurus in the ſhape of a Serpent. This Iland is not above a quarter of a mile in length, and hardly half ſo much in bredth, but full of ſtately Churches and beautifull houſes. Next to this is that which they call Traſtevere, or Tranſ-Tiberina, but of old Janiculo, from the mountain of that name included in it; called alſo Civitas Ravennatium, or the City of the men of Ravenna, of the Souldiers which Auguſtus kept at Ravenna againſt Antonius, and after placed in this out-part of the City, which by reaſon of the unwholſomeneſs of the air, is inhabited onely by Artizans and poor people, yet compaſſed about with walls, except on that ſide next the water, and adorned with many goodly Churches, and ſome handſome buildings. But the chief glory of the City conſiſteth in that part of it which is called Il Borgo, lying on the North ſide of the other, but diſjoyned from it, compaſſed about with walls by Pope Leo the 4. and from thence called Civitas Leonina. For in this part there are, 1 the Church of S. Peter, which were it once finiſhed, would be one of the rareſt buildings in all the World. 2 The Caſtle of S. Angelo, impregnable unleſs by Famin. 3 The Popes Palace, called Belvidere, which with the Gardens thereof was compaſſed about with a very high wall by Pope Nicolas the fift, and had this name from the fair proſpect which it hath; in the ſame ſence as Belvoir Caſtle here in England, the Barony and Manſion of the Earls of Rutland. A Palace of magnificence and receipt enough. 4 The Library of the hill Vatican, properly called the Palatine, but more commonly the Vatican Library: a Library was founded by Sixtus the 4th. who not only ſtored it with the choiceſt books he could pick out of Europe; but allowed alſo a large revenue for the perpetuall augmentation of it, Bibliothecam Palatinam in Vaticano, toto terrarum orbe celebrem, advectis ex omni Europa libris conſtruxit; proventuſque certos, &c. So Onuphrius. When the Duke of Burbon ſacked Rome, An. 1527, it was much defaced and ranſacked; but by the ſucceeding Popes it hath been again recovered to its former fame and beauty. Rome is now an Univerſity, which was founded by Urban the fourth, at whoſe requeſt Thomas Aquinas profeſſed here. Pope Nicholas the fifth was a ſpeciall Benefactor to the ſame; and after him, Leo the tenth, who revived the Greek learning and language, which were in theſe parts almoſt forgotten. And finally to this place are brought all the treaſures of thoſe parts of Chriſtendom ſubject to the Popes authority, partly for the expence of ſtrangers, which do there remain on their ſeverall pleaſures or occaſions, and partly for the expeditions which are there obtained for the Inveſtitures of Biſhopricks, and Buls of Benefices, Indulgences, and other matters of Court-holy-water, and partly in the Penſions which are payd there to the Cardinals and other Miniſters of thoſe Kings and Princes which know beſt how to make their ends of the Popes Ambitions. So that it may be truly ſayd, there came not more Tributes into Old Rome from the conquered Provinces, than hath been bronght into the New from the ſubject Churches, which have ſubmitted to the power of the Roman Prelates; and that they have as great command now under the pretence of Religion, as ever they had formerly by force of Arms. So truly was it ſayd by Proſper of Aquitane (if my memory fayl not.)

Roma caput mundi, quicquid non poſſidit Armis, Religione tenet.——

That is to ſay.

What Rome ſubdu'd not with the Sword,
She holds by colour of the Word.

But yet there wants the Genius of the antient City, the power and naturall courage of the old Inhabitants, which held the ſame againſt the bravery and aſſaults of all Forein Enemies: this City during the time of the antient Romans, being never took but by the Galls; but ſince Pontificall, it hath been made a Prey to all Barbarous Nations, and never was beſieged by any that did not take it. In a word, the city of Rome as now it ſtandeth, is but the carcaſs of the old, of which it retains nothing but the ruins; and the cauſe of them, her ſins.

The Popes much brag of the foundation of their Church, and the authority of S. Peter; whoſe being there is indeed conſtantly atteſted by moſt antient Writers, inſomuch that Calvin, though no friend to the Popes of Rome, yet propter Scriptorum conſenſum, in regard of the unanimous conſent of the primitive times, did not think fit to controvert it. The ſilence of the Scriptures is a Negative Argument, and concludes nothing to the contrary, againſt ſo great a Cloud of unqueſtioned Witneſſes, as ſoberly and poſitively have affirmed the ſame. And yet I would would not have it thought by the captious Romanists, that I conceive that it makes any thing at all for the Popes Supremacy, becauſe he ſits in Peters ſeat; no more than it did make for Vibius Rufus (as Dion doth relate the Story) to attain Tullies eloquence, or Cæſars power, becauſe he maried Tullies widow, and bought Cæſars chair, though the poor Gentleman did befool himſelf with this opinion, that he ſhould be Maſter of them both. Of which ſee Lib. LVII. And yet the Popes relie ſo much upon this fancy of being the direct heirs of S.Peter, and all his preheminences, that all things which they ſay or do, muſt be entituled to S.Peter. Their Throne muſt be S.Peters Chair, their Church S.Peters Ship, their Lands S. Peters Patrimony, their Tributes and exactions muſt be called Peter-pence, their Excommunications fulminated in S.Peters name; and all their Buls and Faculties ſealed Annulo Piſcatoris, with S.Peters Signet. Nay they went ſo far at the laſt, that Pope Steven not being contented to be Peters Succeſſor, did take upon him in plain terms to be Peter himſelf. For being diſtreſſed by Aſtulphus King of the Lombards, he ſends for aid unto King Pepin in this following ſtile. Petrus Apoſtolus JESU CHRISTI, &c. i.e. Peter the Apoſtle of JESUS CHRIST to you the moſt illuſtrious King Pepin, and to all Biſhops, Abbots, &c. I the Apoſtle Peter, whoſe adopted ſonnes you are, admoniſh you that you preſently come and defend this City, &c. And doubt you not, but truſt aſſuredly, that I my ſelf, as if I ſtood before you, do thus exhort you, &c. and that I Peter the Apoſtle of God, will at the laſt day yeeld you mutuall kindneſſes, and prepare you Tabernacles in the heavens. Baronius who records this Letter, An°.755. numb.17. was it ſeems, pretty well perſwaded by it, that the Pope and Peter were all one. For in his Exhortation or Pareneſes to the State of Venice, being then upon differences with Pope Paul the fifth, he ſtileth him in plain terms thus, Paulus idemq; Petrus vicem Chriſti agens in terris, i.e. Paul, who is alſo Peter, and Chriſts Vicegerent. But leaving theſe imaginary clames and challenges of S.Peters privileges, though they did really advance the reputation of that See in the darker times, two things there were which did exceedingly conduce to the improvement of their power in the more knowing and diſcerning times of Chriſtianity. Of which the principall was the Orthodoxie of the Biſhops or Popes of Rome; their eminent and ſincere profeſſion of the Faith of Chriſt, when almoſt all the other Churches were either torn in pieces by the fury of Schiſm, or waſted and ſubverted by the fraud of Hereſie. In which regard, Appeals were frequently made to the Church of Rome, as a more competent Judge of the truth of Doctrine; the communion of it much deſired by all true Chriſtians; and a repair thither for relief and ſhelter in the times of trouble, made by the Orthodox Profeſſors under perſecution. And of theſe times, and this condition of that Church, we are to underſtand ſuch paſſages of the Antient Writers, as magnifie the Faith of the Church of Rome, and ſet it above all the batteries and aſſaults of Hereſie. Such is that paſſage of S.Cyprian, Romanos eſſe ad quos perfidia non poteſt habere acceſſum, lib.1.ep.3. and that of Hierome, Romanam fidem (i.e. Romanorum fidem) Apoſtolica voce Laudatam, ejuſmodi præſtigias non recipere; in Apol.cont. Ruffin. and many others of that kind. Which paſſages, it were as fooliſh and ridiculous to apply to all following times, the condition of that Church being different from what then it was, as to accommodate all thoſe Eulogies and commendations to the preſent Citie of Rome, which the Orators and Panegyriſts of the elder times have hyperbolically aſcribed to old Rome in her greateſt glories. The next was the fixation of the Popes in the Metropolis, or Imperiall City, which drawing to it ſuch a multitude of ſuters and attendants from all parts the world, could not but add much to the power and reputation of thoſe Prelates, who had the happineſs and honour to be reſident there: and thereby opportunity to gain more Diſciples, to ſolve more doubts of conſcience, and decide more controverſies, than any other could expect. And ſo we are to underſtand that paſſage in S.Ireneus, in which he ſaith, Ad hanc Eccleſiam propter potentiorem Principalitatem neceſſe eſt omnem convenire Eccleſiam. i.e. eos qui ſunt undiq; Eccleſias. And ſo they did as long as Rome enjoyed the honour of a more potent Principality than other Cities: But when that more potent Principality failed to be at Rome by the removall of the Imperiall See, firſt to Conſtantinople, and afterwards unto Ravenna, then did the Biſhops of Conſtantinople and Ravenna diſpute with thoſe of Rome for Superiority: the Seat of Religion moſt commonly following the ſeat of the Empire. And in this clame the Patriarch or Biſhop of Conſtantinople prevailed ſo far, that with the permiſſion of Mauritius the Emperor, he took upon him the title of Univerſall Patriarch. Gregory the Great (of whom it is ſaid that he was the worſt Biſhop of all that went before him, and the beſt of all that came after him) was at that time Biſhop of Rome: Who ſharply inveighed as well againſt the Emperor, as the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, for this Title; and plainly maintained, that whoſoever called himſelf Univerſall Biſhop, was the fore-runner of Antichriſt. As for himſelf, it is probable that he took the title of Servus ſervorum Dei, more in oppoſition to him of Conſtantinople, than with an intent to be ſo truly. To which though thoſe of Rome reply, that Gregory did not abſolutely condemn this Title, but only blamed John the Conſtantinopolitan Patriarch, for aſſuming to himſelf that attribute, which properly belonged to the See of Rome; yet this cannot be. For then we ſhould either in the old Bulls of the former Popes find mention of this Title; or elſe Pope Gregory would have aſſumed it to himſelf, that the world might take notice whereto of right it did belong. But Boniface, who next but one ſucceeded Gregory, having further aims, applied himſelf to Phocas that bloody Tyrant: who having murdered the Emperor Mauritius, his wife and children, and thereby got the generall hatred of all the good Subjects of the Empire, pire, the better to assure himself of Italie, which he feared was ready to revolt, declared this Boniface to be the Oecumenicall Bishop, and Head of the Church. To such a good beginning, such a gracious Patron, do the Popes stand indebted for that power and Empire, which now they challenge to themselves over all the Church.

Now as the Bishop of Constantinople and Ravenna did challenge a priority or precedency of the Popes of Rome, by reason that they were respectively honoured with the Seat Imperiall: so were there divers other Bishops, as Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, Millain, which clamed an equality with them, and would by no means yeeld them any superiority. For triall of whose clame, we must look back on somewhat which hath been said before; where it was shewn, that the Roman Empire was divided into fourteen Dioceses, each Diocese being subdivided into severall Provinces, each Province comprehending many severall Cities: then that in every of those Cities, where the Romans had their Defensores, the Christians also had a Bishop; in the Metropolis of each Province, which commonly was the seat of the Roman President, the Christians had their Metropolitan; and that in each principall City of each severall Diocese, wherein the Vicar of that Diocese had fixed his dwelling, there did the Christians place a Primate. And this was done according to that famous Maxim of Optatus, Respublica non est in Ecclesia, sed Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is in the Common-wealth, and not the Common-wealth in the Church. Upon which foundation the Fathers in the Councill of Chalcedon raised this superstructure, Ἐκκλησιασικῶν τὴν τάξιν, &c. that the honours of the Church should be accommodated unto those in the State. So that according to this Platform the Primates of the Church were of equall power, each of them limited and restrained to his proper Sphere, out of the which if he presumed once to act, he moved irregularly, and in his Excentricks. And for those Primates, I shall give you once for all this generall Muster, that is to say, the Patriarch or Pope of Rome, for the Diocese or Prefecture of that City, the Primate or Arch-bishop of Millain for the Diocese of Italie, of Sirmium for that of Illyricum, of Lyons for that of France, of York for Britain, of Toledo for Spain, and of Carthage for Africk. Then for the East parts of the Empire, there was the Patriach of Alexandria for the Diocese of Egypt; of Antioch for that of the Orient; the Primate or Arch-bishop of Ephesus for the Diocese of Asia; of Nicomedia for that of Pontus, of Bizantium or Constantinople for that of Thrace, of Thessalonica for the Diocese of Greece, and of Justiniana prima for that of Dacia. Amongst all which was a mutuall correspondence and Co-ordination for the generall Government of the Church, maintained by Letters of intercourse, which they called Literas Formatas, and Communicatorias; but no subordination, and much less subjection, unto one another, as doth appear most evidently by the Canons of the Councill of Nice, assigning to the three great Patriarchs their peculiar bounds, according to the custom of the former times. As for the Diocese or Patriarchate of the Popes of Rome, it contained in it those ten Provinces which were immediately subject to the Prefect or Provost of that City (an Officer instituted first by Augustus Cæsar) that is to say the Provinces of Tuscia and Umbria, Picenum Suburbicarium, Campania, Apulia and Calabria, Valeria, Samnium, Lucania and the Brutii, in the main land of Italie; and the three Ilands of Sicilie, Corsica, and Sardinia. In which regard, I mean as to the immediate Government of those Provinces by the Præfect of the City of Rome, as they are called Regiones Suburbicariæ by Ruffinus an Italian Writer; so antiently the Pope himself was called Urbicus or the City-Bishop, as appears plainly by Optatus, who calleth Pope Zepherinus, Zepherinus Urbicus. But the Popes were not long content with that allotment, growing up daily by a steddy and constant watchfulness upon all occasions, to increase the Grandour of that See, and taking to themselves the honor to be Vindices Canonum, the strict and punctuall preservers of the antient Discipline, which took extremely well with all sorts of people. Till in the end from being Vindices Canonum, they came to be Interpreters, and at last the Rulers, or rather the Over-rulers of the Canons; and from chief Labourers in the Vineyard, they became the Landlords; which was the honor aimed at, and at last obtained by the foresaid Boniface, whom that cruell and butcherly Tyrant Phocas made the Head of the Church, the sixty sixt Bishop and first Pope of Rome: the Latine word Papa coming from the old Greek Πάππας, signifying a Father. A Title at the first common unto other Bishops; as is evident to any one who hath read the Fathers; but after this appropriated unto those of Rome. Of these Popes, their Succession, and times of Government, our Chronologers are very uncertain: not one of them that ever I had the luck to see, agreeing exactly with another. The reasons whereof, as I conceive, are 1. The frequent Vacancies, and 2. the many Schisms which have happened in it, and 3. the Anti-Popes in them created: the Writers of those times accounting him onely among the Popes, to whose faction they were most devoted. This Catalogue ensuing I have collected principally out of the Tables of Helvicus, Freigius, Bellarmine, and Onuphrius, whose differences I have reconciled as well as possibly I could: premonishing the Reader, that where the number of yeers which every Pope is found to sit in the Papall Chair, make not up the full number from his first admission, to the coming in of his Successor, it must be understood of some Schism or Vacancy hapning in the Intervall, by which the tale is to be made up. And for the difficulties which occur amongst the Antients, in the first Succession, some placing of them thus, Linus, Cletus, Clemens; some Linus, Clemens, Cletus; and finally some others putting the Clemens first: I know no better way to compose the same, than to affirm (as many of the Fathers do) that S. Peter and S. Paul were Co-Founders of the Church in Rome; S. Peter of the Church of the Circumcision, and S. Paul of the Gentiles; each of them being Bishop of the Church of his own foundation: and then to draw down the Succession in this manner following. The Papacie.

living. To these 179 Popes, adde the 65 Bishops which preceded that arrogant title of Universall, and they make up the full number of 244. How many are to come, he must be a cunning man that can determine: And yet such cunning men there have been, who have determined positively, but withall Prophetically of the number of Popes; by name S. Malachie, one of the first Apostles of the Irish Nation, very much honoured by that people to this very day. Of whom there is remaining in Massinghams collection of the Irish Saints, a certain number of Mottos, in the Latin tongue, agreeable to the nature or chief accidents of as many Popes successively to one another, according to the order of those severall Mottos; and thereunto this Prophecie annexed, that when so many Popes had sate in S. Peters Chair, either the World should end, or the Popedom fail. The Book was shewed to me by the Author when I was at Paris, and the Popes names in order joyned to every Motto, as far as to the time of Urban, who last deceased; which I compared, as well as my memory would serve me, and found the Mottos and the Popes to be very answerable. The Motto for Pope Urban, which I took most notice of, was Lilium & Rosæ: a Motto very suitable to the principall Action which was like to happen in his time, being the conjunction of the English Rose, and the French Lilie, in the Mariage of Charles K. of England, and Madam Henrietta Maria the Princess of France, which that Pope earnestly promoted in his speedy and cheerfull granting of the Dispensation. And to take from me all suspition of Imposture, this Massingham shewed me an old Book written by one Wion a Flemming, and printed near 200 years before his Collection; in which the Mottos stood as in his they did; and comparing the Mottos with a printed Catalogue of the Popes, I found the name of Urban, and that Motto to jump even together. From Urban downwards there remained (as I now remember) 36 Mottos more to come; by consequence if this Malachie were as true a Prophet as one Malachie was, just so many Popes, and then the Popedom to be ruined, or the World to end. But I hope God for his Elects sake will abridge those dayes, and not permit the superstitions and corruptions of that Church to endure so long; nor so many Assertors and Defenders of those Roman Heterodoxies to be added to the former number: Out of the storyes of all which (pretermitting many things of less consideration) I will only select some particular passages, for the better understanding of their state and story.

1 Pelagius the first, ordained that Hereticks and Schismaticks should be punished with temporall death (which severity continueth still;) and that none should be preferred to Ecclesiasticall dignityes by Gifts and Bribes, which pious order is long since antiquated.

2 Vitalianus, first brought Organs into the divine service of the Church of Rome, to be used with with the ſinging or vocall Muſick formerly in uſe; which afterwards was brought unto more perfection by the Popes ſucceeding.

3 Conſtantine, was ſo generally beloved of all men, that going to Conſtantinople, Juſtinian the ſecond kiſt his feet in ſign of honour; which ſome of the ambitious Popes in times ſucceeding drew into example, and at laſt brought into a cuſtom, as it ſtill continueth.

4 Paſcal the firſt, cauſed the Prieſts of certain pariſhes in Rome, by reaſon of their nearneſs to his perſon, their preſence at his Election, and to honour them with a more venerable Title, to be called Cardinals. Now mates for Kings, and numbred about 70, but more or fewer at the ſole pleaſure of the Popes.

5 Eugenius the ſecond took to himſelf within the Territories of the Church, the Autority of creating Dukes, Earls, and Knights, as the Exarch of Ravenna had uſed to do.

6 Sergius the ſecond, was the firſt that changed his name. For, thinking his own name Bocca di Porco, or Swineſ-mouth, not conſonant to his dignity, he cauſed himſelf to be called Sergius, which precedent his Succeſſors following, do alſo vary their names. So that if one be a Coward, he is called Leo; if a Tyrant, Clemens; if an Atheiſt, Pius or Innocent; if a Ruſtick, Urbanus; and ſo of the reſt.

7 John the eighth, is by moſt men confeſſed to be a woman, and is uſually called Pope Joane. To avoyd the like diſgrace, the Porphirie chair was ordained; Ubi ab ultimo diacono, &c. ſo that both in a literall and myſticall ſenſe, this woman may be called, The Whore of Babylon. The name of this Female Pope, the Romiſh Chronologers have not inſerted into the Catalogue; the reaſon, as Marianus Scotus giveth it, propter turpitudinem rei, & ſexum muliebrem. And from hence it is, that in the common Catalogues theſe Popes that have called themſelves Johns, are ſo ill ordered, ſome making that John which ſucceeded Adrian the ſecond, An° 872, to be the 8, and others the 9. Platina onely of all the Pontificians reckoneth Pope Joane as the 8 of the Johns, and ſo forward: in which particular I have followed his authority. And it is probable enough that God might ſuffer that proud See to fall into ſuch an infamy, the better to humble the enſuing Popes in the times of their greateſt ruff and flouriſh; or to prevent the brag of that continued Succeſſion, they ſo much pretend to. More of this Argument, (as to the truth of the ſtory in matter of Fact) he that liſts to ſee, may ſatisfie himſelf in M. Cookes Book of Pope Joane, who moſt induſtriouſly hath anſwered all objections which hath been made againſt it by thoſe of Rome.

8 Nicolas the firſt, the better to faſten the Clergy to the See of Rome, and make them the leſs obnoxious to their naturall Princes; was the firſt who did by Law reſtrain them from mariage, ſaying, that it was the more honeſt to have to do with many women privately, than openly to keep a wife; and ſome of his Succeſſors followed it ſo cloſe, that a Prieſt of Placentia being accuſed to have wife and children, was deprived of his Benefice; but upon proof made, that ſhe was the wife of another man, and his Strumpet only, he was again reſtored unto it.

9 Adrian the third ordained, that the Emperour from thenceforth ſhould have no more to do with the Election or Confirmation of the Pope, but that it ſhould be left wholly to the Roman Clergy.

10 Formoſus was ſo ill beloved, and of ſuch a generall diſeſteem, that Pope Steven the ſeventh cauſed his body to be unbnried, all his Acts reverſed, two of his fingers to be cut off, and then the mangled carkaſs to be again interred among the Luty. And though theſe Acts of Steven were adjudged illegal both by John the tenth, and Pope Romanus, two of his Succeſſors, and the doings of Formoſus juſtified, yet Sergius the third cauſed his corrupt and putrified body to be taken once more out of the grave, and his head to be cut off as if ſtill alive. So little did the infallibility of St. Peters Chair preſerve theſe Popes from falling into groſs and irreconcilable contradictions.

11 John the 12th, was the next after Sergius the ſecond that changed his name, a very wicked, cruell, and libidinous man; who comming to that place by his Fathers greatneſs, cut off the Noſe of one Cardinall, and the hand of another, for that they had ſignified to the Emperour Otho the firſt, what a ſcandall all the Church did ſuffer by his deteſtable life; and finally being taken in Adultery was ſlain by the husband of the woman.

12 Gregory the fifth, finding the power of the Emperour, as long as it continued in a way of ſucceſſion, not likely to be over-born by that of the Church; and being withall incenſed againſt the Romans, who till that time retained ſome ſhadow of an Empire; projected the election of the future Emperors by the Princes of Germany, by which the Germans were diſtracted into Factions, and the Romans weakned, and ſo a door left open to the Popes of Rome to make their ends upon them both.

13 Steven the tenth brought the Church of Millaine to be under the obedience of the Popes of Rome, which till that time had challenged an equality with them; as before Pope Donnus had done the Church of Ravenna, which for ſome time had challenged the precedencie of them.

14 Gregorie the ſeventh, commonly called Hildebrand, a turbulent and unquiet man, who firſt adventured to draw the premiſes layd down by ſome of his Predeceſſors into a concluſion, Excommunicating the Emperour Henry the fourth, for medling with the Inveſtitures of Biſhops, and cauſing Rodulph Duke of Suevia to rebell againſt him. A man much favoured againſt the Princes of her own House by the Countess Mathildis, who is sayd to be so much his friend, that for his sake she left the company of her husband, and disherited her right heirs, setling her whole estates in Italie on the See of Rome. And though the Emperour had the better of this Pope, and made him fly out of Rome, and dye in exile, yet he was fain at last to submit himself to Pope Pascal the second, (who had armed his own sonne against him) to attend bare-foot at his door, and cry peccavi.

The Papacie.

15 Sergius the third ordained the bearing of Candles in the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, thence called Candlemass day.

16 Sergius the fourth was the first that on Christmass night with divers Ceremonies did consecrate Swords, Roses, or the like, to be sent as tokens of love and honour to such Princes as deserved best of them, or whom they desired to oblige. Thus Leo the tenth sent a consecrated Rose to Frederick Duke of Saxonie, requesting him to banish Luther: and Paul the third an hallowed Sword to James the fift of Scotland, to engage him in a war against Henry the 8. who had then withdrawn himself and his Kingdom from the Popes commands.

17 Nicolas the second took from the Roman Clergy the election of Popes, and gave it to the College of Cardinals.

18 Celestine the second, was the Inventer of that mad manner of cursing, or Anathematizing by Bell, Book, and Candle.

19 Alexander the third, pursuing the desperate course of Gregory the seventh, Excommunicated the Emperor Frederick the first; and by raising war against him in every place, brought him to that exigent, that he was fain to prostrate himself at his feet: when the Pope treading on his neck, said aloud, super Aspidem & Basiliscum, &c. prophanely applying those words to the present occasion. And when the Emperour to put the better colour on his disgrace, meekly replyed, Non tibi sed Petro; the Pope not willing to lose his part of so great a glory, subjoyned as angerly, Et mihi & Petro.

20 Innocent the third held a Councell in Rome, in which it was decreed that the Pope should have the correction of all Christian Princes; and that no Emperor should be acknowledged till he had sworn obedience to him. Which bringeth into my mind that jolly humour of the great Cham of Tartary, who when he hath dined, commands his Trumpeters to sound, and make Proclamation, that now all other Kings and Princes may sit down to dinner. He brought in the Doctrin of Transubstantiation, and ordained that there should be a Pix made to cover the consecrated (but now transubstantiated) Bread, and a Bell to be rung before it. He is also said to have first imposed Auricular Confession upon the people.

21 Nicolas the third was the first Pope who practised to enrich his kindred, intending to make one of them King of Lombardy, another King of Tuscany, and to raise the rest to great Advancements out of the Lands of the Church. Before which time (as Machiavil very well observeth) as there was no mention of the advancement of any of the Popes kinsfolks or posterity; so afterwards they studied no one thing more than to prefer their own blood; insomuch that they have not only laboured to make them Princes, but if it were possible would procure the Popedom to be made hereditary. So he, with probabilitie enough: For so dearly do they love their Nephews (by which name they use to call their Bastards) that it was very justly said by Pope Alexander the third, The Laws forbid us to get Children, and the Devill hath given us Nephews in their stead.

22 Boniface the eighth, of whom it is sayd, that he entered like a Fox, reigned like a Lion, and dyed like a Dog, by his generall Bull exempted the Clergy from being chargeable with Taxes and payments unto Temporall Princes. Which being complyed with by the Clergy of England, King Edward the first put them out of his protection; and so the Popes Bull left roaring here. He caused the Book of the Canon Law called the Decretals to be first set out; and instituted the Feast of Jubilee to be held in Rome every hundredth year; but by Clement the sixt it was brought unto the fiftieth year, and since reduced to the five and twentieth. This is that Boniface, who in that great concourse of people which repaired to Rome to observe his new Feast of Jubilee (to which every one that did repair was to have a plenary remission of all his sins) shewed himself one day in the habit of a Pope, and the next day in that of an Emperour; and caused two Swords to be born before him every day, in sign that all power Ecclesiasticall and Temporall did belong unto him.

23 Clement the fift was the first that made Indulgences and Pardons saleable. For seeing (said he) that one drop of our Saviours blood had been enough to have saved all Mankind, and yet that all his blood was shed, the over-plus was left to the Church as a standing Treasure, to be disposed of by S. Peter and his Successors. And hereunto, to make his Treasure the more inexhausted, he added the Merits of the Virgin Mary, and all other Saints. Being wearied with the insolencies of the people of Rome, he removed the Papall See to Avignon in France, where it continued for the space of 70 years.

24 Clemens the sixt had an ill time of it: For in his Papacie the Emperour gave freely all Lands belonging to the Church to such as formerly had usurped them, to be holden by them of the Empire. Upon which title the Malatesti became Lords of Rimini, the Ordelaffi of Forli, the Varani of Camerine, the Bentivolies of Bononia, the Manfredi of Faenza, &c. Which Estates were never recovered to the Church till the time of Pope Julio the second; though conquered from the preſent owners in the time of Alexander the ſixth, by Cæſar Borgias his ſonne, who had an aim of ſetling them, and perhaps the Papacy it ſelf, on the Borgian Family. The Papacie.

25 Gregory the eleventh returned the Papall Chair again to the City of Rome, whither he conveighed himſelf by Sea, in private, for fear of being withheld by the French; and being come thither found the chief parts of the City ſo over-grown with briers and buſhes, and the principall buildings of it ſo decayed and ruinous, that a little longer abſence would have made it deſolate.

26 Paul the ſecond endeavoured to encreaſe the Majeſty of the Popedom by Arms and Avarice, and exceeded all his Predeceſſours in pomp and ſhew, cauſing his Miter to be enriched with Diamonds, Saphyrs, Emeralds, and other ſtones of great price; and augmenting the ſplendour of the Cardinals with a ſcarlet Gown, whom Innocent the 4. had graced with red Hats before. He brought the Jubilee from 50 to 25.

27 Sixtus the fourth ordained a conſtant guard to attend his perſon. He very much beautified and repaired the City of Rome, and was the firſt founder of the Vatican Library. But on the other ſide, he is ſayd by ſome, to have ſet all offices and preferments to ſale, and to have builded in Rome Stewes of both ſexes, and to bring in Beads, and to authorize our Ladies Pſalter.

28 Alexander the ſixt, ſetting aſide all modeſty, was the firſt that openly acknowledged his Nephews (as they call their Baſtards) to be his ſonnes. By one of which, the Cæſar Borgias before named, he recovered Forli, Imola, and many other eſtates from the preſent owners, on a deſign of ſetling them in his own family, as before is ſayd; and to that end called in the French, who after made ſuch fowl work in Italie.

29 Julio the ſecond had more in him of the Souldier than the Prelate, recovering many Towns unto the Church which had been formerly uſurped, being taken from the Occupants by Cæſar Borgias; and keeping Italie in his time in continuall wars. This is the Pope, who paſſing over the bridge of Tiber, brandiſhed his Sword, and threw his Keyes into the River, ſaying, that if Peters Keyes would not ſerve his turn, then Pauls Sword ſhould do it.

30 Leo the tenth was indeed a great Favourer of Learning; but of great prodigalitie and vaſt expence. For maintainance whereof he ſent his ſaleable Indulgences into France, and Germany; which buſineſs being indiſcreetly handled by his Miniſters, occaſioned Luther in Germany, and Zuinglius amongſt the Switzers, firſt to write againſt them, and afterwards to queſtion many points of Popiſh Doctrin. In purſuance of which quarrell, the Pope of Rome burnt Luthers Books, whom he declared for an Heretick; and Luther did the like at Wittenberg with the Popes Canon Law, whom he declared to be a Perſecutor, a Tyrant, and the very Antichriſt. Which flame increaſed ſo faſt, and inlarged ſo far, that it burnt down a great part of the Papall Monarchy.

31 Pius the fourth continued the Councill formerly called at Trent by Pope Paul the third, but interrupted and layd aſide from on Pope to another, and having brought it to an end, and thereby ſetled and confirmed the Intereſs of the Church of Rome, cauſed it to be received as Oecumenicall, though the Italian Biſhops being moſt of them the Popes creatures, did more than double the number of all the reſt, and yet ſome of the reſt alſo were but meerly Titulars. He added alſo a new Creed conſiſting of twelve Articles to be added to that of the Apoſtles, by all who lived in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But of the words and actions of theſe Ghoſtly Fathers we have ſaid enough, if not too much. I will therefore end with that of the Painter, who being blamed by a Cardinall, for giving to S. Peters picture too much of the red, replyed, that he had made him ſo, as bluſhing at the lives of thoſe who were called his Succeſſours.

As for the Temporall power and greatneſs of the Popes of Rome, there is a pretended Donation of the Emperor Conſtantine, by which the City of Rome it ſelf, moſt part of Italie, and Africk, and all the Ilands of thoſe Seas are conferred upon them; the forgery whereof is very learnedly ſhewn by our learned Cracanthorp in his diſcourſe upon that ſubject. But that Donation might moſt juſtly be ſuſpected of Fraud and Forgery, though no body had took the pains to detect the ſame; conſidering how fearfull the Popes are grown to have the truth thereof diſputed; inſomuch that many leaves are razed out of Guicciardine by the Inquiſition, where it had been queſtioned. For in that place the Hiſtorian not only denieth the ſayd feigned Donation, but affirmes, that divers learned men reported, that Conſtantine and Silveſter (to whom it is ſayd to have been made) lived in divers Ages. Then ſheweth, how baſe and obſcure the Authority of the Pope was in Rome it ſelf, during the time that the barbarous Nations made havock of Italie. 2 That in the inſtitution of the Exarchate, the Popes had nothing to do with the Temporall Sword, but lived as ſubject to the Emperors. 3 They were not very much obeyed in matters Spirituall, by reaſon of the corruption of their manners. 4 That after the overthrow of the Exarchate, the Emperors now neglecting Italie, the Romans began to be governed by the advice and power of the Popes. 5 That Pepin of France, and his ſonne Charles, having overthrown the Kingdom of the Lombards, gave unto the Popes, the Exarchate, Urbine, Ancona, Spoleto, and many other Towns and Territories about Rome. 6 That the Popes in all their Buls and Charters, expreſſed the date of them in theſe formall words; Such a one, the Lord our Emperour reigning. 7 That long after the tranſlation of the Empire from France to Germany, the Popes began to make open proteſtation, that the Pontificiall dignity was rather to give Laws to the Emperors, than receive any from them. 8. That being thus raiſed to an earthly power, they forgot the ſalvation of ſouls, ſanctity of life, and the Commandments of God, propagation of Religion, and Charity towards men: And that to raiſe arms, to make war againſt Chriſtians, to invent new devices for getting of money, to prophane ſacred things for their own ends, and to inrich their kindred and children, was their only ſtudy. And this is the ſubſtance of Guicciardine in that place: an Author above all exception. He was a man whom the Popes imployed in many buſineſſes of principall importance; ſo that no hate to them, but love to the truth, made him write thus much. As for the City of Rome, ſo unlikely is it to have been given by Conſtantine, that neither Pepin nor Charles his ſonne (though more beholding to the Popes than that Emperor was) could be induced to part with it, Lewis ſurnamed Pius, is ſaid to have been the firſt Donor of it, and a Copy of his Donation is found in the third Book of Volaterran, ſubſcribed by the Emperor, his three ſonnes, ten Biſhops, eight Abbots, fifteen Earls, and the Popes Library-Keeper; yet notwithſtanding, it is thought by many very learned and judicious men, that really there was no ſuch matter; but that all this was forged by Anaſtaſius the Popes Bibliothecarian, or Library-Keeper, who is cited as a witneſs to the Donation. And yet to put the matter further out of queſtion, let us next hear what that great Politician and Stateſ-man, the Recorder of Florence, Nic. Machiavel hath obſerved in this caſe. "Rome (ſaith he) was al"ways ſubject to the Lords of Italie, till Theodorick King of the Gothes removed his Seat to "Ravenna; for thereby the Romans were inforced to ſubmit themſelves to the Biſhops, An. 430.

"or thereabouts. And talking of the eſtate of the Popedom, An. 931. he ſtates it thus. In Rome
"were elected yeerly out of the Nobility two Conſuls, who according to the antient Cuſtom "ruled that Citie. Under them was appointed a Judge to miniſter juſtice to the people. There "was alſo a Counſell of twelve men, which gave Governors unto the Towns ſubject to Rome.
"And for the Pope, he had in Rome more or leſs Authority, according to the favour which he "found with the Emperors, or others then moſt mighty; but the leaving of Italie by the Ger- "man Emperors, ſetled the Pope in a more abſolute Soveraignty over the City. And yet it
"ſeems they were not of ſuch abſolute power, but that the Romans tugged hard with them for "their Liberties. Concerning which he tells us in another place, That the ambition of the peo"ple of Rome did at that time (viz. An. 1010.) make much war with the Popes, and that having "helped the Pope to drive out the Emperor, and altered the Government of the City as to "them ſeemed good, ſuddenly they became Enemies to him, and the Popes received more "injuries at their hands than at any other Chriſtian Princes; and that even in thoſe days when "the Cenſures of the Popes made all the Weſt of the wold to tremble, yet even then did the "people of Rome rebell, and both the Popes and the People ſtudied for nothing ſo much,
"as how one of them might overthrow the Authority and Eſtimation of the other.

But for the method and degrees by which the Popes aſcended to their temporall greatneſs, take here an extract of the Story collected out of the beſt Authors, by the moſt reverend Father in God the late Lord Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, in his learned and laborious work againſt Fiſher the Jeſuit. "The Pope (ſaith he) being choſen antiently by the Clergie and people of "Rome, uſed always to receive from the Emperors hands a ratification of that choyce: inſo-
"much that about the yeer 579. when all Italie was on fire with the Lombards, and Pelagius the "ſecond conſtrained through the neceſſity of the times, to enter upon the Popedom without
"the Emperors leave; S. Gregorie then a Deacon, was ſhortly after ſent in an Embaſſie to ex-
"cuſe it. But when the Lombards grew ſo great in Italie, and the Empire was ſo infeſted with "the Saracens, and ſuch changes happened in all parts of the world, as that neither for the pre-
"ſent the Homage of the Pope was uſefull to the Emperor, nor the Protection of the Emperor a"vailable for the Pope: by this means was the Biſhop of Rome left to play his own game by "himſelf. A thing which as it pleaſed him well enough, ſo both he and his Succeſſors made "great advantage by it. For being grown to that eminence by the favour of the Emperors,
"and the greatneſs of that City and place of his abode; he then found himſelf the more free,
"the greater the Tempeſt was that beat upon the other. And then firſt he ſet himſelf to alie-
"nate the hearts of the Italians from the Emperor; in which he did prevail ſo far, that Theo-
"phylact the Exarch coming into Italie, was oppoſed by the Souldiers, who wiſhed better to
"the Pope than to the Emperor; and the Emperors own Governor was fain to be defended
"from his own Souldiers by the power of the Pope, who had gotten intereſt in them againſt "their own Maſter. Next he oppoſed himſelf againſt him; and about the yeer 710. Pope
"Conſtantine the firſt did openly affront Philippicus the Emperor, in defence of Images, as Onu-
"phrius telleth us. After him Gregory the 2d. and 3d. took up his example, and did the like by
"Leo Iſaurus. By this time the Lombards began to pinch very cloſe, and to vex on all ſides not "only Italie, but Rome too. This drives the Pope to ſeek a new Patron, and very fitly he "meets with Charles Martel in France, that famous Warrier againſt the Saracens. Him he im-
"ployeth in defence of the Church againſt the Lombards, and the Addreſs ſeems very adviſedly "taken, it proved ſo fortunate to them both. For in ſhort time it diſſolved the Kingdom of the "Lombards, having then ſtood two hundred and four yeers, which was the Popes ſecurity: and
"it brought the Crown of France into the Houſe of Charles, and ſhortly after the Weſtern Em"pire. And now began the Popes to be great indeed. For by the bounty of Pepyn, the ſonne of "Charles, that which was taken by him from the Lombards, was given to the Pope; that is to "ſay,

"ſay, the Exarchate, and all that lay betwixt the Apennine and the River of Po. So that now "he became a Temporall Prince. But when Charles the great had ſet up the Weſtern Empire, "then he reſumed the Antient and Originall power, to govern the Church, to call Councills, "and to order Papall Elections. And this power continued for a time in his poſterity; for Gre- "gory the ſeventh was confirmed in the Popedom by the ſame Henry the fourth, whom he after- "wards depoſed. And it might have continued longer, if the ſucceeding Emperors had had "Abilities enough to ſecure, or vindicate their own Rights. But the Pope keeping a ſtrong "Counſell about him, and meeting with ſome weak Princes, and thoſe oft-times diſtracted "with great and dangerous wars, grew ſtronger til he got the better; yet was it carried in ſuccee- "ding times with great changes of fortune, and different ſucceſs; the Emperor ſometimes "plucking from the Pope, and the Pope from the Emperor; winning and loſing ground, as "their ſpirits, abilities, aids and opportunities were; till at laſt the Pope ſetled himſelf on "the grounds laid by Gregory the ſeventh, in that great power which he now uſeth in and over "theſe parts of the Chriſtian World. A power firſt exerciſed (ſaith he in another place) by this "Pope Gregorie the ſeventh, and made too good upon the Emperor Henry the fourth, as by Pope "Adrian the fourth, Alexander the third, with ſome others, upon Frederick Barbaroſſa. And o- "thers of the Emperors were alike ſerved when they did not ſubmit. And for this I hope his Holineſs was not to be blamed. For if the Emperor kept the Pope under for divers yeers to- gether, againſt all reaſon, the Popes as Bellarmine affirms, being never ſubject to the Emperor, and wanting force to ſtand on his own Prerogative: I hope the Pope having now got power enough, may keep the Emperors under-foot, and not ſuffer them any more to ſtart before him.

The Papacie.

Having thus a little glanced at the means, by which the great power of the Church of Rome was firſt obtained, let us next conſider of thoſe Policies by which this Papall Monarchy hath been ſo long upheld in eſteem and credit. We may divide them into three heads. 1. Thoſe by which they have inſinuated and ſcrewed themſelves into the affections and affairs of the grea- teſt Princes. 2. Thoſe by which already they have, and by which they will hereafter be able to ſecure their eſtate. And 3ly. thoſe by which they keep the people in obedeence and ignorance.

1. Concerning the firſt. Firſt the Donation of ſeverall Kingdoms to them which have no right nor title, but by theſe Grants of the Pope, cannot but bind them faſt to uphold that power, without which they could lay no clame to that which they are poſſeſſed of. Of which ſort was the Confirmation of the Kindom of France to the Houſe of Pepin; of Naples to the Houſe of Schwaben, and Anjou; of Navarre to the Spaniards. 2. The readineſs of their Mi- niſters to kill ſuch as reſiſt them, cannot but neceſſitate Princes to ſeek their friendſhip, and hold fair with them: eſpecially ſince by a Writ of Excommunication they can arm the Subjects againſt their Soveraign; and without the charge of leavying one ſouldier either deſtroy him utterly, or bring him to conformity. The frequent wars raiſed by them againſt the Emperors of Germany, and that againſt King John in England, by theſe Papall fulminations onely; the poi- ſoning of the ſaid King John by a Monk of Swineſtead; and of King Henry the third of France by Jaques Clement, are full proofs of this. 3. Then followeth their allowance of Mariages pro- hibited both by God and Nature; the iſſue of which cannot but uphold the Popes Authority, without which their birth would be illegitimate, and conſequently themſelves uncapable of the eſtates they are born unto: And by this means they do more ſtrengthen themſelves by the unlawfull Mariages of others, than ever Prince could do by the lawfull Mariage of his own. Nothing more faſtened Queen Mary of England to the See of Rome, than the queſtion that was raiſed about the Mariage of her Mother to King Henry the eighth; the lawfulneſs of which depended chiefly on the diſpenſation of Pope Julio the ſecond. 4. Then cometh in their diſ- penſing with the Oaths of Princes, when they conceive themſelves induced upon reaſon of State, to flie off from thoſe Leagues, and break off thoſe Treaties, which have been ſolemnly made and ſworn betwix them and their Neighbours. By means whereof, ſuch Princes think themſelves not perjured, becauſe diſpenſed with by the Pope; and commonly get ſomething in advantage, or point of profit, for which they cannot be unthankfull unto the Papacy. Exam- ples of this kind are obvious in all times and ſtories. 5. Next comes the choſing of the young- ger ſonnes of great Princes into the rank of Cardinalls, which obligeth the whole Stock or Fa- milie to the Papall Throne: that being a means whereby young Princes are preferred without charge to their Fathers, or any diminution of the Regall Patrimony. 6. And as by theſe courſes he holds in with all Chriſtian Princes generally, which are of the Religion of the Church of Rome: ſo hath he faſtned more particularly on the King of Spain; whereof we ſhall ſpeak fur- ther when we come to that Countrey.

2. Concerning the ſecond. So it is that their Eſtate hath the firmeſt foundation of any, as being built on the conſciences of men poſſeſſed with an opinion of their Infallibilty, and that undoubted power they pretend unto, not only in Heaven and upon Earth, but alſo over Hell and Purgatory. 2. Then comes the innumerable Preferments at their diſpoſing, for men of all humours, and affections: as having in their power the diſpoſing of almoſt all the Benefices and Biſhopricks in Italie, half of thoſe in Spain, divers in Germany and France, which keepeth the Clergy, and all ſuch as are that way ſtudied, in a perpetuall dependance upon that See; eſpe-cially injoying by it many notable Privileges, which thoſe of the Temporalty are not capable of. 3. Conſider next the multitude of Monks and Friers, whoſe very being depends wholly upon his Authority; every Monaſtery and Convent being a Garriſon (as it were) to defend the Papacy, and train up a Militia of Spirituall Janiſaries; men moſt affectionately devoted to his See and Service. Of theſe it is conceived that there are no fewer than a Million, one half whereof at leaſt may be fit for action; and all maintained at other mens coſt, themſelves not diſburſing a penny towards it. 4. Their Pardons and Indulgences are a great increaſe to their Revenue: ſome of them as unlimited as that of Pope Boniface the eighth, which was for 82000. yeers to all that could ſay ſuch a Prayer of S. Auguſtines; and that for every day, Toties, quoties. 5. Their practiſing on Penitents, whom they perſwade in the very agony of their ſouls, that there is no ſalvation for them but by giving part of their eſtates unto the Church. 6. Nor have they found any ſmall advantage to their Power and Patrimony, by the invention of Spirituall Fraternities, which are Appurtenances (as it were) to the Orders of Friers, and may in number perhaps equall them. Into theſe the Lay-people of all ſorts, men and women, maried and ſingle, deſire to be inrolled, as hereby injoying the ſpirituall prerogatives of Indulgences, and a more ſpeedy diſpatch out of Purgatory.

3. Concerning the third. 1. They deter the people from reading the Scripture, alleging unto them the perills they may incur by miſ-interpretation. 2. They breed an Antipathy between the Papiſts and the Proteſtants: inſomuch that a Papiſt may not ſay Amen unto a Proteſtants Deo gratias. 3. They debar them from all ſound of the Religion, in prohibiting the Books of the Reformed Writers; and hiding their own Treatiſes, in which the Tenent of the Proteſtants is recited, only to be confuted; inſomuch that in all Italie you ſhall ſeldom meet with Bellarmines works, or any of the like nature to be ſold. 4. They have under pain of Excommunication, prohibited the Italians from Travell and Traffick with Heretical Countreys, or ſuch places, where thoſe contagious ſounds and ſights (as they term them) might make them return infected. 5. The Severity, or Tyranny rather, of the Inquiſition, (of which we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Spain) cruſheth not onely the beginnings, but the ſmalleſt ſuſpitions of being this way addicted. And 6ly. The people thus reſtrained from Travell, are taught to believe that the Proteſtants are Blaſphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England Churches are turned to Stables; the people are grown barbarous, and eat young children; that Geneva is a profeſſed Sanctuary of Roguery, and the like. We have yet two later examples of their dealing in this kind. Firſt, the groſs ſlander of the Apoſtacy (or as they call it, the Reconciliation) unto their Church, of the Right Reverend Father in God Dr. King, not long ſince the Lord Biſhop of London, a Prelate of too known a faith and zeal, to give occaſion for ſuch a calumny. The ſecond, a book by them publiſhed, and commonly ſold in Italie and France, containing a relation of Gods Judgements, ſhown on a ſort of Proteſtant Hereticks, by the fall of an houſe in St. Andrews Pariſh in London, in which they were aſſembled to hear a Geneva Lecture, Octob. 26. A.D. 1623. By which dealing the ſimple people are made to believe that to be a judgment on us of the Proteſtant party, which the Authors of that Pamphlet well know to be a calumnie in regard of us; and a ſad chance (I will not ſay a judgment) which befell their own, by a fall of a Chamber in Black-Friers, where they were met to hear the Sermon of one Drurie, a Popiſh Prieſt, and that too on the fift of November in their own accompt, being the 26. of October before mentioned.

The Popedom being thus cunningly and ſtrongly founded, it cannot be, if the Popes had been choſen young, or of the ſame Family, (ſo that the Succeſſor had not often croſſed the deſigns of his Predeceſſor) but that this new Monarchie had been greater and better eſtabliſhed, than ever the old Roman Empire was in her greateſt glory. And to ſay truth, I have oft wondred with my ſelf that ſome of the more active Popes, eſpecially ſuch as were choſen young, and had the happineſs to deſcend of noble Families, did never ſeek the ſetling of this Eſtate in their own Poſterity; eſpecially conſidering the good Precedents which they had before them, both in ſacred and in civill ſtories. The high Prieſthood in the Church of Jewry went from Father to Sonne, and why ſhould any man think it inconvenient to follow the example of Almighty God in making the high Prieſthood in the Church of Chriſt to be alſo hereditary, not elective? The Saracens, who were as great Maſters for wit and policy, as any thoſe Ages did produce, purſued that precedent, governed by Hereditary Caliphs many yeers together, untill the Sultans their Vicegerents (ambitiouſly affecting the Supreme Command) rooted out their races. And if the ſame Obligation lie on the Maſters of Religious or mixt Orders, for preſerving the Rules and Statutes of their foundations, as is upon the Pope by the fundamentall Ordinances of the Conclave, as it ſeems to do, why might not the Popes as well diſpence with thoſe Conſtitutions, and turn the Popedom into an Hereditary Eſtate, as Albert of Brandenbourg, and Gotardus of Denmark, Maſters of the Dutch Knights in Pruſſia and Livonia, in their times have done? Nor can I ſee, but that ſuch an alteration as I ſpeak of, might be altogether as contenting to the Princes of Chriſtendom, as the like change from an unſetled popular Government to an hereditary Monarchy, was formerly unto the Provinces and People of the State of Rome. Of which it is affirmed by that notable Hiſtorian and States-man Tacitus, Neq; Provincia illum rerum ſtatum abnuebant, ſuſpecto Senatus Populique imperio ob certamina potentium, & avaritiam Magiſtratuum; invalido Legum auxilio, quæ vi, ambitu, poſtremo pecunia turbabantur. The Provinces (ſaith he) diſliked liked not the alteration, to whom the Government of the Senate and People had been long diſtaſted, by reaſon of the factions of the great ones, and covetouſneſs of their Officers: the Laws affording no ſecurity at all, as being ſwayd up and down by force, ambition and corruption. The Popedom ſeeled in one houſe, would prove more conſtant in the preſervation of all Leagues and Treaties; more carefull to preſerve the intereſt of their Eſtate, more uſefull to the Confederates and Allies thereof upon all occaſions, than it is at preſent: where the Popes ſo often change their ſides, and ſhift their factions; the Succeſſor many times eſteeming it his greateſt glory to reſcind all the acts of his Predeceſſor. And poſſible enough it is, that Caſar Borgia, the ſonne of Alexander the ſixt, might have ſome ſuch ends, when it was covenanted betwixt him and Lewis the twelfth of France, that being declared Generall of the Churches Forces, and giving his helping-hand to that King in the Conqueſt of Millain, he ſhould be aided by him in recovering all the Lands of the Church, which the Dukes of Urbine and Camerine, the Families of the Malateſti, Baillons, and Bentivogli, with divers others of leſs note, did poſſeſs in Italie. Which having got into his hands, had not his Fathers ſudden death, and his own dangerous ſickneſs happning at the ſame time, cut off his deſign, it had been a matter of no great difficulty (if of any at all) to have made himſelf abſolute Maſter of Rome, and of all the Lands of the Church, and to have left the ſame eſtabliſhed in the Borgian Familie. 'Tis true, that ſuch an alteration would be very diſtaſtfull to the ambition of the Cardinals, who by the deaths (naturall or violent, it matters not) of the preſent Pope, aſpire by all means both of love and money to that high dignity. But for my part, I cannot ſee how all the wit in the Conclave had been able to hinder it, if Alexander, on a purpoſe to poyſon ſome of that number whom he had invited to a Supper, by a meer miſtake of his Cup-bearer, had not poyſoned himſelf; (even in the very heat of the buſineſs then almoſt effected) and ſo made fruſtrate the device. The Papacie.

But paſſing by this imagination of an Hereditary Popedom, let us behold it as Elective, and look upon the form and order obſerved in it. Now the Election of the Pope is made moſt commonly in this place and manner. In the Popes Palace on the hill Vatican, are among other buildings, five Halls, two Chappells, and a Gallery ſeventy foot long. The Gallery is appointed for conference, one Chappell for the Maſs, and for the Election; the other with the Halls, are for the Cardinals lodgings. Every Hall hath two rows of Chambers, which are purpoſely for the time, made of green or violet cloth. To each Cardinall is allowed four ſervants, to lie in his chamber. They that are once within, are compelled, unleſs they be ſick, ſtill to continue there; and ſuch as are once out, are no more permitted to go in: leſt by that means, the Cardinals ſhould maintain intelligence with any forrain Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which belongeth four locks, and as many keys. One key is in the keeping of the Cardinalls; one, of the City-Biſhops; one, of the Roman Nobility; and one, of the Maſter of the Ceremonies: There is in this door a Wicket or Hatch, which is opened only at dinners and ſuppers, whereof the Maſter of the Ceremonies keepeth a key. At this hole the Cardinals ſervants receive their meat; every diſh being firſt diligently ſearched, leſt any Letters ſhould be conveyed in them. As for the lodgings, they have neither holes nor windows to give light; ſo that there they make day of wax-candles: And leſt the Pope ſhould be made by force, both the City and Conclave are ſtrongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the privileges of the Cardinals are recited, which every one ſweareth to obſerve, in caſe he be choſen Pope. Then the Maſter of the Ceremonies ringing a Bell, calleth them all to Maſs: which ended, there is brought to every Cardinal a Chair, and therein a Scroll of all the Cardinals names. Before the Altar is ſet a Table, covered with a purple cloth, whereupon is ſet a Chalice, and a Silver Bell, and about it ſix ſtools, on which ſit two Cardinal-Biſhops, two Cardinal-Prieſts, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voyce in a piece of paper, goeth to the Altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voyce into the Chalice, and departeth to his ſeat. The firſt Biſhop taketh out all the papers, and delivereth them to the firſt Deacon; who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the Elector) the name of the elected: and every Cardinal in his particular Scroll, noteth how many voyces every one hath. The accompt being made, the firſt Prieſt having the like Scroll, pronounceth who hath moſt voyces: which done, the Prieſt ringeth a Silver Bell; at which call the Maſter of the Ceremonies bringeth in a pan of coles, and burneth all the little papers, wherein the names of the elected were written. He that hath the moſt voyces (ſo that his voyces exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the reſt of the Cardinals: but if they exceed not this number, they muſt begin all anew. If in the ſpace of thirty days the Election be not fully ended, then muſt the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victualls, till they are fully agreed. The wicket which we before mentioned, is called the Golden Gate; at which ſtand an infinite number of poor people; on whom the new Pope, having opened that gate, beſtoweth his Fatherly benediction; and remitteth to them all their ſins. Then ſtriketh he continually on the ſame door with a golden Mallet; which whilſt he is doing, workmen without break it open. The chips, ſtones, duſt, and dirt which falleth from the Gate, while it is opening, are gathered and preſerved as choiceſt Reliques; and the Golden Mallet is uſually given to that Cardinal who is in moſt grace with the new Pope.

The Papacie.

This is the ordinary way of the Popes Election; but subject to much Faction and Division amongst the Cardinals, and that in times of less deceit than the present are. Insomuch as after the death of Pope Clement the fourth, the differences amongst them held for two years and more. Which gave occasion to one of them to say in scorn, that they must uncover the roof of the house, to make way for the Holy Ghost to come upon them. And there is now much more corruption and abuse in it than ever formerly; as buying of Voyces, setting up some for stales, and tearing scrutinies; every Cardinal desiring to have a Pope of his own, or his Princes Faction. So that we find it written of an old Sicilian Cardinal, who after long absence came to the Election of a Pope, where he expected that incessant prayers, as in times of old, should have procured some fit man to be pointed out to them for the Vicar of Christ; that finding nothing but canvasing, promising rewards, and threatning for Voices in the choice; ad hunc modum (saith he) fiunt Pontifices Romanis, and so returned into his Countrey, and saw Rome no more.

The ordinary Temporall Revenue of the Papacy arising out of Land-rents, Imposts upon Commodities, and sale of Offices, Botervs maketh to be better than two Millions of Crowns; but the extraordinary and Spirituall to be far beyond. For it is said of Pius Quintus, who sate Pope six years only, that he got from the Spanish Clergy 14 Millions. And though he was a very great builder, which spent him a great deal of money, yet he so managed his Estate, that he layd up four millions of Crowns in the Castle of S. Angelo. Sixtus the fifth took from the Jesuits at one clap 20000 Crowns of yearly rent (because they were too rich for men professing poverty) and having sat but five years, had coffered up five Millions of Gold; four of which his successor Gregory the fourteenth spent in less than a year. Out of France they receive no less than a Million of Crowns yearly. Out of England when it was the Popes Puteus inexhaustus, they and their followers extracted no less than 60000 Marks per an. which amounteth to 120000 pounds of our present money; and was more than the Kings standing Revenue did attain unto; Yet was this in the time of K. Henry 3. before their avarice and rapine was at the height. And of late daies, no longer since than the reign of K. Henry the 8. besides their Peter-pence, which was an Annual rent upon every chimny in the Realm, first granted to the Pope by Offa King of the Mercians, An° 730, or thereabouts, and afterwards confirmed by Ethelwolf the second Monarch of England; besides their first Fruits, Tenths, and all other exactions; it was made evident that in some few years then last past, the Popes had received out of England no less than 160000 l sterling, for the Confirmation of Episcopall Elections only. By which we may conjecture what vast sums they drew hence on all other occasions. Let other Countries subject to the Popes authority be accordingly rated, and the totall will amount to a sum incredible. Next adde to this the sums of money they receive from particular persons, for pardons, for dispensations with unlawfull Mariages, the profits arising from Pilgrimages, from the death and funerals of great persons, from the Indulgencies granted to Abbies and Convents, in all which the Popes have a share; and it would puzzel a good Arithmetician to state his Intrade. So truly was it sayd by Pope Sixtus the fourth, that a Pope could never want money as long as he was able to hold a pen in his hand. Yet notwithstanding, their Treasurie for the most part is but low or empty. For 1. the State they keep, because of that great honour which they have above other Princes, which is to be maintained at a great expence (for the more worship the more cost, as the saying is) is very chargeable unto them; their ordinary Guards standing them in no less than 30000 Crowns per annum. 2. the large allowances which they are fain to give unto their Legates, Nuncios, and other Ministers, keep their coffers low; the entertainment of their Ordinary Nuncios in the Courts of Christian Princes, amounting to no less than 1200 Crowns a moneth to each. And 3. their greedy desire to enrich their Sonnes or Kinsmen with the treasures of the Church (with which humour Pope Sixtus the fift, being of poor and obscure birth, was never touched) keeps them alwaies bare. Adde unto these the excessive gorgeousness of the Papall vestments (in which vanitie every one seeketh to excell the other) especially that of their Triple Crown; which must needs put them to great charge, and continuall issues of their treasure. And for an evidence of this last, we find that Clement the fift, who first transferred his See to Avignon, to shew his gallantry to the French (probably unacquainted with the like fine sights) had his Crown thick set with Carbuncles and precious stones, one of which being lost by a fall from his horse, was valued at 8000 Ducats.

As for the Forces of the Church, the Pope is able to impress as great a number of Land-souldiers out of his estate, as any Prince or Common-wealth within the limits of Italie. Paul the 3. sent to the aid of Charles the fifth in the Wars of Germany twelve thousand Foot, and five hundred horse, and yet raised his own Family to the Dukedom of Parma. Pius the fift sent to the aid of Charles the ninth against the Hugonots 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horse; which Forces they maintained at their own charges. And when Pope Clement undertook the War of Ferrara, he raised out of his estate 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horse in less than a moneth, which was more than most Princes in Europe could possibly have done. And for the valour of his Souldiers, and ability of his Commanders, they retain so much (as before was said) of their Ancestors vertues, that there are thought to be many Familes in the estate of the Church, able to furnish all the Commonwealths and Princes of Christendom with sufficient Captains. What, and how litle he is able to do by Sea, may be best seen out of the aid which he sent to the Venetians tians at the famous Battell of Lepanto; wherein he furnished them with no more than twelve Gallies; and those too hired of the Duke of Florence: The Venetians in the Adriatick, and the Florentines in the Tuscan Seas, having all the Trade, and consequently all the power in the seas of Italie. 'Tis true the Pope was bound by the capitulation to bear the fift part of the charge of the war, and with the help of the rest of the Princes of Italie (who were to march under his colours) to set forth 50000 Foot, and 4500 Horse; which is as great an Argument of his riches and power by land, as the other is of his weaknes at sea.

Having a purpose in the prosecution of this Work to mention such particular Orders of Knighthood, as most Countries have given beginning to, I will here set down the Orders of such Popish spirituall Knights or Friers, which his holy benediction hath erected, and fat allowance doth maintain. And for our better proceeding, we will begin with the originall of a Monasticall life; and then we will make speciall mention of some of the Romish Votaries of both sexes. Know then that under the seventh Persecution raised against the Church by Decius, one Paulus, born at Thebes in Egypt, retired to a private cave under the foot of a Rock, An°260. Here he is sayd to have lived one hundred years, and to have been seen of no man but one Anthony, who was at his death. This Anthony was the first that followed the example of Paulus; a man of a noble house, and one that sold all his estate, that he might the more privately injoy himself. He lived an hundred and fifty years, and is called the Father of the Monks. To these beginnings, doth Polydore Virgil refer the originall of the Monks, and religious orders; the name Monk comming from the Greek μόνος, because of their lonely and solitary lives. Those of the religious orders are called Fratres, and in English Friers, from the French word Frere, which signifieth a Brother; and that, either because of their brotherly cohabitation; or else because they are Fratres in malo, brethren in mischief and design.

The foundation of Monasticall life thus layd by Paulus, and Anthony, the world increased so fast in Monks and Eremites, that it seemed necessary to prescribe them orders. Hereupon Saint Basil gathered them together, living formerly dispersed; and is said to be the first that built them Monasteries. He is also said to have ordained the three Vows of Poverty, Chastity, and Obedience; to have instructed them in good Arts, true Religion, and in the service of God, with Hymns, Prayers, and Watching. Of this order there are not many in the Latin Church, but good plenty of them in the Greek. They are bound to abstain from all kind of flesh, and are called Monks of S. Basil, by the name of that Father; amongst the Writings of which Father, the Rules for these *Monastick*s are set down at large.

2 The next who prescribed Orders was S. Augustine, born in the year 350, who being thirty years of age, is said to have obtained a Garden without the walls of Hippo for private contemplations. Twelve only he assumed into his society, living with them in all integrity, and wearing a leathern Girdle to distinguish them from Monks. Hence came the present Austin Friers, or the Eremites of S. Austin, as others call them. Of such esteem formerly in the Universitie of Oxford, that all who took the degree of a Master of Arts, were to submit themselves to their Oppositions in the publick Schools, and receive approbation from them; from whence the form, in Augustinensibus responderit vel opposuerit, still retained among them. There house in London stood in Broadstreat, of which a part of the Church still standeth, converted to a Church for the use of the Dutch; the rest demolished, and in the place thereof a stately Mansion erected by Sir William Pawlet the first Marquess of Winchester, and Lord Treasurer of England. These make the first order of the Friers Mendicants. The first Monastery of them was erected at Paris by William Duke of Guien, An° 1155; and An° 1200, they began to flourish in Italie, by the favour of John Lord of Mantua. The other branches of this Tree, are 1 the Monks of S. Hierome, 2 the Carmelites, 3 the Crouched Friers, and 4 the Dominicans.

1 The Monks of Saint Hierom challenge their originall from the worthy Father of the Church so called. They flourish especially in Spain, where there are thirty two Monasteries of them; their chief House being Saint Bartholomews of Lupiena; and have taken unto themselves the Rule of Saint Austin. Their Robe is a white Cassock, under a tawney Cloak.

2 The Carmelites, so called from Mount Carmel in Syria, pretend their original from Elias, and John the Baptist. They onely allowed at first the rule of S. Basil; and were confirmed in Europe by Honorius the third. They are by some called Jacobines, from a Church dedicated to Saint Iames, where they had their first Convent; and by us, the White Friers, from the colour of their habit. Their house in London stood in Fleetstreet, converted since into a dwelling of the Earls of Kent, besides other Tenements. Their Rule was afterwards corrected according to the Rule of Saint Austin; by Donna Eroshia (or Teresa) a Spanish woman, who made them also certain Constitutions, confirmed by Pius the fourth, An° 1565.

3 The Friers of S. Crosse, Crossed, or Crouched Friers, were first ordained by Cyriacus Bishop of Hierusalem, who shewed to Helena the place where the Cross was hidden: hence this Order, which being almost decayed, was restored first by Urban the second, and afterwards by Innocent the third, under the rule of Saint Austin. Their Robe is Watchat, and in their hands they carry the figure of the Cross. Their house in London near the Tower, still retains its name.

4 The Dominicans, or Friers Preachers, were instituted by Saint Dominik a Spaniard. He puts puts himself in this Order with sixteen of his Disciples under the Rule of Saint Austin, An° 1206, and had his device confirmed by Honorius the third. Their duty is to preach the Gospell in all places unto the fartheſt parts of the world; which both they did, and their ſucceſſors ſince have done, not at home only, but in India and America, with great zeal and diligence. They are call'd by us Black Friers, from the colour of their habits, and are the 3. Order of Friers Mendicans. Their houſe in London ſtood neer Ludgate, and took up the whole Precinct which is ſtill called Black-Friers, though nothing be remaining of it but the very name.

3 The third that preſcribed Orders was S. Benedict, born at Nurſia, in the Dutchy of Spoleto, An° 472. He gathered the Monks of Italie together, gave them a Rule in writing, cauſed them to be called Benedictines, or Monks of Saint Benedict; and lived till he had ſeen twelve Monaſteries filled with them. After his death this Order grew ſo populous, that there have been of it 29 Popes, 200 Cardinals, 1603 Arch-Biſhops, 4000 Biſhops, and 50000 Canonized Saints. Their habit is a looſe Gown of black, reaching down to the ground, with a Hood of the ſame; an under-garment of white woollen, and boots on their legs. The other principall ſtreams of this Fountain are, firſt, the Monks of Clugnia, ſecondly of Carthuſia, thirdly of Ciſteaux, fourthly the Celeſtines.

1 The Monks of Clugnie, are ſo called from the Abbey of Clugnie in the County of Burgundy; the Abbot whereof, by name Odo, was the firſt that reformed the Benedictines then fallen from their former integrity, An° 913. He obtained of the Popes and Emperors, that all ſuch Abbies as would come under the compaſs of his Reformations (which were in all about two hundred) ſhould be called the Congregation of Clugni, and that they might call their Chapiters, &c.

2 The Carthuſians were firſt inſtituted by one Bruno a German Doctor of Divinity at the Town of Carthuſia in Daulphine, An° 1080: His followers, which were at the firſt but ſix, have at this day 93 Monaſteries. They eat no fleſh, live by couples, labour with their hands, watch, pray, and never meet together, but on Sundaies. Their houſe in London by corruption and long tract of time, got the name of the Charter-houſe (the Monks themſelves being corruptly called the Charter-houſe Monks) now better known by the name of Suttons Hoſpitall; from the Hoſpitall of the Foundation of Richard Sutton, a wealthy Citizen of London.

3 The Monks of Ciſteaux were firſt inſtituted by one Robert, Abbot of Moleſme, An° 1090 or thereabouts; who together with 21 of the moſt religious of his Covent, retired to Ciſteaux in Burgundy Dutchy; hence the name. About five years after, one Bernard, a great Lord, became of their Order, who built and repaired for them 160 Abbies. Their Robe is a white Caſſock, girt with a Girdle of wooll, the reſt black. They were by us called White Monks; and the common Benedictines, Black Monks; both from the colour of their habits.

4 The Celeſtines ow their originall to Peter de Moron, a Samnite, born An° 1250; who being afterwards for his ſanctity choſe Pope, was called Celeſtine the fift. He reformed the Benedictines, then much degenerated; and had his Order confirmed by Gregory the 11. There are at this preſent 124 Monaſteries of them.

The 4 and laſt that preſcribed new Orders to the Monaſticks, was Saint Francis of Aſſis in the Dutchy of Spoleto. He fell from Merchandize, which was his firſt profeſſion, unto the ſtudy of Religion, going bare-foot, and behaving himſelf very penitently; whereupon, great ſtore of Diſciples following him, he gave them a Rule in writing; by which they are bound to profeſs abſolute beggery, and are not permitted to carry any mony about them, or more victuals than will for the preſent ſerve themſelves and their Brethren. This they obſerve punctually in their own perſons, but give themſelves to have a Boy with them, to do both without ſcruple. S. Francis deſired they ſhould be called Minors, to ſhew their humility; but they are generally called Franciſcans by the name of their Founder: By the French called Cordeliers, becauſe of the knotty Cord which they wear about them inſtead of a Girdle; by us, the Gray Friers, from the colour of their upper Garment. Their houſe in London ſtood near Newgate, of which the Church, the Cloyſters, and ſome other the publick Offices do ſtill ſtand entire; the whole converted to an Hoſpitall for poor Children by King Edward the ſixt, in the latter end of his reign, now beſt known by the name of Chriſt Church. Their Rule and Order was confirmed by Innocent the 3^d^, An° 1212, and is the fourth and laſt of the Friers mendicants, or begging Friers. The other principall Children of this Father, are 1 the Minimes; and 2 the Capouchins.

1 The Friers Minimes, were firſt founded by Franciſcus de Pola, a Neapolitan, An° 1450 according to a correſted copy of the rule of S. Francis of Aſſis. His followers keep alwaies a true Lenten faſt, unleſs in caſe of ſickneſs. Their Robe is a dark tawney, an hood of the ſame hanging to their girdles.

2 The Capouchins, (ſo called from their cowle or capouch) were ordained by one Mathew Baſci of Ancona. Frier Lewis, his companion, obtained for them of the Pope, the habit and rule of S. Francis, An. 1526. In the ſpace 42 years they increaſed to 2240 aſſociates, had 222 Monaſteries, and were divided into 15 Provinces. They are bound by their Rule to ſpend their time in prayer; and are generally thought to be the devouteſt of all the Orders Monaſtical.

I ſhould now ſpeak of the Jeſuites, but that I cannot bring them under any rule, as being a people

ple neither simply Lay nor Priests, nor meerly secular, nor regular, but all together. They were founded by Ignatius Loyola, born in Navarre, who being in his youth addicted to the wars, was lamed in one of his legs: after which maim betaking himself to the study of Religion, he framed this order, consisting at the first of ten only. Paul the third did confirm it, An. 1540. confining the number within sixty; which he after inlarged ad infinitum. They are now the greatest Politicians, soundest Scholars, and chiefest upholders of the Romish See: so that the onely way to reestablish the Romish Religion in any Land, is to plant a College of Jesuites in it. To the three vows of Poverty, Obedience, and Chastitie, common to all other orders, Ignatius at the institution of this, added the Vow of Mission: whereby his followers are bound to obey their Generall, or the Pope, without demanding any reason, in all dangerous and hazardous attempts whatsoever, whether it be undertaking some tedious voyage, for the propagation of the Romish Religion, or the massacring of any Prince whose life is a hindrance to their proceedings. It is reported, that a Jesuite being in the midst of his Masse, which they call the sacrifice of the Altar, was sent for by Ignatius; to whom leaving off his Mass he went immediately. Ignatius having no business wherein to employ him, told him, he only sent for him to trie his obedience; and withall prophanely added, that Obedience is better than sacrifice: and this is called the blind obedience of the Jesuites. To leave them then as they are, the greatest disturbers of the quiet of Europe, I have heard a worthy Gentleman, now with God, say many times, that till the Jesuites were taken from the Church of Rome, and the peevish Puritan (or Presbyterian) Preachers out of the Churches of Great Britain, he thought there would never be any peace in Christendom; with what a true presaging spirit, the event hath shewed. The Papacie Corrivals with the Jesuites in power and learning, and almost conætaneous in point of time, are the Oratorians, founded by Philip Nerio a Florentine, An. 1564, who marking the great sway which the Jesuites began to have, and the danger which the Church might run if that Order were not equally ballanced by some other of as much abilitie, first established this, consisting altogether of Priests; that by their diligence in preaching of the lives of the Saints, and other heads of practical and morall duties, they might divert the torrent of the peoples affection from the brood of Ignatius. The renowned Cardinall Cæsar Baronius, Francis Bourdino, afterwards Bishop of Avignon in France, and one Alexander Fidelis, were the three first whom he admitted to his Rule: initiated in S. Hieroms Church at Rome by Pope Pius the fourth with great zeal and cheerfulnes; to whom, as to some of his Predecessors, the power and practices of the Jesuites were become suspitious. They increased speedily (being countenanced on so good grounds) to great numbers, and a proportionable Revenue: as much esteemed of for their knowledge in Ecclesiasticall Historie, and Practicall Divinitie, as the others for Philosophy, Tongues, and the study of Controversies; and more accepted of in most places, because not usually intermedling in affairs of State. So evenly looked on by the Popes, that the Jesuites could not obtain the Canonization of their Ignatius, till the Oratorians were grown rich enough to celebrate that of their Nerius also, which hapned in the short Popedom of Gregory the 15. An. 1622.

To conclude this discourse of Monks and Friers, I will say somewhat of the severest kind of Recluse, which is the Anachoret, or Ancharet, so called from ἀναχωρέω, because they use to live retired from company. They are kept in a close place, where they must dig their graves with their nails; badly clad, and worse dieted, not to be pitied, because their restraint of liberty is voluntary; yet to be sorrowed for in this, that after such an earthly Purgatory, they shall find instead of an Euge bone serve, a Quis quæsivit de manibus vestris.

But concerning these Orders of Monks and Friers, certain it is, that at their first institution they were a People much reverenced for their holy life; as men that for Christs sake had abandoned all the Pomps and Vanities of the world. And questionless they were then a People altogether mortified, and who by their very aspects would gain upon the affection of the hardest heart; insomuch that not only mean men, but great personages also did desire to be buried in Friers weeds, as Francis the 2d, Marquess of Mantua, Albertus Pius another Prince of Italie, and in late times the great Scholar Christopher Longolius. But as Florus saith of the Civill Wars between Cæsar and Pompey, Causa hujus Belli, eadem quæ omnium; nimia felicitas; we may say also of these Friers, The greatness of their wealth, which many on a superstitious devotion had bequeathed unto them, brought them first to a neglect of their former devout and religious carriage; next to a wretchlesness of their credits, and consequently into contempt: so that there was not a people under heaven that was more infamous in themselves, or more scornfully abused by others. Hence the vulgar sayings of the people, that Friers wear crosses on their breasts, because they have none in their hearts; and that when a Frier receiveth the Razor, the Devil entreth into him, and the like. Nay, Sir Thomas Moore, who lost his head in the Popes quarrell, sticks not in his Utopia to call them Errones Maximos; and would have them comprehended within the Statutes of Vagabonds and sturdy Beggers. Now to shew both the humours of Respect and Contempt used severally to these Monks and Friers, as men stood affected; there goeth a Tale, how the Lady Moore, Sir Thomas his wife, finding by chance a Friers Girdle, shewed it to her husband with great joy, saying, Behold, Sir Thomas, a step towards Heaven: whereunto with a scornfull laugh he returned this answer, that he feared that step would not bring her a step higher. And as for their retiredness and solitary course of life, so it is that many Kings, especially of the Saxons in the time of their Heptarchie, have abandoned their Scepters to enjoy it: And

Barclay

The Papacie.

Barclay in his Argenis, under the perſon of Anaroeſtus, hath defended this in ſuch Princes as have cloyſtered themſelves to injoy the ſolitude of a Convent. Which notwithſtanding, Philoſophers have defined a man to be ζῶον πολιτικὸν, a Creature principally made for civill converſation; the Poets ſay, Naſcitur indignè per quem non naſcitur alter, that he dyeth indebted to the world who leaves no poſterity behind him: and the Jews, which live in great numbers even in Rome it ſelf, abhor this unſociable kind of living, and prefer a civill ſociableneſs much before it; as to Nature more agreeable, to Man more profitable, and conſequently to God more acceptable. And having ſpoken thus much of the Monks and Friers, deſcend we now unto the Nuns.

And indeed I ſhould much wrong the Friers, if I ſhould deprive them of the company of their deareſt Votaries; and therefore take ſomewhat of them alſo. Called antiently Moniales from the Greek wórd Μόνος, from their living alone; whence we alſo had the names of Monks and Monaſteries: in the middle times called Nuns, from Nonna an Ægyptian word, (for Ægypt in old times was not meanly furniſhed with ſuch Eremites) which alſo ſignifieth a ſolitary and lonely life. A word in ſome of the barbarous Latines very much in uſe. Scholaſtica the Siſter of S. Benedict, was the firſt who collected them into companies, and preſcribed them Rules. They are ſhaved, as Monks are, and vow (as they do) perpetuall poverty and Virginity. Which laſt how well they keep, let Clemangis teſtifie; who telleth us, that Puellam velare eadem eſt ac publicè eam ad ſcortandum exponere: to veil a Nun, and proſtitute her for a common Harlot were terms equivalent. And one Robinſon, who lived for a time in the Engliſh Nunnery at Liſbon, hath told us that he found an hole in their Garden-wall covered over with Morter, in which were hidden the bones of many new-born children, which their unnaturall Mothers had murdered and thrown in there. But of theſe I will inſtance only in two Orders, viz. that of S. Clare, as being the ſtricteſt; and that of S. Brigit, which injoyeth moſt liberty.

1. S. Clare was a Knights daughter of Aſſis, where S. Francis was born, with whom ſhe was co-temporary, and with whoſe auſtere life ſhe was ſo affected, that ſhe forſook her Fathers houſe, and followed him. Having learned her Lirrie of that Frier-monger, ſhe deviſed an Order of Religious women; and had it confirmed by Pope Honorius the third, An°. 1225. Her followers vow Poverty and Virginity, as before was ſaid, go barefoot, feed meanly, and are more ſtreightned in their courſe of life, than thoſe of any other Order. By their Foundreſs, out of a deſire to conform the better to the Rule and Order of S. Francis, they were called Minorites, or Minores, and gave name to the place neer the Tower-hill in London, where they had their houſe, called from them the Minories.

2. S. Brigit was a Queen of Swethland, and coming to Rome on devotion, obtained of Pope Urban the third, An°. 1370. or thereabouts, that Friers and Nuns might in ſome places live together. For being a Woman and a Widow ſhe knew beſt (as it ſeemeth) what was good for both Sexes, and ſo deviſed ſuch a Rule as contented both. But little needed this cohabitation or living together under the ſhelter of the ſame roof. For they had formerly been joyned in carnall affections, though parted by walls; neither were the viſitations of the Friers ſo fruitleſs, but that the Nuns did fructifie by them. Theſe Friers and Nuns though they lived under the ſame roof, are prohibited from coming to one another, but on ſpeciall occaſions: the Foundreſs ſo ordering it, that the Nuns ſhould lie in the upper rooms, and the Friers in the lower. The Confeſſor alſo is denied acceſs into their chambers, but ſhriveth them though an Iron-Grate, by which his lodging is parted from the Lady Abeſſe's. And herein lyeth the Myſtery of Iniquity. For Robinſon, whom before I named, tells us, that at the time of his ſervice in the Engliſh Nunnery at Lisbon, he was ſhewed a way by which this uncharitable Grate, which ſeemed to keep the Friers from the company of their female friends, might be, and was on ſuch occaſions uſually removed, and the acceſs made free and open to each others beds. Which if it be truly ſaid of theſe, may be ſuſpected alſo in all the reſt of this Order, and in moſt alſo of the others.

And now I return unto my Friers, which beſides the maintenance which by their Founders is allotted for their preſent ſubſiſtence, are kept in a continuall hope and poſſibility of attaining to the higheſt honours which that Church can give, if they continue conſtant in their due obedience. For there is not one of them which hopeth not to be the Prior of his Convent; 2. Provinciall of his Order in that Countrey where he liveth; 3. and then the Generall of his Order. Next, none more likely than the Generalls to be choſen Cardinalls, and out of the Cardinalls one of neceſſity muſt be choſen, and why not he, as well as any of the pack, to be Pope of Rome? So firm and ſweet a Companion of man is Hope, that being the laſt thing which leaves him, it makes all toyls ſupportable, all difficulties conquerable.

The Popedom containeth

The Dukedom of URBINE.

ENvironed on all sides with the Lands of the Church, save where it coasteth on the Adriatick, lies the Dukedom of URBINE, having on the East Marca Anconitana; on the West, Romagna, or Romandiola; on the North, the Adriatick Sea; on the South, the Apennine. It is in length about sixty miles, and some thirty five miles in the bredth: within which round lie intermixt some Estates of the Church, of which the Duke is a Fendatary, and to which he payeth 2240. Crowns for a quit-rent yeerly.

The soyl is very fruitfull of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, plentifull of Figs and other fruits of most pleasant taste; and in a word, affording all things necessary for the life of man. But the air is generally unwholesom, especially about Pesaro and Fossombrune, by reason of the low flats and over-flows of the water. The principal commodities which they vend abroad, are the wines of Pesaro, sold in great abundance to the Venetians; and dryed figs which they vend unto Bologne and other places.

The most famous River is Metaurus, (now called Metremo) and a famous one it is indeed, by reason of that great battell fought on the banks thereof, betwixt Asdrubal the brother of Annibal, and his Carthaginians; and the two Consuls Livius and Cl. Nero, in which after a long and hot dispute, the victory fell unto the Romans; there being 56000. of the Carthaginians slain, (as Livie writeth) and 5400. taken prisoners. Polybius speaks of a less number both slain and taken; and like enough it is, that Livie, to advance the honor of that Family, might inlarge a little. But whatsoever was the truth in this particular, certain it is, that this victory turned the tide of the Roman Fortune, which from this time began to flow amain upon them: the Citizens of Rome beginning at this time to trade and traffick, to follow their affairs, and make contracts and bargains with one another, which they had long forborn to do; and that with as secure a confidence as if Annibal were already beaten out of Italie. This famous River riseth in the Apennine hills, and passing by Fossombrune, a Town of this Dukedom, falls into the Adriatick.

There are reckoned in this Dukedom seven Towns or Cities, and three hundred Castles: The principall of which are, 1. Urbine, one of the most antient Cities of Italie, which both Tacitus and Plinie mention; a fair Town, well built, and the Dukes ordinary seat in Summer. It is seated at the foot of the Apennine hills, in a very rich and pleasant soyl, built in the fashion of a Miter, and therefore called Urbinas, quod urbes binas continere videbatur. Francisco Ubaldi the first Duke built here a very sumptuous Palace, and therein founded a most excellent Library, replenished with a great number of rare Books, covered and garnished with gold, silk, and silver, all scattered and dispersed in the time that Cesar Borgia seized on the Estate. Polydore Virgil, the Author of the History of England which passeth under his name, was a Native here: an History of worth enough as the times then were, except onely in such passages as concern the Pope (the Collector of whose Peter-pence he then was in England) whose credit and authority he preferreth somtimes before truth it self. 2. Pisaurum, now called Pesara, the strongest town of all the Dukedom, two miles in compass, and fortified according to the modern art of war: the fortifications of it being first begun by Francisco Maria, and perfected by Guido Ubaldi his sonne and successor; the ordinary seat of the Duke in winter, well garrisoned, and therefore trusted with the publick Armorie. It is seated neer the shore of the Adriatick, at the mouth or influx of the River Isaurus, which parts it from Romagna: populous, of handsom buildings, and a very strong wall; the soyl exceeding rich, but the air so bad, that partly in regard of that, and partly by their eating of too much fruits, nothing is more frequent here than Funeralls, especially in the moneth of August; few of the Inhabitants living to be fifty yeers old. 3. Senogaille, called antiently Sena Gallica, a strong and well-fenced City neer the River Metaurus, over which there is a Bridge consisting of eighty Arches, made of that length, not so much in regard of the breadth of the Channell, as the frequent over-flowings of that turbulent water. 4. Fossombrune, called in old Authors Forum Sempronii, for air and soyl of the same nature with Pisaurum, bought by D. Frederick of Galeazzo Malateste, for thirteen hundred Florins of gold. 5. Cabo, or Cagli, on the Sea. 6. S. Leon, a good Town, and the chief of the Country of Montfeltre, which is a limb of this Dukedom. 7. Eugubium, or Augubio, of which nothing famous or remarkable. Of the Castles the principall are, Marivola, and the Rock of S. Leon, which were the last that held good for Duke Guidos Baldo against Cesar Borgia, Duke of Valentinoys, sonne to Pope Alexander the sixt, and the first which did return again under his obedience. For which cause when he fled the second time from the said Borgia, he dismantled all his other Castles, as being more likely to admit than resist the Invader, and these two last being very well fortified, he left to keep possession of the Countrey for him.

Here is also within the limits of this Estate the Dukedom of CAMERINE, an antient and well peopled Town, of a strong naturall situation amongst the hills: an Estate holden of the Church by the noble Family of di Varena, till the time of Pope Paul the third, when Julia di Varena the heir hereof, conveyed it by Mariage unto Guido Ubaldi Duke of Urbin. But the Pope

pretending

Venice. pretending an Eſcheat for want of heirs males, made himſelf Maſter of it by force of Arms, and gave it to his ſonne Piero Farneſi, whom afterwards with the conſent of the College of Cardinalls he made Duke of Parma, and ſetled Camerine on the Church, as it ſtill continues.

In the time of Conradin the laſt Duke of Schwaben, Urbine was firſt ſubdued by the Earls of Montfeltre, whoſe Succeſſors increaſing in power, added the Town and Territory of Eugubio to it. And in the buſtles betwixt Lewis of Bavaria the Emperor, and Pope Clement the ſixt, An°.1345. Gelaſſo di Montfeltre held it by no other Title but as the Emperors Vicegerent. This Family injoyed it till the yeer 1444. by the Title onely of Earls of Montfeltro, and Lords of Urbine; when Frederick Ubaldi, for his ſingular and ſurpaſſing valour, was by Pope Eugenius the fourth, created the firſt Duke hereof. A man of ſuch repute for all gallant qualities, that he was by King Henry the ſixt made Knight of the Garter; in recompence of which high honour, the Engliſh to this day injoy many privileges in theſe Dominions. Guido Ubaldi this Dukes ſonne loſt his Eſtate to Caſar Borgia; after whoſe death he did recover it again by the power and favour of Pope Julio the ſecond; to whom ſucceeded Franciſco Maria di Rovero, his ſiſters ſonne, in whoſe Family it ſtill continues, as will appear by this enſuing Catalogue of

The Dukes of Urbine.

1444. 1 Frederick Ubaldi, of the antient Family de Montefeltro, the firſt Duke of Urbine, and one of the Knights of the honourable Order of the Garter.
2 Guido Ubaldi, ſonne of Frederick, for a while outed of this Dukedom by Caſar Borgia. He was Knight alſo of the Garter.
3 Franciſco Maria de la Rovero, ſiſters ſonne and next heir to Guido Ubaldi, was in his own right Lord of Senogallia, and had Piſauro from the Pope in reward of his many ſervices done unto the Church, diſſeized for a while by Pope Leo the tenth.
4 Lawrence de Medices, Father of Catharine di Medices the French Queen, and of Alexander, the firſt Duke of Florence, was for a while made Duke of Urbine by Pope Leo the tenth, (being of that Family) but loſt it ſhortly after to Duke Franciſco; who after the death of Pope Leo, recovered his Eſtates again, and died poſſeſſed of the Dukedom.
1538. 5 Guido Ubaldi II. ſonne of Duke Franciſco.
6 Franciſco Maria II. ſonne of Guido the ſecond.

The Revenues of this Dukedom are ſaid to be 100000, Crowns per annum, but might be raiſed to a greater ſum, did not the Duke prefer the love and eaſe of his Subjects before the filling of his own coffers. He is able to raiſe 1200. good Souldiers out of his Eſtate; and more his people would ſupply if he had occaſion. The Arms hereof Azure, a Tower Argent, environed with Flower de Lyces Or.

The Seigneury of VENICE.

WEſt of the Lands of the Church, from Romandiola to the Alpes, lie the Italian Provinces of the State of VENICE; that is to ſay, Marca Trevigiana, Friuli, Hiſtria, and ſome Ilands in the Golf neer the City it ſelf. Beſides which it containeth a great part of Dalmatia, together with the Ilands Candie, Corfu, Cephalonia, Zant, Ithaca, Cithera, and certain others of leſs note. The length of their Dominions both by Sea and Land, extending above a thouſand miles, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The nature of the ſoyl, and the principall Rivers which refreſh it, we ſhall ſee anon in the deſcription of the Provinces before mentioned; according to which Provinces, and the chief Cities of them, the Character of the people is beſt taken: it being ſaid proverbially by the Italians, that the Venetians themſelves are ſtately, crafty and greedy; the Veronians ſtudious and faithfull; the Paduans fierce, the Vincentians eager on Revenge, thoſe of Friuli gratefull and inconſtant; thoſe of Hiſtria neither long-livers, nor of very great courage. That in the conduct of a war, thoſe of Venice bring ſilver, thoſe of Treviſo ſwords; that the Breſcians are fit to dig in trenches, thoſe of Bergomo to lay Ambuſhes, thoſe of Padua to manage Horſes. And of the women it is ſaid, that thoſe of Crema are deceitfull, thoſe of Venice inſolent, thoſe of Vincentia conſtant, thoſe of Verona gracious, thoſe of Treviſo jealous, thoſe of Breſcia diligent, and the Bergomaſques crafty.

But not to dally longer in theſe Proverbiall Characters, certain it is that the Venetians themſelves do affect a great deal of gravitie in their actions, ſpeak very little at the Table; very ſevere where they have authority, and many times in the exceſs. And yet ſuch is the conſtant temper temper of their Government, and their impartiality in doing Justice, that they are very wel obeyed, and generally well beloved of all their subiects (notwithstanding the heavy pressures which are layd upon them) is wel in Italie as without. Esteemed in former times good souldiers both by Sea and Land, maintaining wars continually with the Turks in Palestine; the Emperors of Constantinople in Greece it self; the Genoese by sea; and their neighbours of Italie in this Continent. But of late times they have more studied to preserve than inlarge their Dominions; and that too by rather expence of mony, than the loss of blood; and by wit rather than by valour. So fortunate in this last kind of practice, that Machiavel observed of them in his time, that whatsoever they lost by War, they recovered by Treatie. A pregnant evidence whereof we shall see anon. Trevigiana.

To proceed now to the description of such of the Provinces and Estates of this Commonwealth, as pass under the accompt of Italie, they are as before was said, 1. Marca Trevigiana, 2. Friuli, 3. Histria, 4. the Italian Isles of the Adriatick; of which now in order, leaving the rest to be considered in their proper places.

1. MARCA TREVIGIANA is bounded on the South, with the Rivers Athesis, and Po, by which parted from the Territory of Ferrara, and the rest of Romagna; on the West, with the Rivers Mincius and Sarca, and the Lake of Benacus, (now called Lago de Garda from a little Town of that name adjoyning) by which parted from the Dutchie of Millaine; on the East, with Friuli, and the Golf of Venice; and on the North, with the Alpes, which divide it from Tirolis, a Province of Germany.

The principall rivers of this tract are, 1. Brenta, called antiently Meduacus Major; which rising in the Alpes not far from Trent, and watering the fields of Padua, passeth into the Sea neer the City of Venice, making up the famous Haven of Malamocco. 2. Bachilio, called antiently Meduacus Minor, which riseth also in the Alpes, and passing by Vincenza, emptieth it self into the Brenta; And 3. Athesis, now called Adige, which springeth also out of the Alpes not far from Trent, and having taken many lesser streams into its channel, passeth by Verona, and after is divided into two great branches; whereof the one falls into the Sea, the other loseth it self in the middest of the Marishes.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Vincentia, one of the twelve Cities built by the Tuscans or Hetrurians on this side of the Apennine; pleasantly seated on the banks of the River Bachilio, and another navigable water called Retone (Erotenus formerly.) The Territory of the City not more large than fruitfull, abounding with all store of fruits, and yeelding an excellent kind of wine, which from thence is vended unto Venice. The buildings of it for the most part of polished stone, whereof the fields adjoyning afford speciall Quarries; and the Inhabitants generally an industrious people, making great quantitie of Silks, with which they do adorn themselves, and supply their Neighbours. 2. Trevisо, seated on the banks of the River Silus, which runneth thorough the middest of it, in the middle of a large and spacious plain, abounding even to admiration, with most excellent wheat, and all other necessaries. A City of no antient name, not mentioned by Ptolomie, or others of the old Geographers: but of sufficient note in the later times for being the residence or seat of those Provinciall Governors (Marquesses they are sometimes called) which the Lombardian Kings sent hither to defend their borders. Hence it gave name to all the Countrey, in Latine called Marca Trevisiana, or Tarvisana as some call it: taken by the Venetians, and lost again divers times; but was finally conquered A°. 1380. or thereabout, Antonio Venieri being Duke of Venice. 3. Padua, formerly called Patavium, built by Antenor, whose Tomb is still here to be shown. The University was established An°. 1220. famous for Physicians, who have here a Garden of Simples; and for the birth of Livy the Historian, Julius Paulus a Civil Lawyer his Co-temporary, L. Arruntius Stella, and C. Valerius Flaccus two famous Poets celebrated by Martial: and in the later times of Marsilius Patavinus a Minorite Frier, who wrote so learnedly in behalf of the Emperor against the Pope, Fr. Zabarella the Civilian, Mic. Savanorola the Physician, Maginus the Geographer, and divers others. It was much renowned in former times for the humanity of the men, and chastity of the women; which last so eminent and famous, that as chast as one of Padua, grew into a Proverb. Hereunto alludeth Martial, speaking of his lascivious writings.

Tu quoq; nequitias nostri lusus; libelli,
Uda puella leges, sis Patavina licet.
Young maids my wanton lines will long to see,
And read them o're, though Patavines they bee.

The City, after much vicissitude of fortune, fell into the power of the Venetians, with all her Territories, being in compass one hundred and eighty miles, An°. 1400. Michael Steno then Duke; Vicenza being won about the same time also. 4. Brescia, the second City for bigness and beauty in all Lombardy. It is also the seat of an Arch-bishop, who is an Earl, a Marquess, and a Duke. Her Territories are in length one hundred, in bredth fifty miles, which the Citizens, together with their freedom, bought of Otho the German Emperor, but lost it to Philip Maria Visconti, Duke of Millaine, An°. 1421. to whom they yeelded upon certain conditions; which being broken by the Duke, they yeelded themselves unto the Seigneury of Venice, An°. 1434. Francis Foscari being then Duke; under whom it continueth to this day. The City is very populous, the air sound and good, the soyl exceeding plentifull of corn, wine and Friuli. fruits; and having in it Mines both of Iron and Copper, to the great inriching of the people. It was antiently the chief of the Cenomani, who coming out of Gaule, drove the Tuscans hence, and seated themselves in their habitations, till finally conquered by the Romans. It is situate on a little River called Garcia, which runneth thorough the middle of it; and is said to contain at this time 50000. Inhabitants. 5. Verona, so called (as some conceit it) quasi vera una; or as others, quasi Brenona, because built by Brennus; both false and frivolous alike. It is situate on the banks of the River Athesis, and is counted the first City of the second rank of the Cities of Italie: proud in the birth of Catullus, a well-known Poet, and in an Amphitheatre (a remainder of the Roman greatness) able to contain 30000. persons. The Territories hereof are sixty five miles in length, forty miles in bredth; enriched with many medicinall herbs, (especially on Mount Baldus, an hill therein) where the Physicians go a Simpling. 6. Bebriacum, or Bedriacum, as some Writers call it, two dayes march from Verona, now a small Burrough named Labinia, and never of any great note when it was at the best. Remarkable in the Roman stories for the defeat here given by the Vitellians unto Otho's Army; and after by Vespasians forces unto those of Vitellius. By Tacitus called in that regard duabus Romanis cladibus notum & infaustus Vicus. 7. Crema, a Town of no great Antiquity, but situate in a wealthy soyl, well peopled, and as well built for the private Edifices: so strongly fortified, that it is reckoned the chief Bulwark of the Signeury of Venice, against the Millanese, on the borders of which State it standeth. First built about the year 970. by some remnants of the Anthropomorphites, who on the destruction of Pernassius (a Town of Lombardy) where before they lived, abjured their heresie, and were permitted to build here. Honored in succeeding times with a See Episcopall; either the birth-place or preferment of John Cremensis, a Roman Cardinall, who being by Pope Honorius sent into England, An°. 1225. to diswade the Clergie-men from Mariage, and having in a Convocation of the Clergie called for that purpose, highly advanced the honour of the single life, and shewed the inconvenience and unfitness of Mariage in men preferred unto Holy Orders, was the night following (to the great discredit both of his cause and person) taken in Adulterie. 8. Bergomo, a right antient Town, but very well built, seated upon the side of an hill, and having a very large and beautifull Suburb, the Territory whereof hath many rough and craggy Mountains, the Spurs and excursions of the Alpes, but withall many rich and delightfull valleys intermingled with them. The people of this City and Countrey are said to speak the courcest language of any in Italie, but so have as fine wits as the best. Places of more inferiour note are, 1. Este, (Ateste in most Latine Writers) whence came the Family D'Este, late Dukes of Ferrara. 2. Limacum, a strong Garrison on the borders of Mantua; as 3. Castel-France is towards Ferrara; and 4. Soravall, of most remarkableness for the great quantity of Armour which is therein made. 5. Feltria, which still preserves its old name of Feltria.

This Province being antiently a part of the Cisalpine Gaule, fell to the power of the Romans at the end of the second Punick war: and being conquered by the Romans did continue theirs, till first the Gothes, and afterwards the Lombards became Masters of it. Afterwards, in the fall of the Kingdom of Lombardie, it fell first unto the French, and after to the German Empire; from which by many mean conveyances, it came at last to Ottocarus, King of Bohemia and Duke of Austria, who bought the same of Ulricus the last Duke of Carinthia. Upon a reconciliation made betwixt this Ottocarus and Rodolfus of Habspurg (then Emperor of Germany) it was added (together with Austria it self) unto the Patrimony of that Family, sold by Duke Leopold the ninth, to the Carraras, then Lords of Padua; in the ruin of whose Estate and Family it fell (together with that City) into the power of the Venetians, who still hold the same.

2. F R I U L I hath on the East the River Formio, which parteth it from Histria; on the West, Marca Trevisana, and a branch of the Alpes; on the North, the main body of the Alpes, which divide it from Germany; and on the South, the Adriatick Sea, or Golf of Venice.

It is called Forum Julii in the Latine, (of which that of Friuli is derived) from Julius Cæsar, who conducting his Armies this way, built the Town so named; and from that march of his, the Alpes adjoyning, as 'tis thought, had the name of Julia. By some Writers of the middle times it is called Regio Aquilegiensis, as appertaining for the most part, by the gift of the Emperors Otho and Conradus, to the Church, or Patriarchate of Aquileia; and by the common people of Venice for the most part Patria, or the Countrey, because from these parts they derive their first Originall.

The Countrey is in a manner square, each side fifty miles, watred with the Rivers of 1. Hydra, heretofore of no small fame for the silver Mines. 2. Tilaventum, rising from the Alpes, and navigable towards the later end of its course. 3. Natisco, neighboured by the famous City of Aquileia. 4. Timavus, mentioned in the first of the Æneids; which rising out of the Alpes, and running under ground for the space of 330. furlongs, breaketh out again; and being branched into nine Channells, falleth into the Gulf or Bay of Trieste. By Niger it is now called Lureina; but by Leander named Timavo. The Soyl sufficiently fruitfull, except towards the Alpes, and yeelding a very pleasant Wine, which Plinie did prefer before any in Italie.

Towns herein of most note and consequence, 1 Aquileia, or Aquilegia, as some call it, made the

the Metropolis first of the Province of Histria and Venetia, by the Emperor Antoninus; as afterwards of the whole Dioceſe of Italie by the Weſtern Emperors. Honoured in that regard with the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio, and of his Vicarius or Lieutenant; tranſlated from Millaine to this Citie, as the Gate of Italie, by which the Barbarous Nations uſed to make their entrance: never ſo like to be ſhut out as by the power and preſence of ſo great an Officer. After his time, and on this occaſion, the Biſhop hereof had the title of Patriarch: And here the Patriachall See continued till the City was deſtroyed by Attila that furious Hun, and then removed to Venice, as the ſafer place, and ſetled in the Iſle of Grada; yet ſo, that the ſucceeding Biſhops of Aquileia (for they ſtaied at Venice onely till the times were quiet, &c.) do ſtill retain the dignity, and name of Patriarchs, as well as thoſe of Venice do, and with better reaſon. For beſides the honour which it had in being made the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio, it had been formerly more honoured with the reſidence of Auguſtus Cæſar, who here kept his Court, whence it had the name of Roma altera, or a ſecond Rome; and of Tiberius, who here lived with Julia the daughter of the ſaid Auguſtus, before his comming to the Empire. As for the City it ſelf, it is ſituate on the River Natiſco, but not well inhabited at the preſent; partly becauſe of the ill Air, but principally by the ill neighbourhood of Venice, attracting all Trade unto it ſelf. Moſt memorable in old ſtory for enduring that famous ſiege againſt Maximinus for the ſafety of the Empire of Rome, and her Emperours Maximus and Balbinus. In whoſe cauſe the Citizens hereof were ſo reſolutely faithfull, that they bereaved the women (willing to loſe that invaluable ornament of their ſex for the common good) of the hair of their heads, to make Bow-ſtrings withall. Nor did this pious conſtancie of theirs want an happy iſſue. For they beheld the Tyrant headleſs under their walls (ſlain by the hands of his own Souldiers) and ſaw the Metropolis of the World preſerved by their loyalty. And yet the matter was not ended with the death of the Tyrant; the Souldiers and people laying hands on his children alſo, and putting all unto the ſword. Of which crueltie being asked the reaſon, they returned this Anſwer, that not a whelp was to be ſpared of ſo ill a litter; none of the brood of ſuch a Cur; or in the language of the Author, Peſſimi Canis, Catulus non eſt relinquendus. 2 Trieſte, of old called Tergeſtum, from whence a ſpacious Bay adjoyning had antiently the name of Sinus Tergeſtinus, and is now called Golfo di Trieſte. The Bay repleniſhed principally with the water of the River Timavus, which with many ſtreams doth fall into it, and is therefore by the inhabitants of that Golf or Bay, called Fons maris, as Polybius in Strabo telleth us. The town of no greater Antiquitie than obſervation, mentioned by Plinie and ſome others of the Antient Writers, but not elſe conſiderable. 3 Montfalcon, famous for its medicinall Herbs. 4 Porto Gruate, an Haven-town, as the name importeth. 5 Concordia, in former times of no ſmall eſteem; but ſo demoliſhed by Attila the Hunn, that it is now nothing but a ruin. 6 Utina, or Uden, the faireſt and largeſt at this time of all the Province, containing about five miles in compaſs, and about 15000 Inhabitants. Honoured for a time with the Patriarchall See, removed hither from Aquilegia, at ſome ſiege thereof: of which though long ago deprived, yet it is ſtill the ordinary ſeat of the Procurator or Provinciall Governour, ſent from Venice hither. 7 Palma, a new Town, as being built by the Venetians no longer ſince than the year 1583, but held to be the beſt fortified of any in Italie. 8 Cividad de Auſtria, firſt built by Julius Cæſar, in ſome of his marches towards Gaule, by whom it was called Julium, after Forum Julii, whence the name of Friuli (Diſtrictus Forojulienſis, as the Latins call it) came unto the Province. But being taken and repaired by ſome Princes of the Auſtrian Family (on the borders of whoſe Eſtate it ſtandeth) it got this new name of Cividad de Auſtria. Hiſtria.

This Province antiently was one of the four Dukedoms founded by the Lombards when they conquered Italie; the other three being Turin, Benevent, and Spoleto. The Family of the Berengarii were once Dukes hereof; three of which were of ſpeciall fame, and two of them Competitors for the Kingdom of Italie. But this Family being ſuppreſſed by the Emperour Otho, he have a great part of the Country to the Church of Aquileia, to which almoſt all the reſt was added by the Emperour Conrade; yet ſo that there were divers petit Lords who had good eſtates in it; the name of Duke remaining unto ſome of the antient race. One of which named Luitprandus, envying to the Venetians their increaſe of Dominion, made war againſt them; which ended in the loſs of his Country, An° 1020, or thereabouts, ever ſince ſubject to that State: the Patriarch of Aquileia (whoſe authority in this Country began to decline, in the riſing of the States of Venice) ſurrendring all his intereſs alſo to that powerfull Signeurie, as better able to defend it againſt all Pretenders.

HISTRIA is environed on the Eaſt, Weſt, and South, with the Adriatick, in the manner of a Demy-Iland, or Peninſula, ſave where it toucheth on Friuli; and on the North is parted from Carinthia with the Alpes of Germany. The Country very woody, and full of Quarries, affording materials to Venice both for ſhips and houſes; not comparable for fertility to the reſt of Italie; and of air ſo ſickly and unwholſome, that the Venetians were compelled to hire people to dwell there, and afterwards to grant them many large immu nities. It is two hundred miles in compaſs, watered with the Rivers of Formio, which they now call Riſano; 2 Nauportus, called at this day Quietus; and 3 Arſia, which runneth into the Gulf of Quevero, called antiently Sinus Flanaticus.

The Adriatick Isles of Venice.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Cape de Istria, called in Plinies time Ægida, and being afterwards repaired by the Emperor Justine, was called Justinopolis. But being taken and destroyed by the Genoese, and re-built again, it took the name of Caput Histriæ, or Cape d' Istria, became the principall of the Province, and a Bishops See. Of this See was Vergerius Bishop, about the time of Luthers first preaching in Germany; who with Antonio de Dominis Arch-Bishop of Spalato, were of most note of any of these parts of the world that fell off from the Church of Rome to the Protestant partie; and therefore shall be spoken of in more particulars; Spalato in his proper place, and Vergerius here. Being a man of great industry and eminent parts, he was by many of the Popes employed in Germany against Luther. In which negotiation he behaved himself with such dexterity, and gave such content unto the Pope; that Paul the third, An. 1541 intended to have made him Cardinal, had not some who envyed him that honour, accused him of Lutheranism; to purge himself he began to write a Book, entituled, Against the Apostata's of Germany; in the pursute whereof, pondering Luthers reasons, he became of his opinion; which being known, he was driven from Justinople. He submitted himself and his cause to the Fathers at Trent, but could not get a hearing. Thence he went to the D. of Mantua, from him to the State of Venice; but no-where finding protection, he retired unto the Grisons; and there preached, till Christopher Duke of Wittenberg, An. 1548, placed him in his University of Tubing, and there allowed him a sufficiency of maintenance. It was built by Justinus (as before) the Nephew of Justinian the Emperor, as a fortress against the incursions of the barbarous people. 2 Pola, built by the Colchians at their first comming hither; the name in their language importing as much as the place of banishment. It was after made a Roman Colony, and called Pictas Julia; but being first destroied by Attila, after by the Genoese, it recovered the old name again, and still continueth with the title of a See Episcopall. It abutteth upon Sinus Flanaticus, or the Golf of Quevero. 3 Pazenze. 4 Pluun, 5 Cita Nova, all of them seated in the Midlands, and not much observable. 7 Rovigno, in a little Iland, and mounted on an high hill, not unfruitfull in Olives; beautified with a convenient Port, and that defended also by a very strong Castle. The Town but poor, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of Venice, from which distant not above twenty miles, inhabited for the most part by Mariners, and skilfull Pilots, hired by such ships as are bound for Venice to conduct them safely over the Bars of Malamocco. The adjoyning mountainous and somewhat wild; but those mountains covered on the outside with Physicall Simples, and yeelding many Quarries of most excellent Marble, which so adorn the Venetian Palaces.

It is recorded that the Histrians were a people of Colchis, who being sent by King Ætas to pursue Jason and the Argonants, were driven up this Gulf; and either for fear of the Kings anger, or not daring to venture their weak vessel to so long a voyage, as from hence to Colchis whence they came, stayed in this Country. It was after that time called Japidia, from Japis an Ætolian who first planted here; and took the name of Istria from the Istri, a people on the banks of Ister, or Danubius, who made up a considerable part of this plantation. Siding with the Ætolians in their Wars against the Romans, and making many inrodes and excursions on them, they were invaded first by Manlius, without leave of the Senate; and him they charged with such a fury, that they beat him out of his Camp. Where finding plenty of Wine, and all store of Provisions, they fell roundly to it; till Manlius having rallied his men again, charged them in their Cups, and killed 8000 in the place; their miserable King being so hotly pursued by the Victors, that he was fain to kill himself for fear of Captivity. This was in An° V. C. 575. Cl. Pulcher the next Consul perfected the conquest. Sempronius long time after that, An° sc. V.C. 625. reduced it to the form of a Province. So it continued till the time of Augustus Cæsar, who joyning it to that of Venice (or Venetia) made out of both the eleventh and last Region of Italie. Under the Romans they continued whilst that Empire stood, and after the decay thereof regained their liberties, which they enjoyed till by Piracie molesting the Venetians, they lost many of their Towns to Duke Petro Candiano, An. 938; and the whole Country was made Tributary by the valour of the Duke Henry Dondolo, about the year 1190. After which many times rebelling, they were still re-conquered.

4 The fourth member of this estate with respect to Italie, are some ILANDS in the Adriatick, which being principally under the command of this Commonwealth, is commonly called the Gulf of Venice; a Golf extending in length 700 miles, in bredth 140 miles, in some places less; so called of Adria once a famous Haven-town (as before was sayd) at the mouth of Eridanus or Po. Concerning which we are to know, that though this Golf or Bay of the Adriatick, extended no farther than the Eastern parts of Dalmatia, where the sea beginneth to take the name of the Ionian; yet Mare Adriaticum, or the Adriatick sea was of greater length. Extended by the Antients over the Ionian, and thence South-West-ward till it meeteth with the Tuscan Seas, and South-wards till it come to the coast of Africk; insomuch as Mare Lybicum, or the sea of Africk, is by Orosius made a part of the Adriatick. For speaking of the Province of Tripolis a Province of Africk, properly and especially so called, he boundeth it on the North with the Adriatick, as he doth the Isle of Crete on the South side of it, with the Libyan Sea, quod & Adriaticum vocant, which they also call the Adriatick, as his own words are. The like might also be made evident out of other Authors both Greek and Latin: Which I note here, becauſe Saint Paul being toſſed up and down in the Sea of Adria, as is ſayd Acts 27. 27. and being after caſt on ſhore in the Iſle of Malta; occaſioned ſome to think this Melite or Malta, to be that Iland of Dalmatia which is now called Melidar; becauſe ſeated in the Bay or Golf of Adria: whereas the Text ſpeaks plainly of that Iſle of Malta which lyeth in the furtheſt parts of the Adriatick Sea, on the coaſts of Africk. But to return to this Golf, it was accounted heretofore to be very tempeſtuous and unſafe, as appeareth by Improbo iracundior Adria, in Horace; the Manix Adriaticum in Catullus, and the Ventoſi tumor Adriæ, in Seneca's Thyeſtes. But when the Empreſs Helena had found the Croſs on which CHRIST ſuffered, ſhe cauſed one of the three Nails with which his body was faſtened to it, to be thrown of purpoſe into this Sea; ſince which time, as Platina hath told us in the life of Pope Silveſter (and cites Saint Ambroſe for his Author) it hath been very calm and quiet; the ſecond nail being made into a Bridle for her ſonne Conſtantines horſe, and a Creſt for his Helmet of the third. But not to truſt too much to the truth of this miracle, certain it is that the Venetiane are Lords of it, by reaſon of their Navall power, and that it is every year eſpouſed to the Duke of Venice, by the ſolemn caſting in of a Wedding-Ring; and every year Baptiſed on Epiphany day, by the Biſhop of Zant. When this laſt ceremony took beginning, I am yet to ſeek. But for the firſt, which is performed with a great deal of ſtate, every Holy-Thurſday, the Duke, and all the Magnificos being rowed in the Bucentaure (which is a rich and ſtately Gallie made for ſuch ſolemnities, and capable of 200 perſons, whence it had the name) it took beginning from Pope Alexander the third, who being hardly put to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa, fled unto Venice in the habit of a Cook, Sebaſtian Cyani being then Duke: in proſecution of whoſe quarrell, the Venetians encountered Otho the Emperours ſonne, vanquiſhed him, and reſtored the Pope. The Duke returning back in triumph with his Royall priſoner, was thus ſaluted by the Pope. Cyani, take here this Ring of Gold, and by giving it unto the Sea oblige it unto thee: a Ceremonie which on this day (the Aſcenſion day) ſhall be yearly obſerved, both by thee and thy ſucceſſors, that ſo poſteritie may know that you have purchaſed the dominion thereof by your valour, and made it ſubject to you, as a Wife to her Husband.

The Adriatick Iſles of Venice.

The principall Ilands of this Sea, lie on the other ſide thereof, on the coaſt of Dalmatia. Some few there are upon this ſide (but thoſe, as well as theſe under the command of this Signeurie) neither great nor famous. Of theſe the chief are, 1 MALAMOCCO, in Latin Methaucum, now only conſiderable for the Haven which is large and deep; made by the influx of Medacus before mentioned; in which the greater ſhips do ride till they hire Pilots from Rovigno to croſs the Bars. It was ennobled heretofore with the Dukes Palace, and an Epiſcopall See; but the Dukes Palace being removed to Rialto, and the Epiſcopall See to the Iland of Chioggia, it is now inhabited for the moſt part by none but Sea-men. 2 TORCELLAN, in which there is a little City of the ſame name, honoured with a Biſhops See; but by reaſon of the ill air not very well peopled. 3 MURIANUM, or MURIANO, three miles in compaſs, and but one from Venice, of a ſound air, and very well inhabited, the people whereof make the beſt Venice Glaſſes, ſo much uſed in all parts. 4 CHIOGGIA, called in Latin Foſſa Clodia; diſtant from Venice 25 miles; to which it ſerveth inſtead of a Bul wark. There is a town in it of the ſame name, to which the Biſhops See was removed from Malamocco, An. 1103, and near to which are many Salt-pits which yeeld great gain unto the people, and as much unto the Commonwealth. Near to this Iland the Genoeſe ſo diſcomfited the Venetians in a fight at ſea, that they were offered a blank Charter to write what they would. But the Genoeſe being grown too inſolent on their good ſucceſs, made the City deſperate; who putting all to hazard fell again upon them, beat them, purſued them home, and there utterly cruſhed them, as we ſhall tell you more at large, when we come to Genoa.

Betwixt theſe Ilands and the main land of Friuli, lieth a ſhoal of little Iſlets; in and amongſt which ſtandeth the renowned City of Venice, the head City of this Commonwealth, and the glory of Italie. theſe Iſlets 72 in number, but joyned together by many Bridges; of which here are ſayd to be 4000 at leaſt, beſides 10000 boats for paſſage from one Iſle to the other. The compaſs of the whole aggregate body ſayd to be eight miles, the buildings fair, and generally adorned with glas windows; an Ornament not common in Italie, where the windows for the moſt part are made with paper to let in the light, and that paper oyled all over to keep out the wet. The number of the Inhabitants eſtimated at 300000 thouſand. By the ſituation one would think that it was denominated from Venetia, which in the old Latin ſignifieth the ſeething or frothing of the ſea. VENETIA maris exæſtuatio eſt quæ ad Littus veniat, ſaith the old Gloſſarie upon Iſidore, out of Marcus Varro. But the truth is, that it was ſo called from the Veneti, the old Inhabitants of the neighbouring Province of Friuli, who to avoyd the fury of the barbarous Hunnes then threatning Italie, abandoned the main land, and built this City in the bogs and mariſhes of the ſea adjoyning. And that it might afford them the greater afetle; they not onely built in the moſt inward part of the Adriatick ſea, commonly called the Gulf of Venice, but in the midſt of many Lakes of ſalt-water, extending thirty miles in compaſs; and having on the Eaſt the ſaid Adriatick ſea for the length of 550 miles; betwixt which and the ſayd Lakes there is a bank or cauſey which they call Il Lido, made as it were by nature to defend the Ilands which lie in this Lake, from the violent fury of the ſea. A Cauſey of 35 miles in length, bending like a Bow, and opening in ſeven places only, which ſerve as well to keep the lakes always full of water, as for the Venice. passage of Ships and Barks of ſmaller burden; the bigger being compelled to lie at Anchor on the South ſide of the City, near to a place called Malamocco, and the Caſtles of Lio, which are very well fortified; and there muſt remain till they are brought in by skilfull Pilots, who know the paſſages, which, by reaſon of the ſhifting of the ſands, change very often. On the Weſt and North ſides it is compaſſed with very deep Mariſhes, about five miles diſtant from the land; and on the South with many Ilands, in which are ſeverall Churches and Monaſteries, like ſo many Forts which lie between it and thoſe parts of Italie which are not under the obedience of the Commonwealth. So that it is impoſſible to be taken but by an Army which can ſtretch 150 miles in compaſs. It is built, as before is ſayd, on 72 Ilands, the principall of which are, 1 Heraclea, the firſt ſeat of the Duke of Venice, from thence removed to Malamocco, and at laſt to Rialto; more famous at this time for being a Biſhops See, than the number of Citizens. 2 Grado, to which the Patriarchall See of Aquileia was removed by Pelagius the ſecond, about the year 580, making it thereby the Metropolitan of Friuli, or the Country of Venice; but from thence it hath been ſince removed to another of theſe Ilands called Caſtello Olindo. 3 Rialto, which is of moſt eſteem and reputation, ſo called quaſi Rivo alto, becauſe the Mariſhes are there deeper than in other places; or quaſi Ripa alta, becauſe it lay higher above the waters, than the other Ilands. For which reaſons that Iland getting reputation above the reſt, moſt of the Gentlemen ſetled their dwellings in the ſame, and drew thither in the end the Dukes Palace alſo; inſomuch that in ſome antient writings the whole City hath been called Rialto; many of the old Records being dated in ſuch and ſuch a year of the Rialto. But as they did increaſe in numbers, ſo were they fain to ſpread themſelves from one Iſle to another, till in the end they built on all the Ilands which lay near together, and might conveniently be joyned by Boats or Bridges. By this Rialto runs the paſſage called the Grand Canale, being in length about 1300 paces, and ſome fortie in bredth; adorned on both ſides with ſtately and magnificent Palaces; and covered with an incredible number of Boats called Gondolos, very neatly built, and veiled over with cloth, ſo that the Paſſengers may go unſeen and unknown, without the moleſtation of ſun, wind, or rain. For publique buildings it hath in it 70 Pariſh Churches, to each of which belongeth a Market-place and a Well; 31 Cloyſters of Monks, 28 of Nuns, beſides Chappels and Almeſ-houſes.

The principall Church of this City is that of S. Mark, the Patron of their Commonwealth, whoſe body they report to have been brought hither from Alexandria in Egypt, and intombed herein. Affirmed by ſome to be the richeſt and goodlieſt Church in all the World. The building of Moſaick work, of which work they boaſt themſelves to have been the Authors. A kind of work by the Grecians called Λιθόστρωτα, and by the Latin Writers Muſiva, Muſica, and Muſaica; wrought out of ſtones or metals of divers colours, unto the ſhape of Flowers, Knots, Birds, Beaſts, and other fancies of the Workman, yet done with ſuch exactneſs of skill and judgement, that it ſeemeth to be all one ſtone, the work rather of Nature than Art. A Church of admirable work both within and without, compacted of moſt rare peeces of Marble, Porphyrie, and a rich ſtone which the Lapidaries called Ophitis, becauſe it is ſpeckled like a ſnake; adorned on the outſide with 148 Pillars of Marble, and eight of Porphyrie near the door; beſides 600 Marble pillars of a leſſer ſize, which carry up an open Gallery round about the Church; from whence the Magiſtrates and others of the principall Citizens, behold ſuch Shews as are preſented in the Market place adjoyning to it. The Church in length not above 200 foot of Venice meaſure, nor above 50 in bredth; the roof thereof being of an Orbicular form, lieth open at the very top, where the light comes in, there being no windows in all the Church; as commonly the Churches in Italie are exceeding dark, either to ſtrike in the ſpectators a religious reverence, or to make their Candles ſhew the better. And for the inſide of the Church, the riches of it are ſo great, the Images ſo glorious, the furniture of the Altars ſo above compariſon, that all the treaſures of the State may ſeem to be amaſſed in the decking of it. And yet as goodly and as glorious as the Fabrick is, it is ſtill unfiniſhed, and as ſome think, is kept unfiniſhed on purpoſe, partly to draw on other Benefactors to advance the work, the benefit of whoſe liberality may be employed unto the uſe of the publick Treaſury; and partly leſt the Revenues which are given already ſhould be reſumed by the Heirs of the deceaſed, if the work were ended. So infinitely doth the furniture of the Church exceed the ſumptuouſneſs and beauty of the Church it ſelf.

Of other of the publick buildings, the Counſell-houſe, the Ducall Palace, Monaſteries, Churches, and the like, though ſtately and magnificent ſtructures, I forbear to ſpeak. Nor ſhall I here ſay any thing of their private houſes, ſo large and beautified, that here are ſaid to be no fewer than 200 (moſt of them on the Grand Canale) able to entertain and lodge the beſt King in Chriſtendom. All I ſhall adde, and ſo leave this City, will be a word or two of their Arſenall, and publick Magazine. In the firſt of which they have in readineſs 200 Gallies, with rooms for Cables, Maſts, Sails, Victuals, and Ammunition of all ſorts; able thereby to ſet out an Navy to the Sea on the ſhorteſt warning. And in the other it is ſaid, that they have Arms ſufficient for 100000 Souldiers of all ſorts; amongſt which are affirmed to be a thouſand Coats of plate, garniſhed with gold, and covered with velvet, fit for the uſe and wearing of the greateſt Princes. But of their power and forces both by Sea and Land, we ſhall ſpeak more ſhortly.

Proceed we now unto their ſtory. And if we look upon them in their firſt originall, we ſhall find them to have been a people of Paphlagonia (a Province of Aſia the leſſer) called the Heneti; who who aiding Priamus King of Troy in his ten years wars againſt the Greeks, where they loſt their King called Philamenes (or Pterilamenes, as ſome call him) choſe rather to ſeek out new dwellings than return with ſhame unto their old. Upon this reſolution they joyn themſelves to Antenor, who with ſome remnant of the Trojans had the ſame deſign; and ſayling as the wind and ſea conducted them, arrived at laſt in thoſe parts of Italie now called Friuli. So witneſſeth the Poet, ſaying, Venice.

Antenor potuit, mediis illapſus Achivis
Illyricos penetrare Sinus, atque intima tutus
Regna Liburnorum, & fontes ſuperare Timavi.
Antenor through the Greeks could force his way,
And ſafely piercing the Illyrian Bay,
Croſs the Liburnian Realms, and conquer all
From fierce Timavos Fountain to his fall.

Here landing they ſubdued the Euganei (who before inhabited this tract) and poſſeſſed their dwellings: the name of Heneti being changed into that of Veneti. But this perhaps not done till ſubdued by the Galls, and made part of Gallia Ciſalpina; agreeably to the name of the Veneti, an old Gallick Nation, oppoſite to the Iſle of Britain. When thoſe Galls were vanquiſhed by the Romans, the name and nation of theſe Veneti was ſo conſiderable, that their Territory had the name of Venetia; and together with Hiſtria, made one Province of the Roman Empire. And here they lived in peace and ſafety under the protection of the Empire, till the terrible noiſe of the coming of Attila and the Hunnes, occaſioned many of the principall men, with their ſeverall Retinues, to betake themſelves to the Ilands, and inacceſſible Mariſhes of the Adriatick; where they built this City, and called it Venetia, by the name of their Nation, An° 454. Not much inceaſed in power or greatneſs at the fall of the Lombardian Kingdom; though ſo conſiderable at that time, that in the diviſion of Italie made by Charles the Great, betwixt himſelf, the Popes, and the Eaſtern Emperors; the Venetians were left at liberty as a Free-Eſtate. After which, making uſe of their ſituation, they grew not only rich in trade, but ſtrong in ſhipping; and thereby did good ſervice to the Weſtern Princes, in their wars againſt the Turks in the Holy Land. And they ſerved themſelves well by it too: getting in one Expedition onely (that namely in which the Empire of Conſtantinople was made a prey unto the Latines, An°. 1200.) all the Ilands which they have at the preſent, in the Ægean and Ionian Seas, many in thoſe Seas which they have loſt, and not a few good Towns in Peloponneſus, ſince conquered from them by the Turks. Contending with the Genoeſe for the Soveraignty of the Mediterranean, they received ſo great a blow at the navall battell near Chioggia, (ſpoken of before) that they had utterly loſt all, if the Enemy could have uſed his fortune with moderation. But being recovered of that blow, after many various ſucceſſes and events of War, they got the better of them, and made them quiet; by means whereof, being Lords Paramont at Sea, they next caſt their eyes on the main land of Italie, which now they were at more leiſure to look after, than they had been formerly. The Hiſtrians had before infeſted them with Piracy, and were puniſhed for it in the time of Duke Pietro Candiano, by the loſs of many of their Towns; but in the year 1390, the whole Country is brought under the command of this Commonwealth. Padua with a great part of Trevigiana then appendant on it, they extorted from the noble family of the Carrari, An. 1400. The City of Vincentia they poſſeſſed themſelves of in the ſame year alſo; and not long after fully perfected their Conqueſt of Hiſtria, with the revolts whereof they had before been often troubled.

But that whereby they moſt improved their eſtate was by a conſtant watching of their opportunities, taking advantage of the factions and fractions amongſt their neighbours, and working their own greatneſs out of others ruins. By means whereof they came poſſeſſed of many places of right belonging to the Empire and Church of Rome, as alſo of ſome Townes pertaining to the Dutchy of Millaine, and four of the beſt Havens in the Adriatick, which properly belonged to the Realm of Naples: not giving ayd to any of their diſtreſſed neighbours without the mortgage or direct ſale of ſome peece or other. Which ſordid kind of merchandizing drew all the Princes of thoſe parts to make war upon them; every one to recover by ſtrong hand what the Venetian had extorted from them in their neceſſity. And the confederates thrived ſo well, that Maximilian the Emperor recovered to the Empire the Towns and Territories of Padua, Vincentia, Verona, Trieſt, Friuli, and whatſoever elſe he layd clame unto; the Popes in right of the Church regained Ravenna, Remini (or Ariminum) and Faventia; Lewis the 12 of France, in right of the Dutchy of Millaine, Bergamum, Crema, Cremona, Brixia: the King of Spain in right of the Realm of Naples, Trano, Barlette, and Monopoli, all upon the Adriatick; the Duke of Ferrara gained Rovigo, and the Duke of Mantua the town of Aſula. So that the Venetians being (like the Jay) ſtripped of all their feathers, were fain to quit the firm land, and betake themſelves unto the Iſles and Mariſhes of their City; having not one foot of all their whole Dominion left them but their Seas and Ilands. And yet in very little time, partly by working on the Pope, to whom they quitted all their intereſt in the Towns aforeſayd, and partly by dividing the reſt of the confederates from one another, they recovered all that they had loſt in a little time, except the Towns of Naples only, for which they were not willing to contend with the Crown of Spain.

The

Venice. The Government is Ariſtocraticall, managed only by the principall men of all the City, both for birth and breeding: the common-people having no authority in affairs of State. Their chief Officers at the firſt were many, whom they called Tribunes: but experience being had of that confuſion which a multitude of Governors carrieth for the moſt part with it, in the year 709. they made choice of one chief Officer, whom they called their Duke. Under theſe Dukes they have gotten that great Dominion which they now injoy: The authority of which Dukes was at firſt more abſolute, but by degrees reſtrained and limited within narrower bounds. He that beholdeth him in his Robes, his gravity and outward parts, and the reſpect given him by the people, would think no Prince could be more abſolute and ſupreme. But look upon him in the exerciſe and powers of Government, and he is nothing in the wold but an empty Title. For notwithſtanding that he injoyeth ſo great a dignity, yet hath he a full power in nothing, not being able to determine in any point, without the preſence of his Counſellors (being ſix in number) who always ſit with him, and diſpatch affairs both publick and private; as namely, giving audience to Ambaſſadors from Forrain States, receiving Letters from their own Miniſters, granting of Privileges, and the like; in which the Duke can do juſt nothing, if four (at leaſt) of theſe Counſellors be not preſent with him. And yet theſe Counſellors without him may conclude of any thing. Nay he is ſo reſtrained in all things to the power of the Senate, and to three Officers called the Capi, that he may not go out of the Town without their conſent; and by them is preſcribed an Order in his own Apparell. So that he is but little better than a Priſoner, when within the City, and a Traytor if he ſtir abroad: at the beſt but an honourable Servant. And his Revenue is as little as his Authority; as being allowed out of the common Treaſury, no more than 40000. Ducats a yeer towards his expence and entertainment. As for the Soveraignty of the State, that reſides wholly in the Senate; but repreſentatively in the Duke, the ſix Counſellers, and the three Heads or Preſidents of the Forty; which are thoſe Officers (as I take it) whom they call the Capi. The Senate or Great Counſell, conſiſts of all the Gentlemen of Venice above five and twenty years of age, which may amount unto the number of 2500. though ſeldom half that number do aſſemble at once, by reaſon of their ſeverall imployments in affairs of the Common-wealth in other places: who uſually do meet together every Sunday morning, and on the mornings of other Feſtivalls, where they chooſe Magiſtrates, and diſtribute Governments, and order matters of the State. But becauſe ſuch great Bodies move but ſlowly, and are not very capable of truſt and ſecrecie, they parcell this great Counſell into leſſer Members, whereof the principall are the Pregadi, and the Counſell of Ten. That of the Pregadi conſiſteth of 120. in which they treat of, and determine matters of the greateſt importance, and therein conclude commonly of ſuch principall points as formerly have been propoſed and treated of in the great Aſſembly: And in this Counſell, beſides the 120. before mentioned, the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the Counſell of Ten, and all ſuch as have born any publick Office, have their voyce or ſuffrage. This is that Counſell which properly and more ſpecially is called the Senate; in which nothing is to be concluded or paſſed into Acts, except four of the ſix Counſellors be preſent at them, and that ſixty at the leaſt of the whole number give their ſuffrage to it. Then for the Counſell of Ten, their power is univerſall, over all affairs, ſuch as the other Counſels may not meddle with, as to conclude of war, or peace, to put in execution what they think moſt neceſſary for the benefit of the Common-wealth, and other things of like weight and moment: which if they were firſt treated of in the Generall Counſell or Aſſembly, and after in that of the Pregadi, as they ought to be in common courſe, could not be poſſibly managed with ſuch ſpeed and ſecrecie, as the exigencies of the State require. And in this Counſell, with the Prince, and his ſix Aſſiſtants, the Supreme Majeſty of the State doth reſide eſpecially. Some other Officers there are, and thoſe of great authority and reputation, as the Procurators of S. Mark, which have the charge of the publick Treaſures; and the Avogadori, or Tribunes (as one might call them) of the people, being three in all, one of which muſt be always preſent in all conſultations, leſt any thing ſhould paſs to the prejudice and infringement of the Privileges of the common-people.

For the whole body of the City conſiſteth either of the Gentlemen, or of Artificers and Commons. Theſe laſt are the deſcendants and progeny of ſuch as came to ſettle here when the State was fixed, invited to dwell here, and to follow their occupations, by ſeverall Privileges and Immunities which were offered to them, and theſe they neither admit into any of their Counſells, nor into any of the Offices of Truſt and Power, except it be two; that namely of the Chancellor, and the principall Secretaries, which pertain only to the people. The other are the iſſue or deſcendants of thoſe who firſt laid the foundation of their City and Common-wealth: and theſe they have in ſuch reſpect, and ſo high eſteem, that to make any Stranger (how great and eminent ſoever) a Gentleman of the City, is the greateſt honour they can beſtow, and not beſtowed but upon the beſt deſerver. Henry the 3d. of France taking this City in his way out of Poland, thought himſelf graced with this attribute, which they are very dainty and ſparing of, it being the higheſt honour which they vouchſafe to impart to ſuch Commanders of their own, and Ambaſſadors of other Princes, as have well deſerved it. And that this honour may be kept up to the very height, and their Nobility not grow too cheap, by being too numerous, neither the younger ſonnes of theſe Gentlemen within the City, or of the Noblemen in in the Countrey, are permitted to marry. But otherwiſe they ſuffer them to ſatisfie their luſts with too much impunity, and for their ſakes allow of Stews, as an evill not to be voided on the former grounds. Venice.

Now as Otho in Tacitus ſaid to the Pretorian Souldiers, Princeps è Senatu oritur, Senatus è vobis: ſo out of theſe Gentlemen are choſen the Senators, out of them the Duke. His election by Contarenus is deſcribed in this manner. In the vacancy of the place, all the Gentry above thirty years of age are aſſembled. So many as meet, caſt their names into a pot; and in another, are juſt ſo many balls; of which thirty only are gilt. Then a child draweth for each, till the thirty gilt ones be drawn; for which thirty the child draweth again the ſecond time out of another pot that hath only nine gilt balls. The nine ſo drawn, nominate forty, out of which forty are twelve again ſelected by the ſame kind of lot. Theſe twelve nominate five and twenty, out of which five and twenty are nine again by lot ſet apart. Theſe nine nominate five and forty, who are by lot again reduced unto eleven. Theſe eleven chooſe forty one of the beſt and chiefeſt of the Senators, who after an oath taken ſeverally, to chooſe whom they judge worthieſt, write in a ſcroll every one whom he beſt liketh. The ſcrolls are mingled together, and then drawn; the fitneſs of the perſons then drawn is diſcuſſed, and he that hath moſt voyces above five and twenty, is the man whom they pronounce to be elected, and adjudg with due ſolemnities to be created their Duke. By the like kind of Lottery do they chooſe Gentlemen into the Senate, and make publick Officers, inſomuch that Contarenus, who hath committed unto writing theſe publick Forms, conceiveth (I will not ſay how rightly) that the Venetian Common-wealth was modelled by Plato's Platform.

But whether this be ſo or not, certain it is, that this Common-wealth thus conſtituted, and modelled, as before is ſaid, hath laſted longer under one form of Government, than any Republick in the World either Greek or Roman. Nor hath it onely preſerved it ſelf in the ſame condition, but may moſt juſtly be accompted one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks of Chriſtendom againſt the incroachments of the Turks: the wars whereof hath procured peace, and the peace thereof procured plenty, to the reſt of Europe. Inſomuch, that it may well be ſaid, that as Europe is the Head of the World, and Italie the Face of Europe; ſo Venice is the Eye of Italie; the faireſt, ſtrongeſt, and moſt active part in that powerfull Body. As if the Genius of old Rome by ſome Pythagoricall tranſmigration had paſſed into the body of this powerfull State, and animated it with all the vertues of that City, but knit with a more permanent and conſtant temper. From ſo baſe and abject a beginning is this City grown to be one of the beſt Supporter of the Arms of Europe.

As for the Religion of this State, they tolerate that of the Greek Church, but they themſelves profeſs no other than that of the Church of Rome, yet with ſuch caution and reſpect to their own authority, that they ſuffer not the Clergie to injoy thoſe privileges, which they poſſeſs in other Countreys to the publick prejudice. Hence grew the quarrell betwixt them and Pope Paul the fift, in which the Signeury ſtood ſtiffly to their antient Rights, and cauſed Maſs to be duly ſaid, notwithſtanding all their Churches were under the Interdict; baniſhed the Jeſuits for ever out of their Dominions, for ſtickling too buſily in behalf of the Pope; and in the end prevailed ſo far by their conſtant courage, that the Pope was fain to give over the cauſe, and reconcile them to the Church without any ſubmiſſion. A notable example to all Chriſtian Princes, how to behave themſelves towards thoſe of Rome, who are not to be gained upon, but by ſuch reſiſtances. So eaſie a thing it is for men of conſtancy and courage to ſhake off that yoak, which Papall Tyranny and Superſtition hath impoſed upon them.

In managing their wars they antiently obſerved two Rules, which much conduced to the inlargement and ſecurity of their Common-wealth. The firſt was the exempting of their own Citizens from the wars (not out of jealouſie, but care of their preſervation) unleſs compelled to the contrary by extreme neceſſity: the body of their Armies being compounded out of the Provinciall Subject, intermixt with Mercenaries. By means whereof, they did not only keep their City in the ſame condition, able at any time, and at all times, to give Law to the reſt of their Dominions: but waſted the hot and boyling ſpirit of their Subjects in the Wars abroad, which otherwiſe might have made too much work at home. The other was, the entertaining of ſome neighbouring Prince to be the Generall of their forces, whom in the concluſion of the ſervice they diſmiſſed with honor and reward: And by this courſe they avoided faction, and prevented ſervitude: Either, or both of which might have hapned by imploying any of their own great ones in the chief command; who (after the example of Julius Cæſar in the ſtate of Rome) having a ſtrong party within the City, and an Army without, might perhaps have made himſelf their Prince. But this was only in the Conduct of their wars in Italie, and in ſuch times when the State was not ſo well ballanced, as it hath been ſince.

As for the Forces of the State, we may behold them in relation to Sea or Land. Their Land-forces which they have in continuall pay for defence of their Dominion conſiſt of 28000. Foot, with Captains, and all other Officers inrolled and paid; and beſides thoſe they have a choyce band of 4000. Muſquetiers: for exerciſing of which they keep yeerly Muſters, as well to improve them in experience, as to proportion them ſome gratuities, according to their well-deſervings. And as for Horſe, they maintain conſtantly 6000. men at Arms, well appointed and paid, the like whereof is not to be found in all Italie. And yet beſides this conſtant

Venice. and ordinary eſtabliſhment, they are able to bring great Forces into the field, as appeareth by their Army againſt Lewis the twelfth, in which, without diſfurniſhing any of their Forts and Garriſons, they had 2000. men of Arms, 3000. light Horſe, 30000. Foot, moſt of their own naturall Subjects, ſaving that they were interlined with ſome bands of Switzers, to which people they give yeerly penſions, to be aſſured of their aid upon all occaſions. Then for the Sea-forces, beſides that they keep fifty Galleys in continuall action, for defence of the Adriatick, and that they have no leſs then 200. more laid up in the Arſevall, with all manner of tackling and ammunition appertaining to them, they have 10000. men inrolled to ſerve at the Oar, and may raiſe as many as they pleaſe for thoſe kind of ſervices, out of thoſe parts of Sclavonia, which are ſubject to them. But the great evidence of the power they can make at Sea, was the great Fleet ſet out againſt the Grand Signeur for the War of Cyprus, An. 1570. in which they manned out one great Gallioun, eleven great Gallies, five and twenty tall Ships, and one hundred and fifty Gallies of leſſer burden, being in all one hundred and eighty ſeven ſail, fit for preſent ſervice. To give the totall ſum in brief, they held a war by Sea and Land for ſeven yeers together againſt all the Princes of Chriſtendome (excepting England) in all which time they neither wanted men nor money; and in the end were the leaſt loſers by the bargain.

By this we may conjecture alſo at the greatneſs of the publick Treaſurie, and of the yeerly income which ſupplies the ſame. For though it be conceived that their ordinary ſtanding Revenue be but four millions of Ducats yeerly (which yet is more than any Chriſtian Prince can boaſt of, except France and Spain) yet they have many other ways to advance their Treaſury, by laying new Impoſts on Commodities, as they ſee occaſion; Which needs muſt riſe to vaſt and moſt conſiderable ſums in a City of the greateſt Traffick of any in Europe, and perhaps in all the world beſides. And yet beſides ſuch Cuſtoms and Impoſts as they lay on Merchandize, there is nothing which the people do eat or drink, for which they pay not ſomething to the publick Treaſury: over and above which, the pooreſt Labourer in the whole Signeury payeth his Poll-money alſo. Inſomuch, that it is credibly affirmed, that the Chriſtians generally do live in a better condition under the Turk, than under the Venetians. Without ſuch helps, (though heavy and burdenſom to the Subject) they could not poſſibly have ſpent twelve millions in the war againſt Selimus the ſecond, and as many a little before that, in the enterprize of Ferrara, and the war raiſed againſt them by the League of Cambray, which was that formerly remembred.

As for the Dukes of Venice, though no Soveraign Princes, nor ſuch as do ſucceed each other in the right of inheritance: yet being they are always men of moſt eminent note, and that in their names all the buſineſs of State is acted, and all writings dated; I will ſubjoyn a Catalogue of them to this preſent time; to the end that meeting with their names in the courſe of Hiſtorie, we may the better know in what times they lived.

The Dukes of Venice.

The principall Orders of Knighthood in this Republick are, 1. Of S. Mark, who is the Patron of this City, instituted in the yeer 1330. and renewed again (being grown somewhat out of use) An. 1562. The honor is commonly bestowed on the person present, sometimes by Letters Patents on a party absent, as lately upon Daniel Heinsius, one of great eminence for learning in the Netherlands. The person chosen is to be of noble blood, at the least a Gentleman, the Wrod or Motto of the Order, is Pax tibi Marce.

2. Of the glorious Virgin, first instituted by Bartholmew of Vincentia, An°. 1222. Their charge is to defend Widows and Orphans, and to procure (as much as in them is) the peace of Italie. It was allowed of by Pope Urban the fourth, An°. 1262. The Arms of this Order, are a purple Cross between certain Stars. The habite a white Surcote over a Russet Cloke, and seems to be as well a Religious, as a Military Institution, like to the Spanish Orders, and that of Malta.

The Armes of the Republick are Gules, two Keys in Saltire Or, stringed Azure: which seem to have been given them for some notable service done unto the Church.

There are in the Provinces of this Common-wealth, before described, Patriarchs 2. Bishops 16.

The Dukedom of FLORENCE, OR OF TUSCANIE.

HAving thus run along the Coast of the Adriatick, or upper Sea, from the Lands of the Church unto the Alpes, which divide Italie from Germany; let us next keep along the tract of the Tuscan or Lower Sea, from the said Lands of the Church, to that part of the Alpes which divide Italie from France. And in the first place we meet with the Dukedom of Florence, or the Estate of the great Duke of Tuscany; divided on the East from S. Peters Patrimony, by the River Pisco; on the West, from the Common-wealth of Genua, by the River Macra, and the strong Fort of Sarezana; on the North, from Rannadiola and Marca Anconitana, by the Apennine hills; and on the South side it is bounded with the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas.

It taketh up the greatest and goodliest part of all that which antiently was called Tuscany, from the Greek word θύειν, which signifieth to sacrifise; of which act of Religious Worship, or rather of some superstitious Ceremonies appertaining to it, they are conceived to be the Authors. And to say truth, they were much given to Soth-sayings, and Divinations, and such like vanities of Gentilism: Tages, that Merlin of the old World first appearing here, from whom they learned the greatest part of their Superstitions. So that thisname was adventitious and accidentall. For properly and originally it was called Tyrrhenia, from Tyrrhenus the sonne of Atys King of Lydia, who came and planted in these parts about the time that Gedeon judged the Tribes of Israel. But these names signified the same both Country and people, though in divers Langues, and with respect to different Originations; the name of Tyrrheni and Tyrrhenia, being most used by the Greeks, as that of Tusci and Tuscia, by their neighbours of Rome, who also called the people Hetrusci, and the Country Hetruria, from a particular Province of it which was so entituled. Antiently it extended as far Eastward as the banks of Tiber, the other bounds being then as they are at the present; and in that tract gave dwelling to a potent Nation, who not content to be restrained within the Apennine and the Tiber, wasted three hundred Towns of the Umbri, the next bordering Nation; and built twelve Cities on the other side of the Mountains; that is to say, Adria, Verona, Vincentia, Treno, Bergamo, Mantua, Como, Vercellæ, Novara, Parma, Bononia, and Rhegium; all of eteem and reputation to this very day. They were the first Nation that carried an Offensive War to the gates of Rome, when they gave ayd to the Tarquins under King Porsenna; and held it out on the Defensive as long as any: No people in all Italie standing more stiffly in defence of their common Liberties, than the Falisci, and Veientes, two Hetrurian Tribes. But nothing could withstand the fortune of that growing Empire. Twelve Nations of them were brought under by Tarquinius Priscus, who from hence Tuſcanie. hence brought to Rome the Faſces and Triumphall Ornaments, and other embelliſhments of State: the Veii and Faliſci, by the Sword of Camillus; the Conqueſt perfected by the conduct of Valerius Corvinus, and Fulv. Centumalus A. V. C. 455. So the Tuſcans were ſubdued at laſt, after they had been governed by their own Kings 1132 yeares; that is to ſay, from Tarchon Priſcus their firſt King, An. M. 2550. to Tarquinius Ceſo their laſt King, A M. 3668.

The chief Towns of it in thoſe times were 1 Veii, and 2 Perufia, ſpoken of before. 3 Feſula, then of very great fame, now a poor village hard by Florence. 4 Agyllina, ſituate not far from the Lake of Thraſymene, which from hence was called Vadum Agyllinum. The cheif Town of the Tuſcans at the comming of Æneas into Italie, and the Seat Royall of Mezentius that noted Tyrant, ſo often mentioned by Virgil. Firſt built by the Pelaſgi, a Greek people, and by them thus named; afterwards by miſtake called Cære: by like miſtake as Peru, Jucatan, and others of the American Provinces got their preſent names, as ſhall there be ſhewn. For the Tuſcans, or the Romans as others ſay, demanding in their language of a Country fellow, the name of the place, was anſwered in his language, χαῖρε, that is to ſay, God ſave you, or God ſpeed you: which word they taking for the name of the Town, did ever after call it Cære. Memorable in old time for the Bathes adjoyning, from hence called Balnea Caretana; more for the preſervation of the Veſtal Fire, and the other holy things of Rome, when that Town was taken by the Galls. Rewarded hereupon with all the privileges of Rome, except right of Suffrage: from whence the Tables in which the Roman Cenſors uſed to inroll the names of thoſe whom they deprived of their Votes in Senate, or any other publick Councill, were called Cærites Tabulæ. 5 Phaleria, on the ſeaſide, the principall town of the Faliſci, of which there is ſome remainder extant in the village called Falaria. 6 Cluſium, the Seat-Royall of King Porſena, for ayding which againſt the Galls, the Romans drew upon themſelves the fury of that turbulent people. Piſa, Aretium, and ſuch others as are ſtill in being, we ſhall ſpeak of afterwards.

The Rivers and the ſoyl do remain as formerly, though the firſt altered in their names; the principall of which are, 1 Arnus, ſpoken of before in the generall ſurvey of Italie. 2 Sercius, by Ptolomie called Boaſtus, a River which by the excellency of its Carps and Trouts, makes ſome amends unto the people for its violent Land-floods. 3 Palia, as violent and dangerous as the other, but not ſo profitable, which falleth into Tiber near Orvietto. 4 Martha, by Ptolomie called Oſa. Here is alſo the Lake Volſinius, which is twenty four miles in compaſs; and that called antiently Sabatinus, but now Lago Braciani, from which water was conveighed to Rome. By reaſon of theſe and other Lakes, and the frequent overflowings of the Rivers, the Country in former times was full of bogs, which made the air unhealthy, and the wayes unpaſſable, it being in the Flats and Mariſhes of Hetruria, that Annibal was ſo turmoiled, loſing herein the greateſt part of his Elephants, and one of his eyes. But ſince thoſe times, partly by the induſtry of the people, and the great providence of the Princes, the Fens in moſt places are well drained, and the Bogs converted to firm land, whereby the air is rectified, and the waies made pleaſant: care being alſo taken by great banks and ramparts to keep the Rivers for the moſt part within their channels. So that the Country is now full of very ſpacious fields, and fruitfull vallies, ſwelled here and there with pleaſant mountains, little inferior in fertility to the richeſt vales; abundantly well ſtored with delicious wines, and plentifull in a word of all the bleſſings of nature, ſave that the parts about Florence are defective in Wheat, the want of which is ſupplied from the fields of Sienna, where there is plenty enough of it for themſelves and their neighbours, though no ſuch ſuperfluity as to ſpare any of it unto other Provinces.

But to return unto the ſtory, Tuſcanie being thus brought under the command of Rome, was made the ſecond of thoſe eleven Regions into which Italie was divided by Auguſtus Cæſar. In the diviſion of it made by Antonius, and in that of Conſtantine, it made with Umbria one of the ten Provinces which was immediately ſubject to the Prefect of the City of Rome. Afterwards in the declination of the Roman Empire it became a member of the Kingdom of Lombardy, then of the French, and finally of the German Empire: during which times it was governed by an Officer of truſt and power, whom I find ſometimes called the Marqueſs, ſometimes Duke of Tuſcanie, who had here more or leſs authoritie, as they could work on the neceſſities of their ſeverall Princes. Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards had been Duke of Tuſcanie, and ſo was Albericus in the time of the Berengarii, and Guido is called Marqueſs of it, under the reign of Henricus Auceps the German Emperour. Afterwards, as the Popes grew in power and greatneſs, ſo they made bold to intermeddle in the affairs of this Province; giving it one while to the Kings of Naples, another while to the Dukes of Anjou, making ſome challenge to that Kingdom. In which diſtractions the Florentines firſt bought their own libertie, of the Emperor Rodolfus Habſpurgenſis; and after purchaſed the Town and Territory of Cortona, of Ladiſlaus King of Naples; that of Arezzo for 40000 Florens of Duke Lewis of Anjou. After this time they husbanded their affairs ſo well, that they became one of the moſt conſiderable Eſtates in Italie; and at the laſt by taking in Piſa and Sienna, they got the abſolute dominion of the beſt and largeſt part of Tuſcanie, which now is under the command of the great Duke, and may be branched moſt fitly into theſe four parts, that is to ſay, the Cities and Territories of 1 Florence, 2 Piſa, 3 Sienna, and 4 the Ilands ſituate in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian ſeas.

1. And firſt the Territory or Eſtate of Florence, taketh up the North part of this great Duke-

dom, having the Apennine on the North, and the Eſtates of Piſa and Sienna on the South. So called from the City of FLORENCE, ſituate nigh unto the conflux of the Rivers Arnus and Chianus, the former paſſing thorough the middeſt of the City, which is joyned together with four Bridges of ſtone; environed with mountains, which do ſerve as a Fortreſs againſt Invaſions, and for defence againſt the Winds; firſt built by L. Sylla that bloody Dictator; afterwards made a Colony by the Triumviri, Auguſtus, Antony, and Lepidus; from the flouriſhing ſituation of it being called Florentia. The Lombards upon ſome diſpleaſure razed it to the ground; but it was re-built by Charlemagne, to whom and whoſe Succeſſors they continued faithfull, as long as they had any thing to do with the ſtate of Italie; but after, they betook themſelves to the Papall faction, and were as rigid Guelfes as any. On this foundation it now ſtands, and is indeed a very fair and flouriſhing City, agreeable unto the name; the ſtreets being very ſtrait and large, paved with ſquare ſtone, and alwaies kept exceeding clean: the ordinary buildings beautifull above any in Italie, beſides many fair and ſtately Palaces adorned with Statua's. The principall of the Palaces is that of the Great Duke, taking up the room of 50 houſes which were wont to ſtand there; capable of a great retinue; and for the largeneſs of the building, the Architecture and Ornaments of it, as alſo for the Gardens, Fountains, Statues, and other Acceſſaries, equalling, if not ſurpaſſing the goodlieſt Palaces in all Europe. The like may alſo be affirmed of the Cathedrall, highly commended for the excellency of the Workmanſhip, but that eſpecially of the Steeple, which both for ſtuff and ſtructure is beyond compare. This Church is called commonly the Annunciata, and worthily accounted one of the chief Ornaments of Florence; in which City there are beſides, ſo many excellent peeces and curious rarities, that the Arch-Duke Charles was wont to ſay, that it was a Citie not to be ſeen but on Holy-daies. As for the Inhabitants of this City and the parts adjoyning, they are a very induſtrious people, and generally ſaid to be of a very great wit, ſubtile heads, and of much inſight into buſineſs: and yet Count Imbalt, a French Gentleman, was uſed to ſay, Non ſapeve dove conſiſteſſe l'ingegne tanto celebrate di Fiorentini, that he could never find where that great Wit of the Florentines lay. Guicciardine the Hiſtorian, was without doubt a notable Stateſ-man; and Machiavel, once the Recorder of this City, a man of as ſhrewd a brain as any; and ſo were the two Coſmo's of the houſe of the Medices; but whether all the Florentines, or the major part of them, be of ſuch extraordinary wits as they ſay they are, I am not very well reſolved of; nor is it much materiall to enquire into it. Florence.

The other Cities and chief places of this firſt diviſion, are 1 Feſula, once a Roman Colony, now a ſmall village called Fieſoli, ſituate in the ſtreights of the Apennine, not far from Florence, which is thought to have riſen chiefly from the ruins of it: moſt memorable for the great defeat here given by Stilico to the great Army of the Gothes conducted into Italie under Rhadagaſius. 2 Pizoria, or Piſtoia, ſeated on the foot of the Apennine, but ruinated with its own diſtentions; of which the greateſt and moſt laſting, were thoſe betwixt the Neri and Bianchi (or the black men and the white) which divided Florence; and that between the Guelfs and Gibellines which here took begiuning, and for a long time exerciſed the peace of Chriſtendom. This laſt began (as ſome ſay) upon the quarrell of two Brothers, of which the one named Guelfo ſtood for the Pope, the other named Gibellino declared for the Emperor. The quarrell ſpreading into parties, called the Guelfs and the Gibellines, became at laſt the wonder and amazement of all good people: inſomuch as ſome are of opinion, that the fiction of the Elfs and Goblins, wherewith we uſe to fright young children, was derived from hence. As for the City it ſelf, it is ſeated in a fair and goodly plain, compaſſed with mountains; and the ſtreets paved with free-ſtone, and the Church (which is Cathedrall) with Marble; it was firſt walled by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, when he was Governour of this Province; but for all that was forced to ſubmit it ſelf to the power of the Florentine, by whom it was ſubdued An° 1150. when as yet themſelves were not the abſolute maſters of their own City. 3 Volterra built among the mountains, the Birth-place of Linus, ſucceſſor to St. Peter in the See of Rome. It ſtandeth on the top of an hill, the walls thereof made of ſquare ſtone about ſix foot long, which are very neatly joyned together without any Mortar: and in thoſe Walls five Gates for entrance, each Gate having neer unto it a very fair Fonntain. The Marble Statues, and ſome Epitaphes in Tuſcan Letters, do evidently declare it to be very antient. In this Town was born Rodolphus Volterranus, one of the greateſt Reſtorers of Learning in the Weſt parts of the World. 4 Monte Pulciano, in Latin called Mons Politianus, a well-fortified Citie, and the birth-place of Angelus Politianus, the Reviver of the Latin or Roman Elegancies 5 Crato, another ſtrong peece of this part alſo, neighboured by a retiring-place of the Great Dukes, called Pratoline, a right pleaſant Village, beautified with a magnificent Palace, in which beſides many other ſingularities are moſt curious Water-works, equall, if not ſuperiour unto thoſe of Tivoli. 6 Cortona, an antient City of the Tuſcans, ſituate at the foot of the Apennine, ſold to the Florentines by Ladiſlaus King of Naples. 7 Aretium or Arezzo, one of the antient Cities of the Tuſcans alſo, and ſold to the Florentines as the other was; this being bought for 40000 Florins of Lewis of Anjou, then the Popes Vicegerent in this Country. 8 Borgo San Sepulcro, ſeated on the Tiber, near, or within the Spoletan Dukedom, added to this Signeurie by Coſmo de Medices the firſt of that name, by whom bought of Pope Eugenius the fourth for the ſum of 25000 Florins, rins, and layd unto the Patrimony of this Commonwealth, to which it serveth for a Bulwark on that side of this Country.

To this Division also we may best refer the small, but rich Signeurie of Massa, situate on the borders of the state of Genoa. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Massa it self, which gives the title of a Marques to the Lord hereof, of the family of the Malespines. 2 Carara, three miles off from Massa, and more neer the Sea, and of great fame for its Quarries of whitest Marble (much used in the time of the Roman greatness) and a breed of the fairest Women in Italie. The Prince hereof a Feudatary to the Duke of Florence, but amongst his own vassals absolute enough.

2 The second member of this estate is the City and Territory of PISA, lying towards the Sea, betwixt the Genoese on the West, and the Territory of Sienna on the East. The City first built by the Pisa, a people of Elis in Greece, who following old Nestor from Troy, were by the violence of the Wind driven upon this coast; and here upon the River Arno, where it meeteth with Serchius, did erect this Town. In the distractions of the Empire it stood up for it self, and grew so potent, that at one time they waged war both with the Venetians and Genoese. They were once Masters of Sardinia, Corsica, and the Baleares; but finally being discomfited by the Genoese neer the Isle of Giglio, by whom it was made free, An° 1369, they submitted themselves to the protection of Charles the fourth. Not long after, it was taken by John Galeaze the first Duke of Millain, An° 1404, by John Maria his sonne and successor sold unto the Florentines; from whose command they freed themselves by a popular violence. The Florentines upon this besieged them, and brought them to such extremity of hunger, that they were ready to be starved. Yet such was the humanity of the Besiegers, that when they entred the Town every man carryed victuals in his hand instead of weapons, to beget, as it were, new life in that rebellious people. This victory the Florentines got by the valor and conduct of Sir John Hawkwood, whom the Italians call Giovanni di Aguto; who being first a Taylor in Essex, afterwards served Edward the third in his French Wars, where he was knighted. And when upon the peace concluded after the battell of Poictiers, he wanted employment, he entered with his Regiment into Italie, and put himself into the pay of the Florentines, then in war with this City: who for his valor have honoured him with a fair Tomb and Monument. When Charles the 8th went into Italie, the Pisans again revolted, and were, not without much labour and great charges, reduced to their former obedience. As for the City it self, it is almost as big as Florence, this being five miles in compass, and that but six; but very short of it in the numbers of people, Florence being sayd to contain 90000 souls, Pisa not a third part of that proportion; yet it hath very good advantages to make it populous, that is to say, the publick Arsenal for Shipping, an University for Students, and the See of an Archbishop: the Cathedrall Church of which is a very beautifull peece of work, the Gates thereof are brass, and the Steepl of it of such artificiall and exquisite building, that it sheweth as if it were always falling. But the unwholsomness of the Air over-ballanceth all these fair advantages.

The next place of importance within the Territory of this City is the Town and Haven of Ligorn (Livornum it is called in Latin) seated upon the influx of the River Arno; well fortified against the Genoese, by whom the Works were once slighted, An° 1297. Upon a reconciliation made between those States, it returned again to its old Masters. And when the Pisans were sold over to the Florentines by the Duke of Millain, Thomas Fregosa Duke of Genoa, seized upon this place, and sold it also to the same Chapmen for 120000 Ducats. By the care of Duke Cosmo and his two sonnes it is much improved in strength and beautie, and so well fortified, that it is thought to be one of the strongest Cities in Christendom; Cities I say, and not Castles, the Castles of Stockholm in Sweden, and that of Millain being held to be the strongest Forts in the World. After this comes in 3 Petra Sancta, on the West side of the Arnus, a place of great consequence and strength; one of the best peeces of the Pisans when a Free-estate, against their old enemies the Genoese, towards whom it standeth. 4 Terraciola, Eastward of Ligorn, neighboured with a capacious Bay on the Mediterranean. 5 Castellona, an Episcopall See, and 6 Porto Berrato, bordering on the Signeury of Siena, now nothing but a station for ships (nor much used for that) but heretofore beautified with one of the best Cities of the Tuscans, called Populonia.

3 The third Member of this Dukedom is the City and Territory of SIENA, lying betwixt the Estate of Pisa, and the land of the Church. The City sayd to be built by Bremus, who did there put his old sickly men to sojourn, and called it Sena: the Birth-place of Æneas Sylvius, called afterwards Pope Pius the second; of Francis Picolomini, after Pope Pius the third; and of Sixtus (hence surnamed) Senensis, the greatest Scholar of the three, if not of all the age he lived in. By Antonine in his Itinerarium called Sena Julia, to difference it perhaps from another of that name near the Adriatick, called Sena Gallica. Built neer the Spring or Fountain of the River Arbia, now better known by the name of Treisa; but built (which makes the situation of it exceeding pleasant) upon an high hill, on which there is a Castle that commands the Town: the streets thereof even and very plain, centring in a large and spacious Market-place; near to which is a very fair Palace used for a Senate-house in the Free-Commonwealth: and on the South side near the walls, the Cathedrall Church, reputed to be one of the fairest in Italie, having only one door into it, to which there is an ascent by fair Marble stairs, of which the Pavement is made alſo. Having long held the Gibelline or Imperiall faction, it bought its liberty at an eaſie rate of the Emperour Rodolphus the firſt. After it fell into the hands of the Spaniards, then of the French, and finally was made over to Coſmo de Medices Duke of Florence, by the King of Spain, An° 1558, in conſideration of the great charge he had been at to beat out the French, and other ſervices expected for the time to come. Coſmo being thus inveſted in it, deprived the people of their Arms, altered the Government, and was the firſt Prince who had the abſolute command of it, after the conſtitution of their Commonwealth: neither the French nor Spaniards ruling here as Lords, but onely as called in by their ſeverall factions, and ſuffered to have Garriſons in it of their own people, by the agreement of their party. And to ſay truth, it ſtood with good reaſon of State, that the Florentine ſhould uſe all his wit to get this City; and having got it, uſe all meanes to aſſure it to him. For beſides that great acceſſion which it made unto his Eſtate; by adding thereunto the yearly income of a hundred and fifty thouſand Ducats, above all expences; it was alſo to be carefully looked on as a Rivall which had long time ſtood in competition with it, for the ſoveraign command of Tuſcanie. Beſides, there had been mighty animoſities between the Cities, the Florentine being always of the Guelfes, and the Siennoys of the Gibelline faction. A faction at laſt ſo generally diſtated in all Italie, and ſo abhominable to the Popes, that on an Aſh-wedneſday when the Pope being to caſt Aſhes on the heads of the Cardinals, was to have ſayd, Memento O homo quod cinis es, & in cinerem converteris; according to the uſage of the Church of Rome; ſeeing a Gibelline amongſt them, he forgot himſelf, and ſayd thus unto him, Memento O homo quod Gibellinus es, & cum Gibellinis morieris. Of chief note next unto Sienna, are 1 Montalcino (Mons Alcinus in Latin) a place of great ſtrength both by induſtry and ſituation. 2 Caſtro-Cartaldo, ſeated upon a lofty Hill, moſt memorable for the Birth and Sepulchre of John Boccace, one of the beſt wits of his time, as his Decameron declareth: buried here with a ſorry and unworthy Epitaph, not worth the labour of tranſcribing. 3 Soana, an Epiſcopall City; as alſo are 4 Pienza, 5 Croſetto, and 6 Chinſi; this laſt the Cluſium of the antient Tuſcans, ſpoken of before. Beſides theſe there are 26 walled Towns within this Signeury, but of no great obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs.

The Tuſcan Ilands.

There belonged alſo unto this Commonwealth when a State diſtinct, ſome Ports and Peeces on the Sea, which when it was conſigned over to the Duke of Florence, were retained by the Spaniard; partly thereby to keep thoſe Princes at his devotion; but principally that by holding ſo many places of importance in his own hands, he might carry at his Girdle the Keys of Italie, and become Lord Paramont of thoſe Seas. Of thoſe the principall, if not all, 1 Piombino, in Latin called Plumbinum from ſome Mines of Lead, adorned with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a plentifull Territorie: the Caſtle in the hands of the Spaniard, but the Town and Territory in poſſeſſion of a Lord of its own, who receives the whole rents of the Eſtate. 2 Port Telamon, Eaſtward of Piombino, ſo called of old from Telamon an adjoyning Promontorie, and known by this name in Plutarch in the life of Marius. 3 Orbitello, drawing more towards the Eaſt, the Coſſa of the antient Writers. 4 Monte Argentorati, a Promontorie or Peninſula, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea, over againſt Orbitello; by the Latines called Mons Argentarius; and thought by ſome, who have obſerved the ſituation, ſtrength, and extent thereof, to be the fitteſt place for a Royall City to be built in, to command thoſe Seas. 5 Port Hercule, which ſtill retains its antient name, imparted to it from ſome Temple of Hercules which was founded in it; ſituate neer the Eaſtern Iſthmus of the ſaid Peninſula. 6 Porto-Longone, a peece of ſpeciall conſequence for command of the Mediterranean; and for that cauſe of late times gotten by the French (then aiming at the conqueſt of Naples) but again recovered by the Spaniard, who doth now poſſeſs it.

The fourth and laſt member of this Eſtate are the Ilands in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas. The principall whereof is 1 Ilva, not above ten miles from Plombino; called antiently Æthalia, by the vulgar Elba. Plinie affirmed it to contain in compaſs a hundred miles, but it proves upon a juſt ameaſurement to be but fifty, not very well furniſhed with Corn, and leſs with fruits; but plentifull in Mines of Iron, as formerly for Steel and Copper; for which, eſpecially for Steel, of great eſteem in the time of Virgil, as appeareth by that paſſage in the 10th of the Æneids, where it is called

For unexhauſted Mines of Steel.

But for all that, the Steel now failing, the want thereof is ſupplyed by Iron, which Iron is of ſo ſtrange a nature, that every 25 years it renueth again upon the Mines, and will by no means melt whilſt it is in the Iland, but muſt be carried ſomewhere elſe. It affordeth alſo Sulphur, Allom, Tin, Lead, Marble good plenty, and in ſome parts Loadſtone alſo. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Plombino, who not being able to defend it againſt the Turks, if they ſhould at any time invade it, reſigned it, by the Counſell of Charles the fift, unto Coſmo di Medices the Duke of Florence; reſerving to themſelves the Revenues of it, and the Government of all the Towns and Villages therein, except thoſe that were thought fit for Fortification. It hath a very fair Tuscan Ilands.

Haven called Porto Ferrario, capable to receive any great Fleet that should come thither; and therefore if the Turks or Moores had been Masters of it, they might easily have commanded all the coasts adjoyuing, as well in Provence, as Italie. For the defence hereof there are two strong Castles, situate on two little Mountains, on each side one; so fortified by Art and Nature, that they are held to be impregnable; having also good store of Cannon, and all sorts of Warlike Ammunition. And not far off stands a strong Town built by the same Duke Cosmo, and by him called Cosmopolis; well fortified, and made the seat of his new Order of St. Stephen, of which more hereafter.

The second Iland of note is Giglio, called Iglium antiently, just opposite to Monte Argentorato, and having some 25 miles in compass; neerunto which the Genoese so discomfited the Pisans in a Fight at sea, that they were never able to recover their former puissance. 3 Capraria, not far from Ligorn, so called from its abundance of Goats; and for the same reason Ægilora, by the Greek Geographers; as 4 Gallinaria not far off took name from abundance of Hens. Of the rest nothing memorable, but that some of them do occur in the antient Writers: of which sort are Meloria, heretofore Lanellum, not far from Capraria. 2 Lanusi, formerly Artemisia, in which there is a very good Haven. 3 Gorgona. 4 Troia, and 5 the small Ilands which are called Formicæ. 6 To these we may adde also the Isle of Planasia, more memorable than the rest, for the banishment and death of Agrippa Posthumus, the Nephew of Augustus Cæsar by his daughter Julia, here murdered by the command of Tiberius to prevent all future competition to the State Imperiall; situate somewhat nearer unto Corsica than the rest of these Ilands.

As for the MEDICES, whose Posterity are now Dukes hereof, they were in the Free-state (as Machiavil informs us in his Florentine History) accounted in the chief rank of the Popular Nobility: those being such of the antient Nobles, as to be capable of the Magistracie, and publick Offices (then wholly shared among the Commons) had as it were degraded themselves, and became part of the Commonalty. About the year 1410, John de Medices (the first great raiser of this house) stoutly maintaining the Liberties of the people against the great ones, was by them so honoured and enriched, that he not only got a great party, but almost a Soveraignty in the City. To him succeeded his sonne Cosmo, one of the greatest Statesmen of those times, who did not only much reform the civill Government, but enlarged the Territory of the State by the addition of Casentino, Burgo St. Sepulchro, and some other peeces. Dying in the year 1464, he left the managery of the State to Peter de Medices his sonne, whose whole time was consumed in suppressing such Factions as had at home been raised against him; and at his death left all his power, and the great wealth which he had gotten (but with a greater measure of his Fathers vertues) to Lawrence and Julian his two sonnes. The people after his decease, either desirous of Novelties, as most people are, or fearing to be made hereditary to this powerfull Family, seemed to incline to one of the Soderini, a man of plausible deportment, and well beloved. But he judiciously considering, that new houses as they are easily honoured, so are they as soon abandoned by the fickle multitude, conferred all the dependances which were cast upon him, on these two young men of the Medices: as being descended from a Family which had long governed the Citie. Against these two, the Pazzi, a potent house in Florence, conspired, and at Mass they slew Julian; but Lorenzo escaped: the blows which were struck at him, being received by one of his servants, whom two days before he had delivered out of prison. For this fact the Pazzi were hanged at the Palace window, together with the Archbishop of Pisa, who had been of the conspiracie. To revenge the death of this Bishop, Pope Paul the 2d Excommunicated the Florentines; and Ferdinand King of Naples warred upon them. Lorenzo to divert this mischief, went in person to Naples; where he grew so much into the good liking of the King, that there was a perpetuall League made between them. After his death, An. 1492, his sonne Peter having very improvidently delivered Pisa and Ligorn, with other peeces, to the French King; was, together with his whole Family, banished. John di Medices the sonne of Lawrence, and Brother of Peter, being made Pope, by the name of Leo the 10th, restored again his Family; who not long after his death, were again exil'd. This disgrace Julio di Medices, sonne to the above-named Julian, and Pope of Rome, by the name of Clement the 7th, not enduring, procured Charles the fift to besiege it: which request was granted, and the City, after two years resistance, yeelded. The Emperour then gave it to Alexander Medices (Grand-child to Peter, by his sonne Lawrence) An. 1531: And he to restrain the insolencies of the people, built a strong Citadell in the Town. This Alexander was a Prince of good parts enough, had he not been too much addicted to Lust and Wantonness; which being observed by Lawrence de Medicis his own Cousen, he trained him to a secret place, under colour of bringing him to the bed of a beautifull Lady; and there basely murdered him. Which done, instead of calling the people to take Arms for recovery of their lost Liberty, as he first intended, he fearfully left the City, and fled towards Venice. So that before the people had notice of the Accident, the heads of the Medices consulted together, and sent for Cosmo di Medices dwelling in the Countrey with his Mother (and then about 18 years of age) to be their Prince: as being the next Heir-male which was left of the Family, according to the Entail (as our Lawyers call it) made by Charles the Emperor. This Cosmo proving an excellent Statesman, and a fortunate Commander, so swayed the affairs of Italie, that Philip the ſecond of Spain to be aſſured of his friendſhip gave him the Signeurie of Sienna out of which he had lately driven the French; and Pius the 4th had an intent to have crowned him King of Tuſcany. But Philip of Spain (though otherwiſe his ſpeciall friend) thwarted that intent, as loath to have in Italie any more Kings than himſelf. After in the year 1570, Pius the fifth crowned the ſaid Coſmo in the Court of Rome, with the title of Great Duke of Tuſcany, for him and his Heirs for ever. In the new Dukes Coronet he cauſed to be engraven theſe words, Pius quintus Pont. max. ob eximiam dilectionem, & religionis catholica zelum, præcipuumque juſtitiæ ſtudium donavit. Thus forward were theſe Popes to honour this family; but their ſucceſſors have been otherwiſe affected to it: For when one of Duke Coſmo's ſucceſſors did ſince intreat a ſucceeding Pope, that he might be created King of Tuſcany; the Pope not liking ſo Lordly a title, anſwered; that he was content, He ſhould be a King in Tuſcany, but not King of Tuſcany: A Scholar-like diſtinction, but not ſo ſatisfactory to the point propoſed.

The Princes of the houſe of Medices in the Free-eſtate.

1410 1 John di Medices, the firſt advancer of the Family to publick greatneſs.
1433 2 Coſmo di Medices, the ſonne of John, called the Father of the Commonwealth.
1464 3 Peter, the ſonne of Coſmo.
1472 4 Lawrence di Medices, ſonne of Peter, the great Advancer of Learning in Italie.
1492 5 Peter di Medices II. exiled upon the comming in of Charles the 8.
6 Lawrence di Medices II. ſonne of Peter, exiled together with his Father, made Duke of Urbin by Pope Leo the 10.

The Dukes of Florence, and Great Dukes of Tuſcanie.

1531 1 Alexander di Medices, the ſonne of Lawrence, the firſt Duke of Florence.
1537 2 Coſmo II. the next heir of Alexander, deſcended from Lawrence, a brother of the firſt Coſmo, the wiſeſt Stateſman of his time.
1574 3 Francis di Medices, ſonne of Coſmo the II. Father of Mary the French Queen.
1587 4 Ferdinand di Medices, the brother of Francis.
1609 5 Coſmo the III. ſonne of Ferdinand.
1621 6 Ferdinand II. ſonne of Coſmo di Medices, the twelf of this family, the ſixt Duke of Florence, and the firſt of Tuſcany.

The length of this Eſtate is 260 miles, the bredth in ſome places not much inferior, but growing narrower where it bordereth upon that of Genoa. In all which tract, the Great Duke hath but one conſiderable Port on the main land, which is that of Ligorn; ſo that his ſtrength in ſhipping is not very great; and yet might be greater than it is, if the Subjects did delight in Trafick, and not ſuffer their Commodities to be bought by Strangers (as generally they do in all this Country) and carryed thence in forein veſſels. For otherwiſe being an induſtrious people, and well trained in Manufactures; their power at Sea muſt needs be greater than it is; the Great Dukes Fleet conſiſting ordinarily of no more than twelve Gallies, two Gallions, and five Galliaſſes. And for his power by Land, he hath in readineſs ſixteen thouſand Foot of his own ſubjects, well trained and muſtered under experienced Commanders, to ſerve him upon all occaſions; and a hundred men at Arms, and 400 Light-horſmen, well payd, as well in times of Peace, as in time of War. And beſides theſe, he keeps ſo many Forts and Towns in continuall Garriſon, that his Eſtate is ſayd to be made of Iron.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Eſtate, is that of S. Stephen, inſtituted by Coſmo di Medices An. 1561. and dedicated to S. Stephen, becauſe upon the Feſtivall of Stephen, Pope and Martyr, being the 6. of Auguſt, he won the famous battell of Marciano. Pope Pius the fourth confirmed it the ſame yeer, and granted them all the privileges which they of Malta enjoy: conditioned that thoſe of this Order ſhould make a vow of Charity, and conjugall Chaſtity and Obedience. They are to be nobly born, and in lawfull Wedlock of the Romiſh Church, and without note of infamy. Their Robe is of white Chamlet, with a red Croſs on their left ſide, as well upon their Military Garments, as their wearing Cloaks: intended principally againſt the Turks and Moores, for which cauſe ſetled firſt at Piſa, being neer the Sea; but after at Coſmopolis in the Iſle of Ilva. The number of them is uncertain, the great Duke the Supreme Maſter of it. Other Orders are commonly ſimple, but this mixt, being partly religious, partly honourary.

What the Revenues of it were in the Free Eſtate, I am not able to determine. That they were very great is manifeſt, in that having in thoſe five yeers wherein they waged war againſt the Duke of Millain, ſpent three millions and an half of Florens, their Treaſurie was ſo far from being exhauſted, that the next yeer they beſieged and indangered the City of Luca. Since the altering of the Common-wealth into a Dukedom, and the addition of the Territory and City of Sienna, the Revenues of the Duke are conceived to be a million and an half of Ducats yearly. Of which 600000. Crowns are raiſed yearly out of the Dominion of the Citie of Florence;

Luca.

150000. more out of that of Siena; the customs arising out of the Port of Ligorn, amount yeerly to 130000. Ducats, the toll of Milstones onely unto 160000. that of Salt, Mines, and Iron, falls not short of that: in all, a million and 200000. Ducats. Then hath the Duke his stock going amongst the Bankers, and trades as much as any in the way of Merchandizing; whereas in other Countreys he loseth the privileges of a Nobleman, that betakes himself to Trade and Merchandize. He useth also to buy up almost all the Corn which is brought into the Countrey out of other parts, and sell it again at his own price; forbidding any to be sold till all his be vended. The rest is made up by Excize upon all Commodities, even unto very herbs and Sallads, which lies very heavy on the Subject, the poor especially: insomuch, that it was tartly said, and perhaps not untruly, Qui sub Medicis vivit, miserè vivit; applying an old Rule in a new sense.

The Arms are Or, five Torteaux Gules, two, two, and one, and one in chief Azure, charged with three Flower de Lyces of the first.

The State of LUCA.

IN the West part of Tuscany, betwixt the Estate of the Great Duke, and the Common-wealth of Genoa, lieth the City of LUCA, so called from Luca a King of the Tuscans, who is said to have built it: situate on the River Serchius, not far from the mountains of Luna, whence the Countrey is at this day called Lunagiana. It is about three miles in compass, and contains about 24000. Inhabitants, who generally are a courteous and modest people, men of good judgement, and discreet, and by their wisdoms have preserved themselves a free Common-wealth, notwithstanding the attempts of more powerfull Neighbours: and they are very industrious also, and well seen in Manufactures, especially in weaving silks and cloath of gold, which they taught the Florentines. The City seated in a plain, compassed with Mountains on all sides, except towards Pistoia: so strongly fortified by the help of Art and Nature, that this City, Zara in Dalmatia, Canea in the Isle of Candie, and the Town of Ligorn, were thought in former times (when the Art of Fortification was less known) to be the four strongest Towns in the Christian World. The streets thereof are narrow, but paved with broad free-stone, and most easie to walk on: the buildings very fair, built of free-stone also, and beautified with pleasant gardens. On the North-West stands a very strong Castle, neer which lieth the Cathedrall, stately paved with Marble, but very dark, as most of the Popish Churches, to give the better colour to the burning of Tapers in the day.

In this Town was the meeting of the three great Captains, Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus, so pernicious to the Roman Republick. For Pompey desirous to maintain his authority, Cæsar to get honour, and Crassus to increase his wealth, here united their Counsels: Pompey's authority to be upheld by Cæsar's Arms, and Crassus his riches; Cæsar's continuance in his Province to be maintained by Pompey's power, and Crassus his money; and Crassus his estate to be secured by Pompey's greatness, and Cæsars military reputation. This done, they made a partition of the Roman Provinces among themselves, assigning Gaule to Cæsar, Spain to Pompey, aod to Crassus Syria: which strong confederacy was the cause of that alteration which after followed in that State. For Crassus being slain not long after, Pompey and Cæsar wanting a third man to poize the ballance, fell first to discontents, then to Civill wars, which at last made Cæsar Lord of Rome. Upon which meeting, and the breach which succeeded afterwards, was grounded that so memorated speech of Cicero, that is to say, Utinam Pompeius cum Cæsare societatem aut nunquam iniisset, aut nunquam dirimisset.

But to return again to the Affairs of Luca, in the declining of the Empire, it became possessed by the Gothes, from them recovered by Narses with the rest of Italie. After this, it again followed the fortune of the Empire, till taken by Count Boniface, the Father of that notable Virago, the Countess Mathildis: who being deceased without issue, and the Emperors pretending to it as to an Escheat, the Citizens made a common purse, and bought their Liberty of the Emperor Rodolphus for 10000. Crowns. Some say the money was disbursed for them by a Cardinal. But notwithstanding this purchase, and their title by it, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria seized upon it again, under pretence of freeing it from the faction of Castruccio, who had made himself absolute Master of it. By a German Garrison there left, it was sold to the Genoese; and having passed through many hands, the Emperor Charles the fourth got it once again, of whom they once more purchased their desired Liberties for 25000 Florens of Gold, and to secure themselves thereof demolished the Castle built by Castruccio. But being not able to maintain it by their proper strength, they have put themselves under the protection of their potent Neighbors, changing their Patrons as conduced most to their preservation: and finding no security from Genoa, and as little from Florence, both which they severally tried, they put themselves at last into the protection of the Dukes of Millain, and in that right are patronized by the Kings of Spain. Genoa.

The Territories of this City extend in compass eighty miles, the chief Town next to Luca it self, being that of Luna, a Bishops See; all the rest ordinary Farms and Villages, but of a good air, and very well peopled: which yeeld a Revenue to the publick Treasury of 800co. Crowns per annum, and out of which the State is able to raise (if there be occasion) about 15000 Foot, and 3000 Horse. A great strength for so small a Signeury, but all too weak to save them from the Great Dukes clutches, if he did seriously attempt to force it, and would venture on the displeasure of the Catholick King: besides that it is thought, that he receives more profit thence in gifts and presents, by letting it stand as it is, than it would yeeld (considering the charge of keeping it) if it were his own. As for the Government thereof, the principall Magistrate is called the Gonfalonere, changeable every second moneth, assisted by a certain and determinate number of Citizens, whom they change every sixt moneth also; during which time they live together in the Palace, or Common-hall. Other inferiour Officers I insist not on. And for the Government of the Church, they have two Bishops only, which acknowledge the Arch-bishop of Florence for their Metropolitan.

The Common-wealth of GENOA.

DIrectly West of Tuscany, from which it is divided by the River Macra, lyeth the Countrey antiently called Liguria, now Riviere di Genoa, the coast of Genoa, because it lieth all along the Sea of Genoa, and by some Il Genovosate, from Genoa, the Metropolis of this Countrey and Commonwealth. A Common-wealth once of a larger reputation and authority, than it is at the present; commanding heretofore the Ilands of Corsica, Sardinia, and the Baleares in the Mediterranean, Lesbos and Chio, with some others in the Greekish Seas; the Town of Capha or Theodosia in the Taurican Chersones, and Pera, on the other side of Constantinople, and a good part of Tuscany.

It was also then so strong both in men and shipping, that they sent seven severall Armies to the wars of the Holy Land: and in the space of three days only armed once upon occasion of present service, eight and fifty Gallies, and eight Pamphyli (being vessells of one hundred and forty, or one hundred and sixty Oars apiece;) and at another time one hundred and sixty five Gallies at a sudden pinch. By the advantage of this strength they beat the Pisans out of Sardinia, Corsica, and the Baleares, compelling them to pay 135000. Crowns for their peace; they got a good share in the division of the Empire of Constantinople, when that City was taken by the Latines; and held a very strong hand over the Venetians. These last they had once in so great an exigence, having vanquished their Fleet at Sea, and taken the Iland of Chioggia, not far from Venice, that the Senate sent them a blank Charter, bidding them write down what conditions they pleased, which should be readily condescended to. But Peter Doria, Admirall of the Genoan Fleet, unseasonably proud of his advantage, would have the City of Venice wholly at his own dispossall. Whereupon the Venetians now made desperate, assault the secure Genoese, and took an hundred of their Boats and Gallies. After which they always had the worst, losing their Ilands in the Mediterranean to the Kings of Aragon; Capha and Pera, with their Ilands in the Greek Seas to the great Turk; most of their holds in Tuscany to the Florentines: their power at the last being so broke by the Venetians, that in the end they were not able to set out a Navy fit for any enterprize. But these misfortunes were occasioned principally by their own divisions, the City being miserably torn in pieces by continuall factions: first betwixt the Doris and Spinoli, on the one side, the Flisci and Grimaldi on the other, An. 1174. Secondly, of the Negri, and Mollani, against the Salvatici and Embriaci, An. 1289. Thirdly, between the Spinoli and Dorii themselves, An. 1336. And fourthly, between the Nobility and the Commons, An. 1339. Which Factions did so weaken them both at home and abroad, that having lost the greatest part of their Estate, they were fain to put themselves on the protection of their Neighbours to defend the rest; having now nothing left them but Liguria, and the Isle of Corsica.

1 LIGURIA hath on the East the River Varus, rising about the edge of Provence; on the West, the River Magra, by which parted from Tuscany; on the North, the Apennine hils; and on the South, the Ligurian or Tyrrhenian Seas. It is in length a hundred and forty miles, that is to say from the Port of Luna in the East, to that of Monaco in the West, which lyeth near to Provence; but the bredth not answerable to the length: and is divided generally into two parts or Provinces, the East and the West, both centring upon Genoa the principall City.

The old Ligurians were a stout and warlike Nation, light, and swift of body, well practised in laying Ambushes, and not discouraged by any overthrow, but forthwith ready to fight again: to which the nature of their Country served them very well, being rough, mountainous, and woody, and full of streight and dangerous passages; and in this tract few open Towns, but many wel-fortified Castles, so that without much labour they could not be taken neither besieged.

And

Liguria. And if at any time they were vanquiſhed in the open field, they had recourſe unto theſe Caſtles, and other Faſtneſſes hemmed round about with Woods and Mountains, in which they plaid their after-game, and tired out their Enemies and Invaders. The principall of their Tribes were the Decentis, Oxilii, Eubariades and Inganni; all at laſt vanquiſhed by the Romans, after the ſecond Punick war; but not without much labour and pains, by reaſon of the Woods, Mariſhes, and Mountains within and behind which they retired and ſaved themſelves: Inſomueh that it was held a matter of more difficulty to find than to conquer them; Aliquanto major erat labor invenire quam vincere, are the words of my Author. They did divers times after this, much moleſt the Romans, till at laſt Poſthumius ſo diſweaponed them, that he ſcarce left them inſtruments to plough the Earth. So in the end they grew obedient to their Maſters. In the diviſion of whoſe large Territories by Auguſtus Ceſar, Liguria was made one of the eleven Regions of Italie; as it was alſo one of the ſeventeen Provinces into which Italie was divided by the Emperor Conſtantine: Millaine at that time the Metropolis or Head-City of it. What kind of men they were in the breaking of the Weſtern Empire, may be known by their actions both by Sea and Land, ſpoken of before: now more addicted to Merchandize than war, but moſt of all to uſury. A vice which the Chriſtians learned of the Jews, and are now thought to equall, if not exceed their Teachers. It was the ſaying of a merry fellow, that in Chriſtendom there were neither Scholars enough, Gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough: And when anſwer was made, that of all theſe there was rather too great a plenty, than any ſcarcity; he replyed, that if there were Scholars enough, ſo many would not be double or treble beneficed; if Gentlemen enough, ſo many Peaſants would not be ranked among the Gentry; and if Jews enough, ſo many Chriſtians would not profeſs Uſurie. The women are very fair and comely, wearing for the moſt part their hair in treſſes, which they caſt over their backs: they wear no upper garments but of cloth, as being only allowed by the Laws; but their under-garments of the pureſt ſtuf. The women here are privileged above all in Italie, having free leave to talk with whom they will, and be courted by any that will, both privately and publickly. Which liberty it is likely they gained at ſuch time as the French were Maſters of this Eſtate, who do allow their wives ſuch exceſs of liberty, as no Italian would allow of in a common Curtezan. And though it cannot be affirmed that the women of the Countrey or the City it ſelf do abuſe this Liberty; yet the Italians being generally of a different humor, reckon them to be paſt all ſhame; as they eſteem the German Merchants, (who make little reckoning of their promiſes, if not bound by writing) to be men without faith. Of which, and other things concerning this Eſtate, they have made this Proverb, Montagne ſenza legni, &c. that is to ſay Mountains without wood, Seas without fiſh, men without faith, and women without ſhame.

The Country, as before is ſaid, is very mountainous in the in-lands, and ful of craggy rocks towards the Sea: ſo that by Sea and Land it is very ill travelling. But amidſt thoſe hils are vallies of as rich a vein as moſt others in Italie, abounding in Citrons, Limons, Olives, Oranges, and the like fruits; with ſuch variety of Flowers at all times of the yeer, that the Markets are ſeldom unfurniſhed of them in the moneth of December. It yeeldeth alſo great plenty of moſt pleaſant wines, which the Inhabitants call La Vermozza, and another which they call Le lagrime di Chriſto, or Lacryma Chriſti: this laſt ſo pleaſing to the taſt, that it is ſaid, a Dutchman taſting of it as he travelled in theſe parts, fetch't a great ſigh, and brake out into this expreſſion, How happy had it been with us, ſi Chriſtus lachrymatus eſſet in noſtris Regionibus, if CHRIST had ſhed ſome of his tears in their Country of Germany. Their greateſt want is that of Corn, and therewith do ſupply themſelves out of other places.

The principall Towns and Cities of it in the Eaſtern part, are 1. Sarezana, a ſtrong Fortreſs againſt the Florentines, and one of the beſt pieces of this Republick. 2. Pontremuli (Pons Remuli, as the Latines call it) of as great conſequence as that, but poſſeſſed by the Spaniard. 3. Lerigi, an Haven in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. 4. Seſtri, a reaſonable good place, remarkable for as white bread, and as pleaſant wine, as any in Italie. 5. Fino, an Haven or Port Town, not far from Genoa, antiently called Portus Delfinus. Few of the Towns in this part are of any greatneſs; but they are ſet ſo thick, and intermingled with ſo many goodly houſes both on the hills and the vallies, that for the ſpace of twenty miles, the whole Countrey ſeems to be one continuall building.

In the Weſt part the Towns of moſt importance are, 1. Monaco, of old called Monoecus, and Portus Herculis, beautified with a commodious Haven: belonging not long ſince to the Spaniard, who bought it for 100000. Crowns of its proper Owner; but of late gotten by the French under colour of a later Contract. 2. Ventamiglio, a good Town, and ſweetly ſeated. 3. Savona, taken by the Genoeſe, An. 1250. before which time it had a Prince of its own. Remarkable for the Interview betwixt Ferdinand the Catholick, and Lewis the 12th. of France, An. 1507. Who having been deadly enemies, upon the taking of the Realm of Naples from the French by the Spaniard, met at this town, and here moſt ſtrangely relied upon one another. Lewis firſt boording Ferdinands Gally; and Ferdinand for divers days feaſting with Lewis in this Town then in his poſſeſſion, as Protector of the Eſtate of Genoa. Which kind of Interviews (I note this only by the way) as they chance but ſeldom; ſo when they do, they prove for the moſt part dangerous unto one of the parties: great enmities not being eaſily forgot by perſons of a publick Intereſs. Nay, that notable Stateſman Philip de Comines utterly diſliketh all ſuch meettings of Princes, though in Amity and good correſpondence with one another; as many times producing effects quite contrary to their expectations. And this he proveth by the example of Lewis the 11. of France, and Henry of Caſtile; who meeting purpoſely An° 1463, to change ſome friendly words together, took ſuch diſlike at each others perſon and behaviour, that they never loved one another after it. The like example he bringeth of an interview betwixt Edward the fourth of England, and the ſame King Lewis; and betwixt Frederick the Emperor, and Charles Duke of Burgundy; with divers others. His reaſons I purpoſely omit, as not pertinent to my preſent undertaking, and make haſt again unto the Town, which is about a mile and an half in circuit, and hath many ſtately buildings in it. It was called antiently Sabate or Sabatia, and hath been under the command of divers Lords, being taken from the Genoeſe by the Viſconti, and the Sforzas, Dukes of Millain, from them by the French, and at laſt recovered again by thoſe of Genoa. Further note, that this one Town hath yeelded to the Church of Rome three Popes, viz. Gregory the 7th, Julio the 2d. and Sixtus the 4th, which is as much as Genoa it ſelf can brag of. 4 Nola, upon the Seaſide, a commodius Haven. 5 Finali, a goodly Port-Town alſo, and very well fortified, honoured of a long time with the title of a Marquiſate, one of the ſeven founded by the Emperor Otho (of which more hereafter) but taken from the laſt Marqueſs by the Count of Fuentes, then Governour of Millain for the King of Spain, and garriſoned immediately with 200 Spaniards; the poor Marqueſs being put off with an Annual penſion, An° 1602. 6 Mileſimo, a ſmall Town adjoyning, poſſeſſed upon the ſame right by the Spaniard alſo; who by theſe peeces hath a ſtrong command on the Trade of Genoa. 7 But the great Ornament of thoſe parts of Italie is the City of Genoa, firſt built, ſay ſome, by Janus the ſonne of Saturn; as others ſay, by Janus, Gegnus Priſcus, an Italian or Tuſcan King. But by whomſoever it was built, certain it is, that it was miſerably deſtroyed by Mago the Brother of Annibal, repaired by Lucretius Surius at the command of the Senate of Rome, for whoſe cauſe and quarrel it was ruined: once again ſpoyled and waſted by Rotaris a great Prince of the Lombards, An° 660 or thereabouts, but built more beautifull than before by Charles the Great. On his foundation it now ſtands, ſituate on the ſhore of the Ligurſtick or Ligurian Seas, to which, being partly built on the declivity of an hill full of ſtately Palaces, it giveth a moſt pleaſant and magnificent proſpect. It is in compaſs ſix miles, of an Orbicular form, fortified towards the Sea by Art, towards the Land by Art and Nature, there being but one way to come to it by land, and that over ſteep and craggy Rocks. The ſtreets are narrow, paved with Flint, and moſt of them on the ſides of the hill; which is the reaſon that they uſe Horſe-litters here inſteed of Coaches, and moſt of the better ſort are carried on mens ſhoulders in Sedans or Chairs; which from hence came hither into England. But that which they call La Strada Nueva, or the New ſtreet, reaching from the Weſt to North-Eaſt, is of a very fair bredth: each houſe thereof is built with ſuch Kingly magnificence, that it is thought to be the faireſt ſtreet in the World. In all the reſt, the buildings for the height of two ſtories are made of Marble, curiouſly wrought; but the Laws forbid Marble to be uſed any higher. The Haven of it is very fair and capacious, ſafe from the violence of Tempeſts, and well fortified: ſo that the Spaniards uſe to ſay, that were the Catholique King abſolute Lord of Marſeilles in Provence, and Genoa in Italie, he might command the whole World. After the reedifying of it by Charles the Great, the people here continued ſubject to his ſucceſſors, till the Berengarii, as Kings of Italie, made them free, An. 899. in which condition they remained till the year 1318, when being ſhrewdly weaken in their Eſtate they were fain to give themſelves to Pope John the 22; after to Robert King of Naples. But being ſoon weary of a forein Government, the people in a popular tumult made choice of one Simon Boccanegra, to be their Duke, An. 1339. which Government continued till the French were called in by the Guelfian Faction, in the reign of Charles the 7; under whom they continued thirteen years; and then expelling thence the French for their many inſolencies, they put themſelves under the protection of the Dukes of Millain, An. 1403. Long time they lived under the protection of thoſe Princes in great tranquillity, who never carryed towards them any rigorous hand, ſave that once D. Lodowick Sforza exacted of them a great maſs of money. But, as the tale goeth, his Agent being invited to the houſe of a Genoeſe, and walking in a Garden with him, was ſhewed an herb growing there, called Baſil; which ſtroaking gently, he ſmelt thence a moſt pleaſing ſavour, but a ſunfavory a ſmell when he ſtrained it hard. The Genoeſe hereupon inferred, Sir, if our Lord Duke Lodowick will gently ſtroak the hand of his puiſſance over this City, it will prove pliant to him by obedience; but may chance to prove rebellious if he do oppreſs it. But Lodowick being taken priſoner by King Lewis the 12, they firſt came under the command of the French, and then of the Spaniard, according as thoſe Nations had poſſeſſion of the State of Millain: and after many changes and alterations, obtained again their freedom of King Francis the firſt; which being not able to preſerve by their proper ſtrength, they finally put themſelves under the ſhelter of the Spaniard, who is now their Protector, and that not for nought; he being indebted to them, An. 1609. a Million and a half of Gold; that being the remainder of 18 Millions, cut off by the Popes authority; that ſo the King might be indebted to that See: for moſt of his Lands were formerly engaged to the Money-maſters of this City. The ſame courſe of non-payment, the King took with the reſt of his Creditors in Florence, Ausburg, and the reſt; inſomuch that it was commonly ſaid in Italie, that the King of Spain had made more ill faces upon the Exchange

Genoa.

Corſica. change in one day, than Michael Angelo the famous Painter, had ever made good in all his life. And thus you ſee this great City which commanded the Ocean, the Lady of ſo many Ilands, and a great Moderator of the Affairs of Italie, fain to put her ſelf into the protection of a forein Prince; and that too at the charge of a great deal of Treaſure; which he continually raiſeth from them in the way of Loan, of which he often proves but a ſorry Pay-maſter. And if the Wars he had with England did ſo drain their Purſes (for it was that War, and the War which he had in the Netherlands, that made him ſo indebted to the Banks of Genoa) no queſtion but the revolt of Catalogne, and the laſting Wars made againſt him by the French, in ſo many places, have plunged him in as deep as ever. Which notwithſtanding, this people do ſo thrive under his protection, and draw ſo great commodity from their Trade with Spain, that it is thought their private men were never richer, the publick Treaſurie never fuller, than it is at the preſent.

CORSICA is an Iland in the Liguſtick or Ligurian Sea, oppoſite to the City of Genoa, from whence it is diſtant about ſixty miles, and lying juſt North of the Iſle of Sardinia, from which it is diſtant ſeven miles. It comprehends in length an hundred and twenty miles, ſeventy in bredth, and three hundred twenty five in circuit; and lyeth under the fift Climate, the longeſt day being almoſt fifteen hours.

The people are ſtubborn, poor, unlearned; ſuppoſed to be more cruell than other Nations, and ſo affirmed to be by Cæſar in his Book of Commentaries; the Progeny, as ſome ſay, of the 52 daughters of Theſpius, who being all got with child in one night by Hercules, were by their Father put to the mercy of the Sea, by which they were brought unto this Iland, after peopled by them. From one of theſe ſonnes named Cyrnus, the Iland had the name of Cyrnos, by which it oftentimes occurreth in ſome old Greek Writers. This is the conceit of Fabius Pictor, one of Annius his Authors. And that of Euſtathius, a far more credible Writer is not much unlike, who will have it called Corſica from a woman ſo named dwelling in the coaſt of Liguria, who following her Bull hither was the firſt that diſcovered it. But theſe Orignalls I look on, the firſt eſpecially, as the worſt kind of Romances: the name of Cyrnos being more like to be derived from the Punick Keranoth, which ſignifies a horn or corner, by reaſon of the many Promontories with which it ſhoots into the Sea. Corſica inſula multis Promontoriis anguloſa eſt, as it is in Iſidore, Lib. 14. cap. 6. And for the name of Corſica, I ſhould derive it rather from the Corſi (by which name the inhabitants hereof are called in moſt Latin Writers) one of the two Nations of moſt note in the neighbouring Iland of Sardinia. Celeberrimi in ea populorum Balari & Corſi, as we find in Pline. Which Corſi, or ſome of them, being overborn by ſome new Invaders (which the Iland of Sardinia was ſeldom free of) were fain to ſhift their ſeat, and came over hither.

This Countrey yeeldeth excellent Dogs for game, good Horſes, fierce Maſtifs; and a beaſt called Mufoli, not found in Europe, excepting in this Iland, and Sardinia only, but there called Mufrones, or Muſriones (for I conceive they are the ſame under divers names) ſayd to be horned like Rams, and skinned like Stags; which skin is of ſuch an incredible hardneſs, that the Beaſt being caſt headlong againſt a Rock receives no hurt, but nimbly flyes from his Enemy to his den.

The ſoyl by reaſon of the mountains (which every where are too thick and barren in it) is not very fruitfull, producing Corn in leſs plenty, but the beſt Wines, and ſuch as the old Romans well reliſhed in good meaſure. It produceth alſo Oyl, Figs, Raiſons, and Honey: the firſt three in a mediocrity of goodneſs, the laſt ſomewhat bitter, and by many deemed unwholſome. It aboundeth alſo with Allom, Box-tree, Iron-mines; and the tree called Taxus, whoſe poyſonous Berries though in taſt pleaſing, are much fed on by Bees; and therfore thought to be the cauſe of the bitterneſs of the Honey. In ſome few places where the Rivers have their currents, eſpecially towards Liguria, it recompenſeth, by its fertility in bearing all manner of grain, the barrenneſs of the mountains. Which mountains cutting thorough the midſt of it, divide the whole Iland into Ciſmontanum, being that towards Genoa; and Tranſmontanum, lying towards Sardinia; yet ſo that the people on each ſide call themſelves the Ciſmontanes, and the other the Tramontane. Both of them ſpeak a corrupt Italian, in which there is not a little mixture of French and Spaniſh.

For Rivers there are none of note, the principall of thoſe which the Iland yeelds, being called Gelo and Travignano. And as for Cityes, ſome of the Antients reckoned 33, which Strabo doth conceive to be Caſtles only; there being but four Towns or Cities in it in his time: of which four, two were Roman Colonies, the one planted by Marius, called Mariana; the other by L. Sylla, in the Town called Aleria, a place of ſome Antiquity before that time, and at this day a Biſhops See. But now the place of moſt importance, is the Town of Baſtia, ſeated in the North-Eaſt part of the Iland, oppoſite almoſt unto Aleria, with a commodious Haven to it, and a ſtrong Garriſon to defend it, as being the ordinary ſeat of the Governour ſent hither from Genoa, and of the Biſhop of Aleria, who makes there his reſidence. 2 Ajazze, a reaſonable ſtrong Town, and a Biſhops See; and ſo is alſo 3 Nebbio, called Cherſonum by Ptolomie. Then there is 4 Porto Urechio, built not long ſince in the place of an old decayed Haven, and peopled by a Colony ſent from Genoa. 5 S. Florence, a Port-town in the Northern part, in the middeſt betwixt Nebbio and Mariana; and 6 S. Bonface, called by Ptolomie Portus Syracuſanus, juſt oppoſite unto it in the South corner of the Isle; both of them places of good safety, and capable of the greatest vessels that frequent those Seas. Genoa.

Who were the first Inhabitants is not easily known. That the Phœnicians or Tyrians had some footing here, is manifest by that of Calimachus an old Greek Poet, who calleth it Φοινικα Κύρνον, the Phœnician Cyrnus; and by that of Diodorus Siculus, affirming that the Carthaginians and Tyrrheni (which questionless he mistook for Tyrii) cast the Phocenses out of this Iland. But whether these Phocenses did first inhabit it, or onely had a Colony in some part thereof, is not demonstrable from those Authors. The Carthaginians after this made a conquest of it, and held it till the time of the first Punick War, when they were driven thence by the valour of Cornelius Scipio. Yet was it not totally subdued, nor brought into the form of a Roman Province till some time after, when it was fully conquered by C. Papyrius, A.V.C. 541. This Iland and Sardinia at the first being joyned together, and governed by one Prætor onely, but afterwards made two distinct Provinces, immediately subject to the Prefect of the City of Rome, and consequently members of the Roman Patriarchate. In the falling of the Roman Empire it became a prey unto the Vandals, who used to send their condemned persons out of Africk hither, to fell Timber for shipping; the Countrey even till then being very much over-grown with Woods. Afterwards with the rest of the Ilands of the Mediterranean, it was under the power of the Saracens, against whom Ademar the Count or Governour of Genoa armed a Fleet of Gallies, and vanquished them in a fight at Sea, but lost his life in the action; which notwithstanding the Genoese followed their good fortune, seised on the Iland, and carried thence 13 of the Enemies Ships. The Pisans after this got possession of it, but being vanquished by the Genoese in the fight near Giglio (before mentioned) they were fain to leave it to the Conquerors. Since that it hath alwaies followed the fortune of Genoa, save that it remained somewhat longer than that City did in the hand of the French, who in the year 1554, seized on it by the ayd of the Turks, whom (to the great dishonour of Christianity) they entertained in their Wars against Charles the fift, but in the end restored it to the Commonwealth, upon the peace made betwixt France and Spain, An° 1559. And for securing of this Iland to the State of Genoa, they fell upon this handsome project; imploying none but naturall Genoese to serve in the Garrisons of the Iland, the better to keep under this untractable people; and filling all their Garrisons upon the Continent with naturall Corsicans, whereby the Iland is unfurnished of its ablest men, who also serve for hostages of the publick Faith.

Having thus took a brief view of the severall parts and members of this Common-wealth, let us next look upon the whole, as to the Government, Forces, and Revenue of it. First for the Government, the principall of their Magistrates hath the name of Duke; as tiouler as the Duke of Venice, but of less esteem: that Duke continuing in his Office for term of life, but this being alterable and removed at the two years end. So that he may be called most properly the Mayore of Genoa. For those two years he dwels in the publick Palace, an hath 500 Germans for the guard of his person; in nothing like a Prince but that: and for that time, he alone hath the power of propounding any thing to the Senate, which carrieth some resemblance of a Negative voice. His time expired, he returns unto his house as a private person, but so that during life he hath the office of a Procurator in the Commonwealth. To him there are assistant eight principall Officers, who sit upon the same form with him, and continue in their office for two years also; which eight, together with the Duke, are called the Signeurie: but he and they, in matters of most weight and moment subordinate to the Generall Counsell, consisting of 400 persons, all of them Gentlemen of the Citie, who with the nine before remembered do constitute the body of the Commonwealth. Under this form they have continued, ever since by the power and goodness of Andreas Doria (who might have made himself their Prince) they were discharged of their subjection to the French, An. 1528, never in danger of relapsing to their former servitude, but in the treasonable practice of the Flischi, a remarkable Family of the City, who hoping to possess themselves of the Principalitie under protection of the French, had so laid their plot, that Augustine di Flischi, who was designed to be their Duke, had in the night time seised on the Navy, and slain John Dunia who had the command thereof: but leaping from one Gallie to another to make sure of all, stumbled and fell into the sea; where he and his ambitious treasons were both drowned together.

As for their Forces, there are within the Signeurie 10000 men ready to arm at any time, as they see occasion; 25 Gallies alwayes ready in the publick Arsenall, and four continually at Sea for defence of their Trading. Sufficient strength to save them from a petit force, though not to guard them from the power of a strong Invader. But the chief strength which they rely on is the King of Spain; whose protection though it costs them dear, is worth their money; and they have prospered so well by it, that notwithstanding all the losses which they have sustained, it is supposed that the Revenue of the Common-wealth (besides the Treasury of S. George, which is very rich, and managed as a distinct body from the publick, by its own Officers) amounteth to no less than 430000 Crowns per An.

As for the Treasurie of S. George, though it contain no part of the publick Patrimony, but be governed by its own Officers, as a State distinct: yet is it of such ready use, so able at all times to furnish the Republick with vast sums of money, that the security and preservation of this Commonwealth depends much upon it. The Institution and Administration whereof, together with with the benefit which from hence redoundeth unto this Eſtate, I cannot better repreſent to the Readers view, than in the words of Machiavel the greateſt Politick of his times; who in his Hiſtory of Florence hath expreſſed it thus. "Poſt diuturnum illud bellum quod Genoenſes mul-

"tis ab hinc annis cum Venetis geſſere, &c. After that tedious war between the Genoeſe and Vene-

"moneys which they had taken up of their private Citizens in purſuit thereof, they thought
"it beſt to aſſign their ordinary Taxes over to them, that ſo in tract of time the whole debt
"might be ſatisfied; and for that end allotted them a Common-hall, there to deliberate and "determine of their affairs. Theſe men thus made the Maſters of the publick Taxes, elect
"among themſelves a Common-Counſell of an Hundred; and over them eight Officers of "eſpeciall power to order and direct the reſt, and to diſpoſe of the Intrado: which Corporati-

"wanting more moneys was glad to have recourſe unto S. George; who growing wealthy by
"the orderly managing of his ſtock, was beſt able to relieve them in their neceſſities: and as "before they aſſigned their Taxes over to him, ſo now, ditionem ſuam oppignorabant, they Mort-

"this Corporation became poſſeſſed at laſt of almoſt all the Towns and Territories of the Com-

"ly governed, that many times inclining to Tyranny; this never changing Officers, or form "of Government, that ſubject to the proud and ambitious luſts of each Uſurper, whether "Domeſticall or Forein. Inſomuch that when the two potent Families of the Fregoſi and Ador-

"in caſe S. George ſhould in the end become poſſeſſed of the remainder of the Patrimony and "Eſtate thereof, as it is poſſible it may, the State of Genoa might not alone be equalled with "that of Venice, but preferred before it. So far, and to this purpoſe, that great Maſter of State-craft; a man of leſs impiety, and more regular life, than ſome of thoſe who have tra-duced him for an Atheiſt.

Here are within this Common-wealth,

THE ESTATES OF LOMBARDY.

LOMBARDY is bounded on the Eaſt with Romandiola, and the Eſtate or Territory of Ferrara; on the Weſt, with that part of the Alpes which divide Italie from France; on the North (reckoning Marca Trevigiana within the bounds hereof) with that part of the Alpes which lyeth towards Germany; and on the South, with the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa.

It was called antiently Gallia Ciſalpina, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more anon, and took this new name from the Lombards, or Longobardi, a people of Germany (of whom we have already ſpoken, but ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Hungarie;) who coming out of Pannonia poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of Italie, but left their name to this Tract only. A tract of ground of which it may be truly ſaid, that as Italie is the garden of Europe, ſo Lombardie is the garden of Italie, or the faireſt flower in all that garden. A countrey of ſo rich a mixture, that ſuch another peece of ground for beautifull Cities, goodly Rivers, for fields and paſtures ſhaded with ſuch excellent fruits, for plenty of fowl, fiſh, corn, wine, cannot be found again in our Weſtern World. So that it is no wonder that the two great Kings of France and Spain, have ſtrived ſo eagerly and with ſuch effuſion of Chriſtian blood for the Duchie of Millain, a part only (though the richeſt part) of this goodly Country, and but a ſpot of earth, compared to their own Dominions.

Antiently it was of more extent than now it is, containing beſides the principalities hereafter mentioned, the Provinces of Romandiola, and Trevigiana; even all, which in the infancy and growth growth of the Roman Empire, had the name of Gallia Ciſalpina. It was called Gallia from the Galls, who being drawn into Italie by the ſweet taſt of their wines, ſubdued the Natives, and poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Countrey from the Apennine to the Adriatick, and from the Alpes to the River of Rubicon, on the North-East, and the River of Arnus on the South-East. This happened in the Reign of Bellovaſus King of the Celtæ, and of Tarquinius Priſcus, King of Rome. Ciſalpina it was called becauſe it lay on that ſide of the Alpes which was next to Rome, to difference it from Gallia on the further ſide, which had the name of Tranſalpina. It had the name alſo of Gallia togata, becauſe when civilized they applied themſelves to the Roman habit; the other being called Braccata, becauſe they kept themſelves to their former Trouzes, which by the Latines were termed Braccæ. Theſe Ciſalpines were they who ſacked Rome under the conduct of Brennus: from whence being beaten by Camillus, they were ſo ſlaughtered by the ſaid Camillus neer the River Aniene, and by Dolabella at the Lake of Vadimonius, that not one of them eſcaped to brag of the burning of Rome. Yet durſt not the Romans ſet upon them in their own Countrey, till a little before the comming of Pyrrhus into Italie, when the Senones, who had before ſacked Rome, beſieging Arretium, a Town of Tuſcany, were not only forced to raiſe their ſiege, but were beaten home by Manius Curius the Conſull: who followed his blow ſo well, that he drave them quite out of their Countrey. After this the Romans ſuffered the reſt of them to remain in quiet, till the end of the firſt Punick war, when being grown of more ſtrength, and at very good leiſure, they took the reſt of their Countrey from them, under the conduct of Flaminius the Roman Conſull, *A.V.C.*530. who preſently cauſed Roman Colonies to be planted in it, as the beſt way to aſſure his Conqueſt: their totall ſubjugation following in the year next after, under the Conſulſhip of Marcellus and Corn. Scipio And yet it was accounted as a Province diſtinct from Italie untill the ſetling of the Empire in Auguſtus Cæſar, who dividing Italie into eleven Regions, made three of them out of this Ciſalpina, that is to ſay, Gallia, Venetia, and Italia Tranſpadana: as afterwards it made up four of the ſeven Provinces of the Dioceſe of Italie, according to the diſtribution of it which was made by Conſtantine. How it came with the reſt of Italie into the power of the Lombards, and how from them taken by the French, with the reſt of that Kingdom, hath been ſhewen already. Won by the French, and from the French transferred with the Empire to the Kings of Germany, it did ſo far preſerve the reputation of a Kingdom, that the Emperors were ſometimes crowned at Millain with an Iron Crown for the Kingdom of Lombardy, as at Aken (a Town of Cleveland) with a ſilver Crown for the Realm of Germany, and with a golden Crown at Rome for the ſacred Empire. But the Empire being weakned by the Artifices of the Popes of Rome, this goodly Country was torn from it, and parcelled in the concluſion amongſt many Princes, as it ſtill continueth. Mil lain.

The Lombards being maſters of it, and having given it their own name, divided it by the River Po, into Longobardia Ciſpadana, lying betwixt the Po, and the Apennine Mountains; and Tranſpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Alpes: the firſt of which the old Romans called Æmilia, from Æmilius Lepidus, the founder of the City of Reggio (then called Regium Lepidi) once Proconſul of it. In the diviſion of Italie by Aug. Cæſar it had the name of Gallia. The other was by him honoured with the name of Italia Tranſpadana, by which name it was known in the times of Tacitus, and by him called, Florentiſsimum Italiæ latus, the moſt flouriſhing part of all Italie. But this diviſion being long ſince worn out of uſe, and the whole Country being cantonned into many Eſtates, as before was ſayd, we will conſider it at the preſent as it ſtands divided into the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, which with Trevigiana, deſcribed already, make up Tranſpadana: and thoſe of Modena, Parma, and Montferrat, which with the Principate of Piemont, make up Ciſpadana.

The Dukedom of MILLAIN.

THe Dukedom of MILLAIN hath on the Eaſt, the Eſtates of Mantua and Parma on the Weſt, Piemont, and ſome part of Switzerland one of the Provinces of the Alpes; on the North, Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria or the State of Genoa. In elder times the Country of the Inſubres, one of the greateſt Tribes of the Ciſalpine Galls, from whence it hath the name of Inſubrium Ducatus in ſome of the neater Modern Writers, but commonly called Ducatus Mediolanenſis, from Mediolanum, or Millain, the chief City of it.

Principall Rivers of it, 1 Padus, 2 Addua, 3 Ollius, and 4 Ticinus; of which ſomewhat hath been ſayd already; and beſides thoſe it hath alſo in it the Lake called antiently Lacus Larius, but now Lago di Come (from the City of Como which it neighboureth) 60 miles in length.

The chief Cities and places of note are, 1 Modoecum, not far from Millain, of more fame than greatneſs, the fame thereof ariſing from the Iron Crown (kept in a Monaſtery here) wherewith ſome of the Emperors have been crowned by the Arch-biſhops of Millain. A cuſtom taken up from the Kings of the Oſtrogothes, who are ſayd to have firſt uſed the ſame, in teſtimony that they had won their Eſtates by Iron. 2 Pavie, or Papia, ſeated on the Flood Ticinus, united to Millain by John Galeaze, the firſt Duke therof; made an Univerſity by Charles the fourth, An. 1361. and famous for the Battell in which Francis the firſt of France was taken priſoner by Charles the Millain. fift, An. 1525. It is ſeated, as before was ſayd, on the Flood Ticinus, about fourr miles from the Po or Padus, the River carrying at this City ſo great a breadth, that the bridge over it is no leſs than 200 walking Pates long, built of Free-ſtone, and covered over head with a roof ſupported all along with pillars. From this River the City it ſelf was antiently called Ticinum, and took the name of Papia from its great affection to the Popes; or, as ſome ſay, quaſi Patria piorum (the two firſt ſyllables of thoſe words being joyned together) by reaſon of the many godly men it did produce. It lyeth in length from East to West, a new fair ſtreet dividing it in the very middeſt, on the Weſt ſide whereof are two handſom Market-places, and a ſtrong Caſtle built by Galeaze the firſt Duke of Millain; whoſe Tomb together with that of Luitprandus King of the Lombards, are here ſtill remaining; the Kings of Lombardy being ſo pleaſed with the ſituation of the place, that they made it the Seat-royall of their Kingdom. The Cathedrall here is one of the beſt indowed in Italy, if not in Europe, the Revenues of it amounting to 200000 Crowns per annum. 2 Como, the Birth-place of both the Plinies; a rich and handſom Town, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lacus Larius, which from this Town hath now the name of Lago di Como; into which Lake, and thorough it, runs the Addua, and yet the waters do not mingle, that of the River paſſing over thoſe of the Lake. About this Lake are many fair houſes, and handſom villages, which do much beautifie the place; and in the middeſt thereof an Iland called Comacina, in which there was a ſtrong Fortreſs in former times, wherein the Longobardian Kings did preſerve their treaſurie. 3 Lodi, or Landa in the Latin, ſeated in a proſperous ſoyl, and bleſſed with a painfull and induſtrious people. 4 Novara, ſituate upon an high hill, in which live many antient and noble Familyes: of right belonging to the Spaniard, as Dukes of Millain; but at the time when Magimus wrote, conſigned over upon ſome conditions to the Dukes of Parma. But this Town, though it appertained to the Dukes of Millain, is ſituate within the Dukedom of Montferrat; and ſo is 5 Alexandria alſo, once a poor ſmall village, known by the name of Roboretum, from a Grove of Oakes adjoyning to it: afterwards being raiſed to its preſent greatneſs by the joynt purſes of the Citizens of Cremona, Millain, and Placentia, in honour of the Emperor it was called Caſarea. But in ſhort time theſe people ſiding with the Popes, drew on themſelves the anger of the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa, who having in a manner deſolated the City of Millain, the people thereof at the deſtruction of the City retired to this Town, calling it in honour of Pope Alexander the third, whoſe part they then took againſt the Emperor, by the name of Alexandria, which it ſtill retaineth. It is now the ſtrongeſt Out-work of the vvhole Duchy, well fortified againſt all aſſaults and batteries which may come from France. 6 Marignan, ſituate South from Millain, remarkable for the great defeat here given the Switzers by King Francis the firſt; and now the title of a Marqueſs. 7 Cremona, ſituate on the Banks of the River Po, in a very rich and healthy ſoyl; an antient Colony of the Romans, but a beautifull City to this day; and of ſuch fidelity to its Prince, that it hath got the name of Cremona the faithfull. It was built in the firſt year of the ſecond Punick War, and burnt to the ground by Veſpaſians ſouldiers, after the defeat of Vitellius his forces; which defeat was given under the walls of this Town. For when Antonius, Veſpaſians Generall, firſt after his victory entered into it, he went into a Bath to waſh away the ſweat and blood from his body, where finding the water ſomewhat too cold, he ſayd by chance, that it ſhould anon be made hotter. Which words the ſouldiers applying to their greedy deſires, ſet fire on the Town, and ſpent four days in the pillage of it. By the encouragement of Veſpaſian it was again re-edified, and is now famous for the high Tower, from which grew the by-word, Una turris in Cremona, unus Petrus in Roma, unus Portus in Ancona. 8 Millain, a fair Town, once the Metropolis of the Province of Liguria, and afterwards of the whole Dioceſe of Italy (called therefore Μητρόπολις τῆς Ἰταλίας, by S. Athanaſius) At this time the faireſt and the biggeſt of all Lombardy, having a Caſtle ſo ſtrongly fortified, with naturall and artificiall Ramparts, that it is deemed impregnable. A City very populous, containing 200000 perſons: and of great Trade, here being private ſhops equalling the publike ſtore-houſes of other places; and the people are ſo rich, that the wife of every Mechanick will flaunt it in her ſilks and taffatyes. This City is ſayd to have been built by the Galls, 359 years before Chriſt. It is ſeven miles in circuit, and honoured with an Univerſity, wherein flouriſhed Hermolaus Barbarus, Celius Rhodiginus, and Cardanus: ſeated it is in as commodious a ſoyl as any in Italy, environed with water by two great channels, the one drawn from the River of Addua, the other from the Teſis or Atheſis, which run hard by it, and convey all things to the City in ſo great abundance, that things there are at very cheap rates; and adde much alſo to the induſtry of the inhabitants in the vending and diſperſing of their Manufactures, which are of great eſteem in moſt parts of the World. The buildings of the City generally are fair and ſtately, but three eſpecially commended for their magnificence, that is to ſay, the Caſtle, the Hoſpital, and the Cathedral. For matter of Religion it doth uſe to glory that Barnabas the Apoſtle was its firſt Biſhop, and St. Ambroſe one of his Succeſſors; that formerly their Biſhop ſtood on even terms with the Popes of Rome, and their Church as much privileged as that; and that ſince thoſe times they have given unto the world four Popes, that is to ſay, Alexander the 2, Urban the 3, Celeſtine the 5, and of late, Gregory the 14.

As for the fortunes of it, it continued in the power of the French, and the Kings of Italy of that Nation, from the deſtruction of the Lombards till the Kingdom of Italy fell from the houſe of Charles the Great, and came at laſt into the hands of the German Emperors. Under them it continued tinued till the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, from whoſe obedience it revolted An° 1161, in behalf of Pope Alexander the third, the Emperor divers times defacing the City, and the people ſtil miniſtring freſh occaſions of diſlike and quarrel. Beatrix the wife of Frederick comming to ſee the City, without any ill intentions to it, was by the irreverent people firſt impriſon'd, and then moſt barbarouſly uſed. For ſetting her upon a Mule, they turned her face towards the tail, which they made her hold inſtead of a bridle; and having thus ſhewed her up and down the City, they brought her unto one of the gates, and there kicked her out. To revenge this horrible affront, the Emperor beſieged and forced the Town; adjudging all the people to dye without mercy, but ſuch as would undergo this ranſom. Between the buttocks of a skittiſh and kicking Mule there was faſtned a bunch of figs, one or more of which, ſuch as deſired to live muſt ſnatch out with their teeth, their hands bound behind them, as the Mule was pacing thorow the ſtreets. A condition which moſt of them accepted: and thereupon gave occaſion to the cuſtom uſed among the Italians, who when they intend to ſcof or diſgrace a man, are wont to put their thumb betwixt two of their fingers, ſaying Ecco la Fico; a diſgrace anſwerable to that of making horns (in England) to him that is ſuſpected to be a Cuckold. The City after this rebelling, and again taken by the Emperor, he levelled it unto the ground, pulled down the walls, and cauſed the whole ground on which it ſtood to be ploughed up, and ſowed with ſalt; ſeeming to threaten by that Emblem, that it ſhould never be re-edified. Which notwithſtanding, the City was not only new built again, but the Pope with the help of theſe Millaneſe, and the Venetians, had at laſt the better of the Emperor, whom he enjoyned, after a vile ſubmiſſion, to undertake a journey to the Holy-land. Freed from the Emperor, they began to live after the form of Republick, in which condition they continued about 56 years, when Otho, ſurnamed Viſconti (quaſi bis Comes) becauſe he was Lord of Millain and Angerona, aſſumed the title to himſelf, and ſetled it upon that Family after his deceaſe; but ſo, that for the moſt part they were under the command of the German Emperors, and to them accomptable. Galeaz the firſt, ſo called (as ſome write) becauſe the Cocks crowed more than ordinarily at the time of his birth, added to the Eſtate hereof the Cities of Crema and Cremona. In the perſon of John Galeazo it was advanced unto a Dukedom by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, for 100000 Crowns in ready money; which John increaſed ſo mightily in wealth and power, that he had 29 Cities under his command; and dyed as he was going to Florence to be crowned King of Tuſcany. To him ſucceeded John Maria, and after him his brother Philip; who in his life had maried his only daughter (but illegitimate) to Franciſco Sforza, the beſt Commander of his times, and at his death appointed Alfonſo of Aragon King of Naples for his heir and ſucceſſor. Before Alfonſo could take any benefit of this deſignation, Sforza was quietly poſſeſſed both of the City and the loves of the people. This Francis Sforze (I muſt needs crave leave to tell this ſtory) was the ſonne of James Altendnto, a plain Country man, who going to his labour with his Ax in his hand, whilſt a great Army was paſſing by him, compared the miſery and unpleaſingneſs of his preſent condition, with thoſe fair poſſibilities which a martiall life did preſent uuto him. And being in a great diſpute within himſelf what were beſt to do, he preſently fell upon a reſolution of putting the queſtion to the determination of the Heavenly Providence; by caſting his Ax unto the top of the tree next to him: conditioning with himſelf, that if the Ax came down again, he would contentedly apply himſelf to his wonted labour; but if it hung upon the boughs, he would betake himſelf unto higher hopes, and follow the Army then in paſſage. He did ſo, the Ax hung upon the boughs, he went after the Army, and thrived ſo well in that imployment, that he became one of the beſt Captains of his time, ſurnamed de Cotonioglа from the place of his dwelling, and Sforza from the greatneſs of his noble courage. By Antonia the daughter of Francis di Caſalis the Lord of Cortona, he was the father of this Francis Sforze whom now we ſpeak of; who was ſo fortunate a Commander in the wars of Italy, that to oblige him to his party, Philip the Duke of Millain beſtowed his daughter upon him, and thereby a fair title to this great Eſtate, which he ſucceſſively obtained againſt all pretenders. In his line it continued till the coming of Lewis the 12 of France, the ſonne of Charles, and nephew of Lewis, Dukes of Orleans, by Valentine the ſole daughter of John Galeaze the firſt Duke: who getting Duke Lodowick Sforze, betrayed by the Switzers into his hands, carryed him priſoner into France, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the eſtate. Outed not long after by the confederate Princes of Italy, who were jealous of ſo great a neighbor; he left the cauſe and quarrel unto Francis the firſt, his next ſucceſſor in that Kingdom: in purſuance whereof it is ſayd by Bellay a French Writer, that the uſe of Muskets was firſt known. But Francis being in concluſion taken at the battell of Pavie, and carryed priſoner into Spain; for his releaſe was forced to releaſe all claim unto this eſtate. A releaſe long before endeavouced by ſome French Politicians, becauſe the pretenſions hereunto had brought ſuch damage to that Crown: and no leſs eagerly oppoſed by Chancellor Prat (on the ſame reaſon that Scipio Naſica did oppoſe the deſtruction of Carthage, that is to ſay) becauſe it did not only keep the French Nation in continual diſcipline of War, but ſerved for a purgation of idle and ſuperfluous people: yet notwithſtanding this releaſe, Francis renewed the War again, and laid ſiege to Millain, then under the command of Antonio di Leva, and a Spaniſh Garriſon: during vvhich vvar, the vvretched Millaneſe endured the vvorſt of miſeries. For firſt the Governour, under colour of providing pay for his ſouldiers, got all the victuals of the town into the Caſtle, to be ſold again at his ovvn price: vvhich many of the poorer ſort not able to pay, periſhed of famin in the ſtreets. And on the other ſide, his ſouldiers which were quartered in moſt parts of the City

Mantua. uſed when they wanted mony, to chain up their Hoſts, and then to put them to a ranſom. Such as upon this barbarous uſuage fled out of the City, had their Goods confiſcate: on which there followed ſuch a diſconſolate deſolation, that the chief ſtreets were over-grown with netles and brambles. In this miſerable eſtate it continued till Charles the Emperor having totally driven out the French, reſtored it to Francis Sforze, brother to the laſt Duke Maximilian, and ſonne of that Ludowick, who to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, had moſt improvidently taught the French the way into Italy. But this Francis dying without iſſue, and the houſe of the Sforze failing in him, the Emperor entred on the Dukedom as right Lord thereof, and left the ſame to his ſucceſſors in the Realm of Spain. This ſaid, we will ſum up the whole ſtory of this Eſtate, in the enſuing Catalogue of

1277 1 Otho, Arch-biſhop of Millain.
1295 2 Matthew, Brothers ſonne to Otho, confirmed in his command of Millain, by Albertus the Emperor.
1322 3 Galeaze Viſconti, ſonne of Matthew, diſſeized of his command by Lewis of Bavaria Emperor.
1329 4 Actio Viſconti, ſonne of Galeazo, confirmed in his Fathers power by the ſame Lewis the Emperor.
1339 5 Luchino Viſconti, brother to Galeaze.
1349 6 John Viſconti, the brother of Luchino.
1354 7 Galeaze II. ſonne of Stephen the brother of John.
1378 8 John Galeaze, ſonne of the firſt Galeaze, created by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, the firſt Duke of Millain, An. 1395.
1402 9 John Maria, ſonne of John Galeaze, ſlain by the people for his horrible tyrannies.
1412 10 Philip Maria, the laſt of the Viſconti, which commanded in Millain; a Prince of great power in ſwaying the affairs of Italie. He died An° 1446; the Millaneſe for ſome years reſuming their former liberty.
1461 12 Galeaze Sforze, a valiant, but libidinous Prince, cruelly murdered by his own Subjects.
1477 13 John Galeaze Sforze, privately made away (as it was ſuppoſed) by his Uncle Lodowick.
1494 14 Lodowick Sforze, who to ſecure himſelf of his ill-got Dukedom, drew the French into Italie.
1501 15 Lewis the 12 of France, ſonne unto Lewis Duke of Orleans, and Valentina daughter to the firſt Duke of Millaine, vanquiſhed Ludowick, carried him priſoner into France, and took the Dukedom to himſelf.
1513 16 Maximilian Sforze, the ſonne of Ludowick, reſtored to the Dukedom by the power of the Switzers and Venetians; but again outed of it by Francis the firſt, Sonne-in-law, and Succeſſor to King Lewis the 12 in the Kingdom of France.
1529 17 Francis Sforze, brother of Maximilian, reſtored to the Eſtate, and the French expelled by the puiſſance of Charles the 5th, who after the death of this Duke Francis (the laſt of the Sforzes) An° 1535, united it for ever to the Crown of Spain.

This Dukedom is not now of ſuch great extent and power as in former times: there being but nine Cities remaining of thoſe 29, which were once under the command of the Dukes hereof; the reſt being gotten in by the State of Venice, the Florentines, the Dukes of Mantua and Parma. And yet is this accompted the prime Dukedom of Chriſtendom (as Flanders was accompted the prime Earldom of it) affording the Annuall Revenue of 800000 Ducats to the King of Spain. A good Revenue might it come clear unto his Coffers. But what with the diſcharge of his Garriſon-Souldiers, the defraying of his Vice-Roy, the Salaries of Judges and inferior Miniſters; it is conceived that he ſpends more on it than he getteth.

The Armes hereof are Argent, a Serpent Azure, Crowned Or; in his Gorge an Infant Gules. Which was the Coat-Armour of a Saracen, vanquiſhed by Otho the firſt of the Viſconti, in the Holy-land.

The Dukedom of MANTUA.

THe Dukedom of MANTUA, is bounded on the Weſt, with Millain; on the Eaſt, with Romandiola; on the North, with Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, with the Dukedom of Parma.

The Country about Mantua is reaſonably good, and yeelds all ſorts of Fruits being well manured manured; plentifull in Corn and Paſtures; the very High-wayes by the fields being planted with Elms, to train up the Vines which grow intermingled in every place, as generally it is in all parts of Lombardy. But the Inhabitants are conceived not to be ſo civill and well-bred as the reſt of Italie, childiſh in their apparrell, without manly gravity, poor in the entertainment of their friends, and exacting all they can from ſtrangers. Mantua.

The places in it of moſt note are, 1 Mercaria, bordering next to Millain. 2 Bozilia, a ſmall, but pleaſant habitation, belonging to ſome Princes of the Ducall family; built with fair Cloyſters towards the ſtreet, in which paſſengers may walk dry in the greateſt rain. 3 Petula, a ſmall Village, but as famous as any, in regard it was the place wherein Virgil was born; generally ſayd to be born in Mantua (Mantua Virgilio gaudet, as the old Verſe is) becauſe this Village is ſo near the City of Mantua (being but two miles diſtant) that his birth might very well be aſcribed unto it. 4 Mantua, ſeated on the River Mincius, now called Sarca, which comming out of Lago di Garda falleth not far off into the Po, from whence there is a paſſage unto Venice. By nature ſtrong, environed on three ſides with a running water, half a mile in bredth, and on the fourth ſide with a Wall. The Dukes to take their pleaſure on the Lakes and Rivers, have a Barge called the Bucentaure, five ſtoryes high, and capable of two hundred perſons (whence it had the name) furniſhed very richly both for ſtate and pleaſure. Ocnus the ſonne of Manto the Propheteſs, the daughter of Tireſias, is ſaid to have been the founder of it, and to have given unto it his Mothers name; but I more than doubt it, though Virgil a Native of thoſe parts do report it ſo; this City being one of thoſe which the Tuſcans built beyond the Apennine, as the ſoundeſt Antiquaries do affirm. Made memorable (by whomſoever built at firſt) in the declining times of Chriſtian purity, for a Councill holden in it, An. 1061, wherein it was decreed, that the chooſing of the Pope ſhould from thenceforth belong unto the Cardinals. A Prerogative which of old belonging to the Emperors, was firſt by Conſtantine the third ſurnamed Pogonatus, given to the Clergy and people of Rome in the time of Pope Benedict the ſecond, An. 684. reſumed by Charles the Great when he came to the Empire; and now appropriated only to the College of Cardinals. But to return unto the Town; on the Eaſt-ſide of a bridge of about 500 paces long, covered over head, and borne up with Arches, ſtands the Dukes Palace for the City, and not far thence the Domo, or Cathedrall Church of S. Peter. The Palace very fair and ſtately, but far ſhort for the pleaſures and delights thereof of his Palace at Marmarollo, five miles from the City, which though it be of a low roof (after the manner of antient buildings) yet it is very richly furniſhed, and adorned with very beautifull Gardens, able to lodge and give content to the beſt Prince in Chriſtendom. Here are alſo many other Towns, as 5 Caprana, and 6 Lucera, of which nothing memorable.

As for the fortunes of this Dukedom, it is to be obſerved that Mantua followed for long time the fortunes of the Weſtern Empire, till given by Otho the ſecond to Theobald Earl of Canoſſe for the many good ſervices he had done him. Boniface who ſucceeded him had to Wife Beatrix the ſiſter of Henry the ſecond, and by her was Father of Mathildis that famous Warrioureſs, who carried ſo great a ſtroak in the ſtate of Italie. Being diſpoſſeſſed of her Eſtate by Henry the third, ſhe joyned in faction with the Popes, recovered all her own again, and diſmembred from the Empire many goodly Territorys; which at her death (having had three husbands but no iſſue) ſhe gave it in fee for ever to the See of Rome, An. 1115. After her death Mantua continued under the protection of the Empire. But that protection failing, then by little and little it was brought under by the family of the Bonacelſi, who Lording it over a Free-people with too great ſeverity, contracted ſuch a generall hatred, that Paſſavino the laſt of them was ſlain in the Market-place by the people, under the command and conduct of Lewis de Gonzaga, a noble Gentleman, who preſently with great applauſe took to himſelf the Government of the Eſtate, An. 1328, which hath continued in his honſe to this very day with a great deal of luſtre, whoſe ſucceſſors take here as followeth, under the ſeverall titles of

A. Ch. The Lords, Marqueſſes, and Dukes of Mantua.

1366 2 Guido, ſonne of Lewis.
1369 3 Ludowick, or Lewis II. ſonne of Guido.
1382 4 Francis Gonzaga, ſonne of Lewis 2d highly extolled by Poggie the Florentine for his Wiſdom and Learning, who valiantly repulſed the attempts made againſt his Eſtate by John Galeaze then firſt Duke of Millain.
1407 5 John Franciſco Gonzaga, created the firſt Marqueſs of Mantua, by the Emperor Sigiſmund.
1444 6 Lodowick, or Lewis III. ſonne of John Franciſco, who entertained the Emperor Frederick and the King of Denemark with great magnificence.
1478 7 Frederick, ſonne of Lewis the third.
1484 8 Francis II. ſonne of Frederick.
1519 9 Frederick II. Commander of the Armies of the Pope and Florentines, entertained Charles the fift with great ſolemnity, by whom he was made Duke of Mantua, 1530, and declared Marqueſs of Monſferras in right of his wife.

Iodena. 1540 10 Francis III. ſonne of Frederick the ſecond, Duke of Mantua, and Marqueſs of Montferrat.

1550 11 William, the brother of Francis the third, created the firſt Duke of Montferrat.

1587 12 Vincent, ſonne of William, Duke of Mantua and Montferrat.

13 Francis IV. ſonne of Vincent, had to wife Margaret the daughter of Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy, and by her a daughter named Mary; in whoſe behalf the Duke of Savoy undertook the war againſt her Uncle for Montferrat.

1613 14 Ferdinand, the brother of Francis the fourth, ſucceeded him in both Eſtates, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the Duke of Savoy.

15 Vincent the II. the brother of Ferdinand and Francis the 4th.

1628 16 Charles Gonzaga, Duke of Nevers in France, by his Mothers line, and of Mantua and Montferrat by his Father Lewis Gonzaga, the third Sonne of Frederick the firſt Duke of Mantua, ſucceeded not without great oppoſition of the Spaniſh Faction, who ſacked Mantua, diſtreſſed Caſal, and much impoveriſhed both Eſtates. But the buſineſs was at laſt compoſed by the power of the French, and the inveſtiture conferred upon him by the hands of the Emperor.

The chief order of Knighthood in theſe Dukedoms, is, of the The blood of our Lord JESUS Chriſt, inſtituted An. 1608. The Author of it was Duke Vincent Gonzaga, when the Mariage was ſolemnized between his ſonne Francis and the Lady Margaret daughter to the Duke of Savoy. It conſiſteth of twenty Knights, whereof the Mantuan Dukes are ſoveraigns, and was allowed by Pope Paul the fifth. The Collar hath threads of Gold layd on fire, and inter-woven with theſe words, Domine probaſti. To the Collar are pendent two Angels, ſupporting three drops of blood, and circumſcribed with, Nihil iſto triſte recepto. It took this name, becauſe in Saint Andrews Church in Mantua, are ſayd to be kept as a moſt precious Relique, certain drops of our Saviours blood (thou canſt not, O Reader, but beleeve it) with a peece of the ſponge.

The Territories of this Duke (reckoning in that of Montferrat alſo) are in circuit nigh unto thoſe of Florence, but his Revenues fall ſhort; which amount to about 500000 Ducats only, but might be greater, if either the Duke would be burdenſom to his ſubjects, as Florence is; or if he were not on all ſides land-locked from navigation and traffick.

The Arms of Mantua are Argent, a Croſs Patee Gules, between four Eagles Sable, membred of the ſecond: under an Eſcocheon in Feſſe charged Quarterly with Gules a Lion Or, and Or three Barres Sable.

There are in this Dukedom
Arch-Biſhops 1. Biſhops 4.

The Dukedom of MODENA.

THe Dukedom of MODENA containeth the Cities of Modena and Reggio, with the Territories adjoyning to them: both of them ſituate in that part of Lombardy which is called Ciſpadana; and conſequently partake of the pleaſures and commodities of it.

The people of this Dukedom are ſayd to be better-natured than moſt of Italie: thoſe of Modena being quick in their reſolutions; eaſie to be pacified when wronged; and friendly in their entertainment of Strangers; the Reggians being affable, of preſent wits, and fit for any thing they can be imployed in: the women in both Towns of a mild diſpoſition, neither too courtlie, nor too froward, as in other places.

The firſt and principall City is that of Modena, antiently better known by the name of Mutina, and famous in thoſe times for the firſt battell betwixt Antonie and Auguſtus Ceſar; this latter being then not above eighteen years of age, and yet made head of a new League againſt Antonius, whom the Senate and people looked upon as a common Enemy. The managing of the war was left to Hirtius and Panſa then Conſuls; the fortune of the day ſo equall, that Antony left the field, and the Conſuls their lives; leaving Auguſtus the abſolute command of a powerfull Army, into whoſe favours he ſo cunningly did work himſelf, that he made them the foundation of his future greatneſs. It was at that time a Roman Colony, but being ruined by the fury of the Gothes and Lombards, was afterwards new built at the charge of the Citizens, ſituate near the Apennine in a very good ſoyl, and of indifferent fair buildings. In the diſtractions of Italie betwixt the Emperors and the Popes, Guido the Popes Legat, and then Biſhop thereof, conſigned it over to Azo of the houſe of Eſte, Lord of Ferrara, Ao. 1302, the Pope himſelf conſenting to it, upon the payment of a yearly tribute of 10000 Crowns: ſince which time it hath been for the moſt part in the power of that houſe. Borſius the Marqueſs of Ferrara being by Frederick the third made Duke of Mutina. 2 Reggio, the ſecond Town of note, hath taſted much of the ſame fortune; at firſt a Roman Colony called Regium Lepidi, afterwards ruined by the Gothes when they came firſt into Italie; repaired and compaſſed with a Wall by its own inhabitants, and for a time under the command of the Earls of Canoſſe. But being wearie of that yoke, they recovered their liberty; which being unable to maintain in thoſe buſtling times, they gave themſelves unto Obizo the Father of Azo, An° 1292, and after that in the year 1326

to the See of Rome. Passing through many other hands, it was at last sold for 60000 Ducats to the Visconti, Lords of Millain, An. 1370, and in the end recovered by the house of Este, An° 1409, and gave the title of a Duke to the aforesaid Borsius, whom Frederick the third made Duke of Modena and Reggio 1452 Parma.

The successors of this Borsius are before layd down in the succession of Ferrara, who held the whole estate together till the death of Alphonso the first Duke. He dying without lawfull issue, An° 1595, left his estate to Cæsar de Este, his Nephew by a base sonne, called Alphonso also; betwixt whom and Pope Clement the 8. a war was threatned for the whole, but at last compremised upon these conditions, that the Church of Rome should have Ferrara, with all the lands and territories appertaining to it, as an Estate antiently holden of that See; and that Modena and Reggio being Imperiall Feifes should remain to Cæsar, but to be held in fee of the Papal Throne. Duke Cæsar to have leave to carry away all his moveable goods, to sell such of his lands as were not of the antient domain of the Dukedom; and to have one half of the Ordnance and Artillery. By which agreement the Cities of Modena and Reggio, became a new erected State, distinct, and independent of any other: each City being well fortified and garrisoned, and furnished with Ordnance for defence thereof. But what they yeeld unto the Prince in the way of Revenue, and what Forces he is able to raise out of his Estates, I cannot positively determine: But by the Tribute formerly payd unto the Popes for the City of Mutina, and the rich territory of both Towns, and the great Revenues of the Dukes of Ferrara, I conceive they cannot yeeld less than 100000 Crowns of yearly in-come. The Armes of this Duke the same with those of Ferrara before blazoned.

The Dukedom of PARMA.

THe Dukedom of PARMA hath on the North the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, from which it is parted by the Po; on the South, the Apennine, which divideth it from Liguria; on the East, the Country of Modena; on the West, Montferrat: situate, as Modena is in Lombardia Cispadana, and much of the same nature both for soyl, and air, and other the commodities of those parts of Italie.

The principall Cities of it are, 1 Parma, an antient City, and made a Colony of the Romans at the end of the second Punick War, as Mutina and Aquileia at the same time were. It is seated on a small River of the same name, which runneth almost thorough the middest of it; beautified with very handsome buildings, and peopled by a race of ingenious men, whether they do betake themselves unto Arts or Arms. The grounds about this City are of excellent pasturage, and yeeld great plenty of the Cheese which is called Parmesan. 2 Placentia, seated on the Po, one of the first Colonies which the Romans planted amongst the Cisalpine Galls, and famous for the resistance which it made both to Annibal and Asdrubal, who severally in vain besieged it: made afterwards the Metropolis of the Province of Æmilia; yet nothing the less beautifull for so great an age. The fields adjoyning have the same commendation with those of Parma, for most excellent Cheese; but go beyond for Salt-pits and Mines of Iron, which the other wanteth. 3 Mirandula, a proper Town, built in the time of Constans, the sonne of Constantine the Great: the Patrimony of the noble Family of the Pici (of which was Picus de Mirandula that renowned Scholar) but held by them as Feudataries to the Dukes of Parma. 4 Briscello, called antiently Brixellum, not far from the chief City Parma; of no great note at the present time, but memorable in the Roman story for the death of the Emperor Otho, who here killed himself. For hearing here that his Forces were overthrown by Valens and Cecina Commanders of the Forces of Vitellius, then his Competitor for the Empire, he rather chose to fall by his own sword, than that the Romans should be forced for his sake to renew the war. And this he did with so much honour to himself, that many of his souldiers slew themselves at his Funerall Pile, not out of consciousness of crime, or for fear of punishment, but to testifie their affections to him, and to follow such a brave example as was layd before them. So as we may truly say of him, as he is sayd by Tacitus to have sayd of himself, viz. Alii diutius imperium tenuerunt, nemo tam fortiter reliquit. 5 Monticella, in the middle way almost between Parma and Placentia, and opposite unto Cremona, a chief Town of the Dutchy of Millain, from which parted by the River Po.

These Towns (as others in these parts) have been partakers of the diversities of fortune, as being (after the declining of the Western Empire) sometimes under the Venetians, most times under the Millanois, and at last conquered by the Popes in the confusions and distractions of the Dukedom of Millain, under the two last Princes of the house of Sforza. By Paul the 3d, being of the house of the Farnesis, the Cities of Parma and Placentia with their Appendixes, were given unto his son Petro Aloisi (or Petrus Aloysius, as the Latins call him) with the title of Duke, An° 1549. The Signeurie of Camerino, which he had lately taken from the Dukes of Urbin, being given in recompence to the Church. This Petro being a man of most vicious life, had amongst other villanies committed an unspeakable violence on the person of Cosmus Chirius the Bishop of Jenum; and soon after poysoned him. For which most detestable fact he received no other chastisement of his Father than this, Hac vitia me non edocuisse didicit, that he was sure he had not learnt those vices by his example

But

Montſerrat. But going on in theſe wicked courſes, he was ſlain at laſt by Count John Aguzzola, and Placentia, after a ſhort ſiege, yeelded to Ferdinand Gonzaga (Vice-Roy in Millain for the Emperor Charles the fifth) conceived to be privy to the murder. Octavian the ſonne of Petro Luigi, hearing what had hapned, fortified himſelf in Parma as well as he could; but being hated by the new Pope, and diſtruſtfull, not without good cauſe, of the Emperors purpoſes, he had quite loſt it if Henry the ſecond of France had not taken him into his protection. For the Emperor Charles fully determined (notwithſtanding that Octavian had maried his baſe daughter) to have made himſelf Lord of the Town: and the French King was loth to ſee ſo great a ſtrength added to the Emperors poſſeſſions in Italie. When the war had now laſted four years, Philip the ſecond which ſucceeded Charles, conſidering how neceſſary it was for his affairs in Italie, to have this Octavian his friend, reſtored unto him again this Plaiſance or Placentia; and ſo withdrew him from the French faction, An. 1557. Yet becauſe he would be ſure to keep his houſe in a perpetuall dependance on Spain, he reſtored it not abſolutely at the preſent, but held the Citadell thereof with a Spaniſh Garriſon till the year 1583; when in regard of the good ſervices which Alexander Prince of Parma had done him in his Wars againſt the Hollanders, and others of the revolted Provinces, he cauſed it to be ſurrendred into the hands of his Father Octavian. By which, and by his ſetling upon this houſe the Town and Territory of Novara in the Dukedom of Millain, and other perſonall favours which they have conferred on the Princes of it, the Kings of Spain ſeem to have given ſome ſatisfaction to this houſe for ſtepping betwixt them and the Kingdom of Portugal, to which they might have made ſuch a probable title as would have troubled his Eſtate, had they ſtood upon it

The Dukes of Parma.

1549 1 Petro Luigi Farneſis, ſonne to Paul the third, made by the Pope his Father the firſt Duke of Parma.

1550 2 Octavian Farneſis, ſonne to Petro Lewis, maryed Margaret baſe daughter to Charles the fift; afterwards Governeſs of the Netherlands.

3 Alexander, ſonne of Octavian and Margaret of Auſtria, one of the moſt renowned Souldiers of his time, Governour of the Netherlands for King Philip the 2d.

1592 4 Rainutio Farneſis, ſonne of Alexander and Mary of Portugal, eldeſt daughter of Edward ſonne to King Emanuel; one of the competitors for that Crown.

5 Edoardo Farneſis, ſonne of Rainutio.

Of the Revennes and Forces of theſe Princes I have little to ſay, but think them to be of good conſideration in both reſpects: their Territories lying in the beſt and richeſt part of Italie, and their Eſtates, environed by more puiſſant neighbours; which both neceſſitate and inable them to defend their own.

The Duke of MONTFERRAT.

THe Dukedom of MONTFERRAT, is ſituate betwixt Lombardy and Piemont, or the Rivers of Tenarus and Po, on the Eaſt and Weſt; extended North and South in a line or branch from the Alpes to the borders of Liguria, of which laſt it was ſometimes counted part, and called Liguria Ciſapemina for diſtinction ſake.

It took this name either à Monte ferrato, from ſome mountain of it ſtored with Iron; or elſe à monte feraci, as ſome rather think, from the fertilitie of the Mountains. And to ſay truth, though the whole Country ſeem to be nothing elſe than a continuall heap of Mountains, yet are they Mountains of ſuch wonderfull fruitfulneſs, that they will hardly give place to any Valley in Europe.

The principall River of it is the Tenarus, above mentioned, which ſpringing out of the hils about Barcois, a Town of the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, falleth into the Po not far from Pavie. The principall Cities of it are, 1 Alba, called by Plinie Alba Pomera, ſituate on the banks of the ſayd River, in a rich and fertile ſoyl, but a very bad air: near to which in a poor village called Zobia, the Emperor Pertinax was born. Who being of mean and obſcure Parents, after the death of Commodus, was called by the Conſpirators to the Roman Empire. But being over-zealous to reform the corruptions of the ſouldiers, he was by the Prætorian Guards (hating their Princes for their vertues as much as formerly for their vices) moſt cruelly murdered; and the Imperiall dignity ſold to Julianus for 25 Seſtertiums a man. 2 Caſal, vulgarly called Saint Vas, from the Church there dedicated to St. Evaſius (or Saint Vas, as they ſpeak it commonly) the ſtrongeſt Town in all this Country; well built, and peopled with many antient and noble Families, of which the family of St. George is one of the principall, and made a Biſhops See by Pope Sixtus the fourth, Anno 1474. t was in former times the chief ſeat of the houſe of Montferrat, and for that cauſe compaſſed with a ſtrong wall, and a fair Caſtle: but of late fortified after the modern modern manner of Fortifications, and ſtrengthned with an impregnable Citadel by Duke Vincent Gonzaga, as the ſureſt Key of his eſtate; in which new Citadell the Governour of the Province holds his uſuall reſidence. 3 Aique, in Latin Aquenſis, famous for its Bathes or Fountains of hot and medicinall waters. 4 Saint Saviours, where there is a very ſtrong Fortreſs, as there is alſo in 5 Ponſture, or Pont di Stura, ſo called of the River Stura. 6 Oſoniano, antiently Occimianum, the old ſeat of the firſt Marqueſſes of this Montferrat. 7 Villa nova. 8 Balzale. 9 Liburn, and many others of leſs note. Montferrat.

Here are alſo within the limits of this Dukedom, the Towns of Aſt, Cherian, and Chivaſco, belonging to the Dukes of Savoy, in the deſcription of whoſe Country we may ſpeak more of them; together with Novara and Alexandria, appertaining to the Dukedom of Millain, which we have ſpoken of already. And hereunto alſo I refer the ſtrong (and in thoſe times) impregnable Fortreſs, by the Latin Hiſtorians called Fraxinetum, from ſome Grove of Aſhes near unto it; ſituate in the advantages of the Mountains, and not far from the ſea; by conſequence better able to defend it ſelf and admit relief; and therefore made the receptacle or retreat of the Saracens, at ſuch time as they had footing in theſe parts of Italie. Firſt took and fortified by them in the year 891, recovered afterwards by the prowes and good fortune of Otho the Emperor, deſervedly ſurnamed the Great, about 60 years after. Of great note in the ſtories of thoſe middle times. By Luitprandus placed near the borders of Provence; by Blondus and Leander near the River Po, and the Town of Valenza, once called Forum Fulvii; and finally by Sigonius in the Coltian Alpes: and ſo moſt fit to be referred unto this Country, though now ſo deſolated that there is no remainder of the ruins of it.

This Country was made a Marquiſate by Otho the 2d, An. 985. one of the ſeven by him erected and given to the 7 ſons of Waleran of Saxonie, who had maryed his daughter Adelheide. A Military Family, conſpicuouſly eminent in the Wars of Greece and the Holy-land; where they did many acts of ſingular merit: inſomuch as Baldwin and Comrade, iſſuing from a ſecond branch hereof, were made Kings of Hieruſalem; and Boniface one of the Marqueſſes got the Kingdom of Theſſaly, and many fair Eſtates in Greece. But the Male-iſſue fayling in Marqueſs John, the Eſtate fell to Theodorus Palæologus, of the Imperiall family of Conſtantinople, who had maryed the Heir-generall of the houſe; continuing in his name till the year 1534, when it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Mantua. In the perſon of Duke William Gonzaga raiſed to the honour of a Dukedom, as it ſtill continueth: the beſt and richeſt part of that Dukes Eſtate, and the faireſt flower in all his Garden. The reſidue of the ſtory may be beſt collected out of the following Catalogue of

The Marqueſſes of Montferrat.

Montferrat. rick the first Duke of Mantua, who had maryed Margaret daugher of William the fift, and next heir to George. Whose succeſſors may be ſeen in the former Catalogue of the Dukes of Mantua.

And now according to my method, I ſhould proceed to the deſcription and ſtory of the Principality of Piemont, the laſt and moſt Weſtern part of Italy. But being it lyeth partly in, and partly at the foot of the Alpes, was antiently a part of the Province called Alpes Coltiæ, and is now part of the Eſtate of the Duke of Savoy: we will defer it till we come to thoſe Alpine Provinces which are next to followv. And ſo much ſhall ſuffice for Italie, in which there are, beſides thoſe of Piemont,

OF THE ALPES.

BEfore we can come out of Italie into France we muſt croſs the Alpes, a ridge of hills wherewith (as with a ſtrong and defenſible Rampart) Italie is aſſured againſt France and Germany. They are ſaid to be five days journey high, covered continually with ſnow, from the whiteneſs whereof they took this name: that in the Sabine Dialect being called Alpum, which in the Latine was called Album.

They begin about the Mediterranean or Liguſtick Seas, and croſſing all along the borders of France and Germany extend as far as to the Gulf of Carnaro, in the Province of Iſtria; and are in ſeverall parts, which we will muſter up as they lie in order from the Mediterranean to the Adriatick. And firſt thoſe which lie neereſt to the Mediterranean, are for that cauſe called Maritimæ; from their neerneſs to Liguria, called by ſome Liguſticæ. 2. Then follow thoſe called Cottiæ, from Cottius, a King of the Allobroges; and 3. thoſe named Graiæ, from the paſſage of Hercules, and his Grecian followers; of which both amongſt the Poets and Hiſtorians there is very good evidence. 4. After we come to the Pœninæ, ſo named from the march of Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Latine Writers call by the name of Pœni, or from the Mountain-God Pœninus, worſhipped by the Veragri, the Inhabitants of it. 5. Next come we to the Lepontiæ, ſo named from the Lepontii, who did there inhabite; as 6. the Rhaticæ, which lie next to them, from the Rhati once a powerfull people of that mountainous tract. 7. Then follow thoſe called Julie, from the paſſage of Julius Cæſar over them, in his march towards Gaule: and ſo at laſt we come unto thoſe called Carnicæ, extending to the ſhores of the Adriatick, denominated from the Carni who did here inhabite, and who gave name alſo to Carniola, an adjoyning Province.

The antient Inhabitants of theſe mountainous Countreys, beſides the Allobroges, Veragri, Lepontii, Rhati, and Carni, ſpoken of before, were the Sedani, Salii, Valenſes, Vaconii, and divers others of leſs note and eſtimation: all vanquiſhed by the indefatigable induſtry of the Romans. After whoſe ſubjugation, and the ſettlement of the Roman Empire, theſe mountains, and ſome part of the vales adjoyning, made five ſeverall Provinces, viz. the Province of the Cottian Alpes, containing Walliſland and Piemont. Secondly, of Rhatia Prima, comprehending the Griſons, and part of the Dukedom of Millaine, now in poſſeſſion of the Switzers; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Italie. Thirdly, of the Alpes Maritimæ, now part of Daulphine and Provence. Fourthly, of the Graiæ and Pœninæ Alpes, and the greateſt part of Maximæ Sequanorum, including ſome part of Savoy, and moſt part of Switzerland; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Gaule: and fifthly, of Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending Carniola, Carinthia, and the parts neer hand, which were members of the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale. The people antiently, as now, by reaſon of their drinking ſnow-water, diſſolving from the tops of the hills, and ſometimes falling thence with as great a violence as the Cataracts of Nilus are ſaid to do, were generally troubled with a ſwelling in the throat, which the Latines call Struma, being the ſame with that which we call the Kings Evill, becauſe by ſpeciall privilege curable by the Kings of France and England. Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? as the Poet hath it.

Of theſe vaſt hills, the loweſt are the Carnicæ and Maritimæ, lying neareſt to the ſeverall Seas before remembred. The Cottiæ and the Graiæ not ſo high, but that the paſſages lye open for the moſt part of the year. The reſt, by reaſon of their deep and dreadfull precipices, their tedious and ſteep aſcents, narrow ways, dangerous craggie Rocks, fierce whirlwinds, and huge balls of ſnow tumbling with an incredible violence from the tops of the mountains, are hardly paſſable by horſe, not at all by waggon. And yet amongſt theſe dreadfull hills there are obſerved to be ſome vallies of great fertilitie, not giving ground for fruitfulneſs to the beſt in Europe: and for the ſweetneſs of the temperature going much beyond them. With ſuch an equall hand doth the heavenly Providence diſpence the benefits of Nature to his whole Creation, that plenty bordereth upon want, and pain on pleaſure.

And yet for all the difficulty and danger of theſe Alpine paſſages, covetouſneſs, or curioſity, or deſire of conqueſt, have found a way to make them paſſable in many places, and that not only for private and particular paſſengers, but for vaſt multitudes and numerous Armies, ſuch as thoſe led by Annibal and Julius Cæſar. But ſpecially the barbarous people found out five wayes to break into Italie, which have been ſince much travelled by divers Nations; of which three be out of France, and two out of Germanie. The firſt from France is thorough Provence, and ſo cloſe to the Liguſtick Seas; eaſieſt for private Paſſengers, but too ſtrait and narrow for great Armies; there being many paſſages in the Countrey of Nizza ſo narrow, that ten men may make head againſt ten thouſand, as in that called the Pace of the Scaglia, for one. The ſecond is over the hills called Geneure, into the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, and ſo to the other parts of Lombardie: which was the way that Charles the eighth marched towards Naples; and by the Italians is called commonly Strada Romana, becauſe the ordinary paſſage betwixt France and Rome. The third way is over the greater Cenis (which ſome call the leſſer S. Bernard, ſo to Aoſt, or Turin; which (if we may believe Antiquity) was firſt opened by Hercules, and after followed by Annibal, who found the paſſages ſo cloſed up, that he was forced to break his way (as Plutarch telleth us) with fire and vinegar: whence that ſo memorable ſaying, Viam Annibal aut inveniet aut faciet; and from the paſſage of thoſe Worthies, this tract, and that adjoyning, were called Alpes, Craiæ, and Pœninæ. Or if (as others think) Annibal took the former way, and came directly upon Turin, which Town it is moſt certain that he took in his march; then theſe Pœninæ muſt take name from the paſſage of Aſdrubal, or of ſome part of Annibals Army, which probably was too great to go all one way, or elſe from the Mountain-God Pœninus, as before was ſaid.

The firſt way out of Germany into Italie, is thorough the Countrey of the Griſons, by the Valtolin, which the Spaniard ſeized into his hands. So that by the keeping of the Veltlyn, or Valtolin, and manning of the Fort Fuentes, which he alſo erected; he was in a manner the Lord of this paſſage: not onely to the diſcontent of the Natives, but to the diſtaſt of his neighbours the Savoyards and Venetians. The other way out of Germany into Italie, is thorough the Countrey of Tirolis, by the Towns of Inſpruch and Trent. This paſſage is commanded by the Caſtle and Fort of Eresberg, ſeated on the confines of this Countrey towards Suevia, and from Inſpruch, is two days journey diſtant. Which Fort, in the War which the Proteſtant Princes made againſt Charles the fifth, was ſurprized by Captain Scherteline, ſo to hinder the comming of the Popes Forces into Germany: for which the Emperor ſo hated him, that when all the reſt of that faction were pardoned, he only continued a Proſcript, his head being valued at 4000. Crowns. The taking alſo of this Fort, and the Caſtle adjoyning, by D. Maurice of Saxony, made the ſaid Charles then being in Inſpruch, to fly out of Germany, and ſhortly after to reſign his Empire to his brother Ferdinand.

Out of theſe Mountains riſe the ſprings of many of the moſt renowned Rivers in theſe Weſt parts of the world; as, 1. The Rheine, which ſpringeth from two ſeverall Fountains, the one which they call the Neerer Rhyne, out of the Lepontia; and the other which they term the Vorder, or further Rhyne, out of the Rhetica; which meet together about a Dutch mile from Chur, the chief Town of the Griſons, and ſo go on by Conſtance to Germany. 2. Rhoſne, which riſeth in that part of the Lepontia, which is called Die Furchen, about two Dutch miles from the head of the Neerer or Hinder Rhyne, and ſo thorough Walliſland into France. 3. Padus, or Po, which hath his head in a branch of the Coltian or Cottian Alpes, heretofore called Mons Veſulus, and ſo thorough Piemont into Italie. Out of them alſo ſpring the Rivers of Ruſſe, Durance, and Atheſis, the firſt a Dutch, the ſecond a French, and the third an Italian River alſo; not to ſay any thing of others of inferiour note. The great Lakes which are found in this monntainous tract, we ſhall hereafter meet with in their proper places.

Let us next look upon the Countreys and Eſtates here ſituate, which bordering upon Italie, France, and Germanie, and partaking ſomewhat of them all, do belong to neither; but reckon themſelves to be free and abſolute Eſtates, Supreme, and independent upon any others, as indeed they are. Such other of theſe Alpine Countreys, which are under the command of the German Princes, as ſome parts of Schwaben and Bavaria, together with Tirol, Carniola, and the reſt which belong to Auſtria, ſhall be conſidered in the Hiſtory of thoſe States and Princes, to which of right they do belong. But for the reſt, which as they lie intire together without intermixture, ſo they are abſolute in themſelves, and owe nor ſute nor ſervice unto any other; we will conſider them in this place, under the name of the Alpes, or the Alpine Provinces.

The ALPES then, or the Alpine Provinces, call them which you will, are bounded on the Eaſt with Tirol in Germany, and the Dukedoms of Millain and Montferrat in Italie; on the Weſt, with Provence, Daulphine, and La Breſſe, parts of the Continent of France; on the North, with the County of Burgundy in France, and Suevia or Schwaben in High Germany; and on the South, with Lombardy, and a branch of the Mediterranean Sea. Called in the middle times by the name of Burgundia Tranſmarina, becauſe it contained that part of the Kingdom of Burgundy, which lay beyond the Mountain Jour: A Mountain which beginning near the City of Baſil, and not far from the Rhene, paſſeth South-Weſtward by the Lakes of Bieler-Zee, Nuwenburger-Zee, and that called Lemane, till it come almoſt unto the Rhoſne: dividing by that means the Provinces of Switzerland and Savoy from the County of Burgundy.

It lyeth under the ſixt Climate, and ſome part of the ſeventh: ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is fifteen hours, and three quarters. Of different nature in regard both of Soyl and People; which will beſt ſhew it ſelf in the Survey of the ſeverall Provinces into which divided; that is to ſay, 1. the Dukedom of Savoy, 2. the Signeury of Geneva, 3. the Reſorts of Walliſland,

4 the Cantons of the Switzers, and 5 the Leagues or the Griſons. Which ſeverall States, though they be reckoned to belong to the German Empire, and that the Biſhops of Chur, Sion, and Baſil, are generally accounted for Princes of it: yet they neither come unto the Diets, nor are ſubject to the publick Taxes, nor comprehended within any of thoſe ten Circles into which the Empire is divided.

The Language herein ſpoken, partakes ſomewhat of all three, as before was ſayd: the French being wholly ſpoke in Savoy, the lower Walliſland, and generally by the Switzers bordering on the Lake Lemane; the Dutch being common to the greateſt part of the Switzers, the Griſons about Chur, and the upper Walliſland; and finally the Italian, uſed by the generality of the Griſons, the Præfectures appertaining unto them and the Switzers both, in Piemont, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lie next unto it.

The principall Souldiers of theſe mountainous Provinces, 1 Rodolph Earl of Habſpurg, the Founder of the preſent Auſtrian Family 2 Thomas, and 3 Peter, Earles of Savoy, this laſt ſurnamed Charlemain the ſecond. 4 Emanuel Philibert, one of the later Dukes hereof, Commander of the Armies of the King of Spain. 5 John Tzerclai, commonly called Count Tilly, Generall of the Imperiall Armies in the War of Germany. For Scholars of more ſpeciall note for which we are beholding to theſe Countryes, we have 1 Philip Theophraſtus Bombaſtus à Boenham, commonly called Paracelſus, the Author, or Inſtaurator of Chymicall Phyſick; born in the Mountains of Helvetia, as he ſaith himſelf: a man of moſt prodigious parts, and of no mean vices. 2 Zuinglius, one of the chief Agents in the Reformation. 3 Muſculus, and 4 Oecolampadius, two Divines, his ſeconds. 5 Henry Bullinger, one of the ſame profeſſion alſo. 6 Sebaſtian Caſtalio, of as much Learning as the beſt of them, though of different judgement. 7 Dan. Toſſanus the Hebrician. To which we may adde 8 Calvin alſo, who though he had his birth in France, had his being here; and never grew to any eminency in Fame or Learning, till he was ſetled in Geneva.

For matter of Religion, it is of a very mixt condition alſo in all theſe Countries: that of the Romiſh onely have publick countenance in the Dukedom of Savoy, and Piemont; but ſo that the Reformed is tolerated in ſome parts thereof, eſpecially in the parts next Dauphine; to which the neighborhood of Geneva gives a great increaſe. In Switzerland there are four Cantons which are wholly for the Reformation, viz. Zurich, Bern, Baſil, and Schaffhauſen: Seven that ſtand wholly for the Doctrin of the Church of Rome, i. e. Uren, Switz, Underwalden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn: in Apenzel and Glaris, they allow of both. The Griſons are confuſedly divided betwixt both Religions; but the Italian Præfectures admit no other but the Romiſh. The cauſe of which diviſion came upon the preaching of Zuinglius, a Canon of the Church of Zurich, who being animated with Luthers good ſucceſs in Germany, began about the year 1519 to preach againſt the Maſs, and Images, and other the corruptions of the Church of Rome. In which his party ſo increaſed, that on a publick Diſputation which was held at Zurich, the Maſs was abrogated in that Canton by the authority of the Senate, Anno 1526, and Images deſtroyed at Bern, 1528. After which proſperous beginnings, the Reformation began to ſpread it ſelf amongſt the Confederates; and had prevailed further both in France and Germanie, but for a difference which aroſe betwixt him and Luther about the Sacrament of the Supper: in which Luther did not only maintain a Reall preſence, but a Conſubſtantiation alſo in the ſacred Elements; which Zuinglius maintained to be only a bare ſign and repreſentation of Chriſts bleſſed body. For reconciling of this difference, wherein the enemies of both did extremely triumph, a conference was held between them at Marpurg a town of Haſſia, by the procurement of that Lantgrave, but without ſucceſs: Luther profeſſing that he durſt not agree in that point with Zuinglius, ne Principes ſuos interpretatione tantopere Pontificiis exoſa, magis inviſos redderet, for fear of drawing too great hatred on the Princes of his own profeſſion. From this time forwards all brake out into open flames, the names of Ubiquitarians, and Sacramentarians, being reciprocally caſt upon one another; to the great hindrance of the cauſe which they had in hand: yet ſo that the Lutheran opinions got ground in Germany, the Zuinglians amongſt theſe Mountains and in France it ſelf, and finally prevailed by the meanes of Calvin in many parts of Germany alſo. But hereof more hereafter in convenient place.

As for the ſtory of thoſe Countries, before they were divided into ſo many hands, we are to know that the old Inhabitants hereof (mentioned before) were conquered ſeverally by the Romans: as ſhall be ſhewen in the deſcription of the ſeverall Provinces. Won from the Romans by the Burgundians, in the time of Honorius the Weſtern Emperor, they became a member of their Kingdom, except the Country of the Griſons, and ſome parts of Switzerland, which fell under the Almans: united afterwards in the new Kingdom of Burgundy of the French erection, when ſubdued by that Nation. But Charles the Bald, the laſt of the French Kings of Burgundie, having united it to the Kingdom of France, divided it into three Eſtates; that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Burgundie on this ſide of the Soſne, the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, and the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour. This laſt containing the greateſt part of all theſe Alpine Provinces (except Piemont onely) was by the ſayd Charles given to Conrade a Saxon Prince, the ſonne of Witikind the third, and younger brother of Ro-

Savoy. bert, the first Earl of Anion, by the name of Earl of Burgundy Transjurane, or Burgundy beyond the Jour. Rodolph his sonne and successor, by Endes the King of France, his Cousin German, was honoured with the title of King: to make him equall at the least with Boso Earl of Burgundie beyond the Soasne, whom Charles the Grosse, about the same time had made King of Arles. But Rodolph finding it offensive to the German Emperor, abandoned it on the death of Endes, and took to himself the title of Duke. The residue of the story we shall have in the following Catalogue of

The Earles, Dukes, and Kings of Burgundie Transjurane.

1 Conrade, the first Earl of Burgundie Transjurane.
890 2 Rodolph, Earl, King, and Duke of Burgundie Transjurane.
912 3 Rodolph II. elected King of Italie against Berengarius; which title he exchanged with Hugh de Arles, who was chosen by another Faction, for the possession of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundie, on the assuming of which Crown he resigned this Dukedom to his Brother.
4 Boso, the brother of Rodolph the second, succeeded his brother in the Dukedom of Burgundie beyond the Jour; as afterwards he succeeded Rodolph his Brothers sonne in the kingdom of Arles and Burgundie.
965 5 Conrade, sonne of Boso, King of Arles and Burgundie, and Duke of Burgundie Transjurane.
990 6 Rodolph III. sonne of Conrade, who dying without issue left his estates to Henry surnamed the Black, the sonne of his sister Gisela, by Conrade the second, Emperor and King of Germanie: united so unto the Empire, till by the bounty and improvidence of some following Emperors, it was cantonned into many parts; of which more anon. It is now time to lay aside this discourse as to the generall condition and affairs of these Alpine Provinces; and to look over the particulars: beginning first with the estate of the Duke of Savoy, situate wholly in these Mountains, and lying next to Italie, where before we left.

THE DVKEDOM OF SAVOY.

THe Dukedom of SAVOY is bounded on the East, with Millain and Montferrat in Italy; on the West, with Dauphine in France; on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva; and on the South, with Provence, and the Mediterranean. The Country of so different nature, that it cannot be reduced under any one character: and therefore we must look upon it in the severall parts into which divided; that is to say, 1 the Principalitie of Piemont, and 2 Savoy, specially so called.

1 PIEMONT, in Latin called Regio Pedemontana, because situate at the foot of the Mountains (as the name in both languages imports) is bounded on the East, with Millain and Montferrat; on the West, with Savoy; on the North, with the Switzers; and on the South, it runneth in a narrow valley to the Mediterranean, having Montferrat on the one side, Provence and a part of the Alpes upon the other. The Country wonderfully fertile compared with Switzerland and Savoy, which lie next unto it; but thought to be inferior to the rest of Italie. It containeth, besides Baronies and Lordships, 15 Marquisates, 52 Earldoms, 160 Castles or walled places: and is so populous withall, that once a Piemontese being demanded the extent of his Country, made answer, that it was a City of 300 miles compass.

The principall Cities of it are, 1 Turin, called of old Augusta Taurinorum, because the head City of the Taurini, once the inhabitants of this Tract: from which Taurini it deriveth the name of Turin, and not as some conceive from the River Duria, on whose banks it standeth. In this City is the Court and Palace of the Duke of Savoy (who is the Lord of this Country) the See of an Archbishop, and an Universitie, in which the renowned Scholar Erasmus took his degrees in Divinity. It is situate on the River Po, in a place very important for the guard of Italie, for which cause the Romans sent a Colony hither, and the Lombards made it one of their four Dukedoms. Adjoyning to it is a Park of the Dukes of Savoy, watered with the Duria, Sture, and Po, six miles in circuit, full of Woods, Lakes, and pleasant Fountains, which make it one of the sweetest situations in Europe. 2 Mondeni, seated on the swelling of a little hill, with very fair Suburbs round about it, in one of which the Dukes of Savoy built a Church and Chappell to the blessed Virgin: intended for the buriall-place of the Ducall Family. It is the best peopled Town, for the bigness of it, of any in Italie. 3 Augusta Iratoria, now called ed Aoſt, ſituate in the furtheſt corner of Italy to the North and Weſt. 4 Vercelli, a ſtrong Tovvn bordering upon Millain, to which it formerly belonged, and was given firſt in Dower with Blanch the daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, to Amadee the third, Duke of Savoy, antiently the chief Town of the Libyci, who together with the Salaſſi and Taurini, were the old Inhabitants of this Countrey. 5 Inurea, called by Ptolomie Eporedia, ſituate at the very jaws of the Alpes, an Epiſcopall Citie. 6 Nicaa, or Nizze, an Haven on the Mediterranean, at the influx of the River Varus, which divides it from Provence, beautified with a Cathedrall Church, the Biſhops Palace, a Monaſtery of Nuns, and an impregnable Cittadel. A place ſo naturally ſtrong, that when as yet the Fortifications were imperfect, it reſiſted the whole Forces of Barbaroſſa the Turkiſh Admiral, An. 1543, lying before it with a Navy of two hundred ſayl, and battering it continually with incredible fury. Firſt fortified by Duke Charles, upon occaſion of ſome words of the Duke of Burbon, who paſſing this way with his Army, Behold, ſaith he, a ſituation of which they know not the importance: the Citadell being after added by Emanuel Philibert, and garriſoned for the moſt part with 400 ſouldiers. 7 Suſe, ſeated in the ordinary thorough-fare betwixt France and Italy, called of old Segovio, and honoused in thoſe times with a ſtately Sepulchre of K. Cottius King of the Allobroges: one of the ſeven Marquiſates in the middle times erected by the Emperor Otho. 8 Pignarolle, fortified with a Caſtle of great importance, which commandeth all the adjoyning vallies. 9 Quiers, adorned vvith many goodly Churches, fair Convents, and noble Families. 10 Ville Franche, a place of great ſtrength, more towards the ſea. 11 Savillan, ſeated in ſo pleaſant a Country, that Duke Emanuel Philibert had once a purpoſe to ſettle his abode in it, and make it the chief of his Eſtate. 12 Buſque, a Marquiſate, another of the ſeven erected for the ſonnes of Waleran. 13 Hereunto we may adde the City of Aſt (though properly within the limits of Montferrat) antiently a Colony of the Romans, and now to be compared, for the greatneſs and beauty of her Palaces, to the moſt ſtately Cities of Lombardy, ſituate betwixt the two Rivers of Po and Tenarus, very rich, and populous. Piemont.

Here is alſo in this Country the Marquiſate of Saluzzes (of the ſame erection as the former, but a greater Eſtate) the cauſe of ſo many differences betwixt France and Savoy. The principall Town whereof is called alſo Saluzze (from the Salaſſi queſtionleſs who dwelt hereabouts,) ſeated about the ſpring of the River Po, reaſonably big, and fortified with a very large Caſtle, fitted with rooms for all uſes, and for every ſeaſon. 2 Carmanlogla, which gave name to that famous Captain who carried ſo great a ſway in the Wars of Italie. A Town ſo fortified and ſtored with all ſorts of Ammunition, that it is thought impregnable. 3 Ravelle, a well-fortified place. 4 Doglian, the thorow-fare for the greateſt part of the trade which is driven betwixt Piemont and the River of Genoa. The Arms hereof Argent, a Chief Gules.

The antient Inhabitants of this Country were the Salaſſi, Libyci, and Taurini, as before is ſaid, all vanquiſhed by the Romans, and their Country made a Province of that Empire, by the name of the Province of Alpes Coltia, in the time of Nero, of which Genoa was the Metropolis or principall City. The preſent are deſcended for the moſt part of the Heruli, who under the conduct of Odoacer conquered Italie, whereof he was proclamed King by the Romans themſelves: but Odoacer being vanquiſhed near Verona, by Theodorick King of the Gothes, the Heruli had this Country allotted to them by the Conqueror, for their habitation. They had not held it long, when ſubdued by the Lombards, of whoſe Kingdom it remained a part, till given by Aripert the ſeventeenth King of the Lombards, to the Church of Rome: affirmed by ſome to be the firſt temporall eſtate that ever the Popes of Rome had poſſeſſion of. But lying far off, aud the donation not confirmed by the Kings ſucceeding, the Popes got little by the gift: ſo that in the ſubverting of the kingdom of the Lombards, it was at the devotion of the Kings of Italie, of the houſe of Charles the Great, and afterwards of his ſucceſſors in the Empire, by whom diſtracted into ſeverall Eſtates and Principalities. Thomas and Peter Earls of Savoy made themſelves Maſters of the greateſt part of it by force of Arms: the former in the year 1210, the later in the year 1256. Since that time the firſt ſonne of Savoy is ſtiled Prince of Piemont. The Marquiſate of Saluzzes, containing almoſt all the reſt, was added by the mariage of a daughter of this Marquiſate with Charles Duke of Savoy, An. 1481. Of which mariage though there was no iſſue, yet the Savoyard alwayes held it as their own; till the French upon as good a title poſſeſſed themſelves of it: Recovered by the Savoyard An. 1588, the Civill Wars then hot in France. But finding that he was not able to hold it againſt Henry the fourth (who looked upon it as a door to let his forces into Italie) he compounded with him, An. 1600. the Country of Breſſe being given in exchange for this Marquiſate: Of which, together with the reſidue of Piemont, and ſome peeces of importance in the Dukedom of Montferrat, that noble Family of Savoy doth now ſtand poſſeſſed.

The Armes of this Principality are Gules, a Croſs Argent, charged with a Label of three points Azure.

2 SAVOY, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, is bouuded on the Eaſt, with Walliſland, and part of Piemont; on the Weſt, with Daulphine and La Breſſe; on the South, with ſome parts of Daulphine only; and on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva.

The Country is for the moſt part hilly and mountainous, overſpread with the branches of the Alpes; healthy enough, as commonly all Hill-countries are, but not very fruitfull, except ſome

Savoy. of the vallies which lie neareſt to the Weſtern Sun, and the plain traſt about the Lemanian Lake, lying towards Geneva. By reaſon of the difficult and narrow waies, and thoſe full of theeves, it was once called Malvoy: but the paſſages being opened by the coſt and induſtry of the people, and purged of theeves by good Laws and exemplary juſtice, it gained the name of Savoy or Salvoy, quaſi ſalva via; as Maleventum, a town of the Realm of Naples, on the like conſiderations got the name of Benevent. By the Latins of theſe later times it is called Sabaudia, a name not known to any of the antient writers, who knew it by no other name than that of the Allobroges, or Allobrogum Regio.

The Common people are naturally very dull and ſimple, ſo groſs of underſtanding for all their continuall converſe with other Nations, who take this Country in their way to Italie, that they beleeve the Duke of Savoy to be the greateſt Prince in the World: and ſo unwarlike, that a few men of another Nation well trained and diſciplined, will make a great number of them fly. But on the other ſide, the Gentry are of a very pleaſing converſation, civill, ingenious, and affecting all good exerciſe: ſo as there may be dayly ſeen in Chamberie as much good company, and as well-appointed and behaved, as in many of the beſt Towns of France or Italie. The number of both ſorts, taking in Piemont (who are not intereſſed in the firſt part of this character) are thought to be 800000.

The chief Cities are, 1 Chamberie, ſituate on the banks of the River L' Arch in a very pleaſant valley, compaſſed round with Mountains, the principal of the Dukedom on that ſide of the Alpes, honoured with the Dukes Court when he reſideth in this Countrey, the ordinary ſeat of Juſtice, and many neat houſes which belong to the Gentry: fortified of late with a ſtrong Caſtle and ſufficient Out-works, but not recovered of the damage it received An° 1600, when it was forced by King Henry the fourth of France, in his Wars with Savoy. 2 Tarentuiſe, an Archbiſhops See, ſituate in the middeſt of the Mountains; heretofore the Metropolis of the Province of the Alpes Graia, and Pœnina, and called by Antoninus, Civitas Centronum, from the Centrones who inhabited about this tract. 3 Lunebourg, in the Country of the old Medulli, betwixt which and Suſe, a town of Piemont, lyeth the moſt ordinary road betwixt France and Italie. 4 Aque belle, ſituate at the foot of a craggy Rock. 5 Ripaille, in a ſweet and fruitfull ſituation, on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemanus, the chief Town of the Signeury of Foſſignie: where Amadee the firſt Duke of Savoy having given over his Eſtate, lived a Monaſtick life, and was thence choſen Pope by the Fathers of Baſil, An° 1440. 6 Nun or Nevidum (by ſome of the old Latins called Noviodunum) an antient City, layd deſolate, in, or before the time of Julius Ceſar, repaired again in the Empire of Veſpaſian; the ſeat of late times of the Biſhops of Geneva, ſince their expulſion out of that Citie. 7 Bele, on the Rhodanus, or Rhoſne. 8 Albon, founded about the year 456. 9 Conflans, fortified by the late Dukes of Savoy, but otherwiſe of ſmall importance. 10 Annunciada, not much obſervable, but for being the ſeat or place of Solemnities, for an order of Knights called by that name. 11 Maurienne, or St. John de Maurienne, an Archbiſhops See, ſituate in a valley of the Alpes ſo called; the chief City of the old Medulli, who dwelt hereabouts; from whence the Princes of this houſe were firſt entituled Earles of Maurienne only. 12 Charboneers, a well-fortified place. Here is alſo the ſtrong Town and Fort of Montmelian, which held out four moneths againſt Henry the fourth, and many thouſand ſhot of French Cannon, An° 1600: and the impregnable Fortreſs of St. Catharines, which yet ſubmitted to that King; the Government whereof being denied to the Duke of Byron, plunged him in diſcontent and treaſon to the loſs of his head.

The many Tribes in and about this mountainous Country, of which we have mentioned ſome before, paſs generally in moſt antient Writers by the name of the Allobroges, becauſe the moſt powerfull of them all. Of whom the firſt mention which we find in ſtory, is the Attonement made by Annibal in his paſſage this way, between Brancus and his brother, about the ſucceſſion of the Kingdom. Afterwards ſiding with the Salii a Gallick Nation in a War againſt Marſeilles, then a confederate of the Romans, they drew that people on their backs, by whom they were in fine ſubdued, with the loſs of no leſs than 120000 Galls, under the ſeverall conducts of Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, and Qu. Fabius Maximus: by which laſt, Bituitus, or Bitultus King of the Auverni, one of the confederates, was led in triumph unto Rome. The Country and people at that time were much alike, Cœlum atrox, pervicaci ingenio, a ſharp air, and a ſtubborn people, as it is in Florus: not without commendation in the following Ages for diſcovering Catilines conſpiracy, by which the whole Roman ſtate was in danger of ruin. After which we find Coctius one of the Kings of theſe Allobroges, to have been in ſpeciall favour with Auguſtus Ceſar, affirmed to be the founder of 12 Cities in this mountainous tract, whence it had the name of Alpes Cottiæ; and by that name reduced into the form of a Province by the Emperor Nero. In the declining of that Empire, this Province became a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; and paſſed with other rights of that falling Kingdom to the Emperors of Germany, by the gift of Rodolph the laſt King. To them it did continue ſubject till the year 999, in which Berald of Saxony, brother to Otho the third, for killing Mary the laſcivious Wife of his Uncle, fled from Germany, and ſetled himſelf here in France. His ſonne Humbert (ſurnamed Blanchmains, that is White-hand) was by the ſpeciall favour of the Emperor Conradus Salicus, made Earl of Maurienne, which is a town of this Country,

Country, An° 1027. And by this mariage with Adela the daughter and heir of the Marques of Suse, added that noble Marquisate (one of the seven erected by Otho the second, and given amongst the sonnes of Waleran) unto his estate. Humbert the second gained by conquest the Town and Territory of Tarentaise; as Ame, or Amadee the third did the Counties of Vaulx and Chablais, An° 1240, or thereabouts. Ame, or Amadee the fourth, by the Mariage of Sibille daughter and sole heir of Ulric Earl of Bresse, added that Earldom to his house: as Ame, or Amadee the ninth, did the Town and Territory of Vercelli, upon the contract betwixt Philibert his sonne and successor with Blanch the base daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, who afterwards was maryed unto Francis Sforza. Ame, or Amadee the second Earl of Maurienne was by the Emperor Henry the fifth, invested with the title of Earl of Savoy; and Amadee the eighth created the first Duke by the Emperor Sigismund, An° 1397. But the main improvement of the power and patrimony of this House, came by the valour and good success of the two Earles, Thomas, who in the year 1210, and Peter one of his sonnes and successors (for his manifold Conquests, surnamed Charlemaine the Junior) An° 1256, by conquest got a great part of Peidmont, to which the Marquisate of Saluzzes containing almost all the rest, was united by a Mariage of the daughter of the Marquisate, to Charles Duke of Savoy; and though he dyed without issue by her, An° 1489, yet his successors still kept the possession of it, till Francis the first, pretending some title to it in the right of his Mother (a daughter of the house of Savoy) layd it unto the Crown of France: from which it was again recovered by the Savoyard, during the French Civill Wars, An° 1588, and now is peaceably possessed: The Countrey of Bresse being given to the French for their pretension to the Marquisate, An° 1600. These Dukes of Savoy have a long time been devoted to the faction of Spain, especially since the French Kings took in the lesser states bordering on them, as Burgundie, Bretagne, &c. Charles the third sided so constantly with the Emperor Charles the fifth, that denying Francis the first a passage for his Army thorough the Country into Italy, he was by the sayd King dispoyled of his Estates, An° 1536. The Emperor to recover it left nothing undone; but in vain: for the French encountring his force in the open field, vanquished them, with the slaughter of fifteen thousand of his men. In the year 1558, peace being made between Henry and Philip, successors to those great Princes, Emanuel Philibert, sonne to Duke Charles, was restored to all his Rights. His sonne and successor, having maryed Catharine the daughter of King Philip the second, depended wholly upon Spain, notwithstanding many quarrels which did grow betwixt them, his sonnes receiving thence many great pensions and preferments: For at the same time Prince Amadee Victorio the second sonne, during the life of Philip his elder brother, was chief Commander of that Kings Gallies, and had in pension a hundred thousand Crowns per annum; Philibert the third sonne was Vice-Roy of Sicil; Maurice the fourth, a Cardinal, had a moity of the Revenues of the Archbishoprick of Toledo; and Don Thomazo, though then young, had his pensions also. But Amadee Victorio, who succeeded him, marying Madam Christian, a daughter of King Henry the fourth of France, changed his dependances, and held more close to France than any of his predecessors; but whether to the hurt or benefit of his Estates future times will shew. For leaving his heir a Minor, in the hands of his mother, the French upon pretence of preserving the Country for him against the incroachments of the Spaniard, have made themselves masters of the greatest parts of it, which when they will restore to the proper owner, is beyond my cunning to determine. But now behold the Catalogue of the Savoy.

The Forces of this Duke conſiſt eſpecially in his Forts and Garriſons, vvhereof he hath good ſtore in France, Savoy, and Piemont, well fortified, and plentifully furniſhed with all manner of Ammunition. And it concerneth him ſo to have, conſidering what dangerous neighbours he hath near him, and that his Country is a continnall thorow-fare for the Armies both of France and Spain upon all occaſions. Nor doth it leſs conduce to his preſervation, that he hath ſo many retreats of naturall ſtrength, as are not eaſily acceſſible by a conquering Army; of this laſt ſort is, amongſt many others, the valley of Aoſt (which ſome reckon for a part of Savoy, and ſome of Piemont) ſo ſtrong by reaſon of the narrow entries, the uneaſie paſſages, and the great multitudes of the people which inhabit in it, that thoſe who have made themſelves maſters of the reſt of the Country, durſt never attempt it. And of the firſt, beſides thoſe formerly deſcribed, is the Town of Nizze, ſo fortified and flanked upon all acceſſes, that it ſeems rather to be an aſſembly of Forts, than a ſingle Fortreſs. Out of which Garriſons the Duke is able to draw great Forces for preſent ſervice; beſides the readyneſs of the Piemonteſe upon all occaſions, vvhich are for the moſt part given to Arms.

The ordinary Revenue of this Dukedom (taking Piemont in) are ſayd to be above a Million of Crovvns per Annum. But his extraordinary is ſo great, that Duke Charles Emanuel, during his Wars with Henry the fourth, in a very few years drew out of Piemont onely eleven Millions of Crowns, beſides the charge which they were put to in quartering of Souldiers. By which it may appear that the Dukes are not like to want money to ſerve their turns, when they ſhall deſire it of the Subject, and yet not charge them more than they are able to bear.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Dukes Eſtate is that of the Annunciada, which ordained by Amade the firſt Duke, at vvhat time he defended Rhodes from the Turks, An. 1409. Their Collar is of fifteen links, to ſhew the fifteen myſteries of the Virgin: at the end, is the portraiture of our Lady, with the hiſtory of the Annunciation. Inſtead of a Motto, theſe letters, F. E. R. T. id eſt, Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, are engraven in every plate or link of the Collar: each link being inter-woven one within the other, in form of a True-lovers knot. The number of the Knights is fourteen, beſides the Duke, who is the Soveraign of the Order: the ſolemnitie is held annually on our Lady-day, in the Caſtle of Saint Peter in Turin. So from this victory (for every repulſe of the beſieger, is a victory to the beſieged) there aroſe a double effect: firſt, the inſtitution of this order; ſecondly, the aſſumption of the preſent Arms of this Dutchy, which are G. a Croſs A. This being the croſs of Saint John of Hieruſalem, whoſe Knights at that time vvere owners of the Rhodes. Whereas before, the Arms vvere Or, an Eagle diſplayed with two heads, Sable, armed Gules, ſupporting in feſſe, an eſcotchion of Saxony, that is Barrewiſe ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowred Vert. A coat belonging to the Emperors of the houſe of Saxony, from whom the firſt Earles of Savoy did derive themſelves.

Geneva.

3. THE SIGNEURIE OF

GENEVA.

GENEVA is a City in the Dukedom of Savoy, formerly ſubject to its own Biſhops, acknowledging the Dukes of Savoy for the Lord in chief: now reckoned as a Free-Eſtate, bordering cloſe upon the Switzers, and with them confederate; and ſo more properly within the courſe and compaſs of theſe Alpine Provinces. It is ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemane, oppoſite to the City of Lozanne in the Canton of Bern, from which it is diſtant ſix Dutch miles: the River Rhoſne (having paſſed thorow the Lake with ſo clear a colour, that it ſeemeth not at all to mingle with the waters of it) running thorow the lower part thereof, over which there is a paſſage by two fair bridges. This lower part is ſeated on a flat or levell, the reſt on the aſcent of an hill: the buildings fair, and of free-ſtone; well fortified on both ſides both by Art and Nature, in regard of the pretenſions of the Duke of Savoy (whom they ſuffer not to arm any Gallies upon the Lake) and other jealouſies of State. The compaſs of the whole City is about two miles, in which there are ſuppoſed to be about ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand ſoules. One of their bridges is more antient and better fortified than the other, belonging antiently to the Switzers (or Helvetians the old inhabitants of that tract) but broken down by Julius Cæſar to hinder them from paſſing that way into France.

The people of the town are generally of good wits in the managery of publick buſineſs, but not very courteous towards ſtrangers, of whom they exact as much as may be; modeſt and thrifty in apparell, and ſpeak for the moſt part the Savoyard, or worſt kind of French. So that the great reſort of young Gentlemen thither, is not ſo much to learn that Language (which is no where worſe taught) as out of an opinion which their parents have, that the Reformed Religion is no where ſo purely practiſed and profeſſed as there. By means whereof the frie or ſeminarie of our Gentry being ſeaſoned in their youth with Genevan principles, have many times proved diſaffected to the forms of Government (as well Monarchicall as Epiſcopall) which they found eſtabliſhed here at home: to the great inbroilment of the ſtate in matters of moſt near concernment. The women are ſayd to be more chaſt (or at leaſt more reſerved) than in any other place in the World: which poſſibly may be aſcribed to that ſeverity with which they puniſh all offendors in that kind: Dancing by no means tolerated in publick or private; Adulterie expiated by no leſs than death; Fornication, for the firſt offence with nine dayes faſting upon bread and water in priſon, for the ſecond with whipping, for the third with baniſhment. But notwithſtanding this ſeverity, they make love in ſecret, and are as amorous in their daliances as in other places.

The Territories of it are very ſmall, extending not above two Leagues and an half from any part of the Town: but the ſoyl, if well manured, bringeth Grain of all ſorts, and great ſtore of Wine. There is likewiſe plenty of paſture and feeding grounds, which furniſh the City with fleſh-meats, butter and cheeſe at very reaſonable rates; the nearneſs of the Lake affording them both Fiſh and Wild-fowl in good meaſure; and amongſt others (as ſome ſay) the beſt Carps in Europe.

But the main improvement of this State is by the induſtry of the people, and the convenient ſituation of the City it ſelf; the City being ſituated very well for the trade of Merchandiſe, in regard it is the ordinary paſſage for tranſporting Commodities out of Germany to the Marts at Lions, and from thence back again to Germany, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Italy. And for the induſtry of the people, it is diſcernable in that great ſtore of Armor and Apparell, and other neceſſaries, brought from hence yearly by thoſe of Bern; and their Mannfactures in Satten, Velvet, Taffata, and ſome quantities of Cloth (fine, but not durable) tranſported hence yearly into other places.

The Soveraignty of this City was antiently in the Earls hereof, at firſt Imperiall Officers only, but at laſt the hereditary Princes of it. Betwixt theſe and the Biſhops (Suffragans to the Metropolitan of Vienna in Daulphine) grew many quarrels for the abſolute command hereof. In fine, the Biſhops did obtain of the Emperor Frederick the firſt, that they and their ſucceſſors ſhould be the ſole Princes of Geneva, free from all Taxes, and not accomptable to any but the Emperor. Which notwithſtanding, the Earls continuing ſtill to moleſt the Biſhops, they were fain to call unto their ayd the Earl of Savoy; who took upon him firſt as Protector onely, but after by degrees as the Lord in chief. For when the rights of the Earls of Geneva, by the Mariage of Thomas Earl of Savoy with Beatrix a daughter of theſe Earls, fell into that houſe; then Ame, or Amadee the ſixt of that name, obtained of the Emperor Charles the fourth, to be Vicar-generall of the Empire in his own Country, and in that right ſuperior to the Biſhop in all Temporall matters: and Ame, or Amadee the firſt Duke, got from Pope Martin (to the Geneva. the great prejudice of the Bishops) a grant of all the Temporal jurisdiction of it. After which time the Bishops were constrained to do homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and acknowledge them for their Soveraign Lords; the Autority of the Dukes being grown so great (notwithstanding that the people were immediately subject to their Bishop onely) that the Money in Geneva was stamped with the Dukes name and figure; Capitall offenders were pardoned by him; no sentence of Law executed till his Officers were first made acquainted; nor League contracted by the people of any validity, without his privity and allowance; and finally the Keyes of the Town presented to him as often as he pleased to lodge there, as once (for instance) to Duke Charles the third, comming thither with Beatrix his Wife, a daughter of Portugall. And in this state it stood, till the year 1528, the Bishop being all this while their immediate Lord, and having jus gladii & alias civilis jurisdictionis partes, as Calvin himself confesseth in an Epistle to Cardinal Sadolet. But in that year, Religion being then altered in the Canton of Bern, near adjoyning to them, Viret and Farellus did endeavour it in Geneva also. But finding that the Bishop and his Clergy did not like their doings, they screwed themselves into the people, and by their ayd in a popular tumult, compelled the Bishop and his Clergy to abandon the Town. And though the Bishop made them many fair overtures, out of an hope to be restored to his Estate; yet would they never hearken to him, nor admit of him any more, being once thrust out. Nor did they only in that tumult alter the Doctrin and Orders of the Church before established, but changed the Government of the State also: disclaming all allegiance both to Duke and Bishop, and standing on their own Liberty as a Free-Commonwealth. And though all this was done by Viret and Farellus before Calvins comming to that City, which was not till the year 1536, yet being come, suffragio meo comprobavi, as he saith himself, no man was forwarder than he to approve the Action.

But Calvin being come amongst them, made their Divinity Reader, and one of the ordinary Preachers, he first negotiated with them to abjure the Papacie, and never more admit their Bishop; to which he found a cheerful and unanimous consent in all the people. Then finding that no Ecclesiasticall discipline was in use amongst them, he dealt with them to admit of one of his own composing; which at last he obtained also, but with very great difficulty, and got it ratified by the Senate July the 20th. 1537. The next year after, the people weary of this new yoke, and he and his Colleagues (Farellus and Coraldus) as resolute to hold them to it; they were all three banished the Town in a popular humor; and with like levitie sued to, to return again: to which he would by no means yeeld, except they would oblige themselves by a solemn Oath to admit of such a form of Discipline as he, with the advice of the other Ministers, should prescribe unto them. This being condescended to by that fickle multitude, he returns in triumph to Geneva, September the thirteenth, 1541: and got his new Discipline established on the twentieth of November following. The sum of the device was this: All Ministers to be equall amongst themselves; two Lay-men to be super-added unto every Minister; the Minister to continue for term of life, the Lay-Elders to be annually chosen; these being met together to be called the Presbyterie; and to have power of Ordination, Censures, Absolution, and whatsoever else was acted by the Bishop formerly. Hitherto it related to Geneva only, which being but one City, and a small one too, was not capable of more than one Presbyterie. The names and notions of Classicall, Provinciall, and Nationall Assemblies came not in till afterwards; as it got ground in Kingdoms and larger Provinces. This Platform though of purpose framed to content the people; yet since the Lay-officers were to be but annuall, and after subject to the lash like other Mortals, it gave but sorry satisfaction unto wiser men. And being built withall on a false foundation, was for a long time hardly able to stand alone, and fain at twelve years end to borrow a support from Zurich, and others of the Protestant Cantons, whom Calvin earnestly sollicited to allow his project, against which one Perinus, and some principall Citizens had begun to spurn. And so we have the true beginning of the Genevian Discipline, begotten in Rebellion, born in Sedition, and nursed up by Faction.

Being born into the World by the means aforesayd, some other helps it had to make it acceptable and approved of in other Churches. As first, the great content it gave to the common people, to see themselves intrusted with the weightiest matters of Religion, and thereby an equalitie with, if not (by reason of their number, being two for one) a superiority above their Ministers: Next, the great reputation which Calvin for his diligence in Writing and Preaching had attained unto, made all his Dictates as authentick amongst some Divines, as ever the Popes Ipse dixit in the Church of Rome. Whereby it came to pass, in a little time, that only those Churches which embraced the Doctrines and Discipline authorised by Calvin, were called the Reformed Churches: those in high Germany and elsewhere which adhered to Luther, being generally called by no other name than the Lutherans, or the Lutheran Churches, as not reformed enough from the dregs of Rome. Then comes in his endeavours to promote that Platform in all other Churches, which he had calculated for the Meridian of Geneva only: commending it to Gasper Olevianus Minister of the Church of Triers, as appeareth by his Letters dated April the twelf 1560, congratulating the reception of it in the Churches of Poland, as appeareth by others of his Letters. And for the last help, comes in Beza, who not content to recommend it as convenient for the use of the Church (beyond which Calvin did not go) imposed it as a matter necessary upon all the Churches: ſo neceſſary, ut ab ea recedere non magis liceat, quam ab ipſius Religionis placitis; that it was utterly as unlawfull to recede from this, as from the moſt materiall points of the Chriſtian Faith. So he Epiſt. 83. By means whereof their followers in moſt of the Reformed Churches drove on ſo furiouſly, that rather than their Diſcipline ſhould not be admitted, and the Epiſcopall Government deſtroied in all the Churches of CHRIST, they were reſolved to depoſe Kings, ruin Kingdoms, and to ſubvert the fundamentall conſtitutions of all civill States. And hereunto their own Ambition gave them ſpur enough, affecting the ſupremacy in their ſeverall Pariſhes, that they themſelves might Lord it over Gods inheritance, under pretence of ſetting CHRIST upon his Throne. Upon which love to the preheminence, they did not only prate againſt the Biſhops, with malitious words (as Diotrephes for the ſame reaſon did againſt the Apoſtles) but not therewith content, neither would they themſelves receive them, nor permit them that would, caſting them out of the Church, with reproach and infamy. Which proud ambition in the ordinary Parochiall Miniſter, was cunningly fomented by ſome great perſons, and many Lay-Patrons in all places, who underhand aimed at a further end: the one to raiſe themſelves great fortunes out of Biſhops Lands; the other to keep thoſe Tythes themſelves, to which by the Law they only were to nominate ſome deſerving Perſon. Such were the helps by which this new device of Calvin was diſperſed and propagated. Geneva.

But to return unto Geneva, though Calvin for his time did hold the Chair as a perpetuall Moderator, and Beza too, untill Daneus ſet him beſides the Cuſhion: yet after that the power of the Presbyterie was ſhrewdly leſſened in Geneva, and the good Members ſo reſtrained in the exerciſe of it, that they have no power to convent any man before them, but by the autority of a Syndick or Civill Magiſtrate. And as for maintaince, they hold their Miniſters ſo ſtrictly to a ſorry pittance, as would be ſure to keep them from preſuming too much on their power in Conſiſtory. Tithes of all ſorts, were to be taken up for the uſe of the State, and layd up in the publick Treaſury; and ſtipends iſſued out to maintain the Miniſterie: but thoſe ſo mean, that Bezaes ſtipend whilſt he lived, hardly amounted to eighty pound per annum, the reſidue of the City-Miniſters not to ſixty pound, thoſe of the Villages adjoyning, having hardly forty pound, enough to keep them always poor, and miſerably obnoxious to the wealthier Citizen. And that they may not ſteal the Gooſe, and not ſtick up a feather, the State doth uſe to make ſome poor allowance to the wives and daughters of their deceaſed Miniſters, if they dye poor, or leave their children unprovided; or otherwiſe have deſerved well in the time of their lives. In reſpect hereof though the Miniſters are very ſtrict in forbidding Dancing, and have writ many Tracts againſt it; yet to give ſome content to the common people (who have not leaſure to attend it at other times) they allow all Man-like Exerciſes on the Lords-day, as ſhooting in peeces, long-bows, croſs-bows, and the like, and that too in the morning both before and after the Sermon; ſo it be no impediment to them from coming to the Church at the times appointed.

As for the Government of the State, it is directed principally by the Civill or Imperiall Laws; the Judge whereof is called the Leiutenant-criminall, before whom all cauſes are tryed, and from whom there lyeth no Appeal, unleſs it be unto the Counſell of two hundred, whom they call the Great Counſell, in which the ſupreme power of the State reſideth. Out of this Counſell of two hundred, there is choſen another leſſer Counſell of five and twenty, and out of them four principall Officers whom they call the Syndiques, who have the ſole managing of the Commonwealth, except it be in ſome great matter, as making Peace or War, offenſive or defenſive Leagues, hearing Appeales, and ſuch like generall concernments; which the great Counſell of two hundred muſt determine of. They have a cuſtom ſuperadded to the Civill Law, that if any Malefactor from another place fly to them for refuge, they puniſh him after the cuſtom of the place in which the crime was committed. Otherwiſe, their Town being on the borders of divers Provinces, would never be free from Vagabonds. Examples hereof I will aſſign two: the firſt of certain Monks, who robbing their Convents of certain plate, and hoping for their wicked pranks at home to be the welcomer hither, were at their firſt acquaintance advanced to the Gallows. The ſecond is of a Spaniſh Gentleman, who having fled his Country for clipping and counterfeiting the Kings Gold, came to this town, and had the like reward. And when for defence he alleged, that he underſtood their City being free, gave admiſſion to all Offenders; true (ſaid they) but with an intent to puniſh them that offended: a diſtinction which the Spaniard never till then learned, but then it was too late.

As for their ordinary Revenue, it is proportionable to their Territory, if not above it, conceived to amount to ſixty thouſand pound per annum, which they raiſe upon the demain of the Biſhop, and the Tithes of the Church, and on ſuch impoſitions as are layd upon fleſh and Merchandiſe. But they are able to raiſe greater ſums if there be occaſion, as appears plainly by the ſending of 45000 Crowns to King Henry the third, before they had been long ſetled in their own eſtates.

And as for Military forces, they are able to impreſs two thouſand men, and have Arms of all ſorts for ſo many in the publick Arſenall: as alſo twelve or fourteen peeces of Ordnance, with all manner of Ammunition appertaining to them; and on the Lake ſome Gallies in continuall readineſs againſt the dangers threatned them from the Dukes of Savoy. And for the

the greater ſafety of their Eſtate, and the preſervation of their Religion, they joyned themſelves in a conſtant and perpetuall League with the Canton of Bern, An. 1528, communicating to each other the Freedom of their ſeverall Cities; and by that means, are reckoned for a member of the Commonwealth of the Switzers, which is no ſmall ſecurity to their affairs. But their chief ſtrength, as I conceive, is that the neighbor Princes are not willing to have it fall into the hands of that Duke, or any other Potentate of more ſtrength than he. Inſomuch that vvhen that Duke beſieged it, An. 1589, they were ayded from Venice with four and twenty thouſand, and from England with thirteen thouſand Crowns, from Florence with Intelligence of the Enemies purpoſes. Another time, when the Pope, the French King, the Spaniard, and Savoyard had deſigns upon it; the Emperor offered them aſſiſtance both of Men and Money: yea and ſometimes the Dukes of Savoy have aſſiſted them againſt the others, as being more deſirous that the Town ſhould remain as it doth, than fall into any other hands than his own. So ordinary a thing it is for ſuch petit States, to be more ſafe by the intereſs of their jealous neighbors, than any forces of their ovvn.

4. WALLISLAND.

EAſtward from Savoy in a long and deep bottom of the Alpes Pœninæ, lyeth the Country of WALLISLAND, ſo called either quaſi Wallenſland, or the land of the Valenſes, once the Inhabitants of the Country about Martinacht, a chief Town hereof; or quaſi Vallis-land, or the Land of Vallies, of which it totally conſiſts. It reacheth from the Mountain de Furcken to the Town of Saint Maurice, where again the hills do cloſe, and ſhut up the valley; which is ſo narrow in that place, that a bridge layd from one hill to another (under which the River Rhoſne doth paſs) is capable of no more than one Arch onely, and that defended with a Caſtle and two ſtrong Gates. On other parts it is environed with a continuall wall of ſteep and horrid Mountains, covered all the year long with a cruſt of Ice, not paſſable at all by Armies, and not without much difficulty by ſingle paſſengers; ſo that having but that one entrance to it, which before we ſpake of, no Citadell can be made ſo ſtrong by Art, as this whole Country is by Nature. But in the bottom of thoſe craggy and impaſſable Rocks lies a pleaſant Valley, fruitfull in Saffron, Corn, Wine, and moſt delicate fruits, and happily enriched with Meadows, and moſt excellent Paſtures, which yeeld a notable increaſe of Cheeſe and Butter: And in the Countrey about Sion they diſcovered in the year 1544 a Fountain of Salt; and have alſo many hot Bathes and medicinall waters very wholſom. Of Springs and River-water they are very deſtitute, having ſcarce any but what they fetch from the Rhoſne vvith a great deal both of charge and trouble (the common people uſing ſnow-water for the moſt part for domeſtick uſes) which made one pleaſantly obſerve, that they pay there dearer for their water than they do for their Wine. Cattell they have ſufficient to ſerve their turn, and amongſt others, a wild Buck, equall to a Stag in bigneſs, footed like a Goat, and horned like a fallow Deer, leaping with vvonderfull agility from one precipice to another, and ſo not eaſily caught but in Summer time; for then the heat of that ſeaſon makes him blind.

It is divided into the Upper and the Lower Walliſland; the Upper lying towards the Mountain de Furcken, in the very bottom of the Valley; and the Lower ſtretching out to the Town of Saint Maurice, which is at the opening of the ſame: the length of both ſaid to be five ordinary daies journey, but the bredth not anſwerable. The Upper Walliſland containeth the ſeven Reſorts of 1 Sion, or Sedune, 2 Leuck, 3 Brig, 4 Nies, 5 Rawren, 6 Sider, 7 Gombes; in which are reckoned thirty Pariſhes: the Lower comprehending the ſix Reſorts of 1 Gurdis, 2 Ardoa, 3 Sallien, 4 Martinacht, 5 Jutremont, and 6 Saint Maurice; in which are 24 Pariſhes. The people in both parts ſaid to be courteous towards ſtrangers, but very rough and churliſh towards one another.

The ſeverall Reſorts before mentioned are named according to the names of their principall Towns; which according to their reckoning are thirteen in number. The chief of which are 1 Sedunum, Sittim or Sion; a Biſhops See, ſuffragan to the Metropolitan of Tarentuiſe; the chief of all this little Country: of no great beauty in it ſelf, but neat and gallant in reſpect of the Towns about it. Situate in a Plain on the River of Rhoſne, under a Mountain of tvvo tops; on the one of which, being the lower, is ſeated the Cathedrall Church, and the Canons houſes; and on the other, looking downwards with a dreadfull precipice, a very ſtrong Caſtle, the dwelling place of the Biſhop in the heats of Summer: which being built upon an hill of ſo great an height, and of ſo hazardous an aſcent, is impoſſible almoſt to be took by force; the ſharpneſs of the Rocks keeping it from the danger of aſſaults, and the highneſs of the hill from the reach of Gun-ſhot. 2 Marchinacht, by Cæſar called Octodurus, and Civitas Valenſium by Antoninus, remarkable for its antiquity only. 3 Saint Maurice, or Saint Morits, antiently Augaunum, the Key of the whole Country, but in Winter eſpecially, vvhen all all the other passages are so frozen up, that there is no other entrance but by the Bridge at this Town: which for that cause is very well manned and fortified to avoyd surprisall; and therefore also chosen for the seat of the Governour of the Lower Wallisland. Switzerland.

This Country now called Wallisland, is in most Latin Writers called by the name of Valesia, but corruptly, as I think, for Vulensia, as the Dutch or English name for Wallinsland: which name I should conceive it took from the Valenses, the old inhabitants of this valley, of whom Octodurus (now called Marchinacht) is by Antoninus made to be the Metropolis or principall City. It was made subject to the Romans by Julius Cæsar, at such time as the Helvetians were conquered by him: and falling with the Western parts of the Roman Empire unto Charles the great, was by him given to Theodulus Bishop of Sion, An. 805. Under his successors they continue to this very day; but so, as that the Deputies of the seven Resorts have not only voyces with the Canons in his Election, but being chosen and invested into the place, they joyn with him also in the Diets for chooſing Magistrates, redressing grievances, and determining matters of the State. The Lower Wallisland obeyeth the upper, made subject by long War, and the chance of Victory, and hath no sway at all in the publick Government, but takes for Law that which their Governours agree of. The same Religion is in both, being that of Rome. For maintainance whereof they combined themselves with the seven Popish Cantons of Switzerland, An. 1572, or thereabouts: as also for their mutuall defence and preservation against Forein Enemies, and keeping amitie and concord amongst one another.

5. SWITZERLAND

NExt unto Wallisland lyeth the Country of the SWITZERS, having on the East, the Grisons, and some part of Tirol, in Germany; on the West, the Mountain Jour, and the Lake of Geneve, which parts it from Savoy and Burgundy; on the North, Suevia or Sewaben, another Province also of the upper Germany; and on the South, Wallisland and the Alpes, which border on the Dukedom of Millain.

The whole Country heretofore divided into three parts onely, that is to say, 1 Azgow, so called from the River Aar, whose chief Town was Lucern. 2 Wislispurgergow, so called from Wislispurg an old Town thereof, the chief City whereof is Bern. And 3 Zurichgow, so named from Zurich, both formerly and at this present the Town of most note in all this Tract; but since the falling off of these Countries from the house of Austria, divided into many Cantons and other members; of which more anon.

It is wholly in a manner over-grown with craggy Mountains, but such as for the most part have grassie tops, and in their bottoms afford rich Meadows, and nourishing pastures, which breed them a great stock of Cattell, their greatest wealth. And in some places yeelds plenty of very good Wines, and a fair increase of Corn also, if care and industry be not wanting on the Husband-mans part, but neither in so great abundance as to serve all necessary uses, which want they doe supply from their neighbouring Countries. And though it stand upon as high ground as any in Christendom, yet is no place more stored with Rivers, and capacious Lakes, which doe not onely yeeld them great aboundance of Fish, but serve the people very well in the way of Traffick to disperse their severall Commodities from one Canton to another. Of which the principall are, Bodensee, and the Lake of Cell, made by the Rhene; Genser see, or the Lake of Geneve, by the Rhosne; Walldstet see, and the Lake of Lucern, made by the Russe; Namonburger and Bieter sees, by the Orbe; and Zurich see, by the River of Limat, or Limachus.

It is in length two hundred and forty miles, an hundred and eighty in bredth: conceived to be the highest Countrey in Europe (as before is sayd) the Rivers which do issue from it running thorow all quarters of the same, as Rhene thorough France and Belgium, North; Po, thorough Italie to the South; Rhodanus, thorough part of France to the Western Ocean; and the Inn, which fallling into the Danubius passeth thorow Germany and Hungary into Pontus Euxinus.

And as the Country is, such are the Inhabitants, of rude and rugged dispositions, more fit for Arms than any civill occupations, capable of toyl and labour, which the necessities of their Country doth inure them to, not able otherwise to afford them an hungry livelyhood: the poverty whereof makes them seek for service, which they shift and change according as they like the conditions of their entertainment; and having no way to vent their superfluous numbers by Navigation, are able to spare greater multitudes to a Forein War, than a man would easily imagine. In a word, the people are naturally honest, frugall, and industrious, impartiall in the administration of Justice, and great lovers of Liberty.

In matters of War, they were once of such a reputation, on the defeats given by them to Charles of Burgundy, that no Prince thought himself able to take the field, or stand his own ground ground in defence of his Dominions; if he had not Switzers in his Army: And to advance their reputation, the Wars which followed in Italie about the Dutchy of Millain, ſerved exceeding fitly. For being borderers on that Country, they could be hired better cheap by the French or Spaniard than any Army could be brought out of France or Spain. And having had ſome good ſucceſſes to increaſe their fame, they grew ſo terrible at laſt, that the Spaniards in the War of Guyen were more affraid of one band of Suiſſe, than of all the reſt of the French Army. But being found withall to be falſe and treacherous, and eaſily bought off by the better purſe (which they moſt evidently diſcovered in betraying Duke Lodowick Sforze, who had put himſelf and his eſtate into their hands) and thoſe Italian Wars growing unto an end, they did decay ſo faſt in their reputation, that firſt the neighbouring Princes could doe well without them, and at laſt uſed them not at all, or at leaſt very ſparingly. And now it is their honour that they are choſen of the Gaurd to the French King, and the Popes of Rome, and the Dukes of Genoa; and that the greateſt Princes of Europe give them yearly penſions. Which penſions were given heretofore to be aſſured of their ayd upon all occaſions, but now to keep them from engaging on the other ſide.

For matter of Religion, it is proportionably mixt, ſome of the Cantons being wholly Popiſh, ſome wholly Proteſtant; in others both Religions uſed promiſcuouſly. At firſt the differences were ſo eagerly purſued on both ſides, that notwithſtanding the mediation of ſome potent neighbours, it broke out into a Civil War; the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, and Zug (which the Latin Writers of this ſtory call the Quinquepagici) arming againſt Urich, Bern, and others which adhered to Zuinglius. In the beginning of which War, the Proteſtant party was diſcomfited, Zuinglius himſelf ſlain in the head of the battell, and his body burnt: his heart remaining in the middeſt of the fire, whole and untouched (as Arch-biſhop Cranmers alſo did) when all the reſt of his body was conſumed to aſhes. But thoſe of the Reformed party would not ſo give over: Another field they fought for it, and therein had the better of the adverſe party. Wearied at laſt with theſe reciprocall defeats, they agreed the buſineſs, indulging each to other the free exerciſe of their own Religions. So it continueth at this day, diverſitie of opinions not drawing them from a due care of the publick intereſſe, nor giving any interruption to that bond of peace which was ſo firmly knit amongſt them in their firſt confederacies.

Now for the body of their State, it conſiſts of three diſtinct parts, or members, which are to be conſidered in this diſcourſe; viz. the Swiſſe themſelves, the Prafectures which are ſubject to them, and the States that are confederate with them. The Swiſſe are ſubdivided into thirteen Cantons, that is to ſay Swits, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, Zug, Bern, Zurich, Baſil, Friburg, Soloturn, Apenzel, Glaris, and Schaffhauſen. Theſe properly make the body of that Commonwealth; enjoying many rights privileges and preheminences which the others do not, as power to determine of war and peace, to diſpoſe of the Prafectures, and divide amongſt themſelves the ſpoyl of the Enemy. The firſt confederacy was made betwixt the Cantons of Switz, and Underwald, An. 1315. Of which the Switz being the moſt potent, the moſt exaſperated, and that which did moſt hotly proſecute the combination, gave to the reſt the name of Switzers. Lucern was added to the three, An. 1332. Zug, Zurich, and Glaris, came not into the confederacy till the year 1351; nor Bern untill the year next after. Friburg and Soloturn came in An. 1481. Baſil and Schaffhauſen united with them in the year 1501. and Apenzel, which vvas the laſt which was admitted into their confederacie, An. 1511. So that there paſſed within little of two hundred years from the firſt beginning of theſe Leagues to the finiſhing of them.

The ſecond Member of this body are the Towns and States Confederates with them for the preſervation of their common Liberties, viz. the Town and Abbot of Saint Gall, the Towns of Rotwell, Mulhaſen, Nuwenberg, and Biel, ſituate on the Lake thence named; of which the firſt belonged heretofore to the Earls of Longeville in France, the latter to the Biſhops of Baſil; with the City and Signeury of Geneva: And of theſe, Rotwell and Mulhaſen are confederate with all the Cantons, the reſt with ſome particulars only. The Abbot of Saint Gall firſt entered into League with Zurich, Lucern, Switz, and Glaris, for the preſervation of his Lands and Towns then revolting from him: and the Town following his example, confederated with Zurich, Bern, Switz, Lucern, Zug, and Glaris, the better to preſerve themſelves from the power of their Abbot, who was before their naturall and immediate Lord. This was in Anno 1452. Rotwell and Mulhauſen two Imperiall Towns in the Province of Schawben confederated in a perpetuall League withall the Cantons, the firſt An. 1515. the other An. 1519, Nuwenberg, Biel, and Geneva, with Bern only.

As for the Trafectures of the Switzers, they are ſuch leſſer parcels and addiments as have accrewed to their Eſtate, and are ſubject unto their authority, either by gift, purchaſe, or the chance of war: ſome lying in Switzerland it ſelf, ſome amongſt other parts of the Alpes, and ſome in Italie. Theſe are the Towns and Countries of Baden, Brengarten, Millingen, Rappenſwyll, Wagenthall, interpoſed here and there amongſt the Switzers: the Town and Country of Sargans, lying amongſt the Rhætian Alpes, not far from the Griſons; and Rhineck, lying in a valley of the Alpes on the left ſhore of the Rhene, near the Lake of Conſtans; and finally nally the vallies of Locarno, Magia, and Lugano, Mendrisio, and Belinzano, situate in and amongst the Alpes, near the Dukedom of Millain, to vvhich they formerly belonged. Of which the Præfectures of Baden and Mellingen appertain to the eight first Cantons: Wagenthall, the Sargans, and Rheineck to the seven first Cantons: Rappenswill to Uren., Swits, Underwald, Glaris, and Turgow, unto the ten first Cantons; Belinzano to the three first only, and all the rest of the Italian Præfectures to the Cantons generally, excepting Apenzell, which was entred into the confederacy when these Præfectures were given unto the Switzers by Maximilian Sforza Duke of Millain, which was in An. 1513, some moneths before the taking in of Apenzel to the rest of the Cantons. Switzerland.

Such is the number of the Cantons, Prafectures, and States confederate, amongst all vvhich there are few Towns or Cities of any note: there being no City nor walled Town in the Cantons of Swits, Uren, Underwalden, Glaris, Apenzel, nor in any of the States confederate situate amongst the Switzers, but Saint Gall onely; nor in any of the Prafectures but that of Baden. So that the places worthy of consideration are not like to be many. Of those that are, the principall are, 1 Zurich, a large City, and a renowned University, situate on both sides of the River Limat, where it issueth out of the Lake called Zurich-See. It had antiently two Monasteries in it, in one of which Huldericus Zuinglius was a Canon, slain near this Town in the battell spoken of before, An. 1531. now giving name to the most honourable of the Cantons, to which belongeth the autority of summoning the generall Diets, as of those also of the Protestants, the Legates thereof presiding in both Assemblies. 2 Friburg, situate on the River Sana, on the declivity of an uneven and rocky hill, founded by Bertold the fourth Duke of Zuringen. 3 Solothurn, (the Solothurum of Antoninus) on the River of Aar, famous for the Martyrdom of S. Ursus, and his 66 Theban Souldiers, in the time of the Emperour Diocletian. A Town of great Antiquity, but not so old by far as the people make it; who would have it to be built in the time of Abraham. 4 Basil, so called either of a Basilisk slain at the building of the City, or of the German word Pasel, signifying a path; or of Βασιλεὺς signifying Kingly. It was built An. 382, and is famous for an University founded by Pius the second, Anno 1459. It was made a Canton An. 1501; and is honoured with the Sepulchers of Oecolampadius, Erasmus, Pontanus, Glarienus, and Hottoman, the famous Civilian. In this City, An. 1431. vvas held that notable Councill, wherein though the Papall authority was then at the height, it was decreed that a generall Councill was above the Pope. What was then enacted, was immediately put in practise; the Councill deposing Pope Eugenius the fourth, and placing in his room Amadeus Duke of Savoy, afterward called Felix the fourth, who having held the See nine years in a time of Schism, did willingly, in order to the peace of Christendom, resign the Popedom to Nicolas to sift, who had before been chosen by the opposite Faction. The City is great, rich, and populous, sometimes a Town Imperiall, still a Bishops See, the Bishop being subject to the Arch-Bishop of Besanson, in the County of Burgundie: seated upon the River Rhene (where it receiveth Weis and Byrsa, two lesser brooks) by which it is divided into the greater Basil lying towards France, and the lesser lying towards Germany. 5 Lucern, situate on both sides of the Russe, where it issueth out of the Lake of Lucern, so called from Lucerna, i.e. the Lantern, which was placed here on an high Tower, to give light to Water-men in the night. A City well traded, and frequented by strangers, because the ordinary road from Germany into Italie, passing from hence thorow the Country of the Grisons; and in regard that the Diets for the Popish Cantons, which heretofore were held at Uren, are removed hither. Not far from this Town is the Mountain called Pilates hill, of Pontius Pilate, whose ghost (as the common people are made to beleeve) doth walk once a year on the banks of this Lake, in his Judges Robes. And to be sure the fiction shall not be confuted, they adde, that whosoever seeth him shall die that year. 6 Bern, compassed almost round with the River Aar, and taking up the whole extent of a little mountain: the houses of free-stone, neatly and uniformly built. A Town which gives name to the largest and most potent of all the Cantons, and one of the first which did embrace the Reformation, and the first of all which purged it self of Images, those excellent Instruments of Superstition and Idolatry, defaced here in a popular tumult, An. 1548. 7 Lausanna in the Canton of Bern, a Bishops See, Suffragan to the Arch-Bishop of Besanson, seated on the banks of the Lake of Lemane, and compassed with mountains alwaies covered with snow, which open themselves on the East side onely, which is towards Italie. 8 Schaffhausen, the only Town of all the Cantons, which lyeth on the other side of the Rhene, of right belonging unto Suevia, or Seawben, a Province of Germany, and reckoned as a part thereof, before it was incorporated into this Confederacy.

Next for the Prafectures, and confederate States, they have not many Towns of note (excepting Rotwell, and Mulhusen two Imperiall Cities, which properly belong to another place.) Of those which be the principall amongst the Confederates, lying within the bounds of this Country, is the Town of Saint Gall (Sengall as they corruptly call it) an Imperiall City, situate amongst the Mountains near the Boden-Zee: A rich, populous, and well-governed Town, taking name from the Monastery of S. Gall, a famous Scot, and the Apostle of those parts, An. 630, or thereabouts; the Abbat of which having great possessions in this tract (before Apenzell, and this Town revolted from him) was a Prince of the Empire. The Anabaptists were once very prevalent here, insomuch that one of them cut off his brothers head in the presence of his Father and Mother, and ſayd (according to the humor of that ſect, who boaſt much of dreams, viſions, and Enthuſiaſms) that God commanded him ſo to doe. The principal amongſt the Prafectures is the Town of Baden, or (to difference it from Baden a Marquiſate in Germany) the Upper Baden, ſeated on a little Mountain near the River Limat, almoſt in the middle of the Countrey; and for that cauſe the place of meeting for the Councell of Eſtate of all the Confederates. It taketh name from the Bathes here being, two of which onely are publick, the reſt in private houſes: conſcious, as it is thought, to much laſciviouſneſs. For whereas it is ſaid of Adrian, that Lavacra pro ſexibus ſeparavit; here men and women promiſcuouſly Bath together; and which is worſt, in private: where, as Munſter telleth us, Cernunt viri uxores tractari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, & quidem ſolam cum ſolo; and yet are not any of them diſturbed with jealouſie. Theſe Bathes are much frequented, yet not ſo much for health as pleaſure. Their chiefeſt vertue is the quickning power they have upon barren women. But as the Friers uſe to ſend men whoſe wives are fruitleſs, in pilgrimage to Saint Joyce, the Patroneſs of fruitfulneſs, and in the mean time to lye with their wives: ſo it may be with good reaſon thought, that in a place of ſuch Liberty as this is, the luſty and young gallants that haunt this place, produce greater operation on barren women, than the waters of the Bath it ſelf. No other Town of eminent note amongſt the Prafectures of the Swiſſes, except Rheineck it ſelf, the ſeat of the Governour for the Switzers, ſituate near the Lake of Conſtance: and none of any note at all amongſt the Italian Prafectures, except Belinzana, and Locarno, neither of them containing 400 Houſes, and thoſe none of the handſomeſt.

Within the limits of this Country, and in that part thereof which was called Argow, containing the now Cantons of Uren, Swits, Underwald, Glarona, and Lucern; with ſome of the adjoyning parts of Germany, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Savoy; did ſometimes ſtand the famous and renowned Caſtle of Habſpurg, from the Lords whereof the houſe of Auſtria, and moſt of the Kings and Princes of the Chriſtian World doe derive themſelves. Firſt founded, as ſome ſay, by Ottopert the third Prince of this line, at or before the year 700, as others ſay by Rapato the ſonne of Betzeline, about the year 1020. Situate on the River Aar (by the Latins called Arula) near a Town called Bruck; now ſo decaied, that there is no tracing of the ruins. Preſerved in memory by the Lords and Princes of it, deſcended in a direct line from Sigebert the eldeſt ſonne of Theodebert King of Mets or Auſtraſia; firſt ſetled in theſe parts by Clotaire the ſecond King of the French, with the title, as ſome ſay, of Duke of Upper Almain (the Lower Almain being that which is novv called Suevia or Sohwaben, an adjoyning Province of Germany.) Being ſoon weary of that empty, but invidious title, they were ſometimes called Earls of Habſpurg, by the name of this Caſtle; ſometimes Earls of Altemburg, another Caſtle not far off, of their own foundation. And after cloſing in with the Kings of Burgundie Transjurane, and the German Emperors, they received of them a great part of the Country of Argow, from which ſome of them were called Earls of Argow. Not known diſtinctly by the title of Earls of Habſpurg, till the time of Rapato above-mentioned, when thoſe of Altemburg and Argow became diſcontinued. Howſoever, we will here lay down the whole ſucceſſion of this famous Family, either Earls, or the Progenitors of.

The Earls of Habſpurg.

635 1 Sigibert, ſonne of Theodebert King of Mets, by Clotaire the ſecond of that name, French King, diſpoſſeſſed of the kingdom of his Father, and afterwards by him indowed with a great part of thoſe Countries which are now called Switzerland; with the title of Duke of Upper Almain.

2 Sigibert II. ſonne of Sigibert the firſt, Duke of Upper Almain.

3 Ottopert, or Otbert, the ſonne of Sigibert the ſecond, the founder, as ſome ſay, of the Caſtles of Altemburg, and Habſpurg, of which promiſcuouſly called Earl.

4 Bebo, the ſonne of Ottopert, the laſt Duke of Upper Almain, which title he exchanged for that of Earl of Altemburg, and Habſpurg.

5 Robert, or Rother, as ſome call him, the ſonne of Bebo, Earl of Altemburg.

766 6 Hertopert, the ſonne of Robert, who added unto his Eſtate that part of Scwaben, or Suevia, which is called Briſgow.

7 Rampert, the ſonne of Hertopert, who flouriſhed An. 814, at what time he procured the Canonization of S. Trutpertus.

8 Guntram, the ſonne of Rampert, Earl of Altemburg.

9 Luithard, the ſonne of Guntram.

999 10 Luitfride, the ſonne of Luithard.

929 11 Hunifride, the ſonne of Luitfride, who added unto his Eſtates the Territory now called Sungow, bordering on Alſatia, a Province of Germany; recovered after his deceaſe by the Dukes of Scwaben.

950 12 Guntram II. ſonne of Hunifride, the firſt who took unto himſelf the title of Earl of Argow: from whoſe ſecond ſonne named Berthild, deſcended the Dukes or Earls of Zeringen, poſſeſſed of almoſt all Briſgow, and good part of Switzerland.

13 Betzo, or Betzeline, ſonne of Guntram the ſecond, Earl of Argow.
14 Rapato, ſonne of Betzeline, the founder or repairer of the Caſtle of Habſpurg, from whence both he and his ſucceſſors were conſtantly called Earls of Habſpurg. Great Grand-father, by Theoderick his youngeſt ſonne, of Rodolph Earl of Rhinefelden, and Duke of Schawben, elected Emperor (at the inſtigation of the Pope) againſt Henry the fourth. Switzerland.
15 Warner, by ſome called Berengar, or Berengarius, the ſonne of Rapato.
1096 16 Otho, the ſonne of Warner or Berengar.
1108 17 Warner II. ſonne of Otho, enriched by the Emperor Henry the fourth, with ſome fair Eſtates belonging to the Dukes of Schawben.
18 Albert, the ſonne of Warner the ſecond, ſurnamed the Rich.
19 Albert II. ſurnamed the Wiſe, ſonne of Albert the firſt, added to his Eſtates all the Upper Alſatia, which he had by the right of Hedwigis his wife, daughter and heir of Simon, the laſt Earl thereof.
1238 20 Rodolph, the fortunate ſonne of Albert the ſecond, elected Emperor of the Romans, An. 1273. Of which he made ſo good advantage, that he added unto his Eſtates the great Dukedom of Auſtria, with all the incorporate Provinces thereunto belonging, and layd the firſt foundation of the Auſtrian greatneſs; of which more in Germany.

Having on the occaſion of theſe Earles of Habſpurg, beheld ſo much of the affairs of this Country, as related to that puiſſant and illuſtrious Family, let us go forward to the reſt: firſt taking in our way the antient Eſtate hereof in the time of the Romans. At what time this whole mountainous tract, containing many ſeverall Nations (ſome of them ſpoken of before) vvas comprehended under the generall name and notion of the Helvetii; the greateſt and moſt populous of all the reſt: ſo called, as Verſtegan will have it, quaſi Hil-Vites, or the Vites of the Mountains, to difference them from the Vites of the lower parts, inhabiting in that part of the Cimbrick Cherſonneſe, which is now called Jutland. Grown by long peace, and want of opportunity by traffick into forein parts, to ſo great a multitude, that the Country, barren of it ſelf, was no longer able to maintain them, they ſet fire on their Towns and Houſes, and with a generall reſolution went to ſeek new dwellings. The totall number of men, women and children, which went upon this deſperate action, are ſayd to have amounted to the number of 3680000, whereof 900000 were fighting men. They had not long before overthrown L. Caſſius a Roman Conſul, ſlain the Conſul himſelf, and ſold his Souldiers for Bond-ſlaves: upon the apprehenſion of which good ſucceſs, they thought no body able to withſtand them: But they found Ceſar of a ſtronger metall than L. Caſſius. Who having ſtopped their paſſage by hewing down the bridge of Geneva, till he was grown ſtrong enough to bid them battell, ſo waſted them in ſeverall skirmiſhes and defeats, that they were forced to crave leave of him to go home again, and to rebuild thoſe Towns and Villages which they had deſtroyed before this enterpriſe; which he upon deliverie of Hoſtages did vouchſafe to grant. It is conceived, that at the leaſt two Millions of them periſhed in this journey, not ſo much by the ſword (though that ſpared them not) as for want of neceſſaries. After this they continued Members of the Roman Empire, till conquered in the times of Honorius and Valentinian the third, by the Burgundians and Almans, betwixt whom divided, the River Ruſs parting their dominions. From them being taken by the French, it was made a part of the Kingdom of Burgundie; ſome parts firſt taken out, and given to the Progenitors of the Earls of Habſpurg, as before was noted. Given with the reſt of that Kingdom to the Emperor Conrade the ſecond, by Rodolph the laſt King thereof: parcelled out by the German Emperors (as their cuſtom was) into divers States; moſt of the which were drawn in by the Dukes of Schawben, the Earls of Habſpurg, and the Dukes of Zezingen; as afterwards in the fall of the one, and as heirs to the other, by the Dukes of Auſtria. But being at laſt over-burdened by the tyrannie of thoſe Governors, whom the Dukes of Auſtria ſent among them; ſeeing withall the Empire by the Popes Fulminations diſtracted into many Factions, and the Auſtrian Family weakned by a ſub-diviſion of that great Eſtate into many parcels; they contracted an Offenſive and Defenſive League amongſt themſelves for defeuce of their Liberty, into which firſt entred thoſe of Switz, Uren, and Underwalden, An° 1316. Not all united into one Confederation till the year 1511, as before was noted. At their firſt beginning to take Arms, Frederick, one of the many Dukes of Auſtria (to whoſe ſhare they fell) ſent his ſonne Leopald againſt them with a puiſſant Army; which they encountred with near Sempuch, a village of the now Canton of Lucern, and there overthrevv him: but more by the convenience of thoſe narrow paſſages, thorough which his Army vvas to march, than by any valour: In which it was no ſmall help to them, that the waies were all ſo filled with Ice, that he was able to do no ſervice with his Horſe; and his ſouldiers ſo amazed at the preſent difficulties, that the Confederates only caſting ſtones on them from the tops of the Mountains, made them leap into the Lakes adjoyning.

Having thus cleared themſelves of the Houſes of Auſtria, they continued in a Free-Eſtate, but never came to any reputation by their valour, till the War which Charles Duke of Burgundy made againſt them, whom they diſcomfited in three ſet battels. A War begun on very ſmall occasions, and less hopes: the Countrey being so barren, and the people so poor, that their Ambassador to the Duke (as Comines reporteth) protested, that if all their Countrey-men were taken, they would not be able to pay a ransom, to the value of the spurs and bridle-bits in his Camp. Certainly at that time they were so poor, that they knew not what riches was; for having won the first battell at Granson (the other two were those of Morat and Nancie) one of the goodliest Pavillions in the World was by them torn into peeces, and turned into breeches and side-coats: divers silver plates and dishes they sold for a French Sous (each Sous a little more than an English penny) supposing them to be but pewter; and a great Diamond of the Dukes, which was the goodliest Jewell in Christendom, was sold to a Priest, for a Guilder; and by him again to some of the Lords of the Country, for three Franks. After their valour shewed in these battels, Lewis the 11. took them into pension, giving them yearly forty thousand Crowns, viz. twenty thousand to the Cities, and twenty thousand to particular persons; and bowed so much beneath the Majesty of the most Christian King, as to term himself one of the Bourgesses of their Corporation; and to contend with the Duke of Savoy, which of them should be held for their first Allie. By these arts, and the nearness of their Forces for those occasions, he wrested Burgundie out of the hands of Mary the daughter of Charles; and Lewis the twelfth won Millain from Ludowick Sforze, whom they perfidiously betrayed, as was said before. Upon the merit of these services, they required an Augmentation of their pensions; which when this Lewis the twelfth denied, they withdrew themselves from the Amity of the French, and entred into the service of Pope Julio the second, who therefore stiled them the Defenders of the Church, An. 1510. The fruits of which entertainment was the defeat of the whole forces of King Lewis, and the loss of Millain, into which Maximilian Sforze, the sonne of Ludowick was solemnly re-instated by the Confederates: who to oblige the Switzers more firmly to him, gave them those Towns and Vallies in the Alpes of Italy (formerly members of that Dukedom) which now belong unto the Switzers, reckoned amongst the Prafectures of their Commonwealth. Francis the first, in pursuance of his claim to Millain, gave them a great and memorable overthrow at the battell of Marignan; yet afterwards considering what damage his Realm had sustained by the revolt of these Auxiliaries to his Enemies, he renewed the Confederation with them, on condition that he should restore the antient pension of forty thousand Crowns; secondly, that he should pay unto them at certain terms, six hundred thousand Crowns; thirdly, that he should entertain four thousand of them in his pay continually; fourthly, that for the restoring of such places as they had taken from the Dutchy of Millain, he should give unto them thirty thousand Crowns; fiftly, that he should give them three moneths pay before-hand; sixtly and lastly, that Maximilian Sforze, whom they had estated in Millain, and were now going to dispossess, might by the King be created Duke of Nemours, endowed with twelve thousand Frankes of yearly revenue, and maried to a daughter of the blood royall. On these conditions, as honourable to them as burdensom to the King, was the League renewed An. 1522: since which time, they have obtained, that six hundred of their Country are to be of the French Kings Guard: five hundred of which wait without at the gates of the Court; the other hundred in the great Hall. And yet the French Kings did not so ingross the Market though they raised the price of the commodity, but that all other Princes might have them also for their money: the Kings of Spain and others bidding fair for them, but never going so high as the French had done. At last, upon the differences which grew amongst themselves in point of Religion, they grew to be divided also in point of Pension: the Popish Cantons taking pensions of the Pope and the King of Spain, the Protestants of the French, the mixt of both, and all of the Venetians. By which means, being bribed and corrupted by all, they came in very little time to be trusted of none. Which sudden sinking of that fame and reputation which they had attained to, together with the reasons of it, that notable Statesman and Historian Guicciardine doth describe, as followeth: "The name (saith he) of this wild and uncivill Nation "hath got great honour by their concord, and glory by Arms. For being fierce by nature, in- "ured to War, and exact keepers of Military discipline, they have not onely defended their "own Country, but have won much praise in forein parts, which doubtless had been greater, "if they had sought to inlarge their own Empire, and not for wages to inlarge the Empire of "others; and if nobly they had propounded unto themselves any other ends than the gain of "mony, by the love whereof being made abject, they have lost the opportunity of becomming "fearfull to Italy. For since they never came out of their confines but as mercenarie men, they "have had no publick fruit of their Victories: but by their covetousness have become intolle- "rable in their exactions where they overcame, and in their demands with other men; yea, "at home froward and obstinate in their conclusions, as well as in following their commands "under whose pay they serve in War. Their chief men have pensions of severall Princes to "favour them in their publick meetings: and so private profit being preferred before the "good of the publick, they are apt to be corrupted, and fall at discord amongst them- "selves, with great lessening of the reputation which they had gotten amongst strangers. So he, relating the affairs of the year 1511, which the following issue of affairs hath fully verified.

As for the Government of this State, it is meerly popular, and that not only in the particular Cantons, Cantons, but the aggregate body of their Counſell : the Gentry and Nobility being either rooted up in thoſe long Wars which were betwixt them and their Vaſſals, juſtly provoked by thoſe intollerable preſſures and exactions which they layd upon them ; or elſe worn out of memory and obſervation, for want of ſway and ſuffrage in the Counſels of the Common-wealth. Only in Schaffehauſen, Baſil, and Zuvich, are ſome Gentry left, not capable of any place or ſuffrage in the Senate of the ſaid Cantons (from which they are excluded by the common people, becauſe they joyned not with them in their firſt revolt) unleſs they waive their Gentry, and be enrolled amongſt the number of Plebeians. The reſt they have (it ſeemeth) in ſo poor eſteem, that Porters and Mechanicks of the meaneſt Trades, in all occaſions of War are numbred with, and amongſt theſe Gentlemen, making up one ſociety onely, and joyning with them in electing the Maſter of their company, who is one of the Senate. But becauſe that every Canton hath its proper Magiſtrates, but more or fewer, according as it is in greatneſs, or in the number of its ſeverall Reſorts, or ſub-diviſions ; it will not be amiſs to ſhew what number of Reſorts are in every Canton ; that is to ſay, in Underwalden only two, in Switz ſix, in Uren ten, in Zug five, in Glaris or Glarona fifteen, in Apenzel ſix, in Lucern ſeven, in Solothurn no more than one, in Friburg ninteen, in Baſil and Schaffhauſen but one a peece (the Cantons there and in Solothurn, reaching but little further than the Towns themſelves) in that of Zurich thirty one, and thirty in that of Bern ; in all, one hundred forty and eight. Of theſe conſiſts the body of this Common-wealth. In ordering whereof, every particular Canton hath its proper Magiſtrate, choſen by the commonalty of that Canton (whom they call the Wuaman) together with a ſtanding Counſell aſſiſtant to him, choſen out of the people, for the directing and diſpoſing of their lovvn affairs ; which meet and ſit in the chief Town or Village of that Diſtrict. But if the cauſe concern the Publick, then every Canton ſendeth one or more Commiſſioners to the generall Diets, where they determine of the buſineſs which they meet about, according to the major part of the Votes : the Commiſſioners of every Canton having one Vote only, though many may be ſent from each, to adde the greater weight to their conſultations. The place of meeting is moſt commonly at the Town of Baden, in reſpect of the commodity of the Inns and houſes, the pleaſant ſituation, and famous Medicinall Bathes ; and becauſe it is ſeated in the very center of Switzerland, and ſubject to the eight firſt Cantons. And here they do determine of War, Peace, and Leagues ; of making Laws ; of ſending, receiving, and anſwering Ambaſſadors ; of Governments, and diſtributing the publick Offices ; and finally of difficult cauſes, and Appeales referred unto the judgement of the great Counſell. In which the City of Zurich, chief of the Cantons, hath the firſt place, not by antiquity, but dignity, and of old cuſtom hath the greateſt authority of calling together this Great Counſell, ſignifying by Letters to each Canton, the cauſe, time, and place of meeting ; yet ſo, that if any Canton think it for the publick good to have an extraordinary meeting of their Commiſſioners, they write to them of Zurich to appoint the ſame. That which the greater number do reſolve upon, is without delay put in execution. Switzerland.

The Forces of theſe Suiſſe conſiſt altogether of Foot, Horſe being found unſerviceable in theſe Mountainous Countries. And of theſe Foot, Boterus reckoneth that they are able to raiſe ſixſcore thouſand. Which poſſibly may be true enough, if it be underſtood of all that be able to bear Arms. For otherwiſe de facto, the greateſt Army that ever they brought into the field, conſiſted but of one and thirty thouſand men, which was that wherewith they aided the confederate States of Italie againſt the French, and reſtored Maximilian Sforze to the Dukedom of Millain. Their ordinary ſtanding Forces are conceived to be ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand, which they may bring into the field, leaving their Towns and Forts well furniſhed. And for their Revenue, it is not like to be very great, conſidering the poverty of their Country, and their want of traffick with other Nations. That which is ordinary and in common, ariſeth out of the Annuall penſions which they receive from Forein States, the profits ariſing out of their Dutch and Italian Præfectures, the Impoſt layd on Wines ſold in Taverns, and Corn uſed by Bakers, and the rents of a diſſolved Monaſterie called Kings field (or Conings field) becauſe many Kings and Queens have been cloyſtered there, amounting to forty thouſand Guldens yearly. Which Monaſtery was built in the year 1380, in memory and honour of the Emperor Albertus ſlain by his Nephew at Santback, not far from Baſil. Their extraordinary doth conſiſt of ſpoyles that be gotten in the War ; which if it be managed in common, are divided in common ; but if by two or three of the Cantons onely, the reſt can claim no ſhare in the booty gotten.

But this is only in relation to the Switzers themſelves. For otherwiſe taking in the Confederate States, as well without, as within the bounds of that Country, they are able to raiſe fifty or threeſcore thouſand men : that is to ſay, the Switzers themſelves ſeventeen thouſand, the Griſons ten thouſand, thoſe of Walliſland ſix thouſand, the Abbot and Town of S. Gall four thouſand, the City of Geneva two thouſand, beſides what Rotwel and Mulhuſen, two Imperial Cities, are able to contribute towards it ; the Dukes of Savoy being bound by their antient Leagues to ayd them with ſix hundred Horſes at his own charges ; beſides two thouſand ſix hundred Crowns in Annuall penſions. But the Revenue of thoſe States is ordered by it ſelf a part, and never comes within the computation of the publick ; unleſs it be on the repulſing of a com-

Grisons. mon Enemy, in which they are equally concerned. In which case, and others of a generall interesse, they communicate both heads and purses: the Delegates and Commissioners of all the States of this Confederacy, meeting together to consult of the common cause, which meeting they entitle the Greatest Counsell. But this is very seldom held, publick affairs being generally ordered by the Commissioners of the Switzers only: though they themselves disclaim that name of Switzers as too mean and narrow, and call themselves Eidgenossen, that is to say, Partakers of the sworn Leagues. More of this Common-wealth he that lists to see, may satisfie himself in Simler, who purposely and punctually hath described the same.

6. THE LEAGUES OF THE GRISONS.

THE Country of the GRISONS comprehendeth all that part of the Alpes, which lyeth between the Springs of the Rivers Rhene, Inn, Adice or Athesis, and Adua: being bounded on the East, with the Country of Tirol; on the West, with Switzerland; on the North, with Suevia or Schwaben, and a part of the Switzers; on the South, with Lombardy. A Country far more mountainous than any of this Alpine tract, and having less naturall commodities to boast it self of, more than the Fountains of those Rivers before mentioned.

The people of it by most Latin Writers of these times are called by the name of Rheti, the Country Rhetia; and so far properly enough, as that the antient Rhati did inhabit all the lands possessed by the Grisons, though the Grisons do not inhabit a fourth part of those lands, which were possessed heretofore by the antient Rhati: For antiently the Rhati did extend their dwellings as far as from the Alpes of Italie to the River of Danow; comprehending besides this of the Grisons, a great part of Suevia or Schwaben, Tirol, Bavaria, and so much also of the Switzers as was not in possession of the old Helvetii. Within which tract there were not only many rich vallies and fruitfull fields; but a most pleasant race of Wines called Vina Rhetica; much drank of by Augustus Cæsar, and by him preferred before all others; which no man can conceive to grow in this barren Country. More properly Ammianus Marcellinus calleth this Tract by the name of Campi Canini, mountainous fields, which the continuall snow made look of an hoary hew: and by allusion thereunto, the Dutchmen call this Nation at the present by the name of Graunpuntner, that is to say, the hoary or gray Confederates.

As for the Rhati, take them in the former latitude, they were subdued by Drusus and Tiberius the sonnes-in-law, and adopted children, of Augustus Cæsar, A. V. C. 739. And in the time of Antoninus made up two Provinces of the Empire, viz. Rhetia prima, and Rhetia secunda, both of them appertaining by Constantines new model to the Diocese of Italie. A Nation in the first original, of Italian race, and so more properly to be assigned to that Diocese: but had inhabited this tract, from the time that Bellovesus the Gall seized on part of Tuscany, expelling thence the antient inhabitants thereof: who under the conduct of Rhætus, a great man amongst them, possessed themselves of these mountains, and afterwards of the vales adjoyning, which they called Rhetia, by the name of their Captain Generall. This hapned in the time of Tarquinius Priscus, in the first cradle as it were of the Roman Empire: in the declining age whereof, during the reign of Valentinian the third, and Anastasius, those parts which lay neerest unto Germany, and were worth the conquering, were subdved by the Almains and Boiarians, by them incorporated with the rest of their severall States. The residue of this mountainous tract, as not worth the looking after, continued a member of the Empire, till given by Charles the Great to the Bishop of Chur, whose successors, being several waies molested by their potent neighbors, confederated with the Switzers for their mutuall ayd and preservation, An. 1497. By whose ayd they so valiantly made good their ground against the Austrians, that at the last, after the loss of 20000 men on both sides, the points in difference were accorded, and a peace concluded.

This is the substance of this story, as to former times; to which there cannot much be added in the way of History, little or no alteration hapning in their affairs, but a more perfect setling of them in a form of Government. Concerning which we must observe that this whole Tract is cast into three Divisions, that is to say, the Upper League or Liga Grisa. 2 Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the house of God. 3 The Lower League, called also Liga dattare, or the League of the ten Commonalties. The eight Italian Prafectures will make a fourth. Their buildings generally in the three first being cold and mountainous, are of free-stone, but low, and for three parts of the year covered with snow; the windows thereof glazed and large, of which, for the said three parts of the year they only open a little quarrie of glass, and presently shut it close again; the outside of the windows having leaves of wood, to keep the heat heat of their ſtoves from going out, or any cold from comming in. And as for travelling, the waies are for the moſt part unſafe and dangerous, by reaſon of the ſtreight paſſages, dreadfull precipices, and thoſe almoſt continuall bridges which hang over the terrible falls, and Cataracts of the River Rhene, deſcending with great violence from the higheſt mountains: huge hils of ſnow tumbling into the vallies, with a noiſe as hideous as if it were a clap of thunder. Griſons.

For the particulars, the Upper League lyeth in the higheſt and moſt mountainous parts of the Alpes of Italie, having therein thoſe vaſt mountains of Lecknannier, and Der Vogel; out of vvhich the two ſtreams of the Rhene have their firſt originall. By the French it is called Liga Griſe, or the Gray League (the word Gris, or Griſe, in that language, being Gray in ours) in the ſame ſenſe as the Dutch call it Grawpuntner, that is, Confederati cani, which vve may render properly the Confederate Griſle-pates: either becauſe the mountains are continually covered with a perriwig of hoary Iſicles, or from the heads of this people, Gray before their time. It conſiſteth of nineteen Reſorts or Commonalties, according to the number of their Vales and Villages; of which four only ſpeak the Dutch, all the reſt a corrupt Italian: and was the firſt which did confederate with the Switzers, from whence the name of Griſons came unto the reſt, who after joyned with them in the ſame confederacy. It hath no City nor Town of note. The principall of thoſe that be, are 1 Ilanter, the place ſometimes of the Generall Diets for theſe Leagues. 2 Diſentis, where is a very rich Monaſtery. 3 Saint Bernardine, ſituate at the foot of the Mountain Vogel. 4 Maſox, ſometimes an Earldom, giving name to the Valley of Maſoxer-tal. 5 Galanckter, whence the vale ſo named, inhabited by none but Basket-makers. 6 Ruffla, ſituate on the River Mueſa, near Belinzano, on the skirts of Italie.

2 The ſecond League, is Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the houſe of God, ſo called becauſe it was the proper Patrimony of the Biſhop and Church of Chur: and may be called the middle League, as being ſituate between the Upper League on the Weſt, and the Lower League upon the Eaſt. It is the greateſt of the three, containing twenty one Reſorts or Commonalties: of which nine lie on this ſide the tops of the Mountains towards Germany, the reſt towvards Italie, and yet two onely ſpeak the Dutch, the others a corrupt Italian. The places of moſt note are, 1 Tintzen, the Tinnetio of Antoninus, ſeated amongſt high and inacceſſible Mountains, betvvixt Chur and the Valley of Bergel. 2 Mur (called Murus by the ſame Antoninus) in the valley of Bergel, a Valley extending from the head of the River Maira, towvards Chiavenna, one of the Italian Prælectures. 3 Stalla, called Bevio by the Italians, becauſe the vvay doth in that place divide it ſelf. 4 S. Jacomo (in the valley of Compoltſchin) called Travaſeda by Antoninus. 5 Sinada, in the valley of Engadin. And 6 Chur, by ſome Coira, but more truly Curia, ſo called from the long ſtay that Conſtantine the great made here vvith his Court and Army, in a War intended againſt the Germans; built afterwards by ſome part of his forces vvhich continued here, An. 357, about half a Dutch mile from the meeting of the two ſtreams of the Rhene: in form triangular; the buildings indifferent in themſelves, but not uniform with one another. High on a Hill, in one corner of it, ſtandeth the Cloſe, and therein the Cathedrall Church; a ſtately Edifice, but more in accompt of the Natives who have ſeen no fairer, than it is with ſtrangers; and near the Church, the Biſhops Palace, and the houſes of the Canons, all well built, and handſomly adorned. The Biſhop of this City, and of all the Country of theſe Leagues (for they received their Biſhop and the Faith together, An. 489.) acknowledgeth the Arch-biſhop of Mentz for their Metropolitan, is reckoned for a Prince of the Empire, and the rightfull Lord both of this City and the whole League; but on the introduction of the Reformed Religion, which they had from the Switzers and Genevians, the Citizens withdrew themſelves from their obedience to the Biſhop, and govern the City in the manner of a Free-ſtate. So far conformable to him, for their own preſervation, that as the Biſhop and his Canons, vvith the reſt of this League, upon occaſion of the wrongs done them by the houſe of Auſtria, Lords of the neighbouring Tirol, joyned in confederacy with the ſeven firſt Cantons of the Switzers (which was in the year 1498) So did the Citizens of Chur, after they had withdrawn themſelves from the command of their Biſhops, concur with them at laſt in that mutuall League.

3 The third League of theſe Griſons, is the Lower League, called alſo Liga Dittare, or the League of the ten Jurisdictions: ſituate cloſe upon Tirol, in the North-Eaſt part of the whole Country. Of all the ten, two only, vvhich are thoſe of Malans and Meienfeld, obey the joynt commands of the three Leagues of the Griſons: the other eight being ſubject to the Arch-Duke of Auſtria, under whom they are ſuffered to enjoy their antient privileges, for fear of uniting with the Switzers; which hitherto they have not done. Only they did unite together in one common League, An. 1436: conditioning their mutuall defence againſt all Enemies, preſervation of their peace, and maintainance of their privileges; reſerving notwithſtanding their obedience to their naturall Lords. In which reſpect, and by reaſon of the intereſs and ſociety which they have with the reſt of the Griſons, they are in friendſhip with the Swiſſe, but in no confederacy. City or Walled-town they have none. The chief of thoſe they have, are 1 Caſtels, the ſeat of the Governour for the Arch-Duke of Auſtria. 2 Malans, and 3 Meienfeld, both bordering upon the Rhene. 4 Tanaw, giving name to the firſt and greateſt of the ten Grisons. ten Jurisdictions, the chief Town of this League, in which are held the Generall Diets for the same; and vvhere are kept the Miniments and Records which concern their Privileges. In this League is the Mountain called Rhatico-mons, by Pomponius Mela, but now Prettigower-berg, because it is at the end of the valley vvhich the Dutch call Prettigow.

4 As for the Italian Prefectures, they are eight in number, and were given unto the Grisons by Maximilian Sforze Duke of Millain, An. 1513. at such time as he gave the like present to the Cantons of Switzerland. Of these the first is called Plurs, so called from the chief Tovvn of the same name, in Latin Plura, once seated in a plain at the foot of the Alpes, near the River Maira, the chief of sundry villages lying in the same bottom; now nothing but a deep and bottomless Gulf. For on the 26 of August 1617, an huge Rock falling from the top of the Mountains, overwhelmed the Town, killed in the twinckling of an eye 1500 people, and left no sign or ruin of a Town there standing; but in the place thereof a great Lake of some two miles length. 2 Chiarama, situate in a pleasant vallie so called, neer the River Mara, and ten Italian miles from the Lake of Como. Antoninus calleth it Clavenna, and the Dutch Clevener-tal, or the valley of Cleven, more near unto the antient name. 3 The Valtoline, Vallis Telina in the Latine, a pleasant Valley, extending threescore miles in length, from the head of the River Aada, unto the fall thereof in the Lake of Como: the Wines whereof are much commended, and frequently transported on this side the Alpes. It is divided into six Præfectures, according to the names of the principall Towns. The chief whereof are 1 Bormio, seated near the head of the River Aada. 2 Teio, the chief Fortress of the whole Valley. 3 Sondrio, the chief Town, and the seat of the Governour, or Leiuetenant Generall of the whole Country. This Valley lying opportunely for the passage of the King of Spains Forces out of Millain into Germany, by the practices and treasons of Rodolfus Planta, one of the natives of it, and of the Romish Religion, was delivered to the Duke of Feria, being then Governour of Millain, An. 1622, the whole Country brought under the obedience of that King, Chur it self forced and taken by them, and the Religion of Rome setled in all parts thereof. But two years after, by the joynt Forces of the French, Venetians, and Savoyard, the vvhole Valley was recovered from the Spaniards, and after a long treaty between France and Spain, the Grisons re-estated in their just possessions, An. 1630, save that the Spaniard still holds the Fort of Fuentes, for the safer passage of his Forces, if occasion be.

Such is the state of the three Leagues, considered severally and a part from one another. In reference to the vvhole, they make up one Government, or Commonwealth; for ordering vvhereof they hold a generall Diet, once in every year, consisting of threescore and three Commissioners, that is to say, 28 from the Upper League, 23 from the League of the house of God, and 14 from the League of the ten Jurisdictions. These have authority to determine of Appeales from the common Præfectures, to conclude of Peace and War, Confederacies, Ambassies, and Lavvs, vvhich concern the publick: yet so, that in a point of Judicature, is is lawfull to Appeal unto the Commonalties of every League, who have autority, if need be, to reverse the sentence: the causes being severally propoſed, and passed by the major part of voyces. The Government of each Lague, popular, as amongst the Switzers.

OF FRANCE.

HAving thus croſſed the Alpes, we may indifferently diſpoſe our ſelves for France or Germany. But we will follow the courſe and fortunes of the Roman Empire, which firſt paſſed into France before it medled with the Germans; and had brought Spain and Britain under the form of Roman Provinces, when Germany was looked on at a greater diſtance.

FRANCE then according to the preſent dimenſions of it, is bounded on the Eaſt with a branch of the Alpes which divide Daulphine from Piemont; as alſo with the Countries of Savoy, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Germany; on the Weſt with the Aquitain Ocean, and a branch of the Pyrenean Mountains which divide it from Spain; on the North with the Engliſh Ocean and ſome parts of Belgium; and on the South, with the reſt of the Pyrenean Mountains and the Mediterranean.

The Figure of it is almoſt ſquare, each ſide of the Quadrature being reckoned 600 miles in length. But they that goe more exactly to work upon it, make the length hereof to be 660 Italian miles, the bredth 570 onely, the whole Circumference to amount to 2040. Seated in the Northern temperate Zone between the middle Parallell of the fift Clime, where the longeſt day is 15 hours, and the middle Parallell of the eighth Clime, where the longeſt day is 16 hours and an half.

It hath this preſent name of France from the Franci or Frankes, a people of Germany, who ſeized upon thoſe parts of it which lay neereſt to the Rhene, in the time of Valentinian the third; and having afterwards ſubdued Paris, and made it the Seat-Royall of their growing Empire, they cauſed the Countrie thereabouts to be called France. Which name, as they enlarged their borders, they impoſed on, or communicated rather to the reſt of this Countrey; and to thoſe parts of Germany alſo which were conquered by them. At which time, for diſtinction ſake, they called the Eaſt parts of their whole Empire by the name of Ooſten-reich or Auſtraſia, (lying now wholly out of France, in Germany, and that part of Belgium which is ſubject to the King of Spain:) and for the Weſt parts thereof, they had the name of Weſten-reich, or Weſtraſia (in the barbarous Latin of that Age) Weſt France, or Francia Occidentalis; to which the name of France was at laſt appropriated, according to the limits before laid down.

Antiently it was called Gallia, and the people Galli, and by that name occurs moſt commonly in the writers of the Roman ſtorie; and Gallia Tranſalpina, becauſe ſituate on the further ſide of the Alpes from Italy, to difference it from the Countrie of thoſe Gauls, which being planted in thoſe parts which we now call Lombardie, was called Ciſalpina. Sometimes it was called Galatia alſo; by that name known amongſt the Greeks; by Ptolomie called Celto-Galatia, or the Galatia of the Celta, a potent nation of old Gaul; to diſtinguiſh it from Galatia, one of the Provinces of Aſia minor, denominated from the Galatians or Gauls of this Countrie. Whence it became ſo named is not yet determined. Some think it was called Gallia, from the Greek word Γάλα, (Gala) ſignifying milk, quia Lacteos, i. e. albos homines producebat, for the milkie and white complexion of the people. compared unto the Greeks and Romans who firſt impoſed it. Others, and amongſt them Diodorus Siculus, derive the name from Galata, a ſonne of Hercules; to which that of Galatia comes as neer as may be. That Hercules was ſometimes in this Countrie is affirmed alſo by Ammianus Marcellinus, who further addes, That after he had ſuppreſſed thoſe Tyrants which oppreſſed the People, he begat many Children on the principall Women; Et eos, partes quibus imperitabant nominibus ſuis appellaſſe. Lib. XL. Who gave their own names to thoſe parts over which they ruled. But in another place acknowledging that the Grecians call this People Galatæ (ita enim Gallos ſermo Græcus appellat) he telleth us from Timogenes an Antient Author, one very diligent in the ſearch of the Gallick Antiquities, that the Aborigines or firſt Inhabitants hereof, called themſelves Celtæ, by the name of one of their Kings whom they highly honoured, Et matris ejus vocabulo Galatas, and Galatæ from the name of his Mother Galata: who probably enough might be a daughter of Hercules, miſtook by Diodorus for one of his ſonnes.

Of the Originall of this People more anon. In the mean time we may take ſo much notice of the antient Gaul, as to affirm him (out of Cæſar and other Authors) to be quick-witted, of a ſudden and nimble apprehenſion, but withall very raſh and hare-braind, (ut ſunt ſubita Gallorum ingenia, is a note ſet upon them by the pen of Cæſar:) ſo full of Law-ſutes and contentions, that their Lawyers never wanted work. Gallia Cauſidicos, &c. as the Poet hath it: of vehement affections, and precipitate in all their actions, as well Military as Civill; falling on like a Clap of Thunder, and preſently going off in Smoke. Primus impetus major quam virorum, ſecundus minor quam fœminarum, was a part alſo of their Character in the time of Florus the Hiſtorian. And though the preſent French be generally of another Originall; yet there is ſo much of the old Gaul ſtill left among them, either by the Impreſſion of the Heavenly Bodies, or by inter-mariages with the Gauls, as they overcame them, that all theſe qualities are ſtill predominant in the French, not differing from the antient Gaul but in Name and Habit. For further evidence whereof, take with you a Compariſon, homely I muſt confeſs, but to the life expreſſing the nature of the French, compared with the Dutch and Spaniſh in matters of War. The French is ſaid to be like a Flea, quickly skipping into a Countrie, and ſoon leaping out of it, as was the Expedition of Charles the 8th into Italie. The Dutch is ſaid to be like a Louſe, ſlowly maſtering a place, and as ſlowly (yet at laſt) driven out of their hold, as was their taking and loſing of Oſtend and Gulick. The Spaniard is ſaid to be like a Crabb or Pediculus inguinalis, which being once crept into a place, is ſo rooted there, that nothing but the extremity of violence can fetch him out again. In which I think I need not inſtance, it being generally obſerved, that the Spaniards will endure all poſſible hardſhip before they will part with any thing that they are poſſeſſed of. It is uſed alſo for a By-word, that the Italian is wiſe b fore-hand, the Dutch in the time of action, and the French after it is done; a wiſdom much like that of the antient Gauls. Nor are they leſs Litigious than the old Gauls were: Inſomuch as it is thought that there are more Law-ſutes tryed among them in ſeven years, than have been in England from the Conqueſt till the time of King James. They are great Scoffers, yea even in matters of Religion, as appeareth by the ſtory of a Gentleman lying ſick on his death-bead; who when the Prieſt had perſwaded him, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body and Blood of CHRIST, refuſed to eat thereof becauſe it was Friday. Nor can I forget another in the ſame extremity, who ſeeing the Hoſt (for ſo they call the Conſecrated Elements) brought unto him by a lubberly Prieſt, ſaid that CHRIST came to him, as he entred into Hieruſalem, riding upon an Aſſe. As for the Women, they are ſayd to be wittie, but Apiſh, Wanton, and Incontinent: where a man at his firſt entrance may find acquaintance, and at his firſt acquaintance may find an entrance. So Dallington in his View of France deſcribeth them. But I have ſince heard this Cenſure condemned of ſome uncharitableneſs, and the French Gentlewomen highly magnified for all thoſe graces which may beautifie and adorn that Sex. And it is poſſible enough that it may be ſo in ſome particulars, though it be more than any man would gueſs at that cometh amongſt them. For generally at the firſt ſight you ſhall have them as familiar with you, as if they had known you from your Cradle; and are ſo full of Chat and Tattle, even with thoſe they know not, as if they were reſolved ſooner to want breath than words; and never to be ſilent but in the Grave.

As to the perſons of this People, they are commonly of a middle ſtature, and for the moſt part of a ſlight making; their complexion being generally hot and moiſt, which makes them very ſubject to the heats of luſt, and eaſily inclinable unto thoſe diſeaſes which are concomitants thereof: their Conſtitution ſomewhat tender, if not delicate, which rendreth them impatient of Toil and labour, and is in part the cauſe of thoſe ill ſucceſſes which have hapned to them in the Warres, in which they have loſt as much for want of conſtancy, and perſeverance in their enterpriſes, as they have gained by their Courage in the undertaking. And for the Women, they are for the moſt part very perſonable, of ſtraight bodies, ſlender waſts, and a fit Symetrie of proportion in all the reſt; their hands white, long, and ſlender, and eaſily diſcernable to be ſo; for either they wear no Gloves at all, or elſe ſo ſhort, as if they were cut off at the hand-wriſt. To theſe the Complexion of their faces, and the colour of their hair, too much inclining to the black, holds no true Decorum. Tis true the Poets commend Leda for her black hair, and not unworthily, Leda fuit nigris conſpicienda comis, as it is in Ovid. But this was ſpecially, becauſe it ſet off with the greater luſtre the amiable ſweetneſs of her Complexion: For in that caſe the Hair doth ſet forth the Face, as ſhadows commonly do a Picture; and the Face ſo becommeth the Hair, as a Field Argent doth a Sable bearing, which kind of Coat our Critical Heralds call the moſt fair. But when a Black hair meets with a Brown or ſwarth Complexion, it falls much ſhort of that attractiveneſs of beauty, which Ovid being ſo great a Crafts-Maſter in the Art of Love did commend in Leda.

The chief exerciſes they uſe, are, 1. Tennis; every Village having a Tennis-Court, Orleans 60. Paris many hundreds. 2. Dancing, a ſport to which they are ſo generally affected, that were it not ſo much enveighed againſt by their ſtrait-laced Miniſters, it is thought that many more of the French Catholiques had been of the Reformed Religion. For ſo extremely are they bent upon this diſport, that neither Age nor Sickneſs, no nor poverty it ſelf, can make them keep their heels ſtill, when they hear the Muſick. Such as can hardly walk abroad without their Crutches, or go as if they were troubled all day with a Sciatica, and perchance have their rags hang ſo looſe about them, that one would think a ſwift Galliard might ſhake them into their nakedneſs, will to the Dancing Green howſoever, and be there as eager at the ſport, as if they had left their ſeverall infirmities and wants behind them. What makes their Miniſters (and indeed all that follow the Genevian Diſcipline) enveigh ſo bitterly againſt Dancing, and puniſh it with ſuch ſeverity where they find it uſed, I am not able to determine, nor doth it any way belong unto this diſcourſe. But being it is a Recreation which this people are ſo given unto, and ſuch a one as cannot be followed but in a great deal of Company, and before many witneſſes and ſpectators of their carriage in it; I muſt needs think the Miniſters of the French Church more nice than wiſe, if they chooſe rather to deter men from their Congregations by ſo ſtrict a Stoicism, than indulge any thing unto the jollitie and natural Gaiety of this people, in matters not offenſive, but by accident only.

The Language of this People is very voluble and pleaſant, but rather Elegant than Copious, and therefore much troubled for want of words to find out Periphraſes; beſides that very much of it is expreſſed in the action; the head and ſholders move as significantly toward it, as the lips and tongue; and he that hopeth to ſpeak with any good grace, muſt have ſomewhat in him of the Mimick. A Language enriched with great plenty of Proverbs, conſequently a great help to the French humour of Scoffing: and ſo naturally diſpoſed for Courtſhip, as makes all the people complementall; the pooreſt Cobler in the Pariſh hath his Court-Cringes, and his Eau beniſte de Cour, his Court-holy-water (as they call it) as perfectly as the beſt Gentleman-Huiſher in Paris. Compared with that of other Nations, the Language of the Spaniards is ſaid to be Manly, the Italian Courtly, and the French Amorous. A ſweet language it is without queſtion, the People leaving out in their pronunciation runciation many of their Conſonants, and thereby giving occaſion to this By-word, that the Frenchman pronounceth not as he writes, ſingeth not as he pricketh, nor ſpeaks as he thinketh. In the Original thereof it is a Compound of the old Gallick, German, and Latin Tongues: the old Gallick being queſtionleſs the ſame with the Welch or Britiſh, as appeareth clearly by theſe reaſons. 1. The Latin words are known to have been received from the Romans, and the Germans, at the coming in of the Frankes and Burgundians; but of the Welch words which they have, we can give no reaſon, but that they are the remainder of the antient Language; of which Welch words which ſtill continue in that Language Camden in his Britannia reckoneth not a few. 2. It is ſaid by Tacitus, that the Britans were the Deſcendants of the Gauls, and this he proveth as by other Arguments, ſo from the identitie or neer reſemblance of the Language which both Nations ſpeak. Utriuſque ſermo haud multum diverſus, as his own words are. And 3. It is ſaid by Cæſar, That the Gauls uſed to paſs into Britain to be inſtructed in the Rites and learning of the Druides; which ſheweth that both People ſpake but own common tongue, there being in thoſe times no one learned Language, which other nations ſtudied beſides their own.

The Soil is extraordinary fruitfull, and hath three Loadſtones to draw riches out of other Countries, Corn, Wine, and Salt, in exchange for which there is yearly brought into France 1200000 li. Sterling, the cuſtome of Salt only to the King being eſtimated at 700000 Crowns per Annum. And indeed the benefit ariſing on this one commodity is almoſt incredible, it being conſtituted by the Kings Edict (which is all in all) that no man ſhall have any Salt for Domeſtick uſes (except by ſpecial privilege, and that dearly paid for) but what he muſt buy of the Kings Officers, and that upon ſuch prices too as they pleaſe to ſell it. Nor can it but be very well ſtored with Fiſh; for beſides the benefit of the Seas, their Lakes and Ponds belonging to the Clergie only are ſaid to be 13500. Their other Merchandizes are Beeves, Hogs, Nuts, Woad, Skinnes, vaſt quantities of all ſorts of Linnen. And to ſay truth, there are not many Countries in the Chriſtian World to which Nature hath been ſo prodigall of her choiceſt bleſſings as ſhe hath to this, the fields thereof being large and open, and thoſe ſo intermingled with Corn and Vines, and every hedge-row ſo beſet with choice of fruits, that never any covetous or curious eye had a fairer object. And yet ſo miſerable is the condition of the common Paiſant, partly by reaſon of the intolerable Taxes laid upon him by the King, and partly by thoſe great, but uncertain Rents which are ſet upon him by his Landlord (for the poor husbandman is Tenant only at the will of his Lord) that there is many one amongſt them, who farmeth yearly thirty or forty Acres of Wheat and Vines, that never drinks Wine, or eats good Bread, from one end of the year unto the other.

The Chriſtian Faith was planted firſt amongſt the Gauls, by ſome of St. Peters Diſciples, ſent hither by him at his firſt coming to Rome: Xyſtus, Fronto, and Iulianus, the firſt Biſhops of Rhemes, Perigort and Mants (Cenomanenſium in the Latine) being ſaid to be of his ordaining in the Martyrologies. The like may be affirmed (but on ſurer grounds) of Trophimus the firſt Biſhop of Arles. For on a Controverſie betwixt the Arch-Biſhops of Vienna and Arles for the dignity of Metropolitan, in the time of Pope Leo the firſt, it was thus pleaded in behalf of the Biſhop of Arles, quod prima inter Gallias, &c. That Arles of all the Cities of Gaul, did firſt obtain the happineſs of having Trophimus ordained Biſhop thereof by the hands of St. Peter. Nor is St. Paul to be denied the honour of ſending ſome of his Diſciples thither alſo to preach the Goſpell: Creſcens ſent by him as he telleth us 2 Tim. 4. into Galatia, being the firſt Biſhop of Vienna, ſpoken of before, as not the Martyrologies only, but Ado Viennenſis, an antient Writer of that Church, doth expreſly ſay. And that it was into this Country, that he ſent that Creſcens at that time, and not unto Galatia in Aſia minor, the teſtimonies of Epiphanius and Theodoret which affirm the ſame, and that which hath been ſaid before of this name of Galatia, may confirm ſufficiently. But Chriſtianity being deſtroyed by the French at their firſt coming hither, was again planted by the induſtry of S. Remigius the firſt Biſhop of Rhemes; Clovis or Clodiveus the fifth King of the French giving way unto it for his Wives ſake who was zealous in it, and after taking on himſelf that holy calling, on a great victory which he wonne againſt the Almains; By whom being over-laid in the day of battell, he made his prayers to CHRIST whom his Wife Crotilda worſhiped, vowing to be of that Religion if he gat the victory; which vow he had no ſooner made (as the ſtory telleth us) but Alemannos invaſit timor, a ſudden fear fell upon the Almains, and the French were Conquerours.

At this time they are divided in Religion, as in other places; ſome following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, and others that of thoſe Reformed Churches which adhere to Calvin. But this diviſion is more antient than Calvins days, the ſame opinions (as they relate unto the Errors in the Romiſh Church) being maintained formerly by the Albigenſes, the Waldenſes, or Panperes de Lugduno (the Vaudoys as the French Writers call them) of whom we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Lyons. Suffice it in this place to note, that the doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not new in France, when Zuinglius firſt preached againſt the ſuperſtitions of the Maſs, and the worſhip of Images, and Calvin travelled in advancing the Reformation; though much ſuppreſſed as to the outward profeſſion of it. But being revived by their Endeavours it ſprung out again, and ſpread it ſelf ſo ſpeedily in this Kingdom, that there were reckoned in the year 1560. above 2150. Churches of them, which cannot in ſuch a long time but be wonderfully augmented, though ſcarce any of them have eſcaped ſome maſſacre or other. Of theſe maſſacres, two are moſt memorable, viz. that of Merindell and Chabriers, as being the firſt, and the maſſacre at Paris, as being the greateſt. That of Merindoll hapned in the year 1545. The inſtrument of it, being Minier, the Preſident of the Councill of Aix. For having condemned this poor people of hereſie, he muſtred a ſmall Army; and ſet fire on the Villages. They of Merindoll, ſeeing the flame, with their wives and children fled into the woods; but were there butchered, or ſent to the Gallies. One boy they took, placed him againſt a tree, and ſhot him with Calivers; 25 which had hid themſelves in a Cave, were in part ſtifled, in part burned. In Chabriers they ſo inhumanely dealt with the young wives and maids, that moſt of them died immediatly after. The men and women were put to the ſword; the children were rebaptized: 800 men were murdered in a Cave, and 40 women put together in an old Barn, and burned. Yea ſuch was the cruelty of theſe Souldiers to theſe poor women, that when ſome of them had clambred to the top of the houſe, with an intent to leap down; the Souldiers beat them back again with their pikes. The Maſſacre of Paris was more cunningly plotted. A Peace was made with the Proteſtants; for the aſſurance whereof, a marriage was ſolemnized, between Henry of Navarre, chief of the Proteſtant party; and the Lady Marguerite the Kings ſiſter: At this Wedding there aſſembled the Prince of Conde, the Admirall Coligni, and divers others of chief note: but there was not ſo much Wine drank as Bloud ſhed at it. At Midnight the Watch-bell rung, the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde are taken Priſoners, the Admirall murdered in his Bed; and 30000 at the leaſt of the greateſt and moſt potent Men of the Religion, ſent by the way of this Red Sea to find the neereſt paſſage to the Land of Canaan. Anno 1572. Yet notwithſtanding theſe Maſſacres, and the long and frequent Wars which were made againſt them by their Kings, they grew ſo numerons, and got unto ſo great a power, that partly by Capitulations with the French Kings at the End of every Civil War, but principally by the connivence of K. Henry the fourth, who was ſometimes the Head of their partie, they had gotten above an hundred walled Towns and Garriſons: and were abſolute Maſters in effect of all thoſe Provinces which lie along the Aquitain ſhore and the Pyrenees, from the Mediterranean Sea to the River of Loyre. But being grown too inſolent by reaſon of ſo great a ſtrength, and ſtanding upon terms with the King as a Free Eſtate (the Commonwealth of Rochell, as King Henry the fourth was uſed to call it) they drew upon themſelves the jealouſie and furie of King Lewis the thirteenth. Who ſeeing that he could not otherwiſe diſſolve the knot of their combination than by the ſword, drew it out at laſt: And was ſo fortunate in the ſucceſs of his Vndertakings, that in two years, (viz. Anno 1621. 1622.) he ſtripped them of all their walled Towns, except Montalban and Rochell onely; and thoſe too he reduced not long after by the power of his Arms: Leaving them nothing to relie on for their future-ſecurity, but the grace and clemencie of their King, promerited by their obedience and integritie. And it hath ſped ſo well with them ſince that time, that they never had the exerciſe of their Religion with ſo much freedom, as they have hitherto enjoyed ſince the reducing of their Forts and Garriſons to the Kings obedience.

The other Party in Religion, having the Countenance of the State, and the preſcription and poſſeſſion of ſo many yeers to confirm the ſame, is in as proſperous a condition both for power and patrimonie, as any that acknowledgeth the Authority of the Popes of Rome. In point of Patrimonie, the Author of the Cabinet computes the Tythes and Temporall Revenues of the Clergie, beſides proviſions of all ſorts, to 80 millions of Crownes; but this Accompt is diſallowed by all knowing men. Bodin reporteth from the mouth of Monſieur Alemant, one of the Preſidents of Accompts in Paris, that they amonnt to 12 millions, and 300000 of their Livres, which is 1200000 l. of our Engliſh money; and he himſelf conceiveth that they poſſeſs ſeven parts of twelve of the whole Revenues of that Kingdom. The Book entituled Comment d'Eſt gives a lower eſtimate: and reckoning that there are in France 200 millions of Arpens (which is a Meaſure ſomewhat bigger than our Acre) aſſigneth 47 millions, which is neer a fourth part of the whole, to the Gallicane Clergy. And then it is reſolved by all, That the Baiſonam (as they call it) which conſiſts of Offerings, Churchings, Burials Diriges, and ſuch like Caſualties, amounteth to as much per annum, as their ſtanding Rents: Upon which ground Sir Edwin Sandys computeth their Revenue at 6 millions yeerly. And to ſay truth, there needs a very great Revenue to maintein their numbers; there being reckoned in this Kingdom, 13 Arch-Biſhops, 104 Biſhops, 1450 Abbies, 540 Arch-Priories, 12320 Priories, 567 Nunneries, 700 Convents of Friers, 259 Commanderies of Malta; beſides the Colleges of the Jeſuits, which being of a late foundation are not here accompted. And for the Pariſh-Prieſts, they are reckoned at 130000 of all ſorts, taking in Deacons, Subdeacons, and all thoſe of inferiour Orders, which have ſome Miniſtery in their Churches: the number of which was reckoned in the time of King Lewis the 11th, to be little leſſe than 100000. But then 'tis like that Chanteries and Free Chappels went in that Accompt; or elſe the Hugenots in the Wars have deſtroyed more Churches, than they are like to build in haſt; there being found in France on a juſt Accompt, no more than 27400 Pariſh Churches, beſides Oratories and Chappels of Eaſe appertaining to them. In which, there are ſuppoſed to live 15 millions of people, whereof the Clergy and the Miniſters depending on them doe make up 3 millions, which is a fift part of the whole. And for their power, the Gallican Clergy ſtand's more ſtoutly to their naturall rights againſt the uſurpations and encroachments of the See of Rome, than any other that live under the Popes Autoritie: which they acknowledge ſo far only as is conſiſtent with their own privileges, and the rights of their Soveraign. For neither did they in long time ſubmit to the Decrees of the Councill of Trent; nor have they yet admitted of the Inquiſition; nor yeeld ſuch ſtore of Griſt to the Popes Mill, as probably might redound to him from ſo rich a Clergie. And for his Temporal power over Kings and Princes, it is a doctrine ſo averſe from the Poſitions and Principles of the Gallican Church, that in the year 1610. the Di-vines of Paris publiſhed a Declaration, in which it was affirmed, That the doctrine of the Popes Supremacy was an Erroneous doctrine, and the ground of that helliſh poſition of depoſing and killing Kings. And this indeed hath conſtantly been the doctrine of the Gallican Church ſince the time of Gerſon, mainteining the Autoritie of a Councill above that of the Pope.

But to proceed. The men moſt eminent for learning of either ſide have been (beſides thoſe mentioned in the Alpine Provinces) Peter du Moulin, highly commended for his Eloquence by the pen of Balſac; Fr. Junius a moderate and grave Divine, Chamier the Controverſer, and Philip de Morney Lord of Pleſſis. Of the other party Claudius Eſpencæus a Sorbon Doctor, the famous Cardinall of Peron, Genebrard the Hiſtorian, Petavius a learned Ieſuite, &c. In the middle times S. Bernard Abbot of Clarevalle, Pet. Lombard Biſhop of Paris, John Gerſon Chancellor of that Univerſity. More antiently Proſper of Aquitain, Caſſianus the Hermit, Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lyons (though not here a Native.) And as to Men of other Studies, Auſonius the Poet, Hotoman and Gotfredus the Civilians, Duarenus the Canoniſt, Barn. Briſſonius the great Antiquarie, Iſaac Caſaubon that renowned Philologer, Budæus that great Maſter of the Greek Language, Thuanus the Hiſtorian Laurentius, the Anatomiſt, &c. And as for Militarie men, it hath been famous for the valour of Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French, Charles Martell that ſtout Champion of the Church againſt the Saracens; and Charles the great, the Founder of the Weſtern Empire: In the middle times for Godfrey of Bovillon, one of the Nine Worthies (as they call them, the ſonne of Euſtace Earl of Boulogn in Picardie; and in theſe later dayes for King Henry the 4th. Francis and Henry Dukes of Guiſe, Charles Duke of Mayenne, Charles Duke of Biron, &c.

The Laws of this Kingdom are either Temporary, and alterable at pleaſure; or Fundamentall, which neither King nor Parliament (as they ſay) can alter. Of this laſt ſort the principall are the Salique Law and the Law of Apennages. By that of the Apennage the younger Sonnes of the King are not to have partage in the Kingdome with their Elder-Brother; which Law was made by Charles the Great, before whoſe time we find the Children of the Kings eſtated in their ſeverall Thrones, and the Realm parcelled out among them into many Kingdoms. But by this Law they are to be entituled to ſome Dutchie or County (though they are content ſometimes with Annual penſions) with all the rights and profits thereunto belonging, all matters of Regality (as Levying Taxes, Coynage, and the like) excepted onely; which upon the fayling of the maſculine line doe return again unto the Crown. The name thereof derived from Abannage a German word, ſignifying a portion.

But the main Law they ſtand on is the Salique Law, by which the Crown of France may not deſcend unto the Females, or fall from the Lance to the Diſtaff, as their ſaying is: Which Law one undertaking to make good out of holy Writ, urged that Text of St. Matthew, where it is ſaid, Mark the Lillies (which are the Arms of France) and ſee how they neither Labour nor Spin. This they pretend to have been made by Pharamond the firſt King of the French, and that the words Si aliqua ſo often uſed in it, gave it the Name of the Salique Law. But Haillan one of their beſt Writers affirms, That it was never heard of in France till the time of Philip the Long, Anno 1315. and that it could not poſſibly be made by Pharamond, who though he was the firſt King of the French, had not one foot of Land in France, their third King Merovei being the firſt of thoſe Kings which paſſed over the Rhene. Others ſay it was made by Charles the Great, after the Conqueſt of Germany: where the incontinent lives of the Women living about the River Sala (in the modern Miſnia) gave both the occaſion and the name. De terra verò Salica, nulla portio hæreditatis mulieri veniat, ſed ad virilem Sexum tota terræ hæreditas perveniat; are the words thereof. This Terra Salica, the learned Selden in his Titles of Honour, Engliſheth Knights Fee, or Land that is holden by Knights Service, as our Lawyers call it; and proveth his Interpretation by a Record of the Parliament of Bourdeaux cited by Bodinus; where an old Will or Teſtament being once produced, in which the Teſtator had bequeathed unto his Sonne all his Salique Land, it was reſolved by the Court, that thereby was meant his Land holden in Knights Service. And then the ſenſe thereof muſt be, that in Lands holden of the King by Knights Service, or the like militarie tenure, the Male Children ſhould inherit onely: becauſe the Females could not perform thoſe ſervices for which thoſe Lands were given, and by which they were holden. And for this there may be good reaſon; though in England we deal not ſo unkindly with the Female Sex, but permit them, after the Age of 15 yeares to enjoy ſuch Lands; becauſe they may then take ſuch Husbands as are able to doe the King thoſe ſervices which the Law requireth. But this Interpretation (how good and genuine ſoever indeed it be) cannot ſtand with the French Gloſs: For then the Crown being held of none but God, and ſo not properly to be called a Fee or Feife, could not be brought within the Compaſs of the Salique Law, becauſe not to be counted for Salique Land. Give them therefore their own Gloſs, their own Etymologie, and Originall; and let us ſee by what right their Kings Daughters are excluded from their ſucceſſion to the Diadem. For firſt, ſuppoſing that to be the Salique Land which lyeth about the River Sala, in the modern Miſnia: I would fain know how it could reach unto the Kings Daughters in France, ſo far diſtant from it; or with what honeſty they can lay on them the like brand of incontinencie, as was ſuppoſed to have been found in thoſe Women of Germanie. And next, ſuppoſing that the Law had been made by Pharamond, I would fain learn how it can be applied to the Crown of France, to which Pharamond had then no title, nor ſo much as one foot of Land on that ſide of the Rhene. And finally, ſuppoſing that the Law was made in ſuch generall terms, as to extend to all the Countries which the French in time to come ſhould conquer, and conſequently unto France when once conquered by them: I would then ask, Whether it did extend to the Crown alone, or to all ſubordinate Eſtates which were holden of it. If unto all Eſtates holden of that Crown, I would fain know with what pretence they could give ſentence in behalf of Charles of Blais, againſt John de Montfort, in the ſucceſſion to the Dukedom of Bretagne: Charles of Blais clayming by his Mother, the Neece of Arthur the ſecond, by his ſecond Sonne Guy; Whereas John de Montfort was the third Sonne (and the next Heir-male) of the ſaid Duke Arthur. If only to the Crown of France, it would be known by what right they detain that Dukedom from the true Heirs of Anne the Dutcheſs: whoſe Daughter and Heir the Lady Claude, being maried unto Francis the firſt, had iſſue Henry the ſecond, and other Children. Which Henry, beſides Francis the ſecond, Charles the ninth, Henry the third, and Francis Duke of Anjou, all dying without iſſue, had a Daughter named Iſabel or Elizabeth maried to Philip the ſecond King of Spain, by whom ſhe was made the Mother of Iſabella, the late Archdutcheſs, and of Katharine the Wife of Charls Emanuel the late Duke of Savoy. Not to ſay any thing of the pretenſions of the houſe of Lorrein, deſcending from the Lady Claude, the ſecond Daughter of King Henry the ſecond, and Siſter of Iſabel or Elizabeth Queen of Spain. Nor doe we find that the French ſo ſtand upon this Law, as not to think that a Succeſſion by and from the Females, is in ſome caſes their beſt Title. For thus we read, That Pepin having thruſt his Maſter Childerick into a Monaſtery, to make good his Title to the Crown (or ſome colour for it) derived his Pedigree from Plythylda, one of the Daughters of Clotaire the firſt, maried to Anſpert the Grandfather of that Arnulphus, who was the firſt Mayer of the Palace of Pepins Family. As alſo how Hugh Capet, putting aſide Charles of Lorrein the right Heir of this Pepin, to make his Lawleſs Action the more ſeemingly Lawfull, drew his deſcent from ſome of the heirs Generall of Charles the Great; his Mother Adeltheid, being the Daughter of the Emperour Henry the firſt, ſurnamed the Fowler; who was the Sonne of Otho Duke of Saxonie by Luitgardis the Daughter of the Emperour Arnulph, the laſt Emperour of the Romans (or Germans) of the houſe of Charles. And it is ſaid of Lewis the ninth, ſo renowned for Sanctitie amongſt them, that he never enjoyed the Crown with a quiet Conſcience, till it was proved unto him that by his Grandmother, the Lady Iſabel of Hainalt, he was deſcended from Hermingrade the Daughter of Charles of Lorrein. Adde here, that this ſuppoſed Salique Law not onely croſſeth the received Laws of all Nations elſe, which admit of Women to the ſucceſſion in their Kingdoms, where the Crown deſcends in a Succeſſion; and have a great reſpect both unto their perſons and poſterities in ſuch Kingdoms alſo, where the Kings are ſaid to be Elective, as in Poland, Hungaria, and Bohemia; but that even France it ſelf hath ſubmitted to the imperious command of two Women of the Medices, and at the preſent to the Government of a Spaniſh Princeſs. So that it is evident, that this Law, by whomſoever made, and how far ſoever it extended, is of no ſuch force, but that the Labells of it may be eaſily cut in peeces by an Engliſh ſword well whetted; if there were no other bar to the title of England, than the authoritie and antiquity of the Salique Law.

But for my part (if it be lawfull for me to diſpute this point) I am not ſatisfied in the right of the Engliſh title; ſuppoſing the Salique Law to be of no ſuch force as the French pretended, and meaſuring the ſucceſſion in the Crown of France, to be according to ſucceſſions in the Realm of England, on which King Edward the third ſeemed to ground his claim. For if there were no Salique Law to exclude ſucceſſion by the Females, as the Engliſh did pretend there was not: yet could not Edward comming from a Siſter of the 3 laſt Kings, which reigned ſucceſſively before Philip of Valois, againſt whom he claimed, be ſerved in courſe, before the Daughters of thoſe Kings (or the Males at leaſt deſcending of them) had had their turns in the ſucceſſion of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren, two left iſſue, viz. Lewis and Philip. Lewis ſurnamed Hutin Sonne of Philip the fair, and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, maried to Philip Earl of Eureux, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which mariage iſſued all the ſucceding Kings of that Realm, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Burbon. Philip, the ſecond Brother, ſurnamed the Long, by Joan the Daughter of Othelin Earl of Burgundie, had a Daughter named Marguerite, maried to Lewis Earl of Flanders, from whom deſcended thoſe great Princes of the race of Burgundie, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Spain. If then there were no Salique Law to exclude the Women and their Sonnes, Charles King of Navarre the Sonne of Queen Joan and of Philip de Eureux, deſcended from Lewis Hutin the Elder Brother: and Lewis de Malaine Earl of Flanders and Burgundie, the Sonne of Lewis Earl of Flanders, and of Marguerite the Daughter of Philip the Long the Second Brother; muſt have precedency of title before King Edward the third of England, deſcended from a Siſter of the ſaid two Kings; their iſſue, ſeverally and reſpectively, before any claiming or deſcending from the ſaid King Edward. So that K. Edward the third had ſome other claim than what is commonly alleged for him in our Engliſh Hiſtories; or elſe he had no claim to that Crown at all: and I conceive ſo wiſe a King, would not have ventured on a buſineſs of ſo great conſequence, without ſome colourable Title; though what this title was is not declared for ought I know, by any Writers of our Nation. I believe therefore that he went upon ſome other grounds, than that of ordinary ſucceſſion by the Law of England, and claimed that Crown, as the Eldeſt heir-male and neereſt Kinſman to the laſt King. For being Siſters ſonne to the King deceaſed, he was a degree neerer to him than either the King of Navarre, or the Earl of Flanders, who were the Grandchildren of his Brethren: and having priority of either in reſpect of age, had a fair Title before either, to the Crown of that Kingdom. And on theſe grounds King Edward might the rather goe, becauſe he found it a ruled Caſe in the diſpute about the ſucceſſion in the Kingdom of Scotland.

For

For though King Edward the first measuring the order of succession by the Laws of England, and perhaps willing to adjudge the Crown to one who should hold it of him, gave sentence in behalf of John Baliol, the Grand-Child of the Eldest Daughter of the Earl of Huntingdon: yet was this Sentence disavowed, and protested against by the other Competitors. Robert Bruce Sonne of the Second Daughter of the said Earl of Huntingdon, as a degree neerer to the last King, though descended from the Younger Sister, not only thought himself wronged in it, but had the whole Scotish Nation for him to assert his right: by whose unanimous consent his Sonne was called to the Government of the Realm of Scotland, during the life of Baliol and his Patron both. Proximitie in blood to the King deceased, was measured by neerness of degrees, not descent of Birth; and on this Plea, though different from the Laws of England, as Bruce had formerly possessed himself of the Crown of Scotland; so on the same, though different from the Laws of Castile, did Philip the second ground his claim to the Crown of Portugal. For being Eldest Sonne of Mary, the Sister of Henry the last King (and this was just King Edwards Case to the Crown of France) he thought himself to be preferred before the Prince of Parma, and the Duke of Bragance descended from the Daughters of Edward the said Kings Brother; because the Eldest Male of the Royal blood, and neerer to the said King Henry by one degree. In the pursuance of which title, as Philip openly avowed, that the Laws of Portugall were more favourable to him than the Laws of Castile: so in like case, the Laws of France might be more favourable to King Edward than the Lawes of England. In claims to Crowns, the Rules if Regall Succession differ in many Countries; and in few Countries are the same with that of the Succession into mean Estates: as may be proved by many particulars in the Realm of England, in which the Law of the Crown differeth very much from the Law of the Land, as in the Case of Parceners, the whole blood (as our Lawyers call it) the Tenure by courtesie and some others; were this a time and place fit for it. But to return again to France; whether the Salique Law were in force or not, it made not much unto the prejudice of King Edward the third; though it served Philip the Long to exclude the Daughter of King Lewis Hutin; and Charles the fair to do the Like with the Daughter of Philip; as it did Philip of Valoys, to dispoless the whole Linage of King Philip Le Bel.

Machiavel accounteth this Salique Law to be a great happiness to the French Nation, not so much in relation to the unfitness of Women to Govern (for therein some of them have gon beyond most men) but because thereby the Crown of France is not indangered to fall into the hands of strangers. Such men consider not how great Dominions may by this means be incorporate to the Crown. They remember not how Maud the Empress being maried to Geofrie Earl of Anjou, Tourain, and Mayenne, conveyed those Countries to the Diadem of England; nor what rich and fertile Provinces were added to Spain, by the match of the Lady Ioan, to Arch-duke Philip: Neither do they see those great advantages of power and strength, which England now enjoyeth by the conjunction of Scotland, proceeding from a like mariage. Yet there is a saying in Spain, that as a man should desire to live in Italy, because of the civility and ingenious natures of the People; and to dye in Spain, because there the Catholique Religion is so sincerely professed: so he should wish to be born in France, because of the Nobleness of that Nation, which never had any King but of their own Country.

The chief enemies to the French have been the English, and Spaniards. The former had here great possessions, divers times plagued them, and took from them their Kingdom; but being called home by civill dissentions, lost all. At their departure, the French scoffingly asked an English Captain, When they would return? Who feelingly answered, When your sins be greater than ours. The Spaniards began but of late with them, yet have they taken from them Navarre, Naples, and Millain: they displanted them in Florida; poisoned the Dolphin of Viennois (as it was generally conceived;) murdered their Souldiers in cold blood, being taken Prisoners in the Isles of Tercera, and by their Faction, raised even in France it self, drave Henry the third out of Paris, and most of his other Cities, and at last caused him to be murdered by Iaques Clement a Dominican Frier. The like they intended to his Successour King Henry the fourth, whose coming to the Crown they opposed to their utmost power, and held a tedious War against him. Concerning which last War, when they sided with the Duke of Mayenne, and the rest of those Rebels, which called themselves the Holy Leagne (of which the Duke of Guise was the Author) against the two Kings Henry the third and fourth, a French Gentleman made this excellent allusion. For being asked the cause of these civill broiles, he replyed they were Spania and Mania, seeming by this answer to signifie Σπανια, penury, and Μανια, furie, which are indeed the causes of all intestine tumults: but covertly therein implying the King of Spain, and the Duke of Mayenne. In former times, as we read in Comineus, there were no Nations more friendly than these two, the Kings of Castile and France being the neerest confederated Princes in Christendome. For their league was between King and King, Realm and Realm, Subject and subject; which they were all bound under great curses to keep inviolable. But of late times, especially since the beginning of the wars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the first, for the Dukedom of Millain, there have not been greater animosities, nor more implacable enmities betwixt any Nations, than betwixt France and Spain; which seconded by the mutuall jealousies they have of each other, and the diversitie of Constellations under which they live, hath produced such dissimilitude betwixt them in all their wayes, that there is not greater contrariety of temper, carriage and affections, betwixt any two Nations in the world, than is between these Neighbours, parted no otherwise from one another than by passable Hils. First in the Actions of the Soul; the one Active and Mercurial, the other Speculative and Saturnine; the one ſociable and diſcourſive, the other reſerved and full of thought; the one ſo open, that you cannot hire him to keep a ſecret, the other ſo cloſe, that all the Rhetorick in the world cannot get it out of him. Next in their Faſhion and Apparrell, the French weares his hair long, the Spaniard ſhort; the French goes thin and open to the very ſhirt, as if there were continuall Summer, the Spaniard ſo wrapt up and cloſe, as if all were Winter; the French begins to button downward, and the Spaniard upwards; the laſt alwayes conſtant to his Faſhion, the firſt intent ſo much on nothing as on new Fancies of Apparrel. Then for their Gate, the French walk faſt, as if purſued on an Arreſt, the Spaniard ſlowly, as if newly come out of a Quartane Ague; the French goe up and dowu in cluſters, the Spaniards but by two and two at the moſt; the French Lacqueys march in the Rere, and the Spaniſh alwayes in the Van; the French ſings and danceth as he walks the ſtreets, the Spaniards in a grave and ſolemn poſture, as if he were going a Proceſſion. The like might be obſerved of their tune, their ſpeech, and almoſt every paſſage in the life of Man: For which I rather chooſe to refer the Reader to the ingenious James Howels book of Inſtructions for Travell, than inſiſt longer on it here. Onely I adde, that of the two ſo different humours, that of the Spaniard ſeemes to be the more approvable. Inſomuch as the Neapolitans, Millanois, and Sicilians, who have had triall of both Nations, chooſe rather to ſubmit themſelves to the proud and ſevere yoke of the Spaniards, than the luſts and inſolencies of the French, not ſufferable by men of even and wel-balanced ſpirits. And poſſible enough it is, that ſuch of the Netherlands as have of late been wonne to the Crown of France, will finde ſo little comfort in the change of their Maſters, as may confirm the reſidue to the Crown of Spain, to which they naturally belong.

The chief Mountains of this Countrey, next to the Pyrenees which part France from Spain; the Jour or Jura which ſeparates it from Savoy and Switzerland; and the Vange or Vogeſius which divides it from Lorrein; are thoſe which Cæſar calleth Gebenna, Ptolomie Cimmeni; being the ſame which ſeparate Auvergne from Languedoc, called therefore the Mountains of Auvergn; the onely ones of note which are peculiar to this Continent of France, which for the moſt part is plain and champian the others before mentioned being common unto this with the bordering Provinces.

This Country is wonderfully ſtored with rivers, the chief whereof, 1 Sequana or Seine, which ariſing in Burgundy, watring the Cities of Paris and Roane, and receiving into it nine navigable ſtreames, disburdeneth it ſelf into the Britiſh Ocean. 2 Some, upon which ſtandeth Amiens. It hath it's head about S. Quintins, divideth Picardie from Artoys, and having received eight leſſer ſtreams, loſeth it ſelf into the ſame Sea. 3 Ligeris, or Loyre, on which are ſeated Nantes and Orleance. It riſeth about the mountains of Auvergne, (being the greateſt in France:) and having runne 600 miles, and augmented his channell with the entertainment of 72 leſſer rivulets, mingleth his ſweet waters with the brackiſh Aquitane Ocean. 4. Rhodanus, or the Rhoſne, which ſpringing from the Alpes, three Dutch miles from the head of the Rhene, paſſeth by Lions and Avignon; and having taken in thirteen leſſer Brooks, falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Arles. 5 The Soaſne, by the old Latines called Araris, which riſing out of the Mountain Vogeſus or Vauge, in the borders of Lorrein and Alſatia, divideth the two Burgundies from each other; and falleth into the Rhoſne at the City of Lions. 6 Garumna, or the Garond, which iſſuing out of the Pyrenean Mountains, paſſing by Tholouſe and Burdeaux, and having ſwallowed up ſixteen leſſer Rivers (of which the Dordonne is the chief) disburdeneth it ſelf into the Aquitane Ocean, neer the Town of Blay: that part hereof which is betwixt the main Ocean and the influx of the river Dordonne, being called the Garonne. Of theſe it is ſaid Proverbially, that the Seine is the richeſt, the Rhoſne the ſwifteſt, the Garond the greateſt, and the Loyre the ſweeteſt. And by theſe and many other Rivers this Kingdom is inriched with 34 excellent Havens, having all the Properties of a good Harbour, that is to ſay, 1 Room, 2 Safety, 3 Eaſineſs of Defence, 4 Reſort of Merchants.

As for ſo much of the ſtory hereof as concerneth the whole, it was firſt peopled, if we may give credit to Annius, (as I think we may not in this point) by Samothes the ſixth Sonne of Iaphet (affirmed by them, and ſuch as adhere unto them, to be that Sonne of his, who in the Scripture is called Meſech) in the year of the world, 1806. But thoſe which are better converſant in the courſe of Hiſtory, have utterly laid aſide this deviſe of Annius. Even Functius, though a great Beroſian, doth confeſs ingenuouſly, Quis hic Samothes fuerit incertũ eſt, that it is unreſolved who this Samothes was. And Vignier a French Antiquarie doth confeſs with Functius, Mais un ne ſcayt qui il eſtoit, that no body can tell us who he was. They who have better ſtudied this point than Annius, derive the Gauls from Gomer, Iaphets Eldeſt Sonne, whoſe off-ſpring were firſt called Gomerians, afterwards Cimmerians, at laſt Cimbri; firſt planted (as before was ſaid) in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long preſerved his memorie, and after changing that unfruitfull and unpleaſant dwelling for the plains of Phrygia, wherein the City Cimmeris did retain ſomewhat of his name in the times of Plinie. Afterwards his poſterity proceeded further in the leſſer Aſia, and in long tract of time filled Germany, and Gaul, and Britain with his numerous iſſues: the Gauls and Cimbri being clearly of the ſame Originall, though known amongſt the Romans by two different names. From whence they had the names of Gauls, and Celtes, and Galatie, hath been ſhewn before. It ſhall ſuffice us now to adde, that being originally of the Cimbri, and having ſomewhat in them of the blood of Hercules, they proved a very valiant and warlike Nation, without whoſe love no King could ſecure himſelf from imminent dangers. They were very ſparing in their diet, and uſed to fine any one that outgrew his girdle. With theſe men the Romans at the firſt fought, rather for their own preſervation, than in any hope by a conqueſt of them, to enlarge their dominions. For theſe were they, who under the conduct of Belloreſus, paſſing over the Alpes, conquered the neereſt parts of Italie, called afterwards Gallia Ciſ-alpina; and under that of Segoveſus, overrun all Germanie; and following their ſucceſſes as far as Scythia, founded the potent Nation of the Celto-Scythia. Theſe were the men, whoſe iſſue under the command of Brennus, diſcomfited the Romans, at the river Allia; ſacked the City, and beſieged the Capitoll. Ann. M. 3577. V. C. 365. In which action they ſo terrified the Romans, that after their expulſion from Rome by Camillus, there was a law made, that the Prieſts, though at all other times exempted, from military employments ſhould be compelled to the War, if ever the Gauls came again. And Finally theſe were the men, who under the command of Belgius and another Brennus, ranſaked Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, and Greece, in which they ſpoyled and ranſackt the Temple of Delphos, for which ſacrilege they were viſited with the Peſtilence. Such as ſurvived this plague, went into Aſia, and there gave name to that Country now called Galatia; of whom thus Du Bartas:

The ancient Gaul in roving every way
As far as Phœbus darts his golden ray;
Seiz'd Italy; the worlds proud Miſtreſs ſackt,
Which rather Mars than Romulus compact.
Then ſpoyles Piſidia, Myſia doth inthrall;
And mid'ſt of Aſia plants another Gaul.

Yet at the laſt the Romans undertook the War, but not till they had conquered almoſt all the reſidue of the (then known) World. And though the War was managed then by the ableſt Captain that ever the State of Rome gave life to; yet was it not more eaſily vanquiſhed, by the valour and fortune of the Romans, than by want of good intelligence and correſpondence among themſelves. Nor did they ſell their liberty ſo good cheap, as thoſe other Nations, with whom the Romans had to deal; Ceſar himſelf affirming, that he had ſlain 1192000 of them, before they would ſubmit to the Roman yoak. But at the laſt they were brought under the power of Rome, by whom the whole Country was divided into theſe four parts, viz. 1. Narbonenſis called ſo from the City of Narbon, then a Roman Colonie, containing Languedoc, Provence, Daulphine, and ſome part of Savoy; and it was alſo called Comata, from the long hair of the people, ſubdued by Fabius Maximus, and Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, in their War againſt the Allobroges and their confederates before mentioned, about 70 years before the coming of Julius Ceſar. 2. Aquitanica, ſo called, from the City of Aquæ Auguſtæ (now D' Acqs in Guienne) lying upon the Pyrenees, and the wide Ocean; which comprehended the Provinces of Gaſcoyn, Guienne, Xaintoigne, Limoſin, Quercu, Perigort, Berry, Bourbonoys, and Auvergne; extending from the Pyrenees, to the River of Loyre, and conſequently ſtretching over all the middle of Gaul. 3. Celtica, ſo named from the valiant Nation of the Celtæ, called alſo Lugdunenſis, from the City of Lyons, and Braccat, from the Tronzes worn amongſt this people: extending from the Loyre to the Britiſh Ocean, and comprehending the Provinces of Bretagne, Normandy, Anjou, Tourain, Main, La Beauſſe, the Iſle of France, part of Champagne, the Dukedome of Burgundy, and the County of Lyonnoys. 4. Belgica, from the Belgæ, a potent Nation of that tract, taking up all the Eaſt parts of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the reſt of Champagne, the County of Burgundy, together with ſo much of Germany and the Netherlands, as lieth on this ſide of the Rhene, belonging now unto the Empire and the Kings of Spain. In the new modelling of the Empire by Conſtantine the great, Gaul was appointed for the ſeat of one of the four Præfecti Pratorio, appointed for the four quarters of it. His title Præfectus Pratorio Galliarum; his Government extending over the Dioceſes of Gaul, Spain and Britain: this Dioceſe of Gaul being caſt into ſeventeen Provinces, that is to ſay, Lugdunenſis Prima, 2 Secunda, 3 Tertia, 4 Quarta, 5 Belgica Prima, 6 Secunda, 7 Germania Prima, 8 Secunda, 9 Narboncnſis Prima, 10 Secunda, 11 Aquitania Prima, 12 Secunda, 13 Novempopulonia, 14 Viennenſis, 15 Maxima Sequanorum, 16 Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, 17 Alpes Maritimæ. Of theſe ſeventeen Germania Prima & Secunda, all Belgica Prima, and a great part of Secunda, all that of the Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, and ſo much of Maxima Sequanorum, as lieth in Switzerland, are now diſmembred from the name and accompt of France. What principall Nations of the Gauls, and what Provinces of the preſent France, the reſt contained, ſhall be declared in our Survey of the particulars.

But long it ſtood not in this ſtate. For within ſixty years after the death of Conſtantine, during the reigns of Honorius and Theodoſius, the Burgundians, a great and populous Nation, were called in by Silico Lieutenant to Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, to keep the borders of the Empire againſt the French, then ready with ſome other of the barbarous Nations to invade the ſame. The Gothes not long after by agreement with the ſame Honorius, leaving their hold in Italy, were veſted in Gaule Narbonoys, by the gift of that Emperour, with a good part of Tarraconenſis, one of the Provinces of Spain: Aquitain being after added in regard of ſome ſervices they had done the Empire. And in the reign of Valentinian the third, the French who had long hovered on the banks of the Rhene, taking advantage of the diſtractions of the Empire, ventured over the River; firſt made themſelves Maſters of Gaul-Belgick; and after ſpread themſelves over all the reſt of the Provinces which had not been ſubdued by the Gothes and Burgundians: excepting a ſmall corner of Armorica then poſſeſſed by the Britons. So that the Romans being outed of all the Country, it was divided (though

The Isle of France.

(though not equally) betwixt the Nations above-mentioned: the Britons holding their own, now Bretagne; the Goths posſeſſing Aquitain, and Gaul-Narbonoys; the Burgundians all the Alpine Provinces, with thoſe of Daulphine, Breſſe, Lionoys, and both the Burgundies, from them ſo denominated. The reſt was planted by the French, who in ſhort time diſpoſſeſſed the Goths (then buſie in the conqueſt of Spain) of all their hold in Gaul, except Languedoc onely, by the valour of Clovis the great, the fifth King of the Frenchmen, before they could chalenge a proſcription of 60 years. In which regard, and in reſpect that we have ſpoke already of them in another place, and ſhall ſay more of them hereafter, the Gothiſh Provinces in Gaul, ſhall paſs in the Accompt of the French part of this Countrie; and the Burgundians by themſelves, when we come to that Kingdom, ſubverted finally by the conquering and prevailing French: Of whom, and the ſucceſſion of their Kings, we will ſpeak hereafter, when we have brought all the chief parts and Provinces of this flouriſhing Countrey into their poſſeſſion. The principall Provinces are 1 France, properly ſo called, 2 Champagne, 3 Picardie, 4 Normandie, 5 Bretagne, 6 The Dukedom of Anjou, with its members, 7 La Beauſſe, 8 Berry, 9 The Dukedom of Bourbon, with the Provinces dependant on it, being all (excepting Bretagne) the firſt acqueſts of the French. Then follow the chief Provinces of the Gothiſh Kingdom, that is to ſay, 10 Poictou, 11 Limoſin, Perigort, and Quercu, 12 Aquitain, with the members of it, 13 Languedoc, 14 Provence: and laſt of all the Burgundian Kingdom, of which there now remain in France, the Counties of 15 Daulphine, 16 La Breſſe, 17 Lionnois, 18 the Dutchie, and 19 the Countie of Burgundy, 20 The Iſlands in the Aquitain and Gallick Ocean, in the cloſe of all. Of ſome of which La Nove a French Author hath paſſed this cenſure; The men of Berry are Leachers, they of Lourein Theeves, they of Languedoc Traytors, they of Provence Atheiſts, they of Rhemes (or Champagne) ſuperſtitious, they of Normandie inſolent, they of Picardie proud, & ſic de cæteris. But here we are to underſtand, that all theſe Provinces (though paſsing by the Name and Accompt of France) are not under the command of the French King; the Iſles of Jarſey and Guernzey being poſſeſſed by the Engliſh; the Counties of Burgundy, and Charolois by the King of Spain; the Dutchie of Bar, belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein; the Principalitie of Orange to the houſe of Naſſaw, and Avignon to the Popes of Rome. And on the other ſide, the French Kings are poſſeſſed of ſome Towns and Cities, not lying within the bounds of France, as the Imperiall Cities of Mets, Toul, and Verdun; and the Port of Monaco in Liguria; Baſe Navarre in Spain: not to ſay any thing of their late acqueſts in Spain and Flanders, which I look not on as parts of the French Dominions.

1 FRANCE, Properly ſo called.

THe firſt place which the Franks or French had for their fixt habitation, was by that people honoured with the name of FRANCE; the firſt green turf of Gallick ground, by which they took livery and ſeiſin of all the reſt A Province now bounded on the Eaſt with Champagne, on the North with Normandie, on the Weſt and South with La Beauſſe. To difference it from the main Continent of France, it is called the Iſle of France; as being circled almoſt round with ſeverall Rivers, that is to ſay the Oiſe on the North, the Eure on the Weſt, the Velle on the Eaſt, and a vein-Riveret of the Seine towards the South. A Countrie not ſo large as many of the French Provinces, but ſuch as hath given name unto all the reſt, it being the fate of many ſmall, but puiſſant Provinces, to give their name to others which are greater than they, if conquered and brought under by them. For thus we ſee the little Province of Poland to have maſtred and given name to the Mazovij, Pruteni, and other Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, as that of Moſco to the Provinces of Aſiatica. And thus have thoſe of Sweden conquered and denominated almoſt all the great Peninſula of Scandia, whereof it is one of the ſmalleſt Provinces. And thus this Iſland, being the ſeat Royall of the French in Gallia, gave name to all the reſidue of it, as they made it theirs. A Countrey generally ſo fruitfull and delectable, (except in Gaſtinois) that the very hills thereof are equall to the vallies in moſt places of Europe; but the Vale of Montmorencie (wherein Paris ſtandeth) ſcarce to be fellowed in the Word. An Argument whereof may be, that when the Dukes of Berry, Burgundie, and their Confederates, beſieged that City with an Armie of 100000 men; neither the Aſſailants without, nor the Citizens within, found any ſcarcitie of victuals; and yet the Citizens, beſides Souldiers, were reckoned at 500000.

It was formerly part of the Province of Belgica ſecunda, and Lugdunenſis quarta, the chief Inhabitants thereof being the Pariſii, the Bellovaci, and the Silvanectes: and is now divided into four parts, that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Valois, 2 Gaſtinois, 3 Heurepoix, and that which is properly called the Iſle of France, by ſome the Prevoſte, or County of Paris.

VALOIS. 1 The Dukedom or Countie of VALOIS, lieth towards Picardie, the principall Cities of it called Senlis, (in Latin Silvanectum) a Biſhops See, 2 Compeigne (Compendium) ſeated on the River Oiſe, a retyring place of the French Kings, for hunting, and other Countrey pleaſures. 3 Beauvois, the chief City of the Bellovaci, by Ptolomie called Cæſaromagus, a fair, large, well-traded Town, and a See Epiſcopall; the Biſhop whereof is one of the twelve Peers of France. Philip one of the Biſhops here in times foregoing, a militarie man, and one that had much damnified the Engliſh Borders, was fortunately taken by King Richard the firſt; The Pope being made acquainted with his Impriſonment, but not the cauſe of it, wrote in his behalf unto the King, as for an Eccleſiaſticall perſon, and one of his beloved Sonnes; The King returned unto the Pope the Armour which the Biſhop was taken in, and theſe words engraven on the ſame, Vide an hæc ſit tunica filii tui, vel non, being the words words which Jacobs children ſpake unto him when they preſented him with the Coat of their brother Joſeph; Which the Pope viewing, ſwore, That it was rather the Coat of a Sonne of Mars, than a Sonne of the Church, and ſo left him wholly to the Kings pleaſure. 4 Clermont, a Town of good note in the Countie Beauvoiſin, memorable for giving the title of Earl of Clermont to Robert the fifth Sonne of the King St. Lewis, before his mariage with the Daughter and Heir of Bourbon; and afterwards to the Eldeſt Sonnes of that Princely Familie. 5 Luzarch, a Town belonging to the Count of Soiſſons. 6 Brenonville. 7. St. Loup, on the Confines of Picardie, ſo called from a Monaſtery dedicated to S. Lupus, Biſhop of Troys in Champagne, ſent into Britain with Germanus to ſuppreſs the Pelagian Hereſies, which then were beginning. But of this part of France nothing more obſervable, than that it gave denomination to the Royall Familie of the French Kings (13 in number) from hence entituled de Valois: beginning in Philip de Valois, Anno 1328. and ending in Henry the third, Anno 1589. As for the Earls hereof (from whom that Adjunct or denomination had it's firſt Original) the firſt who had the title of Earl of Valois, was Charles, the ſecond Sonne of Philip the third, in right of his Wife Earl of Anjou alſo; After whoſe death it deſcended upon Philip de Valois his Eldeſt Sonne, who carried the Crown of France from our Edward the third: On whoſe aſſuming of the Crown, it fell to Lewis his ſecond Brother; and he deceaſing without iſſue, Anno 1391. to Lewis Duke of Orleans Sonne of Charles the fifth; amongſt the titles of which houſe it lay dormant, till the expiring of that Line in King Lewis the twelfth, and lately given unto a Sonne of the now Duke of Orleans, Vncle to King Lewis the fourteenth, at this preſent reigning. I onely adde, that Charles the firſt Earl of this Family, as he was the Sonne of Philip the third, Brother of Philip the fourth, ſurnamed the Fair; and Father of Philip de Valois: So was he Vncle to Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, all in their order Kings of France. In which regard it was ſaid of him, that he was Sonne, Brother, Father, and Vncle of Kings, yet no King himſelf. The Iſle of France.

2 The ſecond part of this Province is called HEVREPOIX, beginning at the little bridge of Paris on the River of Sein, and going up along the River, as far as the River of Verine, which divides it from Gaſtinois. The chief Towns of it are 1. Charenton, three miles from Paris, where the French Proteſtants of that City have their Church for Religious exerciſes; it being not permitted them to hold their Aſſemblies in any walled Cities or Garriſon Towns, for fear of any ſudden ſurprize, which ſo great a multitude might eaſily make. Which Church (or Temple as they call it) being burnt down by the hot-headed Pariſians, on the news of the Duke of Mayennes death, ſlain at the ſiege of Montalban Anno 1622. was preſently reedified by the Command of the Duke of Mom-bazon, then Governour of the Iſle of France, at the charge of the State: to let thoſe of the Reformed party underſtand, that it was their diſobedience, and not their Religion which cauſed the King to arm againſt them. 2. Corbeil, ſeated on the Confluence of Sein, and Eſſons, 3. Moret, which gives the Title of an Earl to one of the naturall Sonnes of Henry the fourth, begotten on the Daughter and Heir of the former Earl. 4. Melun, by Cæſar called Melodunum, the principal of this Heurepoix, and the ſeat of the Baylif for this Tract. Here is alſo in this part the Royall Palace of Fountain-bel-eau, ſo called from the many fair Springs and Fountains amongſt which it ſtandeth; but otherwiſe ſeated in a ſolitary and woodie Country, fit for hunting only, and for that cauſe much viſited by the French Kings in their times of leiſure; and beautified with ſo much coſt by King Henry the fourth, that it is abſolutely the ſtatelieſt and moſt magnificent pile of building in all France. HEUREPOIX.

3 GASTINOYS, the moſt drie and baren part of this Province, but rich enough if compared with other places; lieth between Paris and the Countrie of Orleanoys. The chief places of it are, 1. Eſtampes, in the middle way betwixt Paris and Orleans, on the very edge of it towards La Beauſſe, a fair large Town, having in it five Churches, and one of them a College of Chanoins, with the ruines of an antient Caſtle: which together with the Walls and demoliſhed Fortifications of it, ſhew it to have been of great importance in the former times: Given with the title of an Earl by Charles Duke of Orleans, then Lord hereof, to Richard, the third Sonne of John of Montfort, Duke of Bretagne, in mariage with his Siſter the Lady Marguerite; from which mariage iſſued Francis Earl of Eſtampes, the laſt Duke of Bretagne. 2. Montleherry, Famous for the battle betwixt King Lewis the eleventh and Charles Earl of Chavolois (after Duke of Burgundie) in which both ſides ran out of the field, and each proclamed it ſelf the Victor. It ſtandeth in the road betwixt Paris and Eſtampes. And ſo doth 3 Caſtres, of the bigneſs of an ordinary Market Town, not to be mentioned in this place, but for a Chamber or Branch of the Court of Parliament, here ſetled by King Henry the 4th for the uſe and benefit of his Subjects of the Reformed Religion; in Latin called Camera-Caſtrenſis. 4. Nemours upon the River of Loing, the chief of Gaſtinoys in name, but not in beauty (wherein inferiour to Eſtampes) a Town which hath given the title of Duke to many eminent perſons of France. Here is alſo in this part the County of Rochfort, and the Towns of Milly, 2 Montargis, &c. More there occurreth not worth the noting, in this part of the Country, but that being part of the poſſeſſions of Hugh the Great Conſtable of France, and Earl of Paris, it was given by him, together with the Earldome of Anjou, to Geofrie ſurnamed Chryſogonelle, a right Noble Warrier, and a great ſtickler in behalf of the houſe of Anjou, then aiming at the Crown it ſelf, which at laſt they carried: Continued in his line till the time of Fulk the ſecond (the fifth Earl of Anjou of this Family) who gave it back again to King Philip the firſt, that by his help he might poſſeſs himſelf of the Earldome of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his Elder GASTINOYS.

der Brother. Never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown of France in Fact or Title.

The Iſle of France.

4 But the great glorie of this Province, is, that which is more properly called the ISLE OF FRANCE, and ſometimes κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Iſle, cauſed by the Circlings and embracements of the Rivers of Sein and Marn, the abſtract of the whole beauties, and glories of France, which in this rich and pleaſant Vallie are ſummed up together. Chief places in it, St. Germans, ſeated on the aſcent of an hill, ſeven miles from Paris down the water, a pretty neat and handſom Town: honoured with one of the faireſt Palaces of the French Kings; which being built (like Windſor) on the top of a fine mountainet on the Rivers ſide, affordeth an excellent proſpect over all the Countrie. The excellent water-works herein have been deſcribed on occaſion of thoſe of Tivoli, ſo much extolled by the Italians. It was firſt built by Charles the fifth, ſurnamed the Wiſe; beautified by the Engliſh when they were poſſeſſed of this Countrie; but finally re-edified and enlarged by King Henry the fourth, who brought it into that magnificence in which now we ſee it. It took name from S. German Biſhop of Auxerre, companion with S. Lupus before mentioned, in the Britiſh journey againſt Pelagius. 2. Poiſſie upon the ſame River, not far from S. Germans, a Bayliwick belonging to the Provoſt of Paris, and one of his ſeven daughters, as they uſe to call them. 3. Chantilly, the chief ſeat of the Dukes of Montmorencie, the antienteſt and moſt noble family of Chriſtendome: whoſe Anceſtors were the firſt fruits of the Goſpell in this part of Gaul, and uſed to ſtile themſelves Les premiers Chreſtiens et plus Veilles Barons de la France, i. e. The firſt Chriſtians and moſt antient Barons of France. A Familie that hath yeelded unto France more Admirals, Conſtables, Marſhalls, and other like Officers of power, than any three in all the Kingdom: now moſt unhappily extinct in the perſon of Henry the laſt Duke, executed by the command of the late Cardinall of Richelieu, for ſiding with the Mounſeiur (now Duke of Orleans) againſt King Lewis the thirteenth, his Brother. The Arms of which illuſtrious and moſt noble Familie (for I cannot let it paſs without this honour) were Or, a Croſs Gules, cantonned with ſixteen Allerions Azure, four in every Canton. What theſe Allerions are we ſhall ſee in Lorrein; take we notice now, that from the great poſſeſſions which this noble Familie had in all this tract, it was, and is ſtill called the Vale of Montmorencie. 4. S. Denis, ſome three miles from Paris, ſo called of a Monaſtery built here by Dagobert King of France, about the year 640. in memorie of S. Denis or Dionyſe, the firſt Biſhop of Paris, martyred (on Mont-martyr an hill adjoyning) in the time of Domitian. Some of the French Kings, becauſe it lay ſo neer to Paris, beſtowed a wall upon the Town, now not defenſible: nor otherwiſe of any conſideration, but for a very fair Abbie of Benedictines, and therein the Sepulchres of many of the French Kings and Princes; neither for workmanſhip nor coſt able to hold compariſon with thoſe at Weſtminſter. 5. St. Cloud (or the Town of St. Claudus) unfortunately memorable for the murder of King Henry the third: who lying here at the ſiege of Paris, from whence he was compelled to flie by the Guiſian Faction, was wretchedly aſſaſſinated by Jaques Clement a Monk, employed in that ſervice by the heads of the Holy League. 6. PARIS the chief Citie not of this Iſle alone, but of all the Kingdom. By Caeſar, and Ammianus Marcellinus called Civitas Pariſiorum, from the Pariſians, a Nation of Gaul-Celtick, whoſe chief Citie it was: by Strabo called Lutetia, Lucotetia by Ptolomie, quaſi in Luto ſita, as ſome conjecture, from the dirtineſs of the ſoyl in which it ſtandeth: A Soyl ſo dirtie (as commonly all rich Countries are) that though the ſtreets hereof are paved (which they affirm to be the work of King Philip Auguſtus) yet every little daſh of rain makes them very ſlipperie: and worſe than ſo, yeelds an ill ſavour to the noſe. The Proverb is, Il deſtaint comme la fauge de Paris, it ſtaineth like the dirt of Paris: but the Author of the Proverb might have changed the word, and turned it to Il peut, &c. It ſtinks like the dirt of Paris; no ſtink being more offenſive than thoſe ſtreets in Summer. It is in compaſs about eight miles, of an Orbicular form, pleaſantly ſeated on the diviſions of the Sein: a fair, large, and capacious Citie, but far ſhort of the braggs which the French make of it. It was thought in the time of King Lewis the eleventh to contein 500000 peopl: of all ſorts and Ages; which muſt be the leaſt: the ſame King at the entertainment of the Spaniſh Ambaſſadours, ſhewing 14000 of this City in Arms, all in a Liverie of red Caſſocks with white Croſſes: A gallant ſight, though poſſibly the one half of them were not fit for ſervice. Theſe multitudes, which ſince the time of that King muſt needs be very much increaſed, are the chief ſtrength of the Town, the fortifications being weak and of ill aſſurance: Inſomuch, that when once a Pariſian bragged that their Town was never took by force; an Engliſh man returned this Anſwer, That it was, becauſe on the leaſt diſtreſs it did uſe to capitulate. It is ſeated (as before was ſaid) on the River Sein, which ſerveth it with Boats and Barges (as the Thames Weſtward doth London) the River ebbing and flowing no nigher than Pont del' Arche 75 miles diſtant from the Citie.

We may divide it into four parts, the Town, the Citie, the Univerſitie, and the Suburbs. La Ville, or that part of it which is called The Town, is ſituate on the North ſide of the River, the biggeſt, but pooreſt part of the four, inhabited by Artizans and Tradeſmen of the meaner ſort. In this part are the Hoſtell de Ville, or the Guild-hall for the uſe of the Citizens; the Arſenall or Armory for the uſe of the King, and that magnificent building called the Place Royall, new built and beautified at the charges of King Henry the fourth for Tilts and Turraments, and ſuch ſolemnities of State. And in this alſo, neer the banks of the River, ſtands the Kings Palace of the Louvre, a place of more fame than beauty, and nothing anſwerable to the report which goes commonly of it. A building of no elegance or uniformitie, nor otherwiſe remarkable but for the vaſt Gallerie begun by King Henry the fourth, and the fine Gardens of the Tuilleries adjoyning to it.

The

The City is that part of it which takes up the circumference of a little Iland, made by the embracements of the Seine; joyned to the other parts on both sides, by several Bridges. The Paris or Lutetia of the old Gauls was no more than this: the Town on the one side, and the Vniversity on the other, being added since. This is the richest part, and best built of the whole Compositum. And herein stand the Palace, or Courts of Parliament; the Chappel of the Holy Ghost, and the Church of Nostre-dame, being the Cathedral, of antient times a Bishops See, but of late raised unto the dignity of a Metropolitan. On the South side of the River lyeth that part which is called the Vniversitie, from an Vniversity here founded by Charles the Great, Anno 792. at the perswasion of Alcuinus an Englishman, the Scholar of Venerable Bede, and the first Professor of Divinity here. It consisteth of 52 Colleges or places for study, whereof 40. are of little use; and in the rest the Students live at their own charges, as in the Halls at Oxon, or Inns of Court or Chancery at London; there being no endowment laid unto any of them, except the Sorbonne, and the College of Navarre. Which possiblie may be the reason why the Scholars here are generally so debauched and insolent: a ruder rabble than the which are hardly to be found in the Christian World. Sensible of this mischief, and the cause thereof, Francis the first, whom the French call the Father of the Muses, at the perswasion of Renchline and Budeus, those great restorers of the Greek and Hebrew Languages, intended to have built a College for 600 Students, and therein to have placed Professours for all Arts and Sciences, endowing it with 50000 Crowns of yeerly Revenue, for their constant maintenance. But it went no further than the purpose; prevented by the inevitable stroak of death from pursuance of it. In bigness this is little inferiour to the Town or Ville, and not superiour to it for wealth or beauty; few men of any wealth and credit affecting to inhabit in a place of so little Government. The 4th and last part is the Suburbs, (or the Faux-bourgs as the French call them) the principal whereof is that of S. Germans (so called from an antient Abbie of that name:) the best part of the whole body of Paris, for large Streets, sweet Air, choyce of the best Companie, magnificent Houses, pleasant Gardens, and finally all those contentments which are wanting commonly in the throngs of most populous Cities. Champagne

Here are also in this Isle the Royal house of Madrit, a retiring place of the Kings, built by King Francis the first at his return from his imprisonment in Spain. 2 Ruall, a sweet Countrie house of the late Queen Mothers: and 3 Boys de Vincennes, remarkable for the untimely death of our Henry the fifth. I add this only and so end, That this Isle hath alwayes followed the fortune of the Crown of France; never dismembred from the Soveraigntie of the same, though sometimes out of the possession of the French Kings; as when the English kept it against Charles the 7th, and the Leagners against Henry the 4th. A thing which hardly can be said of any other of the Provinces of this flourishing Countrie: the French Kings of the race of Merovee and Charles the great, alienating from the Crown many goodly Territories, contented only with a bare and titularie Homage from them. By meanes whereof more than three parts of the whole Kingdom was shared first amongst the great Princes of the French: which afterwards by inter-mariages and other Titles fell into the hands of strangers, most of them enemies of this Crown, and jealous of the Grandour and power thereof. Which kept the French Kings generally very low and poor, till by Arms, Confiscations, Mariages, and such other meanes, they reduced all these Riverets to their first and original Channel; as shall be shewen in the pursuance of this work.

CHAMPAGNE.

CHAMPAGNE is bounded on the North with Picardie; on the South with the Dukedom of Burgundie, and some part of the Countie; on the East with Lorrein; on the West with France specially so called.

The Countrie for the most part very plain and pleasant (whence it had the name) adorned with shadie Woods, and delectable Meadows, fruitful in Corn, and not deficient in Wines. The Seat in elder times of the Trieasses, Catelauni, Rhemi, the Lingones, and Senones, (of which last Tribe or Nation were those Cisalpine Gaules who sacked Rome under the conduct of Brennus:) part of them Celts, and part Belgians, and so accordingly disposed of: the Belgians into the Province of Belgica Secunda, the Metropolis whereof was Rhemes; the Celts into Lugdunensis quarta, of which the Metropolis was Sens; both Cities seated in this Countrie. The chief Rivers of it Bloise, Marne, and Yonne

Chief places of the whole are, 1 Chalon on the River Marne, an Episcopal See, Suffragan to the Arch-Bishop of Rhemes; called antiently Civitas Catalaunorum. 2 Join Ville situate on the same River, belonging to the house of Guise: the eldest Sonne of which Familie is called Prince of Joinville, in the Castle whereof, seated upon an high and inaccessible Hill, is to be seen the Tomb of Claude the first Duke of Guise, the richest Monument of that kind, in all France. A Baronie which hath belonged to the house of Lorrein, ever since the yeer 1119. when Thierry the Sonne of William Baron of Joinville, succeeded his two Vncles Godfrey and Baldwin in that Dukedom. 3 Pierre-Fort, defended with a Caste of so great strength, that in the civil Wars of France A. 1614. it endured 1100 shot of Cannon, and yet was not taken, 4 Vassey, upon the River Bloise, a Town of as sweet a situation as most in France. These three last scituate in that part of Champagne which is called Vallage: so named as I conceive, from the River Vaste. 5 Vitrey, upon the confluence of the Sault and Marne, the chief Town and Balliage of that part which is named Parthois (Ager Pertensis in the Latine, so called of 6 Perte another Town thereof, but now not so eminent. 7 Chaumont upon the

Marne, the chief Town of Bassigni; and strengthned with a Castle mounted on a craggie Rock. 8 Dedior, or St. Defier (Fanum Sancti Desiderii) royally fortified after it had been ruined, Anno 1544. 9 Rhemes (Durocortorum Rhemorum) an Arch-Bishops See, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France, situate on the River of Vaste. At this City the Kings of France are most commonly crowned, that so they may enjoy the Vnction of a sacred Oil, kept in the Cathedral Church hereof, which, as they say, came down from Heaven, & never decreaseth. How true this is may be easily seen, in that Gregorie of Tours, who is so prodigal of his Miracles, makes no mention of it: but specially (for Argumentum ab autoritate negativè parum valet) since the Legend informeth us that this holy Oil was sent from Heaven at the annointing of Clovis the first Christian King of the French. Whereas Du. Haillan, one of their most judicious Writers, affirmeth Pepin, the Father of Charles the great, to have been their first annointed King; and that there was none de la primiere lignee oinct, ny Sacre à Rhemes, ny alleiurs, none of the first or Merovignian line of Kings, had been annointed at Rhemes or elsewhere. But sure it is (let it be true or false no matter) that the French do wonderfully reverence this (their sacred) Oil, and fetch it with great solemnity from the Church in which it is kept. For it is brought by the Prior, sitting on a white ambling Palfrey, and attended by his whole Convent: the Arch-Bishop hereof (who by his place is to perform the Ceremonies of the Coronation) and such Bishops as are present, going to the Church-dores, to meet it, and leaving for it with the Prior, some competent pawn: and on the other side, the King when it is brought unto the Altar, bowing himself before it with great humility. But to return unto the Town; it took this name from the Rhemi, once a potent Nation of these parts, whose chief City it was; and now an University of no small esteem: in which among other Colleges there is one appointed for the education of young English Fugitives. The first Seminarie for which purpose (I note this only by the way) was erected at Doway, An. 1568 A second at Rome by Pope Gregory the 13. A third at Valladolid in Spain, by K. Phylip the second. A fourth in Lovaine a Town of Brabant; and a fifth, here (so much do they affect the gaining of the English to the Romish Church) by the Dukes of Guise. 10 Ligni, upon the River Sault. All these in Belgica Secunda or the Province of Rhemes.

In that part of it which belonged to Lugdunensis quarta, the places of chief note are, 1 Sens, Civitas Senonum in Antoninus, antiently the Metropolis of that Province, by consequence the See of an Arch-Bishop also. 2 Langres, or Civitas Lingonum, (by Ptolomie, called Audomaturum) situate in the Confines of Burgundie, not far from the Fountain or Spring-head of the Seine: the See of a Bishop, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France. 3 Troys, Civitas Tricassium, seated on the Seine, a fair, strong, and well traded-City, honoured with the title of the Daughter of Paris; a See Episcopal, and counted the chief of Champagne next Rhemes. A City of great note in our French and English Histories, for the meeting of Charles the sixth, and Henry the fift, Kings of France and England, in which it was agreed, That the said King Henry espousing Catharine Daughter of that King, should be proclamed Heir apparent of the Kingdom of France, into which he should succeed on the said Kings death, and be the Regent of the Realm for the time of his life: with divers other Articles best suiting with the will and honour of the Conquerour. 4 Provins (by Cæsar called Agendicum) seated upon the Seine, in a pleasant Countrie, abounding in all fragrant flowers; but specially with the sweetest Roses; which being transplanted into other Countries are called Provins Roses. 5 Meaux, seated on the River Marne, antiently the chief City of the Meldi, whom Plinie and others of the old Writers mention in this tract: now honoured with a Bishops See, and neighboured by 6 Monceaux, beautified with a magnificent Palace built by Catharine de Medices, Queen Mother of the three last Kings of the house of Valois. 7 Montereau, a strong Town on the confluence of the Seine and the Yonne. 8 Chastean-Thierri, (Castrum Theodorisi, as the Latines call it) situate on the River Marn. These five last situate in that part of Champagne which lieth next to France specially so called, known of long time by the name of Brie: which being the first or chief possession of the Earls of Champagne, occasioned them to be sometimes called Earls of Brie, and sometimes Earls of Brie and Champagne. Add here, 9 Auxerre, in former time a Citie of the Dukedom of Burgundie, but now part of Champagne, of which more hereafter: And 10 Fontenay, a small Town in Auxerrois in the very Borders of this Province, but memorable for the great Battel fought neer unto it, An. 841. between the Sons & Nephews of Ludovicus Pius for their Fathers Kingdoms: in which so many thousands were slain on both sides, that the forces of the French Empire were extremely weakned; and had been utterly destroyed in pursuit of this unnatural War, if the Princes of the Empire had not mediated a peace between them; alotting unto each some part of that vast estate, dismembred by that meanes into the Kingdoms of Italie, France, Germany, Lorrein, & Burgundie; never since brought into one hand, as they were before.

Within the bounds of Champagne also where it lookes towards Lorrein, is situate the Countrie and Dutchy of BAR, belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein, but held by them in chief of the Kings of France. The Countrie commonly called BARROIS, environed with the two streames of the River Marn; of which the one rising in the edge of Burgundie, and the other in the Borders of Lorein, do meet together at Chalons a City of Champagne. Places of most importance in it, 1 Bar le Duc, so called to distinguish it from Bar, on the River Seine. and Bar, upon the River Albi; a well fortified Town. 2 La Motte. 3 Ligni. 4 Arqu, of which nothing memorable, but that they are the chief of this little Dukedom. A Dukedom which came first to the house of Lorreine, by the guift of Rene Duke of Anjou, and titularie King of Naples, Sicil, &c. who succeeded in it in the right of Yolard or Violant his Mother, Daughter of Don Pedro King of Aragon, and of Yolard or Violant the Heir of Bar: and dying gave the same, together with the Towns of Lambesque and Orgon, to Rene Duke of Lorrein his Nephew, by the Lady Violant his Daughter: From this Rene, it was taken by Lewis the 11th. who having put a Garriſon into Bar, repaired the Walls, and cauſed the Arms of France to be ſet on the Gates thereof. Reſtored again by Charles the 8th, at his going to the Conqueſt of Naples: ſince which time quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Lorrein, till the year 1633. when ſeized on by Lewis the 13th, upon a Iudgement and Arreſt of the Court of Parliament in Paris, in regard the preſent Duke had not done his Homage to the King, as he ought to have done.

Orgon,

The Arms hereof are Azure, two Barbels back to back, Or; Seme of Croſſe Croſſets Fitche, of the ſecond.

But to return again to Champagne, it pleaſed Hugh Capet at his coming to the Crown of France, to give the ſame to Eudes or Odon, Earl of Blais, whoſe Daughter he had maried in his private fortunes, before he had attained the Kingdom, with all the rights and privileges of a Countie Palatine. Which Eudes or Odon was the Sonne of Theobald Earl of Blais, and Nephew of that Gerlon a Noble Dane, to whom Charles the ſimple gave the Town and Earldom of Blais, about the year 940. and not long after the time that he conferred the Countrie of Neuſtria upon Rollo the Norman. In the perſon of Theobald the 3d, the Earls hereof became Kings of Navarre, deſcended on him in right of the Ladie Blanch his Mother, Siſter and Heir of King Sancho the 8th. Anno 1234. By the Mariage of Joan Queen of Navarre and Counteſs of Champagne to Philip the 4th of France, ſurnamed the Fair, both theſe Eſtates were added to the Crown of France: enjoyed by him and his three Sonnes one after another, though not without ſome prejudice to the Ladie Joan, Daughter and Heir of Lewis Hutin. But the three Brethren being dead, and Philip of Valois ſucceeding in the Crown of France, he reſtored the Kingdom of Navarre to the ſaid Ladie Joan: and for the Countie of Champagne which lay too neer the Citie of Paris to be truſted in a forrein hand, he gave unto her and her poſterity, as in the way of exchange, ſome certain Towns and Lands in other places, though not of equal value to ſo rich a Patrimonie.

Count Palatines of Champagne.

999. 1 Odo, Earl of Champagne, Brie, Blais, and Toureine, Sonne of Theebald the elder, Earl of Blais.

1032. 2 Stephen, Earl of Campagne and Blais, Father of Stephen Earl of Blais, and King of England.

1101. 3 Theebald eldeſt Sonne of Stephen.

1151. 4 Henry, Sonne of Theobald, a great Adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land.

1181. 5 Henry II. an Aſſociate of the Kings of France and England in the Holy Wars; King of Hieruſalem in right of Iſabel his Wife.

1196. 6 Theobald II. Brother of Henry, added unto his houſe the hopes of the kingdom of Navarre by his Mariage with the Ladie Blanche, Siſter and Heir of Sancho the 8th.

1201. 7 Theobald III. Earl of Campagne, Sonne of Theobald the 2d, and the Ladie Blanche, ſucceeded in the Realm of Navarre, Anno 1234.

1269. 8 Theobald IV. Sonne of Theobald the 3d, King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne and Brie.

1271. 9 Henry, Sonne of Theobald the 4th, King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne, &c.

1284. 10 Philip IV. King of France, in right of Ioane his Wife King of Navarre, and Earl of Campagne.

1313. 11 Lewis Hutin, Sonne of Philip, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.

1315. 12 Philip the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.

1320. 13 Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip King of France and Navarre, and the laſt Earl of Champagne, united after his deceaſe by Philip de Valois to the Crown of France: the Earldom of March neer Angoleſme being given for it in exchange to the Ladie Ioane, Daughter of King Lewis Hutin, and Queen of Navarre, maried to Philip Earl of Eureux, in her right honoured with that Crown, from whom deſcend the Kings of France and Navarre of the Houſe of Bourbon.

The Arms of theſe Palatines of Champagne, were Azure, two Bends cotized, potencee and counterpotencee of three peeces.

3. PICARDIE.

PICARDIE hath on the Eaſt the Dukedoms of Luxembourg and Lorrein; on the Weſt, ſome part of Normandie, and the Engliſh Ocean; on the North, the Counties of Artois and Hainalt; and on the South, Champagne, and France ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called. A Countrie ſo well ſtored with Corn, that it is accounted the Granarie or Store houſe of Paris; but the few Wines which it produceth are but harſh, and of no good reliſh, eſpecially in the Northern and colder parts of it.

The antient Inhabitants of it were the Sneſſiones, Ambiani, and Veromandui, conſiderable Nations of the Belgæ; and therefore reckoned into the Province of Belgica Secunda: but why they had the name of Picards I am yet to ſeek. Omitting therefore the conjectures of other men, ſome of the Picardie which are groundleſs, and the reſt ridiculous; I onely ſay, as Robert Biſhop of Auranches hath affirmed before me, Quos itaque ætas noſtra Picardos appellat, verè Belgæ dicendi ſunt, qui poſtmodum in Picardorum nomen tranſmigrarunt.

The whole Countrie as it lieth from Calais to the Borders of Lorrein, is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower ſubdivided into Sainterre, Pontheiu, Boulognois, and Guiſnes; the Higher into the Vidamate of Amiens, Veromandois, Rethelois, and Tieraſche, in every of which there are ſome places of importance and conſideration.

In LOWER PICARDIE and the Countie of GVISNES, the chief Towns, 1. Calais, by Cæſar called Portus Iccius (as the adjoyning Promontorie, Promontorium Itium, by Ptolomie) a ſtrong Town cloſe upon Artois, at the entrance of the Engliſh Channel: taken by Edward the 3d after the ſiedge of 11 moneths, An. 1347. and loſt again by Queen Mary in leſſe than a fortnight, An. 1557. So that had Monſieur de Cordes then lived, he had had his wiſh; who uſed to ſay, that he would be content to lie ſeven years in Hell, on condition that Calais were taken from the Engliſh. The loſs of which Town was a great blow to our Eſtate, for till that time we had the Keyes of France at our Girdles: and as great a grief unto Q. Mary, who ſickning preſently upon it, ſaid to thoſe which attended her, that if ſhe were opened, they ſhould find Calais next her heart. 2. Hamme, a ſtrong peece, one of the beſt Out-works of Calais. 3. Ardres, more towards the Borders of Boulognois, memorable for the interview of Henry the 8th, and Francis the firſt; and many meetings of the Engliſh & French Commiſſioners. 4 Guiſnes, which gives name to this Diviſion called the County of Guiſnes, of which the Land of Oye whereon Calice ſtood (by the French called commonly Pais de Calais) was eſteemed a part.

2. In BOVLOGNOIS, neighbouring on the Countie of Gniſnes the places of moſt note, 1 Blackneſs, a ſtrong Fort on the Sea ſide, betwixt Calice and Boulogne. 2 Chaſtillon, oppoſite to Boulogne on the other ſide of the water. 3 Boullenberg, more within the Land, an Out-work to Boulogne. 4 Boulogne, by Plinie called Portus Geſſoriacus, part of the Countrie of the Morini, ſpoken of by Cæſar, divided into the Baſe or Low Town lying on the ſhore ſide, well built, and much frequented by Paſſengers, going to, or coming out of England; and the High Town, ſtanding on the riſe of an Hill, well garriſoned for defence of the Port beneath it, and honoured with a Biſhops See, tranſlated hither from Tarney when that City was taken by the Engliſh. The Town and Countrie purchaſed of Bernard de la Tour, the true Proprietarie of it, by King Lewis the 13. who as the new Lord did homage for it to the Virgin Mary in the chief Church thereof called Noſtre Dame, bare headed, and upon his knees, without Girdle or Spurrs, and offered to her Image a maſſie Heart of gold, of 2200. Ounces: capitulating, that from thenceforth he and his ſucceſſours ſhould hold that Earldom of her only in perpetual Homage, and at the change of every Vaſſall, preſent her with a golden Heart of the ſame weight. After this it was taken by King Henry the 8th, An. 1544. but yielded not long after by King Edward the 6th.

I add, before I leave this Town, that at ſuch time as it was an abſolute Eſtate, it gave one King unto Hieruſalem, and another to England: the King of Hieruſalem being that famous Godfrey ſurnamed of Bouillon, Earl of this Boulogne, as Sonne of Euſtace Earl hereof, and Duke of Lorrein and Bouillon, as the Sonne of the ſaid Euſtace and the Ladie Ida, the true Inheretrix of thoſe Duchies. The ſecond King which had the Title and Eſtate of Earl of Boulogne, was Stephen King of England, who held it in right of Maud his Wife, the Daughter and Heir of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne, the Brother of that famous Godfrey. But his iſſue failing not long after, and the Eſtate being fallen amongſt his Heires general, it came at laſt to the De la Tours of Auvergne (the Anceſters of the now Dukes of Bouillon) and ſo unto the Crown, as before is ſaid. The Arms of which Family are a Tower embattled Sables; but the colour of the Feild I find not.

3. PONTHEIU, ſo called from the Bridges, built for conveniencie of paſſage over the mooriſh Flats thereof, belonged formerly to the Engliſh; To whom it came by the Mariage of Eleanor, Daughter of Ferdinand of Caſtile, by Joane the Daughter and Heir of Simon the laſt Earl hereof, to King Edward the firſt. Towns of moſt note in it, 1 Abbeville, ſeated on the Some, well fortifyed, and as ſtrongly garriſoned, as a Frontier Town upon Artois: on one ſide unaſſaultable by reaſon of a deep mooriſh Fen which comes up cloſe to it; beautified with a fair Abbey, whence it had the name (Abbatis Villa, in the Latine) and the See of a Biſhop. 2 Monſtreuille, a well fortified Town in the way betwixt Abbeville and Amiens; and a ſtrong out-work unto Paris. 3 Crecie, where King Edward the 3d defeated the great Armie of Philip de Valois, in the firſt onſets for that Kingdom. And 4. Treport, a ſmall Haven on the Eaſt of St. Valeries. Some place the Earldom of St. Paul in this Countrie of Pontheiu; others more rightly in Artoys, where we mean to meet with it. The Arms hereof were Or, 3 Bends Azure. 4 And as for SAINTERRE, which is the fourth part of the Lower Picardie, the chief Tows of it are 1 Peronne, upon the River Some, where Lewis the 11th, the greateſt Maſter of State-craft for the times he lived in, put himſelf moſt improvidently into the hands of Charles of Burgundie, who as improvidenly diſmiſſed him. 2. Roy, and 3. Montdidier, (Mons Deſiderij in Latine) both of them ſtrong Towns upon the Frontire; but otherwiſe of little fame in former Stories.

In Higher Picardie and the Vidamate of AMIENS, the places of moſt note are, 1 Corbis, a Garriſon on the Frontire, towards the Netherlands. 2 Piquigni, on the River Some, more famous for the enterview of Edward the 4th of England, and Lewis the 13th, than for giving the name of Picardie to all the Province, which Mercator only of all Writers doth aſcribe unto it. And 3dly

Amiens

Amiens it ſelf, ſeated upon the Some above Piquigni, the River being there divided into many Streams for the uſe and ſervice of the Town; well built, with very ſtrong walls, and deep ditches: the loſs whereof, when taken by Archduke Albert, much hazarded the affairs and reputation of King Henry the 4th; and therefore when he had regained it, he added to the former Works an impregnable Citadell. But the chief glorie of this Citie is in the Cathedrall, the faireſt and moſt lovely ſtructure in the Weſt of Europe: ſo beautified within, and adorned without, that all the excellencies of Coſt and Architecture ſeem to be met together in the compoſition. The Fronts of our Cathedrals of Wells and Peterburgh, the rich Glaſs in the Quire at Canterbury, the coſtly Imagerie, and arched Buttreſſes in the Chappell at Weſtminſter (before the late defacements of thoſe Cathedralls) might ſerve as helps to ſet forth the full beauties of it. Picardie.

II. But not to dwell on this place too long, paſs we on next to VEROMANDOIS, the ancient habitation of the Veromandui: the faireſt and largeſt part of both Picardies; and not a whit inferior to the beſt of France, in the number of neat and populous Cities. The principall whereof are, 1 Soiſſons, called antiently Auguſta Sueſſionum, the chief Citie of the Sueſſones or Sueſſiones: and the laſt Hold which the Romans had in all Gaul, loſt by Siagrius Governor for the Weſtern Emperor, to Clovis the fifth King of the French. In the diviſion of his Kingdom, made the Seat Royall of Clotair the ſonne of this Clovis, and of Arispert, and Chilperick, the ſonnes of Clotair, from hence entituled Kings of Soiſſons; their Kingdom containing the whole Province of Belgica Secunda, or the Provinces of Artois, Picardie, and Champagne, as we call them now. But Soiſſons having long ſince loſt the honour of a Regall Seat; hath of late times been made the honourarie Title of the Counts of Soiſſons, a branch of the Royall ſtock of Bourbon; and a Biſhops See, ſituate on the River of Aiſne. 2 Laon, a Biſhops See alſo, the Biſhop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France, and Earl of Laon; the Town in Latine, Laodunum. 3 Noyon, in Latine, Noviodunum, an Epiſcopall See alſo. 4 Chapelle, a ſtrong piece, one of the beſt outworks of Paris againſt the Netherlands. 5 D'Ourlans, and 6 La Fere, places of great ſtrength alſo, but more neer the Frontires. And 7 S. Quintin, antiently the chief Citie of the Veromandui, then called Auguſta Veromanduorum: called afterwards S. Quintin from that Saint, here worſhipped, as the Patron and Deus tutelaris of it. A place of great importance for the Realm of France; and ſo eſteemed in the opinion of the Earl of Charolois, after Duke of Burgundie, and King Lewis the 11th; the firſt of which never digeſted the reſtoring of it to that King, being pawned unto his Father (together with Corbie, Amiens, and Abbeville) for no leſs than 400000 Crowns; the later never would forgive the Earl of S. Paul for detaining it from him, though under colour of his ſervice. A Town of greater note in ſucceeding times for the famous battle of St. Quintins, Anno 1557. wherein King Philip the ſecond of Spain, with the help of the Engliſh under command of the Earl of Pembroke, overthrew the whole Forces of the French, made themſelves Maſters of the Town, and thereby grew ſo formidable to the French King, that the Duke of Guiſe was in Poſt haſt ſent for out of Italie, (where his affairs began to proſper) to look unto the ſafety of France it ſelf.

III. More towards Hainalt and Lorrein lieth the Countrie of RETHELOIS, ſo called of Rethel the chief Town: well fortified as the reſt of the Frontire places; but of moſt note amongſt the French, in that the eldeſt ſonnes of the Dukes of Nevers, have uſually been entituled Earls and Dukes of Rethel; united to that Familie by the mariage of Lewis of Flanders, Earl of Nevers, with the Daughter and Heir of James Earl of Rethel, Anno 1312, or thereabouts. 2 St. Monhaud, a Town of conſequence and ſtrength. 3 Sygni, a ſtrong peece belonging to the Marqueſs of Vieu-Ville. 4 Chaſteau-Portian, of more beautie, but of like importance.

IV. Finally in the Dutchie of TIERASCHE, the laſt part of the higher Picardie, we have the Town of Guiſe, of ſome note for the Caſtle, but of more for the Lords thereof, of the Ducall Familie of Lorrein, from hence entituled Dukes of Guiſe. A Familie which within a little compaſs of time produced two Cardinals, the one entituled of Guiſe, the other of Lorrein; ſix Dukes, that is to ſay, the Duke of Guiſe, Mayenne, Aumal, Elbeuf, Aguillon, and Chevreuſe; the Earl of Sammarive; and beſides many Daughters maried into the beſt houſes in France, one maried to James the 5th King of the Scots. The firſt, and he that gave the riſe unto all the reſt of this potent Family, was Claud, ſonne to Rene the ſecond, Duke of Lorrein, and husband to Antoniette Daughter to the Duke of Vendoſme; in reſpect of which alliance, he was honoured with this title. The ſecond was Francis, who endangered the Realm of Naples, reſiſted the ſiedge of the Emperor Charles at Mets, drove him out of Provence, took Calice from Q. Mary, and was at laſt treacherouſly ſlain at the ſiedge of Orleans, Anno 1563. The third was Henry that great enemy of the Proteſtants, who contrived the great Maſſacre at Paris, and almoſt diſpoſſeſſed Henry the third, of all France. He began the holy league, and was finally ſlain at Bloys, by the command of King Henry the 3d. But we muſt know that this Town did antiently belong to the Dukes of Lorrein; and had given the title of Guiſe to Frederick the ſecond ſonne of John, and Charles the third ſonne of Rene, both the firſt of thoſe names, before Claud of Lorrein was advanced to the title of Duke. Of moſt note next to Guiſe it ſelf, is 2 Ripemont on the South of Guiſe. 3 Chaſtelet upon the border towards Luxembourg, a ſtrong Town, and one of the beſt outworks of France. 4 Mazieres, upon the Maes or Meuſe, a place of great ſtrength and like importance.

As for the ſtate of this whole Province I doe not finde that it was ever paſſed over by the French Kings unto any one hand; as almoſt all the reſt of France had been, at ſome time or other, but diſtracted into divers Lordſhips. Some of which fell to the Crown of France by confiſcations, and others by conqueſt: Some held of England; ſome, of the Earls of Artois; and others of Flanders, and laſtly of the Dukes of Burgundie, as Lords of thoſe Provinces: thoſe which depended upon England being ſeized on by Charles the 7th, on the loſs of Normandie by the Engliſh; as thoſe which held of Burgundie, were by Lewis his ſonne, immediately on the death of Duke Charles at the battel of Nancie, Anno 1476.

NORMANDIE.

NORMANDIE is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Some which parteth it from Picardie; on the Weſt with Bretagne, and ſome part of the Ocean; on the North with the Engliſh Channel, by which divided from England; and on the South with France ſpecially ſo called, and the County of Maine. It made up the whole Province of Lugdunenſis Secunda, in the time of the Romans; the Metropolis whereof was Roven: and in the greatneſs of the French Empire had the name of Neuſtria, corruptly ſo called for Weſtria; the name of Weſtria or Weſtenrich, being given by ſome to this part of the Realm of Weſt-France, as that of Auſtria or Oſtenrich to a part of Eaſt-France. Afterwards being beſtowed upon the Normans by Charles the Simple, it was called Normandie.

In this Countrie is the little Signeurie of IVIDOT, heretofore ſaid to be a free and abſolute Kingdom; advanced to that high dignitie by Clotaire, the ſeventh King of the French: who having abuſed the wife of one Gautier de Ividot (ſo called becauſe of his dwelling here) and afterward (to prevent revenge) killed the man himſelf; to make ſome ſatisfaction to his Familie for ſo great an injury, erected the Lordſhip of Ividot to the eſtate of a Kingdom, and gave unto the heirs of this Gautier (or Walter) all the prerogative of a free and abſolute Monarch, as to make Laws, coyn money, and the like. From hence the French call a man that hath but ſmall demaines to maintain a great title, a Roy d' Ividot. At laſt, but at what time I know not, it fell again to a Lordſhip, and belongeth now to the houſe of Bellay in Bretagne.

But to proceed from the poor Kingdom of Ividot, to the rich Dukedom of Normandie, for largeneſs of Extent, multitudes of People, number and ſtatelineſs of Cities, fertilitie of Soyl, and the commodiouſneſs of the Seas, it may worthily be accompted the chief Province of France. Well watered with the River Seine which runneth quite thorough it; as do alſo 2 the Orne, and 3 the Aven: not to ſay any thing of 4 Robee, 5 Ante, and 6 Reinelle, and many others of leſs note. In length it reacheth 170 miles, and about 60 in bredth where it is narroweſt: containing in that round the largeſt and faireſt Corn-fields that are to be ſeen in all France. Of all other naturall commodities it is extreme plentifull, excepting Wines, which the Northern coldneſs of the Climate admits not of; or ſparingly at the beſt, and of no perfection. The people of it formerly renowned for feats of Arms, the Conquerours of England, Naples, Sicil, and the Kingdom of Antioch in the Eaſt: at this time thought to be of a more ſharp and ſubtill wit than the reſt of the French, Scavans au poſſible en proceces & plaideries (ſaith Ortelius of them) eſpecially in the quillets and quirks of Law.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower, the Lower containing the Sea coaſts, and the Higher the more Inland parts. Principall Cities of the whole, 1 Conſtance, a Biſhops See, the Spire or Steeple of whoſe Cathedrall, is eaſily diſcernable afar off, both by Sea and Land, and ſerveth Saylers for a Landmark. From hence the Country hereabouts hath the name of Conſtantin. 2 Auranches, ſituate on a rock with a fair proſpect over the Engliſh Channell, but more neer to Bretagne than the other, the chief Citie of the Abrincantes, called Ingena by Ptolomie, now a Biſhops See. 3 Caen, (Cadomum in Latine) an Epiſcopall See, as the other; Strong, populous, and well built, ſeated upon the River Orne, ſecond in Reputation of the whole Province: but more eſpecially famous, for the Sepulchre of William the Conquerour, the Vniverſitie founded here by King Henry the 5th, and for the long reſiſtance which it made againſt him, in his Conqueſt of Normandie. 4. Baieux (the Civitas Baiocaſſium of Antoninus) from whence the Countrie round about hath the name of Beſſin. Memorable of a long time for a See Epiſcopal. One of the Biſhops whereof, called Odo, Brother unto William the Conquerour, by the Mothers ſide, was by him created Earl of Kent; and afterwards on ſome juſt diſpleaſure committed Priſoner. For which, when quarreled by the Pope, (the Clergie being then exempted from the Secular Powers,) he returned this anſwer, that he had committed the Earl of Kent, not the Biſhop of Bayeux: By which diſtinction he avoided the Popes diſpleaſure. 5. Roven, of old Rothomagum, pleaſantly ſeated on the Seine, and watered with the two little Riverets of Robec and Reinelle, which keep it very ſweet and clean. The Citie for the moſt part well built, of large circuit, and great trading, the ſecond for bigneſs, wealth, and beauty in all France: antiently the Metropolis of this Province, and an Arch-Biſhops See; and honoured of late times with a Court of Parliament, erected here by Lewis the twelfth, Anno 1501. In the Cathedrall Church hereof (a Reverend but no beautifull fabrick) is to be ſeen the Sepulchre of John Duke of Bedford, and Regent of France for King Henry the ſixt: which when an envious Courtier perſwaded Charles the eighth to deface; God forbid (ſaith he) that I ſhould wrong him being dead, whom living all the power of France was not able to withſtand; adding withall, that he deſerved a better Monument than the Engliſh had beſtowed upon him. And to ſay truth, the Tomb is but mean and poor, ſhort of the merits of the man, and carrying no proportion to ſo great a vertue. 6 Falaiſe, upon the River Ante, once of ſtrength and note; the dwelling place of Arlette, a Skinners Daughter, and the Mother of William the Conquerour: whom Duke Robert, paſſing through the Town took ſuch notice of (as he beheld her in a dance amongſt other Damoſells) that he ſent for her to accompany him that night in bed, and begot on her William the Baſtard, Duke of Normandy, and King of England. Her immodeſty that night ſaid to be ſo great, that either in regard thereof, or in ſpite to her Sonne, the Engliſh called all Strumpets by the name of Harlots, the word continuing to this day. 7 Vernaville (Vernolium in Latine) in former times accompted one of the Bulwarks of Normandie againſt the French. Of which it is reported, that when news was brought to Richard the firſt, that Philip ſurnamed Auguſtus, the French King, had laid ſiedge unto it, he ſhould ſay theſe words; I will never turn my back till I have confronted thoſe cowardly Frenchmen. For performance of which Princely word, he cauſed a paſſage to be broken thorough the Palace of Weſtminſter, and came ſo unexpected upon his Enemies, that they raiſed their ſiedge, and haſtned homewards. 8 Alanſon, of moſt note for giving the title of Earl and Duke to many Princes of the Royal Familie of Valois, beginning in Charles de Valois, the Father of Philip de Valois, French King, and continuing for eight ſucceſſions till the death of Charles the fourth Duke of this line, conferred occaſionally after that, on many of the younger Princes of the Royal Familie. 9. Lyſieux, on the North-Eaſt of Alanſon, a Biſhops See, the chief Town of the Lexobii; as 10 Caux, of the Caletes, both placed by Cæſar in theſe parts. 11. Eureux, an Epiſcopal See alſo, by Ptolomie called Mediolanium, the chief Citie antiently of the Eburones, and ſtill a rich and flouriſhing Town; the third in eſtimation of all this Province. 12. Giſors, a ſtrong frontire Town towards France, whilſt Normandie was in the hands of the Engliſh, or under its own Dukes and Princes; notable for the many repulſes given unto the French; And 13. Pontoyſe, another frontier upon France, ſo called of the Bridge on the River of Oyſe, which divides France from Normandie, on which the Town is ſituate, and by which well fortified on that ſide, but taken at the ſecond coming of Charles the 7th, after an ignominious flight hence, upon the noyſe only of the coming of the Duke of York, commander at that time of the Province, and the Engliſh Forces. 14. Albemarl, contractedly Aumerl, moſt memorable for giving the title of Earl to the Noble Familie De Fortibus, Lords of Holderneſs in England; and of Duke to Edward Earl of Rutland, after Duke of York. More towards the Sea 15. S. Valeries, ſeated on a ſmall but ſecure Bay, betwixt Dieppe and New-Haven. 16. Dieppe, at the mouth of a little River ſo named, opening into a large and capacious Bay; a Town of Trade, eſpecially for the Newfound-Land: remarkable for its fidelity to Henry the 4th in the midſt of his troubles; When the Confederates of the Guiſian faction called the Holy League, had outed him of almoſt all the reſt of his Cities, compelled him to betake himſelf hither, (from whence he might more eaſily hoiſe Sail for England) and called him in deriſion the King of Dieppe. 17. New-Haven, the Port Town to Roven and Paris, ſituate at the mouth of the River Seine, from hence by great Ships navigable as far as Roven; by leſſer unto Pont de l'Arch, 70 miles from Paris: the Bridge of Roven formerly broken down by the Engliſh, to ſecure the Town, lying unrepaired to this day by means of the Pariſians, for the better trading of their City. By the French it is called Havre de Grace, and Franciſcopolis by the Latines; repaired and fortified (the better to confront the Engliſh) by King Francis the firſt, and from thence ſo named. Delivered by the Prince of Conde and his faction into the hands of Q. Elizabeth of England, as a Town of caution, for the landing of ſuch forces as ſhe was to ſend to their relief, in the firſt civil War of France about Religion: and by the help of the ſame faction taken from her again, as ſoon as their differences were compounded. By means whereof, the Hugonots were not only weakned for the preſent, but made uncapable of any ſuccours out of England for the time to come: and the next year were again warred on by their King, with more heat than formerly. 18. Harflew (or Honflew as ſome call it) of little notice at the preſent, becauſe not capable of any great ſhipping, nor uſeful in the way of Trade: but famous notwithſtanding in our Engliſh Stories, as the firſt Town which that victorious Prince K. Henry the 5. attempted and took in in France. 19. Cherburg (the Latines call it Cæſaris Burgum, on the Sea ſide alſo, the laſt Town which the Engliſh held in the Dukedom of Normandie: belonging properly and naturally to the Earls of Eureux, advanced unto the Crown of Navarre; but being garriſoned by the Engliſh for King Henry the 6th, it held out a ſiedge of ſeven moneths againſt the forces of France. Here are alſo in this Dukedom, the Towns of 20 Tankerville, and 21 Ewe, which have given the title of Earles to the Noble Families of the Greyes and Bourchiers in England: as alſo thoſe of 22 Harcourt, 23 Longueville, and 24 Aumal, which have given the title of Duke and Earl, to ſome of the beſt Houſes in France.

Normandie.

There belonged alſo to this Dukedom, but rather as ſubject to the Dukes of Normandie, than part of Normandie it ſelf, the Countie of PERCH; ſituate betwixt it and the Province of La Beauſſe, of which now reckoned for a part. It gave the title of Counteſs to Eufemia, the baſe Daughter of King Henry the firſt: and was divided into the higher and the lower. The chief Towns of it, 1. Negent le Rotrou, of which little memorable, but that it is the principal of Perch Govet, or the lower Perch. 2. Mortaigne, or Moriton, of moſt note in the higher Perch, eſpecially for giving the title of an Earl; to John, the youngeſt Sonne of King Henry the 2d, after King of England; as in the times ſucceeding to the Lord Edmund Beaufort, after Duke of Somerſet.

But to return again to the Countrie of Normandie, the antient Inhabitants thereof were the Caletes, Eburones, Lexobii, Abrincantes, ſpoken of before; the Bello caſſi, or Venelo caſſi about Rover; the Salares and Baiocenſes about Sees and Bayeux: all conquered by the Romans, afterwards by the

the French, and the French by the Normans. Theſe laſt a people of the North, inhabiting thoſe Countries which now make up the Kingdoms of Denmark, Swethland, and Norwey: united in the name of Normans, in regard of their Northernly ſituation; as in our Hiſtorie and deſcription of thoſe Kingdoms we ſhall ſhew more fully. Out of thoſe parts they made their firſt irruptions about the year 700. when they ſo ranſacked and plagued the maritime Towns of France, that it was inſerted in the Letany, From Plague, Peſtilence, and the furie of the Normans, good Lord, &c. To quiet theſe people, and to ſecure himſelf, Charles the Simple, gave them, together with the Soveraigntie of the Earldom of Bretagne, a part of Neuſtria (by them ſince called Normannia.) Their firſt Duke was Rollo, An. 900. from whom in a direct line, the 6th was William the Baſtard, Conquerour, and King of England, An. 1067. After this, Normandie continued Engliſh till the dayes of King John: when Philip Auguſtus ſeized on all his Eſtates in France, as forfeitures, An. 1202. The Engliſh then poſſeſſing the Dukedoms of Normandie and Aquitaine; the Earldoms of Anjou, Tourcine, Maine, Poicton, and Limoſin; being in all a far greater and better portion of the Country, than the Kings of France themſelves poſſeſſed. The Engliſh after this recovered this Dukedom by the valour of King Henry the 5th, and having held it 30. years, loſt it again in the unfortunate Reign of King Henry the ſixt: the Engliſh then diſtracted with domeſtick factions. After which double Conqueſt of it from the Crown of England, the French diſtruſting the affections of the Normans, and finding them withall a ſtubborn and untractable people, have miſerably oppreſſed them with tolls and taxes, keeping them alwaies poor and in low condition: inſomuch, as it may be ſaid of the generalitie of them, that they are the moſt beggerly people that ever had the luck to live in ſo rich a Countrie. But it is time to look on

The Dukes of Normandie.

912. 1 Rollo of Norwey, made the firſt Duke of Normandie by Charles the Simple; by whoſe perſwaſion baptized, and called Robert.
917. 2 William ſurnamed Longeſpee, from the length of his Sword.
942. 3 Richard the Sonne of Longeſpee.
980. 4 Richard the II. Sonne of the former.
1026. 5 Richard the III. Sonne of Richard the 2d.
1028. 6 Robert the Brother of Richard the 3d.
1035. 7 William the baſe Sonne of Robert, ſubdued the Realm of England; from thence called the Conquerour.
1093. 8 Robert II. eldeſt Sonne of William the Conquerour, put by the Kingdom of England by his two Brothers, William and Henry, in hope whereof he had refuſed the Crown of Hieruſalem, then newly conquered by the forces of the Chriſtian Princes of the Weſt. Outed at laſt, impriſoned and deprived of ſight by his Brother Henry, he lived a miſerable life in the Caſtle of Cardiff, and lieth buried in the Cathedral Church of Gloceſter.
1102. 9 Henry the firſt King of England.
1135. 10 Stephen King of England, and D. of Normandie.
11 Hen: Plantagenet D. of Normandie, and after King of England, of that name the ſecond.
1161. 12 Hen: the III. ſurnamed Court-mantle, Sonne of Hen: the 2d. made D. of Normandie by his Father.
1189. 13 Rich: IV. ſurnamed Cure de Lyon, King of England, and D. of Normandie, Sonne of Henry the ſecond.
1199. 14 John the Brother of Richard, King of England, and D. of Normandie, outed of his eſtates in France by King Philip Auguſtus, An. 1202. before whom he was accuſed of the murder of his Nephew Arthur, found dead in the ditches of the Caſtle of Rowen, where he was impriſoned; but ſentenced cauſa inaudita, for his not appearing. After this, Normandie ſtill remained united to the Crown of France (the title only being borne by John de Valoys, afterwards King, and Charles the 5th (during the life time of his Father) til the conqueſt of it by the valour of K. Hen: the 5th, A. 1420. which was 218 years after it had been ſeized on by King Philip Auguſtus, and having been holden by the Engliſh but 30 years, was loſt again An. 1450 in the unfortunat Reign of King Henry the ſixt. Never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown of France, ſaving that Lewis the 11th, the better to content the confederate Princes, conferred it in Appennage on his Brother Charles Duke of Berry, An. 1465. but within two Moneths after took it from him again, and gave him in exchange for it the Dukedom of Guyenne, which lay further off from his Aſſociates.

What the Revenues of this Dukedom were in former times, I can hardly ſay. That they were very fair and great appears by that which is affirmed by Philip de Comines; who ſaith, that he had ſeen raiſed in Normandie 95000 li. Sterling money, which was a vaſt ſum of money in thoſe times. As alſo by this teſtimonie of the D. of Burgundie, who held King Lewis the 11th to be weakned a whole third part in his eſtate, by giving Normandie in portion to the D. of Berry. Now they amount unto as much as the Kings Treaſurers and Toll-maſters are pleaſed to draw out of it,

The Arms of Normandie were Gules, two Leopards Or, which with the ſingle Leopard, or Lyon, being added for the Dutchie of Aquitaine, make the Arms of England.

BRETAGNE.

Bretagne.

BRETAGNE is bounded on the East with Normandie and the Countie of Maine; on the South with Anjou and Poictou; on all other parts with the English or Gallick Ocean. Watered upon the South side with the Loir, which divides it from Anjou; but so as part of this Dukedom, called the County of Raiz, lieth on the South side of that River, betwixt it and Poictou.

It was first called Armorica from its situation on the Sea, as the word importeth in the old Language of that People. But how it came by this new name, is not well agreed on. The generall opinion is, that it took this name from the neighbouring Britans brought over hither by the Tyrant Maximus, rebelling against the Emperour Gratian, Anno 385. by whom this Province was subdued, and from them named Britannia Minor, Little Britain: An Argument whereof may be, that the Language of this People hath still no small affinitie with the Welch or British; there being a tradition also, that the Britans who first came over hither and maried the Women of this Countrie, cut out their tongues for fear they should corrupt the Language of their posterity. And to this Conquest by the Britans these old Verses give some further Countenance,

Vicit Aremoricas animosa Britannia Gentes,
Et dedit imposito nomina prisca jugo.
That is to say,
Gaul-Armorick, the Britans overcame,
And to the conquered Province gave their name.

Which notwithstanding, the most probable opinion seemeth to be that it took this name from the Britanni, an old Gallick People, mentioned by Plinie in Gaul-Belgick, retiring hither on the invasions and incursions of the barbarous Nations: though possibly those Britanni of Gallia-Belgica might be aswell some Colonie of the Iland-Britans, as the Belgæ a great Nation in the Isle of Britain, are said to have been a People of Gallia-Belgica. The reason is, because there was no Author before Geofrie of Monmouth who takes notice of this transporting of the Insular-Britans by the Tyrant Maximus: no antient Author Greek or Latine making mention of it. And for the Welch or British words which are still remaining in the language, they are conceived to be no other than a remainder of the old Gallick tongue; which was originally the same with the antient British, as is elswhere proved.

The Province is in compass 200 French Leagues: Pleasant and fruitfull, beautified with many shadie woods, and spacious Downs; sufficiently well stored with all manner of grain, but destitute of Wine and the choicer fruites by reason of the Northerly situation of it. Divided commonly into Hault or High Bretagne, and Basse or Low Bretagne: the first containing the more Eastern, and the last the Western parts hereof. Neither of the two much furnished with navigable or notable Rivers, the defect of which the neighbourhood of the Sea supplieth, affording more capacious Havens, and convenient Ports, than any one Province in this Kingdom.

To begin therefore with the Havens, those of most note in the Higher Bretagne, are 1 S. Malo, built on a Rock within the Sea, wherewith at every high-water it is incompassed. A Bishops See, and a Port very much frequented by the French and Spanish, who use here to barter their Commodities; oftentimes spoyled by the English in their Wars with France, especially since the time of King Henry the seventh. 2 Blavet, a safe but little Haven, on the mouth of a little River of the same name also. 3 S. Briene, (by the Latines called Fanum Sancti Brioci) a Bishops See, and a well-traded Port, seated upon the English Channel. 4 Vannes, a Bishops See also, situate on a capacious Bay, at the mouth of the Vilain; the chief Town of the Veneti, whom Cæsar placeth in this tract, and makes them to be the mightiest People of all the Armoricans, strongest in Shipping, and best seen in Affairs at Sea. 5 Croissie, a little Haven at the mouth of the Loir, and the onely Haven of this Part on the Gallick Ocean. Then in Low Bretagne, or the more Western parts hereof, there is 6 Brest, seated upon a spacious Bay of the Western Ocean, the Key and Bulwark of this Countrie, and the goodliest Harbour of all France. 7 Morlais, a convenient Port, and well frequented. 8 S. Pol de Leon, and 9 Treguer, both Bishops Sees, both situate on the Sea-shore, and both the chief Towns of the Ossismi, whom Ptolomie and Strabo place upon this Coast: the first of them neighboured by the Promontorie which they call Le Four, the Govæum of Ptolomie. 10 Kemper Corentin, a Bishops See also, the chief Town of that part hereof which is called Cournovaille, situate not far from the Foreland which they call Penmarch, opposite to Le Four spoken of before. A Sea Town this, but not much talked of for the Haven, for ought I can find. 11 Conquet, a well-frequented Road, not far from Brest.

Chief places in the Midlands, 1 Nantes, the principall Citie of the Nannetes, (by Ptolomie called Condivincinum) a large, fair, strong, and populous Citie, seated upon the Loir, a Bishops See, and the Metropolis of Bretagne. 2 Rennes, antiently the chief Town of the Rhedones (called Condate by Ptolomie) now a Bishops See, and the Parliament Citie for this Countie, established here Anno 1553. which maketh it very populous, and of great Resort, though not fully two miles in compass. 3 Dol, an Episcopall Citie also, but unwholesomely seated amongst Marishes. 4 Dinan, a rich and pleasant Town on the River Rance. 5 L'Amballe, the chief Town of the L'Ambiliates, spoken

Bretagne. of by Cæsar. 6 Rohan, the title and inheritance of the Dukes of Rohan, descended from a branch of the Ducall Familie of Bretagne, by Mary the second Daughter of Duke Francis the first, and Wife of John then Viscount of Rohan. 7 Ansenis, the chief Seat of the now Duke of Vendosme, and the head of his Estates in Bretagne. Of which possessed in the right of his Wife, the Daughter of the Duke of Mercoeur by the Heir of Martignes, another of the branches of this Ducall Familie. 8 Chasteau-Briant, a strong Peece on the borders of Normandie. 9 Clisson, the chief Town of the Dutchie of Raiz, being that part of Bretagne which lieth on the South-side of the Loir, a strong Town, and fortified with a very good Castle.

The Britans, whosoever they were in their first Originall, were questionless one of the first Nations that possessed any part of Gaul, after the Conquest of the Romans. Governed at first by their own Kings, the most considerable of which was that Aldroenus or Auldran, the Sonne of Solomon, who at the time of the Insular-Britans, then distressed by the Scots and Picts, (as Geoffrie of Monmouth telleth the storie) sent over Constantine his Brother with a complete Army to their aid; who having valiantly repulsed the Enemy, was made King of Britain, Anno 433. Of whose posterity more there. Those of Armorica being broken by the puissance of Charles the Great, abandoned the name of Kings, and satisfied themselves with the title of Earls, assumed first by Alain le Rebre, Anno 874. but as some say, Anno 859. which was somewhat sooner. By Peter of Dreux the 16th Earl, chalenging his Estate in right of Alice his Wife, the half Sister of Arthur, and Daughter of Constance, by Guy of Thouars her 3d Husband, the better to secure his title, this Earldom was made subject to the Vassallage of the Crown of France, in the time of Lewis the 9th, by whom John called the Red, the Sonne of this Peter, was created the first Duke of Bretagne. Yet notwithstanding this subjection to the Kings of France, the Dukes hereof reserved unto themselves the Sovereign powers, as to write themselves By the Grace of God, the privilege of coyning Gold, &c. and stood so high upon their termes, that Francis the last Duke, denyed to do his Homage to Charles the 7th, either upon his Knees, or without his Sword, according to the former custome. For which being quarrelled by Lewis the eleventh, the Sonne of Charles, who was at better leisure to pursue the business than his Father was, he joyned himself with Charles Duke of Berry, and Charles Duke of Burgundie in a War against him; and thereby drew upon himself that ruine, which he indeavoured to avoid. For in Conclusion, Charles of Berry, as it was thought, was poysoned; Charles of Burgundie lost his life at the Battle of Nancie, 1476. and a great part of his Estate was conquered by the French King. And Francis this Duke having embarked himself in the same troublous Ocean, must needs suffer shipwrack with his Copartners. The French King invadeth Bretagne; The Duke overcharged with melancholy, dies, 1488. leaving Anne, his Daughter and Heir, in the power of Charles the 8th, the Sonne and Successour of that Lewis: who contracts a mariage with the Orphan, and uniteth Bretagne to France. There were many impediments which might have hindred this mariage, but Charles breaketh through them all. First, Charles himself had been formerly contracted to the Archduke Maximilians Daughter: but this he held void, because the young Lady was not of age at the time of the Contract. 2 Anne the Dutchess was also contracted to Maximilian; and this he held unvalid also, because that being his Homager, she could not bestow her self without his consent. 3 Maximilian had by proxie maried her, which mariage he consummated by a Ceremonie in those dayes unusuall. For his Ambassadour attended with a great Train of Lords and Ladies, bared his Leg unto the Knee, and put the same within the Sheets of the Dutchess, taking possession thereby of her Bed and Bodie. But Charles consulting with his Divines, was told, That this pretended Consummation was rather an invention of Court, than any way firm by the Lawes of the Church, and therefore of no power to hinder his pursute of this mariage, so advantagions to his Crown. What else remains touching the union of this Dukedom to the Realm of France, we shall see anon: having first looked over the Succession of those Princes, who under severall Titles have governed the Estate thereof, according to the best light we can get from Stories.

8 Alain, Sonne of Hoel the second.
9 Hoel III. Sonne of Alain.
10 Solomon II. Sonne of Hoel the third.
11 Alain II. Grandchild to Solomon the second, the last King of Bretagne of the race of Conan: who dying without Issue, left his Kingdom unto many Competitors, by whom distracted into many petit Tyrannies, and at last subdued by Charles the Great. And though they did again recover their Liberty and Kingdom in the time of Ludovicus Pius, who next succeeded: yet they did not hold it long in quiet. Insomuch, as after the murther of two or three Usurpers of the Royall title, Alain, surnamed Le Rebre, laid aside that invidious name of King, and would be called only Earl of Bretagne. His Successours follow.

1484. 27 Charles the 8th, French King, succeeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne, in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Francis the 2d.
1515. 29 Francis the III. of Bretagne, and the first of France, succeeded in the Dukedom in right of Claude his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Lewis the 12th, and Anne of Bretagne: by whom being made the Father of so many Children, that he had little cause to fear that the Crown would be separated from his House, in the year 1532 being the 17th of his reign and Government, caused an Act to pass, with the consent of the States of Bretagne, for the inseparable uniting of that Dukedom to the Kingdom of France, and by that meanes divested his Posteritie of it. For his male issue failing in King Henry the 3d, the rights hereof descended on the Heires generall: that is to say, on Isabel, Daughter of Philip the 2d of Spain, and the Ladie Isabel or Elizabeth his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Henry the 2d, and neece to the said Francis the first; and after her decease (dying without issue) on the Lady Catharine her Sister, maried to Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy. For whom when Philip of Spain claimed this Estate, the French pretended a Law against it of their own devising, viz. That no Estate being incorporated to that Crown, could be alienedfrom it. A proper Law, and cousin German to the Salique; but such as served their turn by the help of the English, who desired not to have the Spaniards so neer Neighbours to them.

Most of our former Earles of Richmond were Earles and Dukes of this House. Their Arms were Ermins.

THE DVKEDOM OF ANIOV.

THe DVKEDOM of ANJOV, taking it in the full latitude and extent thereof, is bounded on the East with La Beausse; on the West with Bretagne; on the North with Normandie; and on the South with part of Berry and Poicton. In which circumference are comprehended the three small Provinces of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; the antient Inhabitants whereof, in the times of the Romans, were the Andes as Cesar, (or the Andegavii as Plinie) calls them, the Turones, and the Cenomani, accounted afterwards a part of the Province of Lugdunensis Tertia.

The Countrey for the most part is very fruitful and pleasant, especially in Tourein; as is the whole tract upon the Loir. Anjou is somewhat the more hilly, but otherwise little inferiour to Tourein, affording plenty of white wines, the best in France; and yielding from those Hills above 40 Riverets, falling into the Loire from thence, the chief whereof are Mayenne, 2 Vienne, 3 Dive, and 4 Sartre.

1 ANJOV called Andegavia by the Latines, is situate in the middest betwixt Maine and Tourein; so called from the Andegavi, the Inhabitants of these parts. Principal Cities are, 1 Angers, (by Ptolomie called Iuliomagus) of a large Circuit, and well built, the See of a Bishop, reckoning in it 15 Parishes besides the Cathedral. It is seated on the River Sartre in a very good air, and therefore chosen for the seat of an Vniversitie founded here by Lewis the 2d Duke of Anjou, the Sonne of King John, Anno 1288. 2 Beaufort, a Town belonging formerly to the Dukes of Lancaster, in which John of Gaunt so much delighted, that he caused all the Children that he had by Catharine Swinford, his third Wife, to be called Beauforts: which Beauforts were afterward Dukes of Somerset and Exeter, and Earls of Dorset. This Town came to the house of Lancaster, by the mariage of Blanch of Artoys, unto Edmund surnamed Crouchback, second Son to our Henry the 3d, created by

Anjou. his Father, the first Earl of Lancaster. Memorable in these later times for giving the Title of a Dutchess to Madam Catharine, the beloved Mistress of King Henry the 4th, by whom she was mother of Cæsar now Duke of Vendosme, and Alexander, not long since the Grand Prior of France. With reference to which, the second Sonne of the Duke of Vendosme is honoured at this present with the title of Duke of Beaufort: as the eldest with relation to his Mother was made Duke of Mercoeur. 3 Baugie, neer which was fought that memorable Battle betwixt the English and the French, wherein the English lost the day, and Thomas Duke of Clarence, Brother to Henry the fifth, was there unfortunately slain. Anno 1422. 4 Saumur, pleasantly situate on the Loire, and for long time one of the Cautionarie Towns in the hands of those of the Reformed Religion: of whom it is the onely entire Universitie of this Kingdome; especially famous for the learned Philip du Morney, Lord of Plessis, sometimes the Governour hereof. 5 Loches, seated on the River Indre, the Castle whereof being mounted on a steep high Rock, is thought to be one of the strongest peeces of all France. 6 La Flesche, of speciall name at the present for a College of Jesuits, one of the faireſt in this Kingdom. The word in the French tongue signifieth an Arrow (whence those who make Bowes and Arrowes have the name of Fleschers.) At Nola in the Realm of Naples, there is another College of them, called D'Arque, the Bow: On which one wittilie composed this ensuing distich;

Arcum Nola dedit, dedit illis alma Sagittam
Gallia: quis Funem, quem meruere, dabit?

That is to say,
Nola the Bow, and France the Shaft did bring:
But who shall help them to the Hempen-string.

2 On the South-east of Anjou, betwixt it and Berry, lieth the Countrie of TOUREIN, the ancient Seat of the Turones: which, for the wholesomnes of the Air, the pleasantnes of the Countrie, and admirable plenty of all Commodities, is by some called The Garden of France. Principall Cities in it, 1 Amboise, pleasantly seated on the Loire, and beautified with one of the faireſt Castles in France, both for the gallantrie of the Building, and beautifulnes of the Prospect. 2 Tours, by Ptolomie called Cæsarodunum, and the Turonum Civitas of Antoninus; the Metropolis of Lugdunensis tertia, and an Archbishops See: a fair, rich, and well-traded Town, situate on the banks of the Loire, in a most sweet and pleasing Countrie. Famous in that those of the Reformed Religion, from the Gate of S. Hugo, at which they used to issue out to their Assemblies in the Fields, had the name of Hugonots. Given to them, as some others think, as the Disciples of the night-walking Spirit (or Robin Goodfellow) which they call S. Hugo, in regard they had their first meetings, for the most part, in the nights; as had the Primitive Christians in the times of their Persecutions. Some, more improbably, (and indeed ridiculously) derive the name from the first words of an Apologie which they are fabled to have made to the King; which were Huc nos venimus: fancying, that as the Protestants did derive that Appellation from the words Protestantes and Protestamur, so often used by them in their Apologie to Charles the fifth; so from those words Huc nos, came the name of Hugonots, or Huonots: But more assuredly famous for the great Battle fought neer it by Charles Martell, Mayre of the Palace, and Father of Pepin King of France, against an Armie of 400000 Moors, led by Abderamen, Leiutenant Generall in Spain, for Evelid or Iscam the great Caliph: of which 370000 lost their lives in the place, Anno 734. 3 Laudun. 4 Richelieu, pleasantly seated in a rich and flouriſhing Soil, as the name importeth. Of no great note till the time of the late great Cardinall of Richelieu, who took name from hence; by whom it was made one of the neateſt Towns in all this Kingdom, and honoured with the titles of a Dukedom and Pairrie of France.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for of Anjou we shall speak more at large anon) it had a while its own Proprietarie Earls of the house of Blais, conferred by Hugh Capet upon Odon Earl of Blais and Champagne, and by him given, together with the Earldom of Blais, to Theobald or Thibald his Eldest Sonne, (his second Sonne named Stephen succeeding in Champagne) who in the year 1043. was vanquished and slain by Charles Martell Earl of Anjou, and this Province seized on by the Victor, who afterwards made Tours his ordinarie Seat and Residence. Part of which Earldom it continued, till the seizure of Anjou, and all the reſt of the English Provinces in France, on the sentence passed upon King John. After which time dismembred from it, it was conferred on John, the fourth Sonne of King Charles the sixth, with the stile and title of Duke of Tourein: and he deceasing without Issue, it was bestowed with the same title on Charles the eldest Sonne of Lewis Duke of Orleans (in the life of his Father:) the same who afterwards suceeding in the Dukedom of Orleans, was taken Prisoner by the English at the Battle of Agincourt, kept Prisoner 25 years in England, and finally was the Father of King Lewis the 12th.

3 On the North side of Anjou, betwixt it and Normandie, lieth the Province of MAINE. The chief Towns whereof are, 1 Mans, Cenomanensium Civitas in Antoninus, by Ptolomie called Vindinum; seated on the meeting of Huine, and Sartre; the principall of the Province, and a Bishops See: most memorable in the elder times for giving the title of an Earl to that famous Rowland, the Sisters Sonne of Charlemaigne, one of the Twelve Peers of France; (the Subject of many notable Poems under the name of Orlando Inamorato, Orlando Furioso, besides many of the old Romances) who was Earl of Mans. 2 Mayenne, on the banks of a river of the ſame name, (Meduana in Latine) the title of the ſecond branch of the Houſe of Guiſe, famous for Charles Duke of Mayenne, who held out for the League againſt Henry the 4th; A Prince not to be equalled in the Art of War, onely unfortunate in employing it in ſo ill a cauſe. 3 Vitrin, upon the edge of Bretagne, of which little memorable. 4 La Val, not far from the head of the River Mayenne: of note for giving both name and title to the Earls of Laval, an antient Familie, allied unto the houſes of Vendoſme, Bretagne, Anjou, and others of the beſt of France. Few elſe of any note in this Countie, which once ſubſiſting of its ſelf under its own naturall Lords and Princes, was at laſt united to the Earldom of Anjou, by the mariage of the Lady Guiburge, Daughter and Heir of Helie the laſt Earl hereof, to Foulk, Earl of Anjou, Anno 1083. or thereabouts: the Fortunes of which great Eſtate it hath alwayes followed. Anjou.

But as for Anjou it ſelf, the principall part of this goodly Patrimonie, it was by Charles the Bald conferred on Robert a Saxon Prince, for his valour ſhewn againſt the Normans, Anno 870. Which Robert was Father of Eudes King of France, Richard Duke of Burgundie, and Robert who ſucceeded in the Earldom of Anjou: Competitor with Charles the Simple for the Crown it ſelf, as the next Heir to his Brother Eudes, who died King thereof. Slain in the purſute of this great quarrell, he left this Earldom, with the title of Earl of Paris, and his pretenſions to the Crown, unto Hugh his Sonne, ſurnamed the Great: who to make good his claim to the Crown, againſt Lewis the 4th, Sonne of Charles the Simple, conferred the Earldom of Anjou, and the Countrie of Gaſtinois, on Geofrie ſurnamed Ghryſogonelle, a renowned Warriour, and a great ſtickler in his cauſe, in whoſe race it continued neer 300 years. How the two Counties of Main and Touraine were joyned to it, hath been ſhewn before: Geofrie the Sonne of Foulk the 3d, maried Maude, Daughter to Henry the firſt of England, and Widow of Henry the 4th Emperour: from whom proceeded Henry the ſecond, King of England, and Earl of Anjou. But Iohn his Sonne, forfeiting his Eſtates in France (as the French pretended) Anjou returned unto the Crown: and afterwards was conferred by King Lewis the 9th, on his Brother Charles; who in right of Beatrix his Wife was Earl of Provence, and by Pope Urban the 4th was made King of Naples and Sicilie. Afterwards it was made a Dukedom by King Charles the fifth, in the perſon of Lewis of France his ſecond Brother, to whom this fair Eſtate was given, as ſecond Sonne of King Iohn of France, the Sonne of Philip de Valois, and conſequently the next Heir to Charles de Valois the laſt Earl hereof (the King his Brother yeelding up all his right unto him.) Finally it returned again unto the Crown in the time of Lewis the 11th. The Earls and Dukes hereof having been veſted with the Diadems of ſeverall Countries, follow in this Order.

1376. 4 Lewis of France, the 2d Sonne of King Iohn, the Sonne of Philip de Valois, created the first Duke of Anjou by King Charles his Brother; and adopted by Queen Ioan of Naples, King of Naples, Sicil, and Hierusalem, and Earl of Provence.

It is to be observed here (according to our method in other places) that Renè King of Sicil, &c. and Duke of Anjou, instituted an Order of Knighthood, called of the Croissant; the Knights whereof carried a Crescent, or Half-Moon, on their right Armes, with this motto, L'Os en Croissant, encouraging them thereby to seek the increase of valour and reputation.

The Arms of this Dukedom were Fraunce, a Border Gules.

7 LA BEAUSSE.

LA BEAUSSE is bounded on the East with France specially and ordinarily so called, and part of Champagne; on the West, with Anjou, Maine, Tourein, and some part of Berry; on the North, with Normandie; and on the South, with Bourbonois, and the rest of Berry. It is called Belsia in Latine Writers; both names derived from the pleasantnes and beauties of it.

The Principall Nations of the whole in the time of the Romans, were the Carnutes, which inhabited the greatest part, and the Samnite neer the Loire; part of Gallia Celtica, and cast into the Province of Lugdunensis quarta by the Emperour Constantine. Divided by the French into the Higher, the Lower, and the Intermediate.

1 The HIGHER BEAUSSE is that part which lieth next to Normandie, of which the principall Towns are, 1 Drenx, seated upon the River Eureux, supposed to be the Seat of the antient Druides, who held here their Parliaments or Sessions for administration of Justice. The title and inheritance of that Peter of Drenx, who succeeded Arthur, the Sonne of Geofrie Plantagenet, in the Earldom of Bretagne. 2 Montfort, an Earldom, the title and estate of Iohn Earl of Montfort, surnamed the Valiant, who succeeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne, by the Aid of the English, Anno 1341. 3 Chartres, called anciently Carnutum Civitas, (but by Ptolomie, Autricum) seated upon the Eureux also, from whence the Countrey hereabouts was called Le Pais Chartrain; A Bishops See, and one of the Vidamates of France. Which honour as it is peculiar to the French onely; so Milles in his Edition of Glovers Catalogue of Honour, will have but four at all in France, viz: those of Amiens, Chalons, Gerberoy, and this of Chartres. But certainly in France there are many more of them, as at Rhemes, Mans, &c. and formerly as many as it had Bishops: the Vicedominus or Vidame being to the Bishop in his Temporals, as the Chancellour in his Spirituals; or as the Vice Comites (Viscounts) were antiently to the Provinciall Earls in their Courts of Judicature.

2 The LOWER BEAUSSE is that which lieth towards Bourbonois; and is subdivided into Sologne, and Orleanois. In SOLOGNE, which lieth close to Burbon, the chief places of note, are, 1 Remorantin, seated on the Souldre, the chief Town of this Tract. 2 Mallenzay. 3 La Ferte, or La Ferte S. Bernard, of which nothing memorable. In ORLEANOYS, which lieth more Northwards upon the River of Loire, are, 1 Iargeau, a Town once of very great strength, and one of the out-works of Orleans. 2 Cleri, called also Cleri of Nostre-dame, from the Church there built unto our Ladie. 3 Tury; and 4 Angerville, both in the ordinary Road betwixt Paris and 5 Orleans, the principall Citie of all Beausse, called Genabum in the time of Cesar; repaired, or rather new built by the Emperour Aurelius, Anno 276; from thence named Aurelia, the Countrey round about it Aurelianensis, now Orleans, and Orleanoys. The Countrie generally very fruitfull, and yeelding a most excellent and delicious Wine; Which, for the strength, and intoxicating power thereof thereof, is baniſhed the French Kings Cellar by eſpecial Edict. The City very pleaſantly ſeated on the River Loyre, well built, ſituate in a ſweet Air, and planted with a civil and ingenious People, who are ſaid to ſpeak the beſt language of any in France. For a time it was the chief Seat of a diſtinct Kingdom, (according to the unprovident humour of the Merovigxians) the lot of Clodomire Sonne of Clovis the Great, and Guntram Sonne of Clotaire, both Kings of Orleans, as alſo was Theodorick, the ſecond Sonne of Childebert King of Mets, on the death of Gunthram. But Sigibert his Sonne being vanquiſhed by Clotaire the ſecond, this Kingdom, extending to the ſhores of the Aquitaine Ocean, was added unto that of France. Orleans ſince that time content with a lower title, hath of late often times with greater prudence, been made the honorarie title of the ſecond Sonnes of France called Dukes hereof. It is a See Epiſcopal, a Baillywick, or Seige Præſidial, and an Vniverſitie. The See Epiſcopal founded in the Church of St. Croſſe, miſerably ruined by the Hugonots in the civil Warrs, out of meer hatred to the name. The Seige Preſidical ſetled here by King Henry the 2d, 1551. for the eaſe of his Subjects of theſe parts, in ſutes not worth the troubling of the Courts of Paris. The Vniverſitie erected by King Philip le Bel, An. 1312 though to ſpeak properly it be an Hall only for the reading of the Civil Lawes, the only learning there profeſſed, and for that conſiderable. A Town now not of ſo great ſtrength as in former times, when for ſome moneths it held out againſt the whole power of the Engliſh, reſcued from them at laſt by the valour of Ioan the Virgin, whoſe Statua, (like a man of Arms) is ſtill preſerved on the Bridge-gate of this Citie; neer which great Montacute E. of Salisburie had his fatal blow. Bury.

The MIDDLE or intermediate BEAVSSE lieth betwixt the former, in which the places of chief note are, 1 Blois, ſeated alſo on the Loire, in a ſound air, and fruitful Countrie: the Nurſerie for the moſt part of the Kings Children, for that cauſe much reſorted to by the Nobilitie, and honoured ſometimes with the reſidence of the Kings themſelves: it being in the Councel-Chamber of the Kings houſe here, that Henry of Lorrein, Duke of Guiſe, the chief contriver of the terrible Maſſacre at Paris, and Authour of the holy League, was ſlain by the command of King Henry the 3d, Anno 1589. 2 Chaſteau-Dun, the chief Town of the Earldom of Dunois, (the honour and eſtate of Iohn Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Baſtard of Orleans, one of the beſt Souldiers of his time, and ſo approved by his exploits againſt the Engliſh) mounted upon the top of an high hill, at the confluence of the Loire, and Aigre, 3 Vendoſme (Vindocinum in Latine) the chief Town of the Dukedom of Vendoſme; not otherwiſe of note than for the Earles and Dukes which have born this Title: of which as being the Progenitors of the Kings now regnant, I have thought fit to adde the enſuing Catalogue:

Earles and Dukes of Vendoſme.

1386. 1 Iohn of Bourbon, Grandchild of Lewis the firſt Duke of Bourbon, the firſt Earl of Vendoſme of this Familie.

1432. 2 Lewis of Bourbon, a Confederate with Ioan the Virgin in her actions againſt the Engliſh.

1472. 4 Francis of Bourbon.

1495. 5 Charles of Bourbon, the firſt Duke of Vendoſme, from whoſe youngeſt Son called Lodowick, or Lewis, deſcend the now Princes of Conde, and Earls of Soiſſons.

1537. 6 Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and King of Navarre.

1562. 7 Henry of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and King of Navarre, afterwards King of France alſo by the name of Henry the 4th:

8 Cæſar de Vendoſme, one of the Sonnes of Henry the 4th, by the Ducheſs of Beaufort, created by his Father Duke of Vendoſme, and once deſigned his Succeſſour in the Crown of France: Afterwards by the procurement of the King his Father, maried to the Daughter and Heir of Philibert Emanuel, D. of Mercoeur, (a younger branch of the houſe of Lorrein) poſſeſſed of a fair and goodly eſtate in the Dukedom of Bretagne in the right of his Wife, a Daughter and Heir of the houſe of Martignes (a branch of the Familie of thoſe Dukes.) By means whereof the Duke of Vendoſme hath not only a large inheritance, but great autoritie in that Countrie.

The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Vendoſme, were and are, Azure, ſix Flower de Lyces Or, 3. 2. 1.

8 BERRY.

BERRY is bounded on the North, with La Beauſſe; on the South, with Limoſin; on the Eaſt, with Heurepoix, (part of France ſpecially ſo called) and ſome part of Bourbonnois; on the Weſt, with Poictou, and Toureine in the Dukedom of Anjou. In Latine called Biturigum Regio, from the Bituriges, the old Inhabitants of this tract; by Plinie, Strabo and ſome others, called the Bituriges Cubi, to difference them from the Bituriges Vbiſci dwelling about Bourdeaux.

The Countrie watred in the Eaſt with the River Faye; in the South with the Covre; in the North with the Cher, and in the inland parts with Indre, Arnon, Theo, Eure: and others which we ſhall meet withall anon, of no great note, but ſuch as much conduce to the fruitfulneſs of it; affording it the benefit of fat paſtures, and flouriſhing Meadowes; which breed great multitudes of Cattel, tell. and ſuch flocks of Sheep, that when they tax a man for lying in exceſs of numbers, they uſe to ſay, Phy Sir, there are not ſo many Sheep in Berry.

It containeth in it 33 walled Towns, the chief whereof are, 1 Bourges, a Town of great ſtrength by nature, and as well fortified by Art; ſituate in a low Flat, amongſt deep impaſſable Bogs and Mariſhes, cauſed by the over-flowings of the Auron, Yeure, Molon, and Aurette; ſmall Riverets, but of great waters when they meet together. By means whereof it may be eaſily drowned at the approach of an enemy: for that cauſe made the faſtneſs and retreat of Charles the 7th, in his long Wars againſt the Engliſh, poſſeſſed at that time of Paris and the greateſt part of the Kingdom. The poor Prince in the mean time fain to feaſt it here with a Rump of Mutton and a Chick, and that but upon high daies neither: from his conſtant abode here, and that withall he had been Duke of this Countrie, in the life of his three elder Brethren, by the Engliſh in deriſion called King of Berry. A large, fair, and rich Town it is, the Seat of an Arch-Biſhop, a Seige Preſidial, and one of the beſt Univerſities in France, eſpecially for the ſtudie of the Civil Lawes; firſt founded by K. Lewis the 9th, and afterwards reſtored or perfected by Charles Duke of Berry, the Brother of King Lewis the 11th. Some fabulous founders, and as ridiculous originations have been thought of for it; as that it was built by Ogyges, a Grand-child of Noah, by whom called Bytogyges, which in the corruption of the following times, came (forſooth) unto Bituriges: which Etymologie were it as dear bought, as it is farre-fetched, might be good for Ladies, and then it would be good for ſomewhat. Others no leſs abſurdly, will have it called Bituris, quaſi Bi-Turris, from two fair Towers which formerly (as they pretend) were erected here; one of the two, in part ſtill ſtanding: and unto this, they ſay, alludeth an old Grammarian, thus,

Turribus à binis inde vocor Bituris.
From two Towers which were builded here
The name of Bituris I bear.

But the truth is, it was thus called from the Bituriges (the Biturigum Civitas of Antoninus) and by that name in the diviſion of old Gaul by the Emperour Conſtantine, made the Metropolis of the Province of Aquitania Prima, of which this Countrie was a part. 2 Viarron, or Viarzon, pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Woods, Vines and Rivers; the Rivers Arnon, Theo, Cher, and Yeure, meeting hereabouts. Built in or neer the place of the old Avaricum, a town of great note and ſtrength in the time of Caſar: the Revolt whereof gave ſuch a check to his proceedings, that he was fain to ſtretch his wits and valour on the verie tenter-hooks, before it was again recovered. 3 Concreſſant on the River Sonldre, beautified with a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle. 4 Chaſteau Roux on the River Indre; of which little memorable. 5 Iſſaudun, on the River Theo, the Bailliage for that part of the Countrie. 6 Montfalcon, an antient Baronie. 7 Argenton, on the River Creuſe, the title and eſtate of Philip de Comines, hence called Seigneur de Argenton, who writ the Hiſtorie of France under Lewis the 11th, in which he dived ſo farre into, and writ ſo plainly of the greateſt affaires of State, that Queen Catharine de Medices uſed to ſay, that he had made as many Hereticks in State-Policie, as Luther had done in Religion. 8 Sancerre, ſeated on an high hill neer the River Loire, by ſome Latine Writers called Xantodorum, but moſt generally ſaid to be ſo called, quaſi Sacrum Cereris, from the Godeſs Ceres herein worſhipped. A Town of great conſequence and ſtrength, and as ſuch aſſigned over to the Hugonots Anno 1579. as a Town of Caution for their ſecuritie, and the better keeping of the Articles of Peace then agreed upon: famous not long after for enduring a moſt deſperate and tedious Siege under Charles the 9th, by whom thoſe Articles were almoſt no ſooner made than broken.

Here is alſo in this Province the Town and Signeurie of Aubignie, adorned with many privileges, an ample territorie, and a beautiful Caſtle. Beſtowed by Charles the ſixt on Robert, the ſecond Sonne of Alan Stewart, Earl of Lennox in Scotland, for his many Signal Services againſt the Engliſh; and is ſtill the honourarie title and poſſeſſion of the ſecond Branch of that noble and illuſtrious Familie.

But as for Berry it ſelf, and the fortunes of it, we may pleaſe to know, that in the time of Hugh Capet one Godfrey was Governour of this Province, whoſe Poſteritie enjoyed that Office under the Kings of France, till the daies of King Henry the firſt; of whom the Inheritance and Eſtate was bought by Harpin, one of the Deſcendants of that Godfrey. But long he had not held it as Proprietarie, in his own right, when deſirous to make one in the Holy Wars, he ſold it back again to King Philip the firſt (the better to furniſh himſelf for that expedition) Anno 1096. to be united to the Crown after his deceaſe. Since which time the Soveraigntie of it hath been alwayes in the Crown of France, but the poſſeſſion and Revenue ſometimes given with the title of Duke, for a portion to ſome of the Kings younger Sonnes, to be holden of them in Appennage, under the Soveraigntie and command of the Donor and his Succeſſors: the laſt which ſo enjoyed it being Charles the Brother of Lewis the 11th; after whoſe death it was united to the Crown, never ſince ſeparated from it, ſave that it gave the title of Ducheſſe to the Ladie Margaret, ſiſter of Francis the firſt, maried after to the Duke of Savoy.

9 The Dukedom of BOVRBON.

THE Dukedom of BOVRBON, in the full power and extent thereof, comprehended Bourbonois, Forreſt, Beau-jolois, and Auvergne, all now reverted to the Crown.

1 BOVRBONOIS hath on the Eaſt the Dukedom of Burgundy; on the Weſt, Berry; on the North, La Beauſſe, and a corner of Gaſtinois; on the South, Auvergne. The Countrie very well wooded, and of excellent paſturage, which makes the people more intent to grazing and feeding Cattel, than they are to tillage; and is watered with the Rivers of Loire, Yonne, and Allier, which are counted navigable; beſides Aron, Acolin, Lixentes, Lanbois, and ſome leſſer ſtreames.

The antient Inhabitants were the Hedui, who being waſted in their Wars againſt the Romans, a great part of their Countrie was by Julius Ceſar conferred on the Boii, a German Nation; who coming with the Helvetians into Gaule, and unwilling upon their defeat to go home again, were by him planted in this tract.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower. In the Higher which is more mountainous and hilly, there is no other Town of note than that of Montaigne, ſituate in the Countie of Combraille, the Signencie as I take it of that Michael de Montaigne, the Authour of the Book of Eſſaies. But in the Lower Bourbonois are, 1 Molins, eſteemed the Center of all France, ſituate on the Allier, Bailliage, and the chief Town of this Countrie: the River yielding great plenty of Fiſh, but of Salmons ſpecially; the Town adorned with a fair Caſtle, and that beautified with one of the fineſt Gardens in France, in which are many Trees of Limmons and Oranges. 2 Bourbon Archenbaud, and 3 Bourbon Ancie; the former of the two ſeated upon the Loire, and giving name to the whole Province, of great reſort by reaſon of its medicinal waters. 4 S. Porcin, and 5 Varennes Ganat, upon the frontiers of Auvergn, 6 Chancelle, 7 Charroux, 8 Paliſſe, 9 Souvigni, 10 St. Amand, &c.

In the North part of Bourbonois, but not accounted any part or member of it, lieth the Town of Nevers, (in Latine Nivernium) from whence the Countrie round about is called NIVERNOIS. A Town of good eſteem, but not very great; the reputation which it hath proceeding partly from ſome mines of Iron, interſperſed with ſilver which are found therein; and partly for the Earls and Dukes from hence denominated. The firſt whereof was Landri of the houſe of Bourgogne, Anno 1001. Paſſing through many Families, it came at laſt again to the houſe of Bourgogne, and from that unto the Earles of Flanders, by the mariage of Yoland of Bourgogne to Robert of Bethune, Earl of Flanders, Anno 1312 whoſe Sonne named Lewis maried the Heir of Rethel. Together with the reſt of the rights of Flanders, it came again by mariage to the Dukes of Burgundie; conveied by Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Iohn of Bourgogne Earl of Nevers, ſecond Sonne of Philip the good Duke of Burgundie, to Adolph Duke of Cleves her Husband, Anno 1484, and by Henrietta, Siſter and Heir of Francis de Cleves, the ſecond Duke of Never, and the laſt of that Familie, to her Husband Lewis de Gonzaga, third Sonne of Frederick Duke of Mantua, Anno 1563. whoſe Sonne Charles, ſucceeded his Father and Mother in the Dukedom of Nevers, and Vincent of Gonzaga his Couſen german, in the Dukedom of Mantua.

The Armes of theſe Dukes, Azure, within a Border Compone Gules and Argent, 3 Flower de Lyces, Or.

2 FORREST, is bounded on the Eaſt with Beau-jolois; on the Weſt with Auvergne; on the North with Bourbonois; and on the South with a part of Languedock. The Countrie populous and large, but not very fruitful; hillie and mountainous, much of the nature of the Wood-Lands. The Air a little of the coldeſt to afford good Wines, but that ſufficiently recompenſed by abundance of pitcoal, by which they have good fires at a very cheap rate. The people are conceived to be none of the wiſeſt, but withall very greedy and covetous of gain.

The chief Towns in it are, 1 Mont-Briſon, ſeated on the Loyre. 2 Feurs, ſeated on the ſame River, called antiently Forum Seguſianorum, the chief Citie of the Seguſiani, or Seruſiani, whom Ceſar and others mention in this part of Gaule. 3 St. Stephen (or Eſtienne) in Feurian, neer the head of that River. 4 St. Germans. 5 St. Rimbert. 6 St. Bennet le Chaſtean. 7 St. Guermier, &c. of which little memorable.

This Countrie of Forreſt was anciently a part of the Earldome of Lyons, diſmembred from it at or about the ſame time with Beau-jolois, and was held by a long ſucceſſion of Earls Proprietaries of it, as a ſtate diſtinct: till Reynaud Lord of Forreſt, the Sonne of Earl Guy, by the mariage of Iſabel Daughter and heir of Humbert Earl of Beau-jeu, joyned them both together, which was about the year 1265, parted again after his deceaſe Anno 1280. Guy being his eldeſt Sonne ſucceeding in Forreſt; and Lewis his ſecond in Beau-jeu. How they became united in the houſe of Burbon, we ſhall ſee anon.

3 BEAV-JOLOIS, ſo called from Beau-jeu, the chief Town hereof, taketh up the tract of ground betwixt the Loire and the Soaſne, and betwixt Lionois and Forreſt. A Countrie of no great extent, but verie remarkeable for the Lords and Princes of it: who have been men of great eminence in their ſeverall times. The chief Town of it is Beau-jeu, beautified with a goodly Caſtle, pleaſantly ſeated on the brow of a riſing Mountain, from whence perhaps it took the name, as the great Keep in Farnham Caſtle, was in the ſame ſenſe, and for the ſame pleaſant ſituation, called Joyeux Guard, in the time of Lancelot du Lake whoſe that Caſtle was. Which appears fur-Auvergn. ther by a Tower built at Constantinople by Guischard the third of that name Lord hereof (being then Ambassadour to the Emperour from King Philip Augustus) with this inscription, Turris Belli-jocensis, which there continued to be seen a long time after. 2 Belle-ville, where is an Abbie founded by Humbert the second, Anno 1158. 3 Ville Franche, environed with Walls by Humbert the fourth, whose Sonne Guischard the third above mentioned, founded here a Convent of Franciscans, called to this day Minorette. 4 Noironde. 5 St. Maurice. 6 Vlsie. 7 Obches, concerning which there have been long and many Wars betwixt the Earls of Forrest and these Lords of Beaujeu.

This Countrie, as that other of Forrest, was once part of the Earldom of Lions; in the partage of which Estate it fell to Omphroy one of the Brothers of Earl Artand, Anno 989. whose Successors had no other title than Lords of Beaujeu. They were most of them men of great piety, founders of many Collegiate and conventuall Churches; some of them of action also: Humbert the second and the fifth, Adventurers in the Wars of the Holy Land; Vichard the second, in those against the English; Guischard the fourth, made Constable of France, by King Lewis the ninth. But the house failing in this Guischard, it was united unto that of the Earls of Forrest as before is said, in the person of Regnand Earl thereof: whose Sonne and Successour called Lewis, was also Constable of France, as Edward the Grand-child of this Lewis a Marshall of it. But at the last it fell into the hands of a lewd and wicked Prince, Edward the second: who being imprisoned at Paris for his great offences, and overlaid with Wars by the Dukes of Savoy, made a donation or free gift of all his Signeuries to Lewis Duke of Bourbon, surnamed the good, and direct Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the eldest Sonne of Regnaud Earl of Forrest and Lord of Beau-jeu above mentioned, and consequently of next kin to him, Anno 1400.

4 AUVERGNE hath on the East Forrest, and Lyonois; on the West Limosin, Perigort, and Quercy; on the South part of Languedoc; and on the North Berry, and Bourbonnois. It is divided into the Higher and Lower. The Lower being called Limaigne, is fruitfull in a very eminent degree; the Higher mountainous and baren. In this last the Towns of chief note are, 1 St. Flour, a Bishops See, of an impregnable situation. 2 Ovillac, on the River Iourdain, defended with a strong Castle on the top of a Rock. 3 Beauregard, on the River Gardon. 4 Carlat. 5 Murat. 6 Pillon, of which little observable in antient stories. In the Lower called Limaigne, from a River of that name, which falls into the Ailier; there is, 1 Clermont, a Bishops See, fair and pleasing for the situation, and Fountains descending from the hills of the higher Auvergn, the chief Citie of the whole Province. Most memorable in these later Ages for the Councill here called by Pope Vrban the second, Anno 1067. in which, by the artifice of the Pope, the Christian Princes of the West, ingaged themselves in the Wars of the Holy Land, giving thereby the better opportunity to the Popes to enlarge both their Territories and their power. It was first raised out of the ruines of Gergovia, the head Citie of the Auverni, in the time of Sesar, and the seat Royall of Vercingetorex King of that Nation, who so long put him to his trumps with an Army of 138000 men; now a small Village Called Gergeau. 2 Rion, in which resides the Seneschall or chief Governour of the Lower Auvergn. 3 Montpensier, of great note for the Princes of the house of Bourbon, once Dukes hereof: beginning in Lewis the first Earl, Sonne of John Duke of Bourbon, Anno 1415. and ending in Henry the last Duke, whose Daughter and Heir was maried to the Duke of Orleans, Brother of Lewis the thirteenth. 4 Montferant. 5 Yssoire. 6 Brionde. 7 Aigueperse. 8 Turenne, the antient Seat and Patrimony of the De La Tours, now Soveraigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon, to whom it hath for some ages since given the title of Viscount. A family descended from the Heirs generall of Eustace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy, Father to Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorreine.

The Country first inhabited in the times of the Romans by the potent Nation of the Auverni, whose King Bituitus was taken prisoner, and led in triumph unto Rome, in the War against the Salii, the Allobroges, and others of their Confederates: Not fully conquered till Cesar had subdued their King Vercingetorix. They were afterwards part of the Province of Aquitania prima, retaining in the often changes of the Empire, its old name of Auvergn; heretofore part of the great Dutchie of Aquitaine, remaining subject to those Dukes till William the eighth Duke, and the fourth of that name, gave it in Portion with one of his Daughters: in whose line it continued under the title of the Dauphins of Auvergn, till Berault the last Earl or Dauphin of it. Who having maried the Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the Sonne of Regnaud above mentioned, had by her a Daughter named Anne, Heir of both Estates, maried to Lewis the good, the third Duke of Bourbon: to whom Edward the last Lord of Beau-jeu made a Donation or surrendry of that Signeurie also: uniting in his person the distinct Estates of Bourbon, Beau-jeu, Forrest, and Auvergne.

And as for Burbonnois it self, in the distractions of the French Empire by the posterity of Charles the Great, who most improvidently cantoned it into many great Estates, and petit Signeuries: it fell unto the share of the potent Family of the Dampierre, descended from the antient house of Bourgogne, who held it till the year 1308. At what time Lewis the ninth for the advancement of Robert Earl of Clermont (in Beauveisin) his fift Son: maried him to Beatrix Daughter and Heir of Archenbald Dampierre the last of that house. Lewis the Sonne of this Robert was the first Duke of this Line; whose successours and their atchievements follow in this Catalogue of Poicton.

The Lords and Dukes of Bourbon.

1308. 1 Robert, Sonne of King Lewis the 9th. Earl of Clermont, the first Lord of Bourbon of the house of France.

1341. 3 Peter, Peer, and Chamberlain, slain in the Battle of Poictiers. Anno 1356.

1434. 6 Charles, Peer, and Chamberlain, Generall of the Army against the English in the Ile of France.

1456. 7 John II. Peer, Chamberlain, and Constable of France.

1487. 8 Peter II. Brother of John, Peer, Chamberlain, and Regent of France, in the absence of Charles the 8th.

1503. 9 Charles Earl of Montpensier, Duke of Bourbon in the right of Susan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Peter the second, Duke of Bourbon. After whose death, being slain at the sack of Rome, Anno 1527. without Issue, his Estate fell unto the Crown, and so continued, till by the Sentence or Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Paris, Auvergne, Forrest, and Beau-jeau were adjudged to Madam Lovise, Mother of Lewis the first Duke of Montpensier, and Daughter and Heir of Gilbert de Bourbon Earl of Montpensier, the Nephew of John Duke of Bourbon (the first of that name) of which house she was the only surviving Heir: from whence descended Henry the last Duke of that Familie spoken of before. And for the title of Auvergne, it was used customarily by the eldest Sonnes of the Earls and Dukes of Montpensier; till given to Charles, naturall Sonne of King Charles the ninth, called from hence the Count or Earl of Auvergne: who being a Confederate of Charles Duke of Biron, was in the year 1604. made Prisoner by King Henry the fourth, released by King Lewis the thirteenth, Anno 1616. and within two years after made Duke of Angolesme, in whose posterity it remaineth.

The Arms of these Dukes were 1 France, a Baston Gules, for the Dukedom of Bourbon. 2 Or, a Daulphin Palme, Azure, for the Countie of Auvergne. 3 Or, a Lion Sable, armed Gules under a Labell of fine peeces of the same, for the Signeurie of Beau-jeu. The Arms of the Earldom of Forrest I am yet to seek.

POICTOU.

HAving thus taken a survey of those severall Provinces, which, (except Bretagne) were the first purchases of the French in the modern France; let us next look on those which were possessed by the Gothes. And first we will begin with POICTOU, their most Northern Province, bounded on the North with Bretagne and Anjou, on the South with Xantoigne, a member of the Dukedom of Aquitain; on the East with Tourein, Limosin, and Berry; and on the West with the Aquitain Seas.

It is called in Latine, Pictavia, from the Pictones, as Ptolomie, Cæsar, and some others, or the Pictavi, as Antoninus calleth them, the old Inhabitants hereof; and is a countrey so great and plentifull, that there are numbred in it 1200 Parishes, and three Bishopricks. A strong Argument of the populousnes and largenes of it. Besides the goodnes of the Soil, it hath many other great helps to enrich it; that is to say, a large Sea coast, some capacious Harbours, not a few navigable Rivers, emptying themselves into the Sea; besides the benefit which redounds to it from the Clin, or Clavius, the Crevise, and Vienne, three Rivers falling into the Loire; which also glides along on the North hereof.

The principall Towns and Cities of it are, 1 Poictiers, in Latine, Pictavis, seated upon the Clin, or Clavius, by Ptolomie called Angustoritum: the largest Citie for compass of ground within the Walls, next to Paris it self; but conteining in that circuit Meadows, Corn-fields, and other waste grounds. It is an Universitie, especially for the studie of the Civill Lawes, and a See Episcopall: one of the Bishops hereof being S. Hilarie, surnamed Pictavensis, that renowned Father of the Church, and a stout Champion of the Catholick Faith against the Arians, though countenanced in their Heresie by the Emperour Constantius. 2 Souri, upon the River Charente, neer the edge of Xantoigne. 3 Talmont, upon the shores of the Ocean. 4 Beaumoir, a Sea Town also, and a reasonable good Port, neer the confines of Bretagne. 5 Roch-sur-yon, which gave the title of Prince to one of the branches of the Royall race of Bourbon. 6 Lusignan, on the River Ion, denominating the Noble Family of Lusignan, sometimes Kings of Hierusalem, and afterwards of Cyprus, which last they had in exchange for the first, by the donation of King Rich. the first of England. 7 Lucon, or Lusson, seated upon a navigable arm of the Sea: sufficiently famous in being the Episcopall See of the renowned Cardinal of Richelieu, who so long managed the affairs of France for King Lewis the thirteenth. 8 Mailleseais a Bishops See also. 9 Thouars, which gives the title Limosin. title of Duke to the antient Familie of Tremoville, from which the Dukes of Bretagne did derive themselves, from the time that Constance the Daughter and Heir of Conan, after the death of Geofrie Plantagenet her first Husband, had Guy of Thouars for her second. To Chastell-Heraula (or Castrum Heraldi,) on the River Vienne, of which James Hamilton, Earl of Arran in Scotland, by the gift of King Henry the second of France, the better to assure him to the French Faction there, against the English, had the title of Duke.

In the Vine-Fields of this Countrey, within two Leagues of Poictiers, was fought that memorable Battell, between John of France, and Edward the Sonne of King Edward the third, surnamed the Black Prince. Who being distressed by the number of the French, would willingly have departed on honorable terms; which the French not accepting, instead of conquest, found a fatall overthrow. For they presuming on their own strength, to their own disadvantage, bereft the enemy of all opportunity of retiring: whereas ordinary policie would instruct the Leader of an Army, to make his enemie, if he would flie, a bridge of gold; as Count Petillan used to say. Hereupon Themistocles would not permit the Grecians to break the bridge made over the Hellespont by Xerxes; lest the Persians should be compelled to fight, and so happen to recover their former losses; and Charles the sixth lost his Army, by intercepting of our Henry the fifth in his march to Calice. For where all way of flight or retreat is stopt, the basest Souldier will rather die with glorie in the front of his battell, than flye and be killed with ignominie. So true a Mistress of hardy resolutions is Despair: and no less true this Proverb of ours, Make a Coward fight, and he will kill the Devill. On the contrary, it hath been the use of divers politick Captains, to make their own Souldiers fight more resolutely, by taking from them all hope of safety, but by battell. So did William the Conquerour; who at his arrivall into England, burnt the ships which transported his Armie: thereby giving his Souldiers to wit, that their lives lay in the strength of their arms, and courage of their hearts, not in the nimblenes of their heels. Tariff, the leader of the Moors into Spain, burnt likewise all his Navy, one onely Pinnace excepted; which he reserved to carry tydings of his success.

When Charles Martell encountred that infinite host of the Saracens, (of which you have already heard) he commanded the people of Tours to open the gates onely to the Victors. Then he led his Army over the Loire, placing on the bankes thereof certain troupes of horsemen, to kill all such as fled out of the field; Hereby informing his men, that there was to them no more France than what they fought on: unless they were Conquerours. In like manner, the same Themistocles, cunningly working the Persians to enclose the Greek Navy on every side: inflamed the Grecians with such courage, by a necessity of fight, that they gave their enemies the most memorable defeat that ever hapned on those seas.

But to proceed, the People of this Province have more in them of the old Gall, than any in France, as lying so betwixt the borders of the Gothes, and French, that it was never throughly planted or possessed by either. An Arguument whereof may be, that they are naturally more rude, subtile, craftie, and contentious than the rest of their Countrie men; and have a Dialect by themselves much differing from the common French, having many words mixt with it (questionless some remainders of the antient Gallick) which the naturall French man understands not. In the division of Gaule by the Emperour Constantine, they were reckoned for a part of Aquitania secunda: and as a part thereof, wonne from the Romans, with Limosin, Perigort, and Quercu, by Euricus King of the Gothes in Spain. Of whose Kingdom it continued part, till those Gothes were dispossessed of their hold in France, by Clovis the fifth King of the French, surnamed the Great. After which it belonged to the Kings of that People; by the Posterity of Charles the Great, assigned to some Provincial Governours with the title of Earls. One of which being named Ebles (of the old Gothish race, if I guess aright) by the last Will and Testament of William the Debonair Duke of Aquitain and Earl of Auvergne, succeeded in that fair Estate. Poicton by this means made a part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, came with it at the last to the Kings of England; as shall there be shewn: and being theirs, was given with the title of Earl by King Henry the second, to Richard surnamed Cuer de Lyon, who was after King: seized upon by the French in the unfortunate reign of King John, with the rest of the English Provinces, Anno 1202. Alphonso, brother to Lewis the 9th is made Earl of Poicton: and being again recovered by King Henry the third, it was by him conferred on his Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall. But Henry being entangled in the Barons Wars, and Richard wholly taken up with the affairs of Germanie, of which by some of the Electors he was chosen Emperour: it was fully conquered by the French, and never since dismembred from that Crown, for ought I can find. For though in the more active times of King Edward the third, some of the best Towns and peeces of it were possessed by the English: yet were they lost again soon after, according to the various successes and events of War.

11 LIMOSIN, 12 PERIGORT, 13 QUERCU.

THese Provinces I have joyned together, because for the most part they have followed the same fortune; being sometimes French, and sometimes English, according to the successes of either Nation.

1 LIMOSIN, the largest of the three, hath on the East, Bourbonnois; on the West Perigort; and on the North, and North-west, Poicton and Berry; on the South, Auvergne. It is divided into the Higher, properly called Limosin; and the Lower, commonly called La Marche: both parts parts, but ſpecially La Marche, which lieth towards Auvergne, being mountainous, and not very fruitfull; but of a free and open Air, inhabited by a people of a more ſtaid and ſober nature than the reſt of the French; frugall in expence, and moderate in diet; only ſo great devourers of bread, that they are grown into a By-word. Perigort, & Quercu,

The chief Towns in La March, or the Lower Limoſin, are, 1 Tulles, ſeated in a rough and hilly Countrie, a Biſhops See. 2 Uzarche, ſeated amongſt the mountains, on the River Vezere, a very fierce and violent current: with which ſo fortified on all ſides, that it is thought to be a very ſtrong and ſecure dwelling. 3 Treinac. 4 Douſenac. 5 Belmont. 6 Meiſſac. 7 Brive la Gaillard, &c. In the Higher Limoſin the chief Towns are 1 Limoges, a Biſhops See, the principall of the Lemovices, from whom denominated; by Ptolomie called Ratiaſtum. A neat, but no large City, rich, populous, and inhabited by a people of ſo great an induſtrie, that they compell every one to work, and is therefore by the French called the Priſon of Beggars. Seated on the Vienne. At the taking of it, when revolted, Edward the Black Prince could by no means be allured to pity the diſtreſſed Citizens, till purſuing his enemies, he ſaw three French Gentlemen make head againſt his Armie; the conſideration of whoſe magnanimity drew him to pity, where before he had vowed revenge. 2 Chaluz, at the beſieging of which, our Richard the firſt was ſlain by a ſhot from an Arbaliſt; the uſe of which warlike engine, he firſt ſhewed unto the French. Whereupon a French Poet made theſe verſes, in the perſon of Atropos.

Hoc volo, non aliâ Richardum morte perire,
Ut qui Francigenis Baliſta primitùs uſum
Tradidit, ipſe ſui rem primitùs experiatur:
Quamq; aliis docuit, in ſe vim ſentiat artis.

It is decreed, thus muſt great Richard die,
As he that firſt did teach the French to dart
An Arbaliſt; 'tis juſt he firſt ſhould trie
The ſtrength, and taſte the fruits of his own Art.

The man that ſhot him was called Bertram de Gurdon, who being brought before the King (for the King neglecting his wounds, never gave over the Aſſault till he gained the place) boldly juſtified his Action, as done in the ſervice of his Countrie, and for revenge of the death of his Father and Brother, whom the King had cauſed to be ſlain. Which heard, the King not only cauſed him to be ſet at liberty, but gave him an hundred ſhillings ſterling in reward of his gallantrie. 3 Soubſterrein, on the confines of Berry. 4 Confaulat. 5 Dorat, on the River Vienne. 6 Boiſſon. 7 Birat, of which nothing memorable.

2 PERIGORT, hath on the Eaſt Auvergn and Quercu; on the Weſt Xantoigne; on the North Limoſin; and on the South ſome part of Gaſcoine. The Countrie and people are much of the ſame condition with that of Limoſin, ſaving that Perigort is the more woodie; and thoſe woods plentifull of Cheſnuts. The chief Towns of it are, 1 Perigeux, the principall Citie of the Petrogorii, by Ptolomie called Veſſina, now a Biſhops See, ſome foot-ſteps of which name remain in a part of Perigeux, (for the Town is divided into two parts) which to this day is called Veſune, in which ſtandeth the Cathedrall Church, and the Biſhops Palace. The whole Citie ſeated in a very pleaſant Vallie, environed with Downes affording a moſt excellent Wine; and having in it, as a mark of the Roman greatneſs, the ruines of a large and ſpacious Amphitheatre. 2 Bergerac, ſeated on the great River of Dordonne. 3 Sarlat, a Biſhops See. 4 Nomron, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 5 Miramont. 6 La Roche. 7 Marſee, where is a Well which ebbeth and floweth according to the pulſe of the River of Bourdeaux. And 8 Angoleſme, in the North-weſt, towards Xantoigne, the ſeat of the Engoliſmenſes in the time of the Romans, now a Biſhops See: ſeated upon the River of Charente, with which it is almoſt encompaſſed; the other ſide being defended by a ſteep and rocky mountain. A Town of great importance, when poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, being one of their beſt out-works for defence of Bourdeaux: one of the Gates hereof being to this day called Chande, ſeems to have been the work of Sir John Chandos Banneret, one of the firſt Founders of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, then Governour hereof for King Edward the third. Being recovered from the Engliſh by Charles the fifth, it was beſtowed on John, the third Sonne of Lewis Duke of Orleans, Grandfather of King Francis the firſt, with the title of an Earldom onely, Anno 1408. Afterwards made a Dukedom in the perſon of the ſaid King Francis, before his comming to the Crown. And for the greater honour of it, as much of the adjoyning Countrie was laid unto it, as maketh up a Territorie of about 24 French Leagues in length, and 15 in bredth: Within which circuit are the Towns of Chaſteau-neef, and Coignac, on the River of Charente. 3 Roche Faulcon, 4 Chabannes. 5 Meriville. 6 Villebois, &c. Since that united to the Crown, it hath of late times given the title of Duke to Charles Earl of Auvergne, Anno 1618. The Baſe Sonne of Charles the ninth, conſequently extracted from the houſe of Angoleſme.

3 QUERCU, is encompaſſed about with Limoſin, Perigort, Languedoc, and Auvergne. A populous Countrie for the bigneſs (being one of the leaſt in all France) and very fruitfull withall, though ſomewhat mountainous. The principall places in it, 1 Cahors, the chief Citie of the Cadurci in the times of the Romans; ſtill a great, ſtrong, and well traded Town, and the See of Aquitain. a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporall Lord of it; ſeated upon the River Loch. From hence deſcended and took name the noble Family of Chaworth, De Cadurcis in Latine: out of which, by a Daughter of Patrick de Cadurcis, Lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly in the Marches of Wales, maried to Henry the third Earl of Lancaſter, come the Kings of England, and moſt of the Royall houſes in Europe. 2 Montalban, a Biſhops See alſo, built on the top of an high mountain, and ſo well fortified by all advantages of Art, that it is thought to be the moſt defenſible of any in France: of which it gave ſufficient proof in that notable reſiſtance which it made to King Lewis the thirteenth, in his Wars againſt thoſe of the Religion, Anno 1622. 3 Soulac, upon the River Dordonne. 4 Nigrepelliſſe, another of the Towns poſſeſſed by the Proteſtant party, reduced to the obedience of King Lewis the thirteenth, Anno 1621. but in Novemb. following, they murdered the Kings Garriſon, and the next yeer denied admiſſion to the King. Taken at laſt, Anno 1622. by the King in perſon; the puniſhment did exceed the Crime. For the men were not only killed and hanged, as they had deſerved; but many of the women alſo: ſome of them having their ſecret parts rammed with Gun-powder, and ſo torn in peeces by the unpattern'd Barbariſm of the mercileſs and revengefull Souldiers. 5 Chaſteau-Saraſin, a ſtrong Town on the Garond. 6 Nazaret. 7 Burette, &c.

The antient Inhabitants of theſe 3 Provinces, were the Lemovices, the Petrocorii, and the Cadurci before-mentioned: of which the Lemovices and Cadurci, were caſt into the Province of Aquitania Prima, the Petrocorii and Engoliſmenſes into Aquitania Secunda. In the declining of that Empire, ſeized on by the Gothes, but from them ſpeedily extorted by the conquering French. Afterwards when King Henry the third of England releaſed his right in the Provinces of Normandy, Poictou, Anjou, Tourein and Maine; Lewis the ninth, to whom this releaſe was made, gave him in ſatisfaction of all former intereſſes, 300000 l. of Anjovin money, the Dukedom of Guienne, the Countie of Xaintoigne, as far as to the River of Charent, with the Province of Limoſin. And on the Capitulations made betwixt Edward the third of England, and John of France, then Priſoner to him, Perigort and Quercu (amongſt other conditions) were conſigned over to the Engliſh, diſcharged of all Reſort and Homage to the Crown of France, After which times reſpectively they remained all three in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, untill their finall expulſion by King Charles the ſeventh, never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown thereof.

14 AQUITAIN.

THe Dukedom of AQUITAIN, the greateſt and goodlieſt of all France, contained the Provinces of Xaintogne, 2 Guienne, 3 Gaſcoigne; with the Iſles of Oleron and Rees, and other Iſlands in the Aquitainick or Weſtern Ocean.

1 XAINTOIGNE is bounded on the Eaſt with Limoſin and Perigort; on the Weſt, with the Aquitanick Ocean; on the North, with Poictou; and on the South, with Guienne: So called from Sainctes one of the Principall Cities of it: as that from the Santones, a Nation here inhabiting in the time of the Romans, whoſe chief Citie it was. The River of Charente running thorow the middle of it, and ſo on the North border of it emptieth it ſelf into the Ocean, juſt oppoſite to the Iſle of Oleron; having firſt taken in the Seugne and the Boutonne, two leſſer Rivers.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Sainctes, by Ptolomie called Mediolanum, by Antonine, Civitas Santonum, ſeated upon the Charente, a Biſhops See, and the Seneſchalſie for the Countrie. 2 S. John d' Angelie, ſituate on the Boutonne, a Town impregnably fortified; whereof it hath given ſufficient teſtimonie in the Civill Wars of France about Religion. 3 Marans, a little port, but in a mariſhy and inconvenient ſituation. 4 Bourg ſur la mer, upon the Dordonne, which for the wideneſs of it is here called a Sea. 5 Retraicte, ſeated near the confluence of the two great Rivers, the Garond, and the Dordonne. 6 Blaye, the moſt Southern Town of all this Countrie, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a good Garriſon for ſecuring the paſſage unto Bourdeaux; this Town being ſeated on the very mouth of the River which goeth up to it. 7 Rochelle, Rupella in the preſent Latine, but antiently called Santonum Portus, as the chief Haven of the Santones, a well noted Port, in the moſt northern part of Xaintoigne; from whence the Countrie hereabouts is called ROCHELOIS. The Town ſeated in the inner part of a fair and capacious Bay; the entrance of which is well aſſured by two very ſtrong Forts, betwixt which there is no more ſpace, than for the paſſage of a good ſhip; every night cloſed up with a maſſie Chain: and the whole Town either environed with deep mariſhes, or fortified with ſuch Bulwarks, trenches, and other works of modern Fortification, that it was held to be, as indeed it was, the ſafeſt retreat for thoſe of the Reformed Religion in the time of their troubles; as may be ſeen by the ſtorie of it, which in brief is thus. At the end of the ſecond Civill Wars, Anno 1568. Many Towns conſidering how ill the former Peace had been obſerved, refuſed to take in any of the Kings Garriſons, or permit any of the Papiſts to bear Arms amongſt them; of which Rochell was one: which alſo, contrary to the Kings command, maintained a Navy for their ſafety by Sea, and continued their Fortifications for their defence by Land. So that hither the Queen of Navarre and her Sonne retired, as to a place of ſafety. Anno 1570. Rochell alone, of all the French Towns held good for the Proteſtants, and is by Monſieur Joinville on all ſides blocked up: but the ſiege ſoon raiſed, and Rochell, Montalban, Sancerre, with others, made cautionarie for the peace enſuing. Anno 1575. beſieged by Biron the elder, with an Army of 50000 men, and 60 peeces of Artillerie; Charles the ninth, Henry Duke of Anjou, the D. of Aumal, &c. being alſo preſent at the ſervice. It held out from the beginning of March, till the 7th of June, and was then freed: the Citie having in one moneth endured 13000 shot; and the King lost 20000 men, amongst them the Duke of Anmal for one, Anno 75, & 78. it was attempted by Lindereau, the Isle of Ree taken, but soon recovered: the King of Navarre, and Prince of Conde, after that defeat, being received in, in triumph. Anno 1577. besieged to Sea-ward by Lanfac: who being also beaten back, a Peace was made, and eight cautionarie Towns more added to their former strength. In the troubles of 85, and 88. the Princes abovenamed made it their Retreat; and from thence issued to divert the purposes of the Duke of Mericeur. The next yeer, Henry the third being slain, and the King of Navarre seated in the Throne, the Protestant partie increased exceedingly in power and number; and taking advantage of the minoritie of Lewis the thirteenth, governed themselves apart as a Free Estate, Rochell being made the head of their Commonwealth; fortified to that end with 12 Royall Bastions of Free stone, with double ditches, deep and broad in the bottom; abundantly furnished with Powder and Ammunition, 150 pieces of Cannon, besides Culverins and smaller pieces, with victuals, and all other necessaries to endure a Siege: and grown unto so great wealth, that there were thought to be an hundred or sixscore Merchants, worth 100000 Crowns a peece. This drew upon them the great War, in the yeeres 1621, and 1622. Which ended in the loss of all their Garrisons, except Rochell, and Montalban: those to remain in pledge with the Protestant Partie, but for 3 yeers only. Which time expired, the Rochellers were again besieged both by Sea and Land, the Isle of Ree took from them, their Fleet broke at Sea, & the mouth of their Haven so barred up with Ships chained together, and sunk into it, and other works of stupendious greatnes in the very Ocean, that no forrein succours out of England, (however really intended, and bravely followed) had been able to come to their relief. In the end, having endured all the extremities of a tedious Siege, they yeelded themselves to the Kings mercy, Anno 1628. Montalban, Nismes, and other places newly fortified, submitting at the same time also. Guienne.

II. GVIENNE, the second Province of the Dukedom of Aquitaine, is bounded on the North with Xaintoigne, from which parted by the River of Dordonne; on the South, with Gascoigne; on the East, with Perigart; and on the West with the Aquitanick Ocean, from the Pyrenean hills to the River of Bourdeaux. The reason of the name I could never learn. Some think it a corruption of the old name, Aquitaine; but not very probably. The Countrie generally plentifull of Corn and Wine; the one being vented into Spain, and the other into England. The people, as those of Xaintoigne also, tall of stature, of able bodies, haters of servitude and baseness, and well practised in arms: which qualities of the minde, and constitution of bodie, (being therein so different from the rest of France) it is possible enough they might have from the English, who for 300 yeers were possessed of the Countrie, and have left many tracts of their language in it.

The principall Rivers of this Province, are, the Garond, and the Dordonne, meeting together at Retraicte, a Town of Xaintoigne; and thence in one Channell falling into the Ocean: the Countrie betwixt these two Rivers being called Le Pais entre les deux mers, or, The Countrie betwixt the two Seas; the Rivers hereabouts resembling a small Sea in wideness. Of lesser note are, 1 Jearne, 2 Baize, 3 Lot, and 4 Lisle, falling into the Garond in their severall places.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Bourdeaux, seated on the South bank of the Garond, not far from the Sea, amongst the marishes. The chief Citie of the Bituriges, who possessed this tract; and for distinctions sake, were called Bituriges Vbisci, those of Bourges being called Bituriges Cubi. It was after called Burdegala, and Civitas Burdegalensium; the Metropolis at that time of Aquitania Secunda: consequently an Archbishops See, as it still continueth. A fair, rich, and populous Citie, beautified with many goodly buildings, an Universitie founded here by King Lewis the 11h, and a large Cathedrall. It was made Parliamentary for Aquitain, and the parts adjoyning, by King Charles the 7th. Anno 1453. not long after the expulsion of the English thence: and is one of the most noted Empories in all the Kingdom; frequented very much by the Dutch and English for Gascoigne wines: over which last, the French are so jealous, that they permit them not to come up the River, till they have unladen all their Ordnance at the Port of Blaye. The Countrie hereabouts is, from this Town, called Bourdelois. 2 Fronsac, lying in the Countrie betwixt the two Seas (as they call it,) which gives the title of a Duke to the noble Familie of the Earls of S. Paul, now Dukes of Fronsac, and to the Countrie round about, the name of Fronsadaze. 3 Libourn, at the confluence of the two great Rivers, opposite to Retraicte in Xaintoigne. 4 Soulac, at the influx of the Garond, in the Peninsula, or demi-Island, called the Countrie of Medoc. 5 Baionne, a Sea Town, and Episcopall See, frontiring on the coast of Spain. 6 St. John de Luz, at the foot of the Pyrenean mountains, all about which, the people speak the Basquish, or old Gascoigne language, being the same with that of Biscay. 7 D'Acqs, an Episcopall See, by Ptolomie called Aquæ Augustæ, (Civitas Aquensium, by Antoninus) from whence this part of Gaule had the name of Aquitaine. These three last being all of them Frontire Towns, are strongly fortified. 8 Bazas, (called Cossium by Ptolomie) the chief Citie of the Vasates, whom Antoninus placeth in this tract, now a Bishops See, situate on the borders of Gascoigne, in the Countrie from hence called Bazadois. Towns of less note, 1 Esparrez. 2 St. Basil. 3 Reule. 4 Chasteau-Moron. 5 Mousteguer. 6 Sainlterre, &c. Here is also in this Province the Countrie of Buche, lying along the Sea-coast from Baionne to Medoc: a barren, poor, and wretched Countrie, the worst peece of France; onely remarkable for the Lords or owners of it, formerly of the house of Foix: one of which, was that John de Foix, created Earl of Kendall, and Knight of the Garter, by King Henry the sixth; but better known in English stories by

Gascoigne, the name of Capitall, or Capdau de Buche, the Lords hereof having no higher title than that of Captain.

III. GASCOIGNE, the third and largest part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, hath on the East, Languedoc, from which parted by the River Garond; on the West, the Pyrenean mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, Perigort, Quercy, and some part of Guienne; and on the South, a main tract of the Pyrenees, running on to Languedoc. The Countrie generally fruitfull, but of Wines especially, brought hence to Bourdeaux as the Staple for that commodity, and thence transported into England in great abundance.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Auscii, Lastorates, Convenares, Conserani, &c. making up a great part of the Province of Novempopulonia: united in this name of Gascoigne on the conquest of it by the Vascones, a Spanish Nation, who fell in here, during the reign of Dagobert the 11th King of the French. And though subdued by Clovis the second, Sonne of Dagobert, yet they left their name unto the Countrie; divided afterwards according to the chief Signeuries and Estates thereof, into 1 the Principalitie of Bearn, 2 the Earldoms of Foix, 3 Commings, 4 Bigorre, 5 Armaignac, 6 Albret, and 7 the Countrie of Agenois.

1 The Principalitie of BEARN, is situate at the foot of the Pyrenees, where they joyn to Languedoc; so called from Benearnum, a principall Citie of this tract, mentioned by Antoninus, and others of the antient Writers. The Countrie of good pasturage, though amongst the mountains, affording plenty of Cattell, butter and cheese; and in some places wines also, little inferiour in taste and colour to the best of France; and many medicinall springs issuing from the hills adjoyning.

The Religion here, as generally in all Gascoigne, is that of the Reformed Churches; introduced about the year 1560; or rather then confirmed by publick autority of the King and Queen of Navarre: at what time the Mass, Tithes, Church-lands, and the Prelates Votes in Parliament (according to the Genevian way of Reformation) were condemned together. And so it stood untill the yeer 1620, when by the power and autority of Lewis the 13th. King of France and Navarre, the Prelates were restored to their Votes and Lands, the Clergie to their Tithes, and Mass caused also to be said in some of their Churches: yet so, that those of the Reformed were left unto the free exercise of their own Religion, as in former times.

The principall Towns hereof are, 1 Orthes, the same which antiently was called Benearnum. 2 Lescar, a Bishops See, the antient seat and habitation of the Princes of Bearn. 3 Oleron, a Bishops See also, mounted upon an high hill, in the more mountainous parts of the Countrie. 4 Sainc-terre, well garrisoned since the reduction of this Countrie to the Kings obedience. 5 Pau, the principall of all the Province, honoured with a Parliament or Court of Iudicature for all the Countrie; and a fair Palace of the Prince, built by Henry of Albret, King of Navarre, and Lord of Bearn; and the Seat of him and his Successors, till the comming of King Henry the 4th to the Crown of France. 6 Grenade, upon the Frontire towards Begorre.

This Countrie for a long time followed the fortune of Aquitain; and in the generall dismembring of the French Empire, had its own Proprietaries, who were the absolute Lords of it, acknowledging no Superiour for ought I can find. Increased with the Earldom of Begorre, by the mariage of Gaston, Prince of Bearn, with the Heir of that House: united to the Earldom of Foix, by the mariage of Roger Bernard Earl of Foix, with Margaret, Daughter of that Gaston, and Heir of Bearn, Anno 1262; afterwards added to the Crown of Navarre, by the mariage of Gaston Earl of Foix, and Sovereign of Bearn, with Eleanor the Heir of that Kingdom, Anno 1481. descending with that Crown upon Henry of Bourbon, King of Navarre, and afterwards of France, by the name of Henry the fourth: but governed by him alwayes as a State distinct, without relation or resort to the Crown of France. But Lewis the 13 his Sonne, finding some inconvenience in that distinction, incorporated it for ever to the rest of his Dominions, An. 1620, though not without some opposition from the Subjects of Bearn, which he was fain to over-bear by his personall presence, and the advantage of such Forces as he carried with him. Since reckoned as a part of that Kingdom; awed, as the rest of France, by Forts and Garrisons; and governed in Civil matters by the Parliament established at Pau; the Judges and Counsellors thereof at the Kings appointing.

2 The Earldom of FOIX, is situate on the West of Languedoc, Commingeois interposing betwixt it and Bearn. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Maseros, on the Garond, a Bishops See. 2 Pamieres, a Bishops See also, seated on the River Lagiere. 3 Foix, on the same River, called in Latine, Fuxium, and the Earls hereof Comites Fuxienses, the chief seat of the Flussates in the times of the Romans, now giving name to all the Countrie. 4 Mirande in the Countie of Esterac, and the chief thereof; but otherwise of no great Accompt. 5 Savardun, and 6 Monthault, two strong peeces. 7 Mirepoix (oppidum Mirapense) a Bishops See also, but of no note otherwise. The old Inhabitants of this tract, besides the Flussates abovementioned, were called Vaccai, perhaps of the abundance of Kine bred in the pastures hereof: upon which ground, the Earls of Foix have for their Arms, 3 Cowes passant Gules, horned and hoofed Azure, in a Feild Or.

The first of these Earls was Bernard of Carcassone, advanced to this honour by Raimond Earl of Tholouse, who had then the Soveraigntie hereof, Anno 1062. Roger Bernard, the ninth Earl, united Bearn to his Estate, as before is said, whose Grand-child Isabel (the male issue failing) conveyed the whole Estate to Archembald, Lord or Captain of Buche, in the Province of Guienne. Gaston, the Nephew of this Archembald by his Eldest Sonne John, was for his many good services to

Charles

Charles the 7th, made a Peer of France: and by his mariage with Eleanor or Leanora Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, united that Kingdom to his houſe, though he enjoyed it not in his own perſon. By means of which Alliances, and other improvements of Eſtate, this Familie grew to ſo great power and reputation, that there were four Queens at one time deſcended from it: viz. Catharine Queen of Navarre, Germain Queen of Caſtile, Anne Queen of France, and Anne Queen of Hungarie and Boheme. Before which time (I mean the addition of Navarre to their other Eſtates) the Earles of Foix were in ſo high eſteem in the Court of France, that in all publick Ceremonies they took place of the Earls of Vendoſme, though extracted from the Royall bloud, and lived in a condition equall to moſt Kings in Chriſtendom. Gaſcoigne.

3 The Earldom of BEGORRE is ſituate North of Bearn, at the foot of the Pyrenean mountains: ſo called from the Bigerrones, the old inhabitants hereof in the time of Caſar. Scattered in which, and the adjoyning Principalitie of Bearn, live a leprous and infectious people, of noyſome breaths, deformed bodies, and ghaſtly viſages: in which regard, not ſuffered to have any commerce with other people, nor to inherit any lands; but only to applie themſelves to drudgerie, and the baſeſt of mechanick trades. From their great miſhapen heads called Capets or Gabets.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Baigneres, famous for medicinall Bathes. 2 Lourde, of which nothing memorable. 3 Tarbe, (by Antonine called Turſambica) ſeated upon the River Adour, honoured with a ſtrong Caſtle, an Epiſcopall See, and the Seneſchalſie for all the Countrie of Begorre. Which Countrie having for long time its own Proprietarie Earls, was at the laſt, by the mariage of Petronilla, Daughter and Heir of Eſquibal the laſt Earl, to Boſon Vicount of Marſan and Gabardan, added to that houſe. Whoſe Daughter Matthee, marying to Gaſton Prince of Bearn increaſed that Principalitie with thoſe goodly peeces of Marſan, Gabardan and Begorre, all brought unto the houſe of Foix, by Margaret, Daughter of this Gaſton, maried to Roger Bernard, as before is ſaid.

The Armes hereof were Azure, a Croſs Argent. By Inigo Ariſta the Sonne of Simon, Earl of this Countrie, called to the Crown of Navarre, made the Arms of that Kingdom; whereas before that time, the Arms thereof had been Argent, on a Tree Vert, a Croſs in chief, Gules. Which Arms are ſaid to have been took by Garcia Nimines the firſt King of Navarre, from ſuch a ſigne appearing to him in the Skie, before his firſt battell with the Moores.

4 The Earldom of COMMINGES lyeth betwixt Bearn and Foix, running betwixt both as far Northward, as to border Eaſtward on Begorre. Divided into the Higher, and more mountainous part, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees; and the Lower, which hath ſomewhat more of the vallie in it. The old Inhabitants of both, the Convenæ, and Conſerani. The principall places at preſent in the Lower Comminges are, 1 Lombes, a Biſhops See, but of late erection. 2 Moret, upon the River Garonne. 3 Samatban. 4 Liſle en Dodon. And in the Higher, there is, 1 Conſerans, once the chief Town of the Conſerani, now a Biſhops See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenean hills. 2 S. Bernaud, of old called Civitas Convenarum, a Biſhops See alſo, and the chief Citie of this Earldome. 3. St. Beat, 4 St. Fregon, 5 Monregeau, or Mons Regius, 6 Silliers, &c.

Of the eſtate of this Earldom I have little to ſay, but that it was allied to the houſe of Foix, by the mariage of Eleanor, the Daughter of an Earl hereof, to Gaſton the ſecond of that name, and 11th Earl: and afterwards unto that of Armaignac: John of Leſcon, a Baſtard of the Earl of Armaignac being Earl of Comminges, and one of the Marſhals of France in the time of King Lewis the 11th. The Arms of which Earls were Gules, four Orelles in Saltier, Argent.

5 The Earldom of ARMAIGNAC, the greateſt of all theſe Eſtates conſidered ſeverally and apart, lieth on the North of Comminges, and ſo extendeth it ſelf to the banks of the River Garond. Principall Towns are, 1 Aux, upon the River Gez, antiently called Auguſta Auſciorum; the Metropolis or head Citie of the Novempopulonia; by conſequence an Archbiſhops See: The Revenues whereof are ſaid to be the greateſt of any Prelates in France, computed at no leſs than 40000 l. per Annum. 2 Lectoure, a Biſhops See, called of old Leſtoracium, in our modern Latine, Lectodurum. A Town ſo well fortified, when in the power of the Earls of Armaignac, that it held out a ſiege of 3 months againſt the forces of France: but ſince it came into the hands of the French Kings, ſo ſtrengthned and embattelled according to the modern Art of Fortifications, that it is held the ſtrongeſt Bulwark of the Kingdom on this ſide, and their ſureſt Fortreſs againſt Spain. 3 Liſle de Iourdain, which hath the title of an Earldom, bought at the price of 38000 Crowns, of Iohn Duke of Bourbon, by Iohn the 4th Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1421. 4 Auvillar. 5 Auzan. 6 Chaſtel-neau. 7 Malbourquet, 8 Neſtes, &c.

The Earls of Armaignac fetch their Original from the Kings of Navarre: Saucho the great, having ſubdued ſome Lands in Gaſcoigne, which he conferred on Garſias a younger Sonne of his, with the title of Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1014. On which foundation it increaſed ſo faſt, both in power and honour, that Barnard the fourth Earl hereof, came to be Conſtable of France. And ſo did Iohn the 4th of that name, by the favour of King Charles the 7th: who alſo writ himſelf, By the Grace of God Earl of Armaignac; according to the ſtile of Soveraign Princes. A man of ſo conſiderable power in theſe parts of France; that the mariage of a Daughter of his to our Henry the ſixt, was thought the beſt means for eſtabliſhing his Eſtate in Guienne. And I remember it was charged on the Duke of Suffolk, That by breaking off this alliance for that of Anjou, he had been the cauſe of the loſs of the Kings peeces in France. This greatneſs, made him ſubject to the jealouſie of King Lewis the 11th, who worried him out of his Eſtate and his life together. Charles, Brother of Aquitaine. this Iohn, ſucceeded by the favour of King Charles the 8th. After whoſe death this fair Eſtate was ſeized on to the uſe of the Crown; till given again by Francis the firſt to Charles Duke of Alanſon, (whoſe grand-father had maried with a Siſter of the ſaid Earl Iohn) and to the Lady Margaret his Wife, the ſaid Kings Siſter: who, after the deceaſe of the Duke of Alanſon, brought it to Henry of Albret, and King of Navarre, her ſecond Husband; returning ſo to the Original from whence firſt it came.

The Arms of theſe great Princes, were Quarterly 1 Argent, a Lyon Azure; 2 Gules, a Leopard Lyon Or. The 3d, &c.

6 The Earldom of ALBRET is ſituate on the North-weſt of Armaignac, bordering upon Guienne. The chief Town whereof is, 1 Nerac, ſeated on the River of Baize; the only place of ſtrength and moment in all this eſtate. 2 Chaſtell-Ialone, well ſeated to diſturb the Trade betwixt Bourdeaux and Gaſcoigne, but not able to endure a ſiege. 3 Mont de Marſan, and 4 Tartas, both ſeated on the River Ladour: and all four formerly Towns of Caution for thoſe of the Reformed Religion; of which this Countrey is ſo full, that the Popiſh Religion had hardly any footing in all this Territory. Which, though the ſmalleſt of the ſix, and of leaſt Antiquitie, had yet the fortune to incorporate all the reſt into it. For Iohn, the Sonne of Alan Earl of Albret, by his mariage with Catharine, Daughter and ſole Heir of Gaſton, Sonne of Gaſton Earl of Foix, and of Leanora Princeſs of Navarre, added to his Eſtate the Signeuries of Bearn, Foix, and Begorre. And Henry of Albret his Sonne, by marying the Lady Margaret, Siſter of King Francis the firſt, united to it thoſe of Armaignac and Commminges. By Ieau the Daughter of this Henry, the whole Eſtate was brought to Antonie of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and Father to King Henry the 4th, becoming ſo united to the Crown of Frauce, from which it was at firſt diſmembred.

The Arms of theſe Earles, were Quarterly 1 France; 2 Gules, a Border ingrailed Arg: The 3d, &c.

7 As for the Countrie of AGENOIS, the laſt part of Gaſcoigne, it never had other Lords (after it left off to be French) than the Dukes of Aquitaine. The principall Cities of it, 1 Agen, a rich, populous, and well-traded Town, ſeated on the Garonne, in a fruitfull Countrie: A Biſhops See, a Seneſchalſie, and held to be the faireſt in Gaſcoigne. 2 Condon, a Biſhops See alſo, from which the parts adjoyning are called Condonnois. 3 Villeneufne, 4 Claerac, 5 Marmand, 6 Foy, &c.

Thus having took a brief view of thoſe ſeverall members which made up the great bodie of the Dukedom of Aquitaine; let us next look on the Eſtate of the whole thus brought together: which in the declination of the Roman Empire, was given unto the Gothes, before poſſeſſed of all Gallia Narbonenſis, by Valentinian the 3d, as a reward for their ſervice in driving the Alani out of Spain. Long the Gothes had not held it, when they were outed of it by Clovis, the fifth King of the French, continuing under his Succeſſors, till Ludovicus Pius made it a Kingdom, and gave it unto Pepin his youngeſt Sonne. But Charles and Pepin, the Sonnes of this Pepin, being diſpoſſeſſed by Charles the Bald; it was by him conferred on Arnulph, of the houſe of Burgundie, for his many good ſervices againſt the Normans, Anno 844. Whoſe Succeſſors take here in this order following.

The Dukes of Aquitaine:

844.	1 Ranulph of Burgundy, firſt Duke of Aquitaine.	1086.	9 William V. Sonne of William the fourth.
875	2 William, Earl of Auvergne, Nephew of Ranulph.	1156.	10 Lewis the ſeventh of France, in right of Eleanor his Wife, ſole Heir of William the fifth.
902.	3 Ebles, Earl of Poictou, ſucceeded in Aquitaine and Auvergne, by the Will and Teſtament of Duke William.	1152	11 Henry, Duke of Normandie, and Earl of Anjou, &c. in right of Eleanor his Wife, divorced from Lewis on pretence of ſome conſanguinity; after King of England.
911.	4 Ebles II. Sonne of Ebles the firſt.	1169.	12 Richard, King of England, the Sonne of Henry.
935.	5 William II. the Sonne of Ebles the ſecond.	1199.	13 Iohn, King of England, the Brother of Richard; who forfeiting his eſtates in France, on a judiciall ſentence pronounced againſt him for the (ſuppoſed) murther of his Nephew Arthur, Duke of Bretagne; Aquitaine and the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces were ſeized on by the French, Anno 1202.
970.	6 William III. Sonne of William the ſecond.
1019.	7 Guy, the Sonne of William the third.
1021.	8 William IV. Sonne of Guy.

But notwithſtanding this Arreſt, the Engliſh ſtill continued their pretenſions to it, till at the laſt it was agreed betwixt King Lewis the 9th of France, and Henry the 3d of England, Anno 1259. That the Engliſh ſhould reſt ſatisfied with Guienne, the bounds whereof were to be the Pyrenees on the South, and the River of Charente on the North, comprehending therein alſo the Countrie of Limoſin; and that on his inveſtiture into this eſtate, he ſhould relinquiſh all his rights in Normandy, Anjou, Tourein, Maine, &c: In conſideration whereof, he ſhould have 150000 Crowns in readie money.

On

On this accord the Kings of England became Homagers to the Crown of France, which sometimes they omitted, sometimes did it by Proxie, but never in person, till Philip de Valois required it of K. Edw. the third: and because such duties are not personally done by Soveraign Princes, Du Serres shall describe the formality of it. The place designed for this exploit was the Church of Amiens, "to which Edward came (saith he) with such a Train, as was entended rather to the honour of "himself than the French King. Royally attired he was, with a long Robe of Crimson Velvet, "powdred with Leopards of Gold; his Crown upon his head, his Sword by his side, and Golden "spurres upon his heels. Philip, attended by the chief Officers of the Realm, sat upon his Throne, "apparelled in a long robe of purple Velvet, powdred with Flower de Lyces of Gold; his Crown "upon his head, and the Scepter in his hand. Vicount Melun, the great Chamberlain of France, com- "manded Edward to take off his Crown, sword, and spurres, and to kneel down: which he did "accordingly. Then taking both his hands, and joyning them together, he said unto him; Yea "become a Liege man to the King my Master, who is here present, as Duke of Guienne, and Peer of "France, and promise to be faithfull and loyall to him; say yea: and Edward said yea, and arose. But the Historian notes withall, that Philip paid dearly for this Pageant, the young King never forgetting the indignity which was put upon him, till he had made France a field of blood. And here it is to be observed, that though the Kings of England by this new investiture, were entituled Dukes of Guienne onely, yet they had all the power and privileges of Dukes of Aquitaine, excepting the homage of the great Lords and Earls of Gascoigne, which formerly belonged unto them. Insomuch as Richard the second, though Duke of Guienne onely in stile and title, invested his Vncle John of Gaunt in that brave estate, under the stile and title of Duke of Aquitaine, summoned to Parliament by that name by the said King Richard. From this Accord betwixt the Kings, the English had possession of the Dukedom of Guienne, according to the order of their Successions, from the 40th of King Henry the third, Anno 1259, to the 29th of King Henry the sixth, Anno 1452 (the intercalation of John of Gaunt excepted onely:) when outed of all their old rights in France, rather by the good fortune, than by the valour of Charles the seventh, the English then divided in Domestick Factions, and not at leisure to look after the affairs of France. Nor doe I find, that Guienne beeing thus recovered, was ever dismembred from that Crown, but when King Lewis the 11th assigned it over to his Brother the Duke of Berry, to take him off from joyning with the Dukes of Bretagne and Burgundie in a new confederacy, who held it but two years, and died the last Duke of Guienne.

The Arms of this Dukedom were Gules, a Leopard or Lyon Or; which joyned to the two Lyons of Normandy, make the Arms of England.

Languedoc.

LANGUEDOC is bounded with the Pyrenean hils, the Land of Rousillon, and the Mediterranean, on the South; on the North, with Forrest, Quercn, and Auvergn; on the East, with Provence and Daulphine; on the West, with Gascoigne. Whereas the other Frenchmen in an affirmation say Ouy, these of this Country say Oc; and therefore Ortelius conjectures, it was called Languedoc. But the truth is, it took denomination from the Gothes, who reigning long in this Country, left behind them a smack of their Language, and therefore it was called Languegotia, and now, Euphoniæ gratiâ, termed Languedotia, or Langnedoc, that is, the Goths Language.

The Countrie on those parts which lie next to Auvergn, is like the higher parts thereof, mountainous and not very fruitfull; in all the rest, as rich and pleasant as the best Provinces in France, and having the advantages of Olives, Raisins, Figs, Orenges, and other fruits not ordinary but here, and in the neighbouring Provence. In that participating the commodities both of France and Spain. The people have somewhat in them of the antient Gothes, and draw neerer to the temper of the Spaniards, than any other of the French, as being accounted very devout, great vaunters of themselves, affecting bravery above their condition and estates; not caring how they pinch it on the working days, or at home in private, so they may flaunt it in the street, and be fine on holydays. The humour also of the Women, and in them more pardonable.

Principall Rivers of this Province, are 1 Aurance, 2 Lieran, and 3 Orbe, emptying themselves into the Rhosne, and Alby, which disburdeneth it self into the Ocean. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Nismes (in Latin Nemausus) antiently a Colonie of the Romans, now a Bishops See; where there remain some marks of the Roman greatnes, especially the ruines of a spacious Palace built by the Emperour Adrian. 2 Mont-pelier (in Latin Mons Pessulanus) situate on an high mountain, as the name imports, some twelve miles distant from the Sea; an Vniversitie for the study of Physick, & for that very happily seated, the Countrie round about affording great variety of medicinall herbs. A Viscountie in former times, conveied by Marie Daughter of William the last Lord Viscount hereof, to King Peter of Aragon her husband; next, made a Member of the Kingdom of Majorca, and by James King of Majorca, sold to King Philip of Valois. Of late one of the strongest holds which those of the Reformed Religion had in this Countrie, and memorable for the notable resistance which it made against the whole forces of Lewis the 13th. in the last Civill Wars about Religion. 3 Aleth. and 4 Carcassonne, both Bishops Sees, both seated on the River Ande; the people of both speaking a corrupt French, with an intermixture of some Spanish. 5 Alby

Languedoc. on the River ſo called, the Civitas Albigentium of Antoninus, the chief of this part of Languedoc, called from hence La Paix Albigeois; remarkeable in Church-hiſtorie for thoſe great oppoſites to the corruptions and errours of the Church of Rome, called the Albigenſes. 6 Beziers, upon the River Orbe, a Roman Colonie of old, now a Biſhops See. 7 Agde, called Agatha by antient writers, remarkeable for a Councill held there in the year 450, and for a well-frequented Port, at the mouth of the River Egband. 8 Narbon, ſeated on the mouth of the River Aude, the Seat of the Phocenſes, and the firſt Roman Colonie (next after Carthage) out of Italy. In Italy it ſelf (to obſerve ſo much by the way) were no leſs than 150 Colonies; 57 in Africk, 29 in Spain, 26 in France, in England 4 only, in Syria 20, and in other Countries ſome, but very few in reſpect of the largneſs of the Territories. Theſe Colonies were inſtituted partly to repreſs Rebellions in the Conquered Countries; partly to reſiſt a forrain enemy, partly to reward the antient Souldiers, partly to relieve the poorer ſort, and partly to purge and empty the Citie of the ſuperfluity and redundance of her people. Now if the queſtion be asked, whether a Colony or a Fortreſs be more behoovefull, I anſwer with Boterus in his Raggio d ſtato, that a Fortreſs is more fit for ſudden uſe, and a Colony for Continuance: the former are quickly erected, and perhaps as ſoon loſt; the other require ſome time of ſetling, and are after of a good ſufficiency to defend themſelves. As we ſee in our times, the Spaniſh Colonies of Ceuta and Tanger in Africk; and our own of Calais, which was the laſt Town we loſt on the firm Land. This Narbon was in the infancie of the Roman Empire, the moſt populous and greateſt Town of all France: inſomuch, as from it all this part of France was called Gallia Narbonenſis. A Province of which Pliny delivered us this cenſure: Narbonenſis Gallia agrorum cultu, morum virorumque dignatione, opum amplitudine, nulli provinciarum poſtponenda; breviterque Italia potiùs quàm provincia, It was alſo called Gallia Braccata, from the garments that the Inhabitants did wear, which were much like to the Trouzes, which are worn by the Iriſh footmen, and are called in Latine Bracca. 9 La Puy, the See of a Biſhop, who in Latin is called Podienſis, the chief of that part of Languedoc, which is named Velay, the antient ſeat of the Velauni. 10 Viviers, on the River Rhoſne, (by Plinie named Alba Helviorum) from whence the Country adjoyning hath the name of Vivaretz. 11 Rhodes or Rutena, the principall Citie of the Ruteni, now a Biſhops See; from whence the Countrie round about hath the name of Rouvergn; though ſome account this Rouvergn, a diſtinct Province, and no part of Languedoc. 12 Tholouſe, ſeated on the Garonne, antiently the principall Citie of the Tectoſages, and the Toloſates, placed by old Writers in this tract, now the chief of Languedoc, and one of the greateſt in all France. The ſeat of an Arch-Biſhop, and an Vniverſity: So antient, that ſome report it to be built when Deborah judged Iſrael. Here was a Parliamentary Court erected, for the adminiſtration of Iuſtice in theſe parts, 1302. As for the Story of Tholouſe, it was obſerved, that certain Souldiers having ſtole ſacrilegiouſly ſome Gold out of the Temples of Tholouſe, (when it was ſackt by Cepio a Roman Conſull) came all to miſerable and unfortunate ends: hence grew that Adage, Aurum habet Tholoſanum, applyed to unhappy men.

But that which deſerves moſt note in the Hiſtory of it, are the large and ſpacious Fields about it, called by the Writers of theſe times by the name of Campi Catalaunici, extending in length 100. in breadth 70 French Leagues. In which fields was fought that terrible Battle between Attila King of the Hunnes, and Ætius the Roman Lieutenant in France, Ætius was ſtrengthned by the Gothes, Franks, Burgundians, and Germans. Attila's Army conſiſted of Hunnes, Eruli, Scythes, Sarmatians, and Suevians, to the number of 500000, of which 180000 that day loſt their lives: Attila himſelf being driven to that deſperate plunge, that making a funerall pile of Horſe Sadales, he would have burned himſelf. But his enemies weary of wel-doing, or Ætius politickly fearing, that if Attila were quite deſtroyed, the Gothes, Franks, and others of the Barbarians then confederate with him would become too inſolent, gave him leave to retire home through Italy, which he haraſſed with Fire and Sword, murdering the People, and ruining the Towns, ſo that he was then, and long after, called Flagellum Dei. Ætius, notwithſtanding this good ſervice, was by Valentinian the Emperour of the Weſt, rewarded with the loſs of his head. By which act, the Emperour (as one truly told him) had cut off his right hand with his left. And indeed ſo it happened. For not long after, he himſelf was by Maximus murdered, and the Empire of Rome irrecoverably deſtroyed. Now that theſe Fields lay here abouts, and not about Chalons in the Province of Champaigne (as ſome learned and induſtrious men have been of opinion) I am aſſured by theſe three reaſons. Firſt the improbabilitie that Ætius having got the victory, ſhould ſuffer ſuch a vaſt and numerous Army to paſs through the whole length of France, from one end to the other, and having waſted all the Countrie, to break into Italy: and ſecondly the teſtimony of Jornandes an antient writer, who telleth us, firſt, that before this fight, Attila had beſiedged and diſtreſſed the City of Orleans, and therefore was not vanquiſhed in the fields of Chalons; and then, that immediately upon the Victory, Toriſmund the King of the Gothes, (his Father Theodoric being ſlain) in Campis Catalaunicis ubi & pugnaverat, Regia Majeſtate ſubvectus, Toloſam ingreditur; being proclamed King in thoſe very fields, entred with great State and Triumph into Tholouſe, The Regall Citie at that time of the Gothiſh Kingdom. Which plainly proves the place of battle to be neer this City: though poſſible by the name Campi Catalaunici (the great length and breadth thereof conſidered) we are to underſtand the whole Country of Languedoc.

The

The old Inhabitants of this Countrie beſides the Helvii, the Vellanni, the Tectosages, and Albigenſes, formerly remembred, were the Agatenſes, Beterenſes, Gabales, Volcæ, and the Arecomici, all which, together with ſome others of leſſer note, made the Province of Narbonenſis Prima, whereof the Metropolis was Narbon. In the falling of the Roman Empire aſſigned with the reſt of Narbonenſis, & ſome part of Spain, to Athaulfus King of the Gothes, whom Honorius by this gift bought out of Italie. The Gothes having got ſo good footing in Gaul, enlarged their bounds, by taking in the moſt part of Aquitain, Quercu, and Auvergn: but forced to quit them to the French, who Conquered that from them, which they got from the Romans; and ſhut them up within the limits of their firſt Donation: after this they declined as faſt in France, as they thrived in Spain; loſing Provence to Theodoric King of the Oſtro-Gothes, or Gothes of Itali: Whoſe ſucceſſour Amalaſunta, fearing a War from Greece, reſigned her intereſs in Provence to Theodobert the French King of Mets. Nothing now left unto the Gothes of their Gallick purchaſes, but this Languedock only; and this they held as long as they had any thing to do in Europe; but loſt it finally to the Moors, with all Spain it ſelf. Recovered from the Moors by Charles Martel, and added to the reſt of the French Empire, it was by Charles the great given to one Thurſin, of the race of the antient Kings, with the title of the Earl of Tholouſe, on condition that he would be Chriſtned. How long it continued in his Race, it is hard to ſay, the ſtory and ſucceſſion of theſe Earls being very imperfect; not ſetled in a way of Lineall Deſcent, till the time of Raimond the eighth Earl, Brother to another Raimond Earl of St. Giles (a Town of Guienne) whoſe Grand-child Hugh, being an adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land, and wanting money to provide himſelf for that expedition, ſold his Eſtate herein to his Vncle Raimond, the Earl of St. Giles before mentioned. From this time forward we find theſe Earls to be as often called the Earls of St. Giles, as the Earls of Tholouſe; and by that name frequently remembred in the Eaſtern ſtories, but not without ſome mark of infidelity, as if not ſound and throughpaced to the Cauſe on foot. A puniſhment whereof the ſhort continuance of this houſe is ſuppoſed to be. For Raimond the Great, Earl of Tholouſe, St. Giles, and Tripoli (in the Holy-Land) had three Sonnes all of them ſucceeding; the firſt two iſſueleſs, the third the Father of Raimond, the Father of another Raimond, who proved a great maintainer of the Albigenſes, and in purſuance of that Cauſe murdered the Legat of the Pope ſent to Excommunicate him, & ſtrangled his own Brother Baldwin, becauſe he found him not inclinable to his opinions. For this cauſe Warred upon, and Vanquiſhed by Simon de Monfort, Father of Simon de Monfort, the great Earl of Leiceſter; and after many troubles, and continuall Wars, left his eſtate and quarrell to his Sonne named alſo Raimond, the laſt Earl of this Houſe; Who proving alſo a ſtrong Patron of theſe Albigenſes, was condemned for a Heretick, curſed by the Pope, and perſecuted by the French Kings, Philip the ſecond, Lewis the 8th, and St. Lewis. This laſt, willing to make a peaceable compoſition, maried his Brother Alfonſo, to Jane daughter and heir to Count Raimond, with this clauſe, That if it ſhould happen theſe two to die without iſſue, then Languedoc ſhould be incorporated to the Crown. Raimond agreed, the mariage was ſolemnized, Anno 1249. They both died without iſſue, 1270, and Languedoc returned to the Crown in the dayes of Philip the third. Languedoc

The Arms of this Earldom were Gules, a Croſs Pommelè, of 12 points, Or.

Provence.

14 PROVENCE.

PROVENCE is environed with Languedoc on the West; Daulphine on the North; the Mediterranean on the South; and on the East with the Alpes, and the River Varus; which divide it from Piemont, the neereſt of the Alpine Provinces.

It took this name from the Romans, who being called in by the Marſilians, to revenge a private wrong, wholly poſſeſſed themſelves of this countrey, calling it κατ' ἐξοχὴν, The Province. Under their Empire it continued, making up the whole Province of Narbonenſis Secunda, and part of Alpes Maritimæ. How it was given unto the Viſigothes, or Gothes of Spain, and from them taken by the Oſtrogothes, or Gothes of Italie, hath been ſhewn in Languedoc. Being reſigned unto the French, it became a part of the new Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. By Hugh de Arles upon his reſignation of that Kingdom to Rodolph Duke of Burgundie beyond the Iour, given unto William his Sonne, with the ſtile and title of Earl of Provence; confirmed therein by the Emperour Conrade the ſecond, on whom the rights of that Kingdom had been transferred, to be held of him, and his Succeſſours in the Empire. In his poſteritie it continued, till conveyed to the Earls of Barcelone, by the mariage of the Lady Doulce with Earl Raymond Arnold, Anno 1082. Carried, together with that Earldom, to the Crown of Aragon; and finally, by Beatrix, heir generall of this Familie, to Charles Earl of Anjou, Anno 1262, whom Vrban the 4th not long after crowned King of Naples. By Joan the firſt, the fourth from Charles, driven out of Naples by Lewis of Hungaria, and reſtored again by the power of Pope Clement the fift, the City and Territorie of Avignion (where the Pope reſided at that time) is diſmembred from the Earldom of Provence, and given in Fee for ever to the Church of Rome: partly to recompence that favour, and partly for diſcharge of ſome old Arrears of Rent or Tribute, pretended to be due to the See of Rome for the Realm of Naples. A Citie which had formerly been under the Protection, and by that title in the Actuall poſſeſſion of many of the Popes of Rome; ever ſince the conviction of Raymond Earl of Tholouſe, to whom it formerly belonged, but held by them in Fee of the Earls of Provence. Not long after this Donation, the ſaid Joan adopted for her Heir and Succeſſour, Lewis Duke of Anjou, Brother to Charles the fift of France, deſcended lineally from Charles Earl of Anjou, and King of Naples: poſſeſſed by this Adoption of the Earldom of Provence, and a title to the Realm of Naples. Rene, the Grandchild of this Lewis, having no iſſue-male ſurviving, made Lewis of Chalons, Prince of Orange (another Signeurie in this Countrie) and gave him therewithall full power to make Lawes, coin money, and pardon all Crimes; to write himſelf Prince of Orange by the Grace of God, with all the other Prerogatives of an abſolute Prince. This was in the yeer 1415. So that now the Countrie ſtands divided betwixt the French King, the Pope, and the Prince of Orange; each of them abſolute and independent in his own Eſtate: as long at leaſt as the French King is pleaſed to give way unto it. The whole, much of the ſame nature with Languedoc, before deſcribed,

In that part of it which belongs to the King, the Towns of ſpeciall note, are, 1 Aix, ſeated on the Rhoſne, the Metropolis of Narbonenſis ſecunda, and at that time called Aquæ Sextiæ, from Sextius it's founder, and the hot Bathes here. Now, and of long time, an Archbiſhops See, and the chief Citie of this Province, and for that reaſon made the Seat of a Court of Parliament for this Country, Anno 1501. Moſt memorable in old ſtorie for the great diſcomfiture of the Cimbri, by C. Marius. Who not willing to venture on the enemy united (for they were no fewer than 300000 fighting men, and lately fleſhed in the overthrow of Manlius and Cepio, (two Roman Conſuls) permitted them quietly to paſs by his Camp: The Barbarians who imputed it to fear or cowardize, ſcornfully asking his Souldiers, what ſervice they would command them to Rome. But when, for their eaſier paſſage over the Alpes, they had divided themſelves into 3 Companies; Marius ſeverally ſetting on them all, put them all to the Sword. Ea victoria viſus meruiſſe ne ejus nati Reipub. pœniteret, by this Victory, and this onely, giving cauſe to the Romans (as Velleius hath it) not to be ſorry for his Birth. 2 Arles, in Latine, Arelatum, by Auſonius called the Rome of France, and in thoſe times ſo highly prized, that Conſtantinus Flavius being choſen Emperour by the Britiſh Legions, in the declining times of the Weſtern Empire, intended to have made it the Imperiall Seat. And not leſs memorable in Church-ſtorie for a Councill here held in the time of Conſtantine the Great, Anno 313, in which was preſent Reſtitutus the Biſhop of London, and certain other Biſhops of the Britiſh Church. It was antiently a Roman Colonie, and now the See of an Archbiſhop; ſituate on the River Rhoſne, in a low and mariſhie ſituation: which naturall ſtrength ſeconded by the new works of King Henry the 4th, have made it one of the beſt Bulwarks of France, on that ſide of the Kingdom. Selected for the Seat Royall of the French Kings of Burgundie, who from hence were called Kings of Arles; as the Kings of Auſtraſia (or Eaſt France) were called Kings of Metz, becauſe they had made choice of that Citie for the Regall Seat. Between this Citie and the Sea, but on the other ſide of the River, runneth a deep Channel, cut with infinite charge and induſtrie by C. Marius, for conveyance of victuals into his Camp, in his War againſt the Cimbri beforenamed: by Ptolomie called Foſſa Marianæ, by the French, Camargue, a corrupt word made of Caius Marius, the Countrey about which, called alſo by the ſame name for the ſpace of 24 miles, is of excellent paſturage, and breedeth great abundance of horſes; the chief Town of which is called 3 St. Gillis. 4 Marſeilles, a known Port on the Mediterranean, firſt built by the Phocenſes, a Greek Nation of Aſia Minor, who being baniſhed their Countrie, came and planted here, about the reigne of Tarquinius Superbus, the laſt King of Rome. It was firſt onely a Confederate Citie of the Romans, for whoſe ſake, being moleſted by the Salii, and others of the neighbouring Nations, the Roman Legions firſt entred Gaul: afterwards, ſiding with Pompey in the Civill Wars, or at leaſt deſirous to ſtand neutrall, it was forced by Caeſar, and made a Colonie. In the proſperity hereof it drave a great trade on the Mediterranean, and was the mother of many fair and flouriſhing Colonies, Emporia, Forum Julium, Nicaea, Olbia, diſperſed in the adjoyning ſhores of France, Spain, and Italie. 5 Glandeves, antiently called Glanum, a Biſhops See, ſeated upon the Maritim Alps. 6 Taulon, by Ptolomie called Tauroentium, and by ſome Tholone, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, well ſtored with Oil, great quantitie of Salt bronght hither from the Iſle of Eres, about three Leagues off, and a kind of Almonds called Provence Almonds; made by this means one of the moſt frequented Ports of the Mediterranean. 7 Antibi (in Latin Antipolis) a Sea-coaſt Town neer the River Varo, one of the fartheſt of this Country towards Italy. 8 Feriols (the Forum Julium of the antients) on the Mediterranean, founded by the Maſſilians as before was ſaid; after a Colonie of the Romans. 9. La Grace, a Biſhops See, more within the Continent. 10 Ciſteron, on the Borders of Daulphine. 11 Brignols, 12 Merindol, and Chabriers, two little Towns amongſt the Mountains, towards Daulphine, not otherwiſe of note but for the horrid Maſſacre of the Proteſtants, before deſcribed. Orange.

II. The Principalitie of Orange lieth on the North-Weſt of this Province, watered with the Rivers of 1 Durance, 2 Seile, 3 Meine, and 4 Ecque; all helping to augment the Rhoſne. The chief places of it are, 1 Aurange, ſeated on the Meine, an Epiſcopall See, famous for many rare and wonderfull Antiquities, demonſtrating the Roman Greatneſs, of whom once a Colonie; but of moſt note in Church ſtory for a Councill held here againſt the Semi-Pelagians, in the year 444. called Arauſicanum, the Latin name of this Citie being antiently Arauſia, in ſome Writers Aurlacus, and of late Aurangia. 2 Eſtang. 3 Bois de St. Pol, more properly St. Paul de Vences, being the Civitas Vencienſium of Antoninus, but not otherwiſe memorable.

As for the Princes hereof, they were antiently of the Noble Family of the Bauſſii, but Homagers and Tributaries to the Earls of Provence. By Mary Daughter and Heir of Reynold the laſt of this Family, it was conveyed im mariage to John de Chalons, one of the moſt noble houſes of Burgundy, from the Earls whereof they were extracted. Lewis the Sonne of this John obteined of Rene Duke of Anjou and Earl of Provence, the Soveraignty hereof, as before was ſaid. By Claude the Heir generall of this houſe, beſtowed in mariage by King Francis the firſt on Count Henry of Naſſaw, Ambaſſadour from Maximilian Emperour of Germany, Anno 1514. it was tranſlated to that Family where it ſtill remaineth.

The Princes of Orange.

1475. 1 Lewis of Chalons, firſt abſolute Prince of Orange.

2 William de Chalons, who ſubmitted his Eſtate to the Parliament of Daulphine, to ſatisfie King Lewis 11th. by whom reſtored again to his former Soveraignty.

3 John de Chalons, a bitter enemy to King Lewis, in defence of the rights of Mary Dutcheſs of Burgundy

1500. 4 Philibert de Chalons, ſlain at the ſiedge of Florence, where he commanded the Forces for Charles the fift.

1530. 5 Henry of Naſſaw, in right of Claude his Wife, Siſter and Heir of Philibert.

1536. 6 Rene of Naſſaw, Sonne of Henry and Claude, ſlain at the ſiedge of Lindrecie in the Netherlands.

1544. 7 William of Naſſaw, Couzen German and next Heir of Rene, the great Patron and Aſſertor of the Belgick Liberties againſt the Spaniard, ſlain by a Partiſan of Spain, 1584.

1584. 8 Philip of Naſſaw, kept, as an Hoſtage all his life, by the King of Spain.

9 Maurice of Naſſaw, Brother of Philip, Commander of the Forces of the United Provinces

1625. 10 Hen. of Naſſaw II. Succeſſor to his Brother Maurice, in his Offices, Eſtates, and Honours.

1648. 11 William of Naſſaw II. the Sonne and Succeſſor of Henry, maried the Princeſs Mary eldeſt Daughter of Charles King of great Britain, &c. on May day, 1641.

The Revenues of this principality are about 30000 Crowns. The Arms are Quarterly Gules, a Bend Or, 2 Or, a Hunters Horn Azure ſtringed Gules; the third as, &c. Over all an Eſcocheon of Pretence Chequie, Or and Azure. More briefly thus, Quarterly Chalons and Aurange, under an Eſcocheon of Geneva.

Southward of Aurange lieth the County of VENAISCINE, as the French call it, Comitatus Veneſſinus in the Latin, ſo called from Avenio (now Avignon) the chief Citie of it. Formerly it belonged to the Earls of Tholouſe, but held by them as Homagers (for this eſtate) of the Earls of Provence: on the conviction of Earl Raymond, condemned for Hereſie, brought under the protection and patronage of the Popes of Rome: the more abſolute Soveraignty hereof and of the Citie Avignon, being ſetled on them by Queen Joane, as before is ſaid. The principall Cities of this tract, are, 1 Avignon, the Avenio of Strabo, Plinie, and Mela, a very fair and flouriſhing Provence. flouriſhing Citie, pleaſantly ſeated on both ſides of the River of Rhoſne: famous for being the reſidence of the Popes for 70 yeers, which time the Romans remember till this day by the name of the Babylonian captivity; adminiſtring ever ſince an Oath unto the Pope at his Coronation, not to remove his Seat to Avignon. The firſt Pope that removed hither was Clement the 5th, Anno 1303, when as yet, the Popes had no more right in it than that of Patronage and Protection; and returned again to Rome by Gregory the 11th, Anno 1377. In this Citie are ſaid to be 7 Palaces, 7 Pariſh Churches, 7 Monaſteries, 7 Nunneries, 7 Innes, and 7 Gates. So that if there be any myſterie in the number of ſeven, or any credit to be given to ſuch Pythagorean divinity; the Archbiſhop of this Citie may as well be entituled Antichriſt, as the Pope of Rome; if there be nothing but the myſterie of this number to affix it to him. It was made an Vniverſity at the time of the Popes firſt ſetling here, and ſo ſtill continueth; Alciate the great Emblematiſt being here Profeſſour. 2 Carpentras, by Ptolomie called Carpentoractte, a Biſhops See; as is alſo 3 Cavaillon, (of old Caballio) once a Roman Colonie, on the River Durance; and 4 Taraſcon, on the Rhoſne, oppoſite to Beaucaire in Languedoc: for the Popes dwelling here ſo long, could not be otherwiſe attended than by mitred Prelates. 5 Vaſon, Civitas Vaſion-enſium, of Antoninus.

The Revenues of the Pope here are not very great, and thoſe expended all in keeping of Forts and Garriſons, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Proteſtants of Orange. So that it is ſuppoſed that it is rather a charge, than a profit to him: which maketh the people like very well to live under his Government, as bringing more money to them than he gathereth from them.

The old Inhabitants of the whole Countrie, were, as appeareth, the Salii, Maſſilienſes, Vaſionenſes, and Vencienſes, before mentioned; beſides the Deceates about Antibe, the Senitii, and Sigeſtorii about Ciſteron: all conquered by the Romans, in their firſt war in Gaule, called in to aid thoſe of Marſeilles againſt the Salii. The fortune of it ſince, hath been ſhewn before. Nothing remains now, but the Catalogue of

The Earls of Provence.

1 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Sonne of Lotharius, King of Auſtraſia, and Waldrada his Concubine, made the firſt Earl of Provence by Boſon the firſt, King of Burgundie. He was after King of Burgundie, and Italie alſo.

Anno 1481. the King ſent a Commiſſion to Palamede de Forban, Lord of Sollier, Chamberlain of Earl Charles, to take poſſeſſion of the Countrey in his name, and command therein as Leiutenant Generall. Since which time Provence never was diſmembred from the Crown of France, ſo much as in the way of Apennage, or any honourarie title amongſt the Kings Children.

What the Revenues of it were to the former Earls, I am not able to ſay, having no good autoritie to proceed upon. Onely I find, that beſides the Lands belonging to the Earls hereof, and other cuſtomary and caſuall Taxes, there was a Tax called the Rostingsilver, being ſixteen Florens levied upon every fire: which reckoning 3500 fires, (for ſuch the eſtimate of them was,) amounted yearly unto 56000 Florens. Now it is ſubject to the rigour and uncertainty of the Kings Taxations, as well as all the reſt of France. And ſo much of thoſe Provinces which properly made up the Kingdoms of the French and Gothes; let us next look on thoſe which at the ſame time were ſubdued by the Burgundians; whoſe Hiſtory, Kingdom, and Eſtate, are to be conſidered, before we come to the deſcription of their ſeverall Provinces. Burgundians.

to

The Kingdom of BURGUNDY.

THe Kingdom of the BURGUNDIANS at their firſt ſettlement in Gaul, contained all thoſe Provinces of the Roman Empire, then called the Alpes Graiæ and Pœninæ, Maxima Sequanorum, Lugdunenſis Prima, and Viennenſis, now paſſing under the new names of the Dukedom and County of Burgundy, Switzerland, the Griſons, Walliſland, Savoy, La Breſſe, Dauphine, Lionois, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Bourbon. A fair and large quantity of ground, able at once to tempt and ſatisfie an ambitious Nation. But the Burgundians came not into Gaule of their own accord; though of their own accord they drew ſomewhat neer it. In their Originall they were a people bordering neer the Vandals, if not a Tribe or Sept of them, and dwelling in thoſe parts in which are now the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania. At the time that Druſus and Tiberius warred in Germany, they were utterly barbarous, living in Tents only here and there clapped up. Which being in their own language called burgs, gave them the name of Burgundians amongſt the Romans; in the ſame ſenſe as the wild Arabs had the name of Scenitæ amongſt the Greeks, from the like kinde of living. In the yeer 416. at the inſtigation of the Vandals they left their own ſeats, and planted themſelves in the Towns and Villages belonging now to the Marqueſſes of Baden, and Electors of the Rhene. About which time they received the Chriſtian Faith, being then miſerably oppreſſed by the Hunnes breaking upon them out of Pannonia. Not finding any other way to free themſelves of that Enemie, they betook themſelves to the God of the Chriſtians, and were univerſally baptized. After which, falling on the Hunnes, they ſlew no leſs than 30000 of them in one battell: from that time forwards never troubled with that barbarous Nation. Chriſtians then they were, and Orthodox in their profeſſion, before their coming into Gaule: and for that reaſon called in by Stilico to oppoſe the French, then threatning an invaſion of the Roman Provinces. Upon this invitation they paſſed over the River with an Armie of 800 0 fighting men, poſſeſſing themſelves of all which lay from the fartheſt ſhore of the Rhoſne, to the Alpes of Italy; and from the mountain Vauge, to the Mediterranean; Provence onely excepted: about the ſame time planted by the Gothes. Their Government was under Kings; Many, according to their tribes, when they lived in Germany; Monarchicall, when ſetled in the Realm of France; where they had theſe five.

Kings of the Burgundians.

A. Ch.

408. 1 Tibiça, who firſt brought the Burgundians into Gaule.
2 Gundioch.
3 Gundebault, Vncle to Clotilda, Wife to Clovis, the fift King of the French, by her perſwaſion made inclinable to the Chriſtian Faith.
4 Sigiſmund.
5 Gundomar, the Sonne of Sigiſmund, firſt ſet upon by Clodomire, the Sonne of Clovis, King of Orleans, whom he ſlew in battel neer Auſtun, but afterward outed of his Kingdom by Childebert and Clotair, Kings of Paris and Soiſſons, in revenge of the death of their Brother Clodomire. And ſo the Kingdom of the Burgundians fell unto the French, after it had continued about 120 yeers: Guntram, the Sonne of Clotaire, and Clovis, one of the Sonnes of Dagobert the firſt, being in their times honoured with the titles of Kings of Burgundy.

But the firſt time that the Kingdom of Burgundy ſetled amongſt the French in the way of ſucceſſion, was in the partage of that vaſt Empire of Charlewaigne, amongſt the Children and poſterity of Ludovicus Pius: In conſtituting of which Kingdom, Provence was added to the reckoning, to make this anſwerable to the other parts of that broken monarchie. The firſt of theſe French Kings was Charles, the youngeſt Sonne of Lotharius, Emperour, and King of Italy, eldeſt Sonne of the ſaid Lewis the Godly. The ſucceſſion in this order following.

The French Kings of Burgundy.

A. Ch.

855. 1 Charles, yonngeſt Sonne of the Emperour Lotharius; died without Iſſue.
858. 2 Lotharius, the 2d King of Mets, and Lewis the 2d Emperour, Brethren of Charles, ſucceeded in Burgundie; the mountain Jour dividing and bounding their Eſtates.
876. 3 Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperour, Unkle to the three former Kings, all dying without iſſue, ſucceeded in the whole Eſtate: which he again divided into three Governments or Members: that is to ſay, Burgundy on this ſide of the Souſne, cor-containing the now Dukedom of Burgundy, with the Earldoms of Lions and Maſcon. 2 Burgundy beyond the Iour, comprehending the Provinces of Savoy, Switzerland, Walliſland, and the Eſtates of the Griſons; and 3ly Burgundy on the other ſide of the Soaſne, lying betwixt the other two; containing the now Counties of Burgundy, Provence, La Breſſe, and Daulphine. This laſt conferred, with the title of Earl, on Boſon Earl of Ardenne, by Charles the Bald, who had maried his Siſter Judith; and not long after in the perſon of the ſaid Earl Boſon, raiſed unto a Kingdom by Charles the Groſs, by the name of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. The Kings, theſe that follow.

4 Boſon Earl of Ardenne, Husband of Hermingrade, the Daughter of Lewis the 2d, Emperour, and King of Burgundy, was firſt by Charles the Bald made Earl of Burgundie, beyond the Soaſne; and afterwards by Charles the Groſs created the firſt King of Arles and Burgundy, to be held by him and his Succeſſours, of the German Emperours.

5 Lewis II. Sonne of Boſon and Hermingrade; choſen King of Italy, but outed by the Faction of Berengarius.

917. 6 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Sonne of Lotharius the 2d, by Waldrada his Concubine; ſucceeded by the gift of Lewis; and was choſen by his Faction there, King of Italy alſo. For the quiet enjoying of which Kingdom, he reſigned this to Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, elected by another Faction to that broken Title.

926. 7 Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Iour, ſucceeded on the reſignation of Hugh de Arles.

937. 8 Rodolph II. Sonne of Rodolph; a Prince of ſo ſhort a reign, or ſo little note, that he is by ſome left out of the catalogue of theſe Kings.

9 Boſon II. the Brother of Rodolph the firſt, by whom the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Iour, was united to the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.

965. 10 Conrade, Sonne to Boſon the ſecond.

990. 11 Rodolph III. Sonne to Conrade, who having no iſſue of his Body, gave his Eſtate to Conrade the 2d, Emperour of Germany, and his Sonne Henry ſurnamed the Black, whom he had by Giſela, the Siſter of this Rodolph; by whom it was united to the German Empire, Anno 1032. In the diſtractions whereof, following not long after his deceaſe, the Provinciall Earls or Governours for the Germane Emperonrs, made themſelves Maſters and Proprietaries of their ſeverall Provinces (the Dukedom of Burgundy excepted, ſetled long before) out of which roſe the great Eſtates of the Dukes of Savoy, the Earls of Burgundy and Provence, the Daulphins of Viennoys, and Lords of Breſſe, together with the Commonwealths of the Switzers and Griſons: every poor Bird ſnatching alſo ſome feather or other of this dying Eagle. Yet notwithſtanding the diſmembring and cantoning of this fair Eſtate, the ſucceeding Emperonrs of Germany, claimed not only a ſuperintendence over, but a diſpoſall of all the Countries that ever were under the command of a King of Burgundy: Inſomuch that the Emperour Henry the ſixt, receiving no ſmall part of the money which our Richard the firſt payed to the Duke of Auſtria for his ranſome, gave unto the ſaid Richard the Kingdom of Burgundy, the Soveraignty of Provence, Viennoys, Marſeilles, Narbon, Arles, and Lyons, together with the homages of the King of Aragon, and of the Earl of Digion, and S. Giles. A royall gift, if either the Emperour had had any dominion over thoſe countries, or if they would have received any Prince or Officer of his anointing.

The Arms of this Kingdom under the old Burgundian Kings, are ſaid to have been Azure, a Cat Arg, armed Gules. Which being ſaid, we will proceed to the deſcription of thoſe Provinces of this broken Kingdom, which lie within the bounds of France; the reſt which lie beyond the Jour, having been ſpoken of already in the Alpine Countries; which made up the whole continent of the Tranſ-jouran Burgundie.

15 DAVLPHINE.

NOrth of the Countrie of Provence, where we left before, lyeth that of DAVLPHINE, having on the Eaſt, Savoy, and the Maritime Alpes; on the Weſt, Lionoys, and ſome part of Languedoc, from which divided by the Rhoſne; and on the North, La Breſſe, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lie towards Piemont.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower; that mountainous, ſtonie, and unfruitfull, of the ſame nature with the Alpes, with whoſe branches it is over-run: the other tolerably fruitful, but not to be compared with the reſt of France. The people of the Higher, and more mountainous parts, are generally groſs and rude; not capable of learning, but well enough inclined to Armes and traffick, and have a cuſtome, that on the coming on of Winter they ſend abroad all thoſe which are fit for Travell, (whom they call Bics, or Biſonards) who ſeldome return back till Eaſter: none ſtaying at home, but old men, children and impotent perſons, which cannot go abroad to get their livings. Thoſe in the Lower, are more civill, but not more given to labour than the Mountainers are; nor very covetous of gain, ſo they may live at eaſe, without want or pennrie. In both parts generally good Souldiers, and well affected to their Prince.

The

The Lower Daulphine, together with that part of Provence which lies next the Rhosne, and the adjoyning parts of Savoy, made up the Province called Viennensis, from Vienna the Metropolis of it, situate on the Rhosne, honoured with the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; still the chief City of this Country, an Archbishops See, and a Seige Præsidiall. From hence the tract about it is called Viennoys, and was the title of the first Proprietaries of this Countrie, entituled Daulphins of Viennoys. To this Town Archelaus, the Sonne of Herod, was banished by Augustus Cæsar. 2 Valence, the chief Citie heretofore of the Valentini, then a Roman Colonie; now a Bishops See, and a Vniversity for the Civill Law; a rich, strong, and well-traded Town, seated on the Rhosne. The Countrie hereabouts from hence called Valentinois; and hath given honourarie title to two persons of more Fame than Honour: the first of which was Cæsar Borgia, the Sonne of Pope Alexander the sixt, who casting off his Cardinals Cap, was made Duke of Valentinois by Charles the 8th; the other Madam Diana, the great Minion and Paramour of King Henry the 2d, under whom she much swayed the affaires of France, and honoured with the title of Dutchess of it. 3 Grenoble, (in Latine, Gratianopolis,) the chief Seat heretofore of the Accusiani, the most populous and best built of all this Province, and much resorted to by the Lords and Nobless, by reason of the Court of Parliament here erected, Anno 1453 About this lyeth the Countrie called Grisinaudan, 4 Terray, 5 Rossillon, 6 La Roche, 7 Montelimar, all along the Rhosne; 8 Romons, upon the confluence of the Rhosne, and the River Isere. 9 Cremieu, 10 St. Marcelin, 11 St. Andre, 12 Beaurepaire, more within the Countrie. La Bresse.

The Higher Daulphine, together with those parts of Provence which lie next to Italy, made up the Province of the Alpes Maritimæ; the Metropolis whereof, was, 1 Ebrodunum, now called Ambrun, an Archbishops See, and Seige Præsidiall; seated on an high rock, in the middest of a pleasant vallie surrounded with mountains, under which runnes the River Durance. The hilly Countrie hereabouts, is the highest of France. 2 Brianson, neer the head of the River Durance, called Brigantio, by Antoninus. 3 Gappe, now a Bishops See, formerly the chief Citie of the Apencenses; the tract of whom is still found in the name of the adjoyning Territorie, called Le Pais Gapençois: Memorable for a Synod or Assembly of the French Protestants here holden, Anno in which it was determined, as, and for an Article of the Faith, that the Pope was Antichrist. 4 Tricassin, so called of the Tricassini, the old Inhabitants of these parts. 5 Die, the Dia Vocontiorum of Antoninus, a Bishops See, situate on the River Drosne: from whence come those small, but good stomack-wines, which we call Vin Die. 6 Chorges, 7 Mombrun, 8 Essiles, of which little memorable.

The chief Inhabitants hereof, in the time of the Romans, besides the Tricassini, Apencenses, Vacontii, and Accusiani before mentioned, and the Allobroges, spoken of in the Alpine Provinces, were the Segalauni about Valence, the Decenses about Die, and the Cavari about Grenoble. First conquered by the Romans, then by the Burgundians, and at last by the French: under whom made a part of the new Kingdom of Burgundy, till the surrender of the same to the German Emperours. Vnder them it continued, till the yeer 1100. when Guigne, surnamed the Fat, Earl of Grisinaudan, seeing the Emperour Henry the 4th over-born by the Popes, and not able to assert their own rights, seized upon this Province, under the title of Earl of Viennoys; to which Guigne the 2d, his Sonne and Successor, gave the name of Daulphine, either from his Wife so called, as some, or from the Dolphin which he took for his Arms, as others say. In this Family it continued, till the yeer 1349. when Humbert the last Dolphin of Viennois (for so they were called,) being surcharged with warres by Ame, (or Awade) Earl of Savoy, entred into the Order of Dominican Friers at Lyons, selling his Countrie at a small rate to Philip de Valois, French King, upon condition, that the eldest Sonne of France should be entituled alwayes Dolphin of Viennois; and quarter the Arms of Daulphine with those of France. The conditions willingly accepted, and Charles, the Sonne of K. John, the Sonne of Philip de Valois, admitted by his Grandfather both to the title and estate in the very yeer of the surrendrie. Since this time, the eldest Sonne of France is called generally the Daulphin of France, sometimes the Daulphin onely, by way of Eminencie; and many times the Prince-Daulphin, to difference him from the Daulphin (or Comte-Daulphin) of Auvergne, and perhaps some others. A Title so annexed unto them, that it is usually laid by on the accession of a greater or superior dignitie: insomuch as Francis the eldest Sonne of Henry the 2d, (whom he succeeded in the Crown) being King of Scots in the right of Mary his wife, was by the French called commonly Le Roy Daulphine, or the King Daulphin. Nor have they the bare title of this Countrie only, but the command, profits, and possession of it; sending their own Governours thereunto; who by an antient indulgence, have the greatest privileges (conferring all Offices within the Province) of any Governours in France.

LA BRESSE is bounded on the East, with Savoy; on the West, with Lionois; on the North, with Charolois in the Dutchie or Burgundie, and some part of the Franche Comtie; and on the South, with Daulphine; the reason of the name I finde not. The Countrie is very fruitfull and pleasant, embraced betwixt the Rivers of Saone and Rhosne, with which very well watred. Chief Towns herein are, 1 Bellay, a Bishops See. 2 Bourg, (for distinctions sake called Bourg en Bresse,) a Town

Lionois

Town ſo well fenced, and fortified with ſo ſtrong a Citadel for command of the Countrie, that it was thought little inferiour to the two impregnable Fortreſſes of St. Katherines and Montmelian, in Savoy. The Government of which Town aud Citadel, was earneſtly laboured for by the Duke of Biron, then Governour of Burgundie, after a repulſe on the like ſute for that of St. Katherine: but being ſuſpected to hold intelligence with the Duke of Savoy, at that time on ill terms with King Henry the 4th, it was alſo denied him; which drew him into diſcontent, and thereby to his fatall ruine. Afterwards, during the minority of Lewis the 13th demoliſhed, by eſpeciall Order of the Counſell of France, for fear of being ſurprized by the Duke of Savoy during thoſe confuſions. It was of old time called Forum Secuſianorum, from the Secuſiani, the antient Inhabitants of this tract. 3 Caſtillon, 4 Mont-Reall, 5 Bugey, 6 Veromen, of which, nothing obſervable.

This little Province, being antiently a part of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundie, had it's own Earls, Proprietarie Lords hereof: who held it till the yeer 1285; at what time Sibill, the Daughter and Heir of Ulric, Earl of Breſſe and Baugie, (or Baſgee, as ſome Writers call it) conveyed the Eſtate in mariage to Ame or Amadee, the 4th of that name, Earl of Savoy. In which Houſe it continued till the yeer 1600, and then ſurrendred by Duke Charles Emanuel to King Henry the 4th, to ſilence the pretences which that King had made unto the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, and put an end unto the war then begun about it; the politick Duke chooſing rather to part with an Eſtate on this ſide of the Mountains, than to give that active King occaſion to look into Italie; to which Savoy muſt have been a Thorow-fare, Piemont an ordinary Paſs; and where no end could be expected, but the loſs of all. Surrendred then it was on good reaſon of State, and upon that ſurrender united and incorporated with the Crown of France, and put under the Government of the Parliament of Digion, as it ſtill continueth.

THe Countrie of LIONOIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Breſſe; on the Weſt, with Beaujolois, Forreſt and Auvergn; on the North, with Burgundie Dutchie; and on the South, with Daulphine, and a part of Languedoc. So called from Lyons the chief Citie, and under that title made an Earldom by Charles the Groſſe, in the cantoning and diſmembring of the Kingdom of Burgundie: The Earldom containing at that time, not only Lionois it ſelf, but alſo Forreſt and Beaujolois, before deſcribed. The Earls hereof were at firſt onely Provinciall Governours, but under the diſtractions of the German Empire they ſhifted for themſelves, and became hereditarie; but long it held not in one hand. For firſt, the Earldom of Forreſt, and the Lordſhip or Signeurie of Beaujeu being taken out of it, about the year 990. the reſt of the Eſtate fell in ſome tract of time to the Biſhops and Church of Lions, but under the Soveraignty of the French Kings, as Lords Paramount of it.

The places in it of moſt note are, 1 Maſcon, (Matiſconum) a Biſhops See, ſituate on the Soaſne, antiently a diſtinct Earldom from that of Lions, one of the five (as that of Lions was another) which made up the Dukedom of Burgundie on this ſide of the Soaſne: purchaſed of William the laſt Earl hereof, and of Elizabeth his Wife, by King Lewis the 9th; and afterwards ſubjected to the Juriſdiction and Court of Lions, as it ſtill continueth. 2 Eſchalas, on the Rhoſne, on the South of Lions, oppoſite to Vienne, the chief Citie of the Lower Daulphine. 3 Dandilli, 4 Francheville, 5 Chaumont, and 6 Labrelle, all ſomewhat Weſtward of that River, but not much obſervable. 7. Lions it ſelf, pleaſantly ſeated on the confluence of the Soaſne and the Rhoſne, antiently a Roman Colonie, (teſtified by many old Inſcriptions) and honoured with a magnificent Temple, dedicated by the Cities of France to Auguſtus Ceſar: now the moſt famous Mart of France, and an Vniverſitie; by our Latine Writers called Lugdunum. Theſe Marts in former times were holden at Geneva, from thence removed hither by King Lewis the 11th, for the enriching of his own Kingdom. When Iulio the 2d had excommunicated Lewis the 12th, he commanded by his Apoſtolicall autoritie that they ſhould be returned to Geneva again; but therein his pleaſure was never obeyed: the Marts continuing ſtill at LIONS, as a place more convenient and capacious of that great reſort of French, Dutch, and Italian Merchants, which frequent the ſame. As for the Vniverſitie, queſtionleſs it is very antient; being a ſeat of learning in the time of Caius Caligula. For in thoſe times, before an Altar conſecrated to Auguſtus Ceſar in the Temple ſpoken of before, this Caligula did inſtitute ſome exerciſes of the Greek and Roman Eloquence: the Victor to be honoured according to his merit; the vanquiſhed either to be ferulaed, or with their own tongues to blot and expunge their writings, or to be drowned in the River adjoyning. Hence that of Juvenal, Vt Lugdunenſem Rhetor dicturus ad Aram, applied to dangerous undertakings. In the time of the Romans firſt comming into Gaule, it was the chief Citie of the Hedui and Secuſiani; afterwards the Metropolis of Lugdunenſis Prima. The Archbiſhop hereof is the Metropolitan of all France; and was ſo in the time of S. Irenæus, one of the renowned Fathers in the Primitive Church, who was Biſhop here.

In this Town lived Peter Waldo, a wealthy Citizen, about the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, Emperour of Germanie, who being a devout and conſcientious man, ſenſible of the many errours and corruptions in the Church of Rome, diſtributed the greateſt part of his riches amongſt the poor, and betook himſelf to meditation and ſtudying of the holy Scriptures. In the carnall eating of CHRISTS body, the ſubſtraction of the Cup in the bleſſed Sacrament, in matter of Purgatorie, the the Supremacie, adoration of Images, Invocation of the Saints departed, and many other points of moment; he held opinions contrary unto thoſe of Rome; and little different from thoſe of the preſent Reformed Churches. And yet it may not be denied, but that amongſt ſome good Wheat there were many Tares; which gave the juſter colour to their Adverſaries to exclame againſt them. Being much followed, in regard of his pietie and charitie, he got unto himſelf and them the name of Pauperes de Lugduno, or the Poor men of Lions, given in deriſion and contempt. Afterwards, they were called Waldenſes, by the name of Waldo, the beginner of this Reformation; and by that name oppoſed, and writ againſt by Frier Thomas of Walden. The French, according to their manner of Pronunciation, drowning the L. and changing the W. into V. call them commonly Vaudois; by which name they occurre in the ſtories of that State, and Language. But Lyons proving no ſafe place for them, they retired into the more deſart parts of Languedoc; and ſpreading on the banks of the River Alby, obtained the name of Albigenſes, as before was ſaid. Supported by the two laſt Earls of Tholouſe, they became very maſterfull and inſolent: Inſomuch, that they murdered Trincanell their Viſcount in Beziers, and daſhed out the teeth of their Biſhop, having taken Sanctuarie in S. Magdalens Church, one of the Churches of that Citie. Forty yeers after which high outrage, the divine Providence gave them over to the hand of the Creiſadas, under the conduct of the French Kings, and many other noble Adventurers; who ſacrificed them in the ſelf-ſame Church, wherein they had ſpoyled the blood of others. About the yeer 1250, after a long and bloodie War, they were almoſt rooted out of that Countrie alſo. The remnants of them being bettered by this affliction, betook themſelves unto the mountains lying betwixt Daulphine, Provence, Piemont, and Savoy; where they lived a godly and laborious life; painfully tilling the ground, re-building villages, which formerly had been deſtroyed by Warre; teaching the very Rocks to yeeld good paſturage to their Cattel: inſomuch, as places which before their comming thither ſcarce yeelded four Crowns yeerely, were made worth 350 Crowns a yeer, by their care and induſtrie. Laſciviouſneſs in ſpeech they uſed not; Blaſphemie they abhorred; nor was the name of the Devil (in the way of execration) ever heard amongſt them; as their very enemies could not but confeſs, when they were afterward in troubles. The Crimes alleged againſt them were, That when they came into any of the neighbouring Churches, they made no addreſs unto the Saints; nor bowed before ſuch Croſſes as were erected in the high-wayes, and ſtreets of Towns. Great crimes aſſuredly, when greater could not be produced. And ſo they lived, neither embracing the Popes doctrines, nor ſubmitting unto his Supremacie, for the ſpace of 300 yeers, uutouched, unqueſtioned; even till the latter end of the reign of King Francis the firſt. But then the Perſecution raging againſt the Lutherans, they were accuſed, condemned, and barbarouſly murdered, in the Maſſacres of Merindol and Chabriers before mentioned. After which time, joyning themſelves with the reſt of the Proteſtant partie, they loſt the name of Vaudois, by which called before: and paſs in the Accompt of the Reformed Churches of France, enjoying the ſame privileges and freedom of Conſcience, as others of the Reformed doe. And though I look not on theſe men and their Congregations, as founders of the Proteſtant Church, or of the ſame Church with them, as I ſee ſome doe: yet I behold them as Aſſertors of ſome doctrinall truthes, and profeſſed Enemies of the errours and corruptions of the Church of Rome, and therein as the Predeceſſours of the preſent Proteſtants.

Burgundie Dukedom.

18 The Dukedom of BURGUNDIE.

THe Dukedom of BURGUNDIE hath on the Eaſt, the Frenche Countie, and ſome part of Savoy; on the Weſt, Bourbonois; on the North, Champagne; on the South, La Breſſe, Lionois, and ſome part of Beau-jeulois. A Province ſo well watred with pleaſant and profitable Rivers, that as Qu. Catharine de Medices uſed to ſay of France, That it had more fair Rivers than all Europe; ſo we may ſay of this Countrie, That it hath more fine Riverets than all France: here being the Rivers of 1 Armacan, 2 Serum, 3 Curi, 4 Torney, 5 Valence, 6 Dove, 7 Brune, 8 Seen 9 Lonche, and 10 Soaſne, (the Araxis of the antient Writers) this laſt dividing the two Burgundies from one another. Yet, notwithſtanding this great plentie of waters, the Country generally is leſs fruitfull than the reſt of France: hardly yeelding ſufficient for its own inhabitants, except wines onely.

Chief Cities in it are, 1 Dijon, the birth-place of S. Bernard, ſeated upon the Soaſne and L'ouche, in a champian Countrie; the Town large, populous, and of great reſort, as being the Seat of the Governour, and Parliamentary for the Province; a Parliament being here erected, Anno 147[illegible]. Well fortified on all parts, but ſpecially defended by a ſtrong Caſtle called Talente, ſituate on an hill adjoyning. It is called Divio in the Latine, the Biſhop hereof Divionenſis. 2 Chalons, (in Latin, Caballinum,) called for diſtinctions ſake, Chalons upon Soaſne, to difference it from Chalons upon Marn, in Champagne: a Biſhops See alſo, as the other is; and gives name to that noble Family of Chalons, (out of which the Princes of Orange are extracted) being one of the four antient Families of Burgundie; the other three, Vienne, Neufchatell, and Vergie. 3 Autun, by Ptolomie called Auguſtodunum, the chief Citie of the Hedui, now a Biſhops See; heretofore the chief of all the Countrie, ſome marks of the old ſplendour being ſtill to be ſeen; now very ordinarie and mean, beautified only with ſome fair Churches, which the ruines of time have not yet demoliſhed. 4 Beaulne, ſeated on the Burſeize, in the beſt and richeſt ſoyl of all Burgundie, and yielding the beſt

Burgundie Dukedom.

Wines in France: remarkable for an Hospitall of so fair a building, that it is thought equall to any Princes Palace in Europe; and an impregnable Castle built by King Lewis the 12th. 5 Alize, now a small Village, but of great name and power in the time of Cæsar, then called Alexia, the chief Fortress of Vercingetorix, besieged herein by the said Cæsar; but so besieged, that he had 70000 men in the Town for defence of the place, and an Army of 300000 Galls at the back of Cæsar, to relieve their fellows. So that he was fain to fortifie his Camp with two Walls, the one against them within the Citie, and the other against them without: which done, he kept such diligent watch and ward on both sides, that the besieged heard sooner of the discomfiture of their Friends, than they did of their comming. Which fatall news being brought unto them, the Town was yeelded. And Vercingetorix bravely mounted, rode round about Cæsar, then sitting in his Chair of State, disarmed himself, took off his Horses caparisons, and laying all upon the ground, sate down at Cæsars feet, and became his Prisoner. 5 Tournus, encompassed with the Soasne. 7 Semur, consisting of three parts, each of them severally walled, and strongly fortified. 8 Verdun. 9 Nayz. 10 St. Ligier, famous for medicinall Bathes. 11 Noyers, on the Borders towards Champagne. 12 Auxerre, by Antonine called Autisiodorum; Of most note for the Councill held here, Anno 627, the Countrie about which is called Auxerrois, and was an Earldom of it self, till sold by John of Chalons, great Grandchild of Joh. the 7th, Earl of Burgundie, to Charles the fifth of France, Anno 1370; by whom united to the Crown, subjected to the Parliament of Paris, and made part of Champagne. Here is also within this Countrie the great and famous Monastery of Cisteaux, the mother of so many Religious houses, dispersed up and down in Europe, from hence denominated, and subject to the discipline and Rules hereof.

Within the limits of this Dukedom (on the South parts of it) stands the Earldom of CHAROLOIS, heretofore the title of the eldest Sonne of the Dukes of Burgundie, so called from Charolles, the chief Town hereof, situate in the borders of it, towards La Bresse: seized upon, with the rest of this Dukedom, by Lewis the 11th, immediately on the death of Duke Charles the Warlike; restored again to Philip the second, King of Spain, by Henry the second, of France, on the peace made at Cambray; and subjected to the Parliament of Dole in the County of Burgundy, as a part or member of that Estate: So that neither the Governour of the Dukedom for the French King, nor the Parliament of Digion, have any thing to do in it. The Arms hereof are Gules, a Lyon passant regardant Or, armed Azure.

The antient Inhabitants of the whole Dukedom, according to the limits before laid down, were the Hedui, one of the most potent Nations in all Gaule: who calling in the Romans to aid them in their quarrels against the Sequani and Arverni, made them all subject unto Rome. In the prosperity whereof they made up the Province of Lugdunensis Prima, of which Lions was the Metropolis or principall Citie. Afterwards, in the division of the French Kingdom of Burgundie by Charles the Bald, this part thereof, being called the Dukedom of Burgundy on this side of the Soasne, was cantoned into the five Earldoms of Dijon, Chalons, Autun, Lions, and Mascon, whereof the three first laid together by Odo or Eudes King of France, during the minoritie of Charles the Simple, given unto his Brother Richard (both Sonnes of Robert, Earl of Anjou,) under the stile and title of Duke of Burgundy. The issue of this Robert failing, it fell unto another Robert, Sonne of Hugh Capet King of France, and the male issue failing of that Line also, it was given by Charles the Wise to his Brother Philip, (more worthily surnamed the Hardie) together with the mariage of the Heir of Flanders, Artois, and the County of Burgundy. An Argument of no great wisdom, as was judiciously observed by King Lewis the 11th. For by this means, those great Estates being united in one person, and afterwards these estates improved by as prosperous mariages, this house of Burgundy, grew formidable to the Kings themselves; who never left practising against it, till they had brought it to ruine, and once again united this Dukedom to their own Estate, from which at first it was dismembred.

The Dukes of Burgundy.

897.	1 Richard of Saxonie, the second Sonne of Robert Earl of Anjou, brother of Eudes, and Father of Rodolph Kings of France.
938.	2 Gilbert, the second Sonne of Richard.
964.	3 Otho, Sonne of Hugh Earl of Paris, surnamed the Great, and Brother of Hugh Capet King of France, was Duke of Burgundy in right of his Wife the Daughter of Gilbert.
976.	4 Henry, the Brother of Otho.
1001.	5 Robert, King of France, Sonne of Hugh Capet, succeeded in the Dukedom, on the death of his Uncle Henry.
1004.	6 Robert II. Sonne of this Robert, and Brother of Henry King of France.
1075.	7 Hugh, the Nephew of Robert by his Sonne Henry, became afterwards a Monk of Clugny.
1097.	8 Odo, or Otho II. Brother of Hugh.
1102.	9 Hugh II. Sonne of Otho the 2d.
1124.	10 Odes, or Otho III. Sonne of Hugh the 2d.
1165.	11 Hugh III. the Companion, but great Enemy of our Richard the first, in the Wars of the Holy-Land.

1192. 12 Odes

1192. 12 Odes or Otho IV. Sonne of Hugh the 3d.
1218. 13 Hugh IV. an Adventurer with King Lewis the 9th. in the Holy-Land.
1273. 14 Robert III. Sonne of Hugh the 4th. which Robert was the Father of Joan, the Wife of Philip de Valois, French King, and Grandmother of Philip the Hardie, after, Duke of Burgundy.
1308. 15 Hugh V. Sonne of Robert the 3d.
1315. 16 Eudes, the Brother of Hugh, was Earl of Burgundie also in right of his Wife.
1349. 17 Philip, the Grand-child of Eudes by his only Sonne Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundie by descent, and Earl of Flanders and Artois in right of his Wife; the last Duke of this Line.
1363. 18 Philip II. surnamed the Hardie, Sonne of John King of France, Sonne of Philip de Valois, and Joan Daughter of Robert the 3d. by Charls the 5th. his Brother, (in whom the right of this Dukedom did then remain) was made Duke of Burgundy, and maried to the Heir of Flanders, and the County of Burgundy.
1404. 19 John, surnamed the Proud, Sonne of Philip the 2d. Duke and Earl of Burgundie, and Earl of Flanders and Artois.
1419. 20 Philip III. surnamed the Good, who added most of the Netherlands unto his Estate.
1467. 21 Charls the Warlike, Earl of Charolois, Sonne of Philip the Good. After whose death, slain by the Switzers, at the battell of Nancie, Lewis the 11th. seized upon this Dukedom, Anno 1476. pretending an Escheat thereof, for want of Heires males; uniting it for ever to the Crown of France.

Burgundie County.

Of the great wealth and potency of these last Dukes of Burgundie, we shall speak further when we come to the description of Belgium: the accession whereof to their Estates made them equall to most Kings in Christendom. But for their Arms, which properly belonged to them as Dukes of Burgundie, they were Bendwise of Or and Azure, a Border Gules. Which Coat is usually marshalled in the Scutchions of the Kings of Spain; that of the Earldom being omitted, though in their possession. The reasons of which are probably (for I go but by gues) partly because this being the older and Paternal Coat, comprehends the other; and partly to keep on foot the memory of his Title to the Dukedom it self, in right of which he holdeth such a great Estate.

19 The County of BVRGVNDIE.

THe County of BVRGVNDIE hath on the East the Mountain Iour, which parts it from Switzerland; on the West, the Dutchie of Burgundie, from which divided by the Soasne; on the North a branch of the Mountain Vauge, which runneth betwixt it and Lorreine; on the the South, La Bresse. It is reckoned to be 90 miles in length, about 60 in bredth; and with the provinces of Daulphine, La Bresse, and Provence, made up the Dukedom of Burgundie beyond the Soasne; on the Eastern side of which it is wholly situate. This part thereof, now generally called the Frenche Comtè, or the Free County, because not under the command of the French Kings, but living in a more free Estate than any Subjects of that Kingdom.

The Country in some parts very Mountainous, but those Mountains yielding excellent Vineyards, and having in recompence of a little barrenness an intermixture of most pleasing and fruitfull vallies: swelling with plenty of all naturall commodities usefull unto the life of man; and for variety of fresh streams, and delightful Riverets, inferiour only to the Dutchie.

The principall Towns and Cities of it, are, 1 Besanson, called by Cæsar, Vesontio, then the chief Citie of the Sequani, as afterwards the Metropolis of the Province entituled Maxima Sequanorum; by consequence an Archbishops See. Seated betwixt two Mountains on the banks of the River Doux, by which it is almost encompassed; such artificiall Fortifications being added to it, as make it very strong both by art and nature. But this is an imperiall City, not subject to the Government and Command of the Earls of Burgundie; honoured with a small Universitie founded here, Anno 1540. by Pope Iulio the 2d. and Charles the fifth. 2 Dole, seated on the same River Doux, for riches, strength, and beauty, to be preferred before any in all the County, of which it is the Parliament City, and consequently of most resort for dispatch of business. Antiently it was an University for the study of the Civill Lawes; but now the University is devoured by a College of Iesuites: who fearing lest the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches might creep in amongst the people, not only have debarred them the use of the Protestants Books, but have expresly forbid them to talk of GOD, either in a good sort or in a bad. 3 Salins, so called from its salt fountains out of which came the greatest part of the Earls Revenue; honoured for a while with the seat of the Parliament, removed hither from Dole by King Lewis the 11th. at such time as he held this Country; beholding to him (being a wise and politick Prince) for many wholsome Ordinances still observed amongst them. 4 Poligni, the Bailliage of the Lower; as 5 Vesoal is of the Higher Burgundy. 6 Arbois, noted for the best Wines; and 7. Laxoal for medicinable Bathes. 8 Nazareth, on the borders of Switzerland, fortified with a very strong Castle, the ordinary seat and retreat from business of the first Princes of Orange, of the house of Chalons, who had great possessions in this Country. 9 Gray, and 10 Chastel-Chalon, 11 Quingey, 12 Orgelet. Here is also the great and famous Abbie of Clugny, neer the Town of Beaune, out of which so many Monasteries in the Western Church had their first Originall.

The old Inhabitants of this Countie were the Sequani, a potent name, contending with the Hedui and Arverni for the Soveraignty of Gaul; till the ſtrife was ended by the Romans, under whom it made together with Switzerland the Province of Maxima Sequanorum. In the declining of which Empire it fell to the Burgundians, and by Rodolph the laſt King of the French Kingdom of Burgundy was given to Conrade the 2d Emperour of Germanie. After that reckoned as a part of the German Empire, governed by ſuch Earls or Provinciall Officers, as thoſe Emperours ſent hither. Otho of Flanders, Sonne to a Siſter of the Emperour Conrade, was the firſt that held it as Proprietarie: the other three whom Paradine ſets before him in his Catalogue of the Earls of Burgundy, being meerly Officiall. It was firſt united to the Dutchy by the mariage of D. Eudes with Ioan the Counteſs. But no iſſue coming of this bed, it fell into the houſe of Flanders; and with the Heir of Flanders unto Philip the Hardie, the firſt Duke hereof of the Royall Race of Valois, Anno 1369. Philip the Grand-child of this Philip, united moſt of the Belgick Provinces unto his Eſtate: after whoſe death, and the death of Charles his Sonne at the battell of Nancie, the Dutchie was ſurprized by King Lewis the 11th, as holden of the Crown of France, eſcheated to him for want of Heirs males. But the Countie, holden of the Empire, though ſubdued alſo by this Lewis, was reſtored again to Mary the Daughter and Heir of Charles; continuing hitherto in her iſſue, as appears evidently by this Catalogue of

The Earls of Burgundie.

1001. 1 Otho Guillaume, the firſt Earl of Burgundy, by the power and aid of Robert King of France.

1118. 2 Reinald, Couſin and Heir of Otho.

1183. 4 Otho the youngeſt Sonne of Frederick.

1200 5 Otho II. Duke of Meranis, and Earl of Burgundie in right of Beatrix his Wife, the Daughter of Otho the firſt.

1208 6 Stephen, Earl of Chalons, next Heir of Gerard of Vienne, and Joan his Wife, Daughter of Otho the firſt.

1204 7 John, the Sonne of Stephen de Chalons.

270 9 Othelin, the Sonne of Hugh, Earl of Artoys in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artoys.

1315 10 Philip the Long, King of France, in right of Ioan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Othelin.

1331 11 Eudes Duke of Burgundie; Husband of Ioan of France, the eldeſt Daughter of King Philip the Long, and Ioan the Counteſs.

1349 12 Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundie, Grand-child of Eudes, and Ioan his Wife, by their Sonne Philip.

14 Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders by his Father, and of Burgundie and Artois by his Mother.

1404. 16 Antony the Proud, Duke and Earl of Burgundie.

1419. 17 Philip the Good, Duke and Earl of Burgundie.

1467. 18 Charles the Warlike, Duke and Earl of Burgundie.

1475. 19 Mary, the Daughter of Charles, maried to Maximilian, of Auſtria, Sonne of Frederick the 3d, Emperour of Germany, in which honour he ſucceeded his Father.

1482 20 Philip the IV. Sonne of Mary and Maximilian; King of Caſtile and Aragon in right of his Wife Ioan, Daughter to Ferdinand and Iſabel Kings of Caſtile, &c.

1506 21 Charles the Sonne of Philip, King of Spain, and Emperour of Germany, by the name of Charles the firſt.

1558. 22 Philip the II. of Spain, and V. of Burgundie.

23 Philip the III of Spaine, and VI. of Burgundie.

23 Philip the IV. of Spaine, and VII. of Burgundie, in whom reſteth the poſſeſſion of the Countie of Burgundie, and the Earldom of Charolois: herein not troubled by the French, for fear of giving offence to the Cantons of Switzerland upon whom it bordereth; jealous enough already of the greatneſs and power of France, and ſo not likely to admit ſuch a porent Neighbour.

The Armes of this Earldom are Azure, a Lyon rampant Or, Seme of Billets Argent.

French Ilands.

HAving thus took a view of the ſeverall Provinces within the Continent of France, let us next look upon the ILANDS which belong unto it; diſperſed in the Mediterranean Sea, and the Weſtern Ocean. Thoſe in the Mediterranean Sea, are of little note, as the Iſles of Eres, and 2 Pomegues, lying againſt Provence; 3 Maguelone, lying againſt Languedoc; and 4 L'Anguillade, betwixt both, at the mouth of the Rhoſne; of which there is nothing to be ſaid, but that thoſe of Eres are thought to be the Stoechades of Ptolomie, and his Blaſcon, to be Anguillade. And of as little note in the Weſtern Ocean, are Belle-Iſle, againſt Vannes in Bretagne, the Iſle de Deiu having in it two or three good Villages; Marmoſtier, plentifull in Salt, and beautified with a Monaſtery called the White Abbie. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1 Oleron, and 2 Ree, on the coaſt of Aquitaine; and thoſe of 3 Jarſey, 4 Gernſey, 5 Sark, and 6 Alderney, on the ſhores of Normandy: Of which, the four laſt are under the Kings of England, the reſt poſſeſſed by the French.

1 OLERON, is an Iland ſituate over againſt the Province of Xaintoigne, and South unto the Iſle of Ree, from which little diſtant. It is the biggeſt of the two, and makes yeerly very great quantitie of Salt, wherewith moſt of the Provinces on the Weſtern Ocean uſe to be furniſhed. But it is eaſie of acceſs, and not very defenſible, which makes it of leſſe note both in antient and modern ſtories. The principall Town of it is called Oleron, by the name of the Iland. One thing there is, for which indeed this Iland is of ſpeciall fame, and that is, that the Marine Lawes, which for neer 500 years have generally been received by all the States of the Chriſtian World, which frequent the Ocean, (the Rhodian Lawes being antiquated and worn out of uſe) for regulating of Sea affairs, and deciding of Maritime Controverſies, were declared and eſtabliſhed here, and from hence called the Lawes of Oleron. And here they were declared and eſtabliſhed by King Rich. the firſt of England, as Lord Paramount of the Seas, immediately on his return from the Holy Land: this Iland being then in his poſſeſſion, as a Member of his Dukedom of Aquitaine; Quæ quidem Leges & Statuta per Dominum Richardum quondam Regem Angliæ in redditu ſuo à Terra Sancta, correcta fuerunt, interpretata, declarata, et in Inſula de Oleron publicata, et nominata in Gallica Lingua La Loy d' Oleron, &c. ſaith an old Record, which I find cited in a M. S. Diſcourſe of my late learned Friend Sir Iohn Burroughs, (once Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, but afterwards Principall King of Arms, by the name of Garter) entituled, The Soveraignty of the Britiſh Seas. So powerfull were the Kings of England in the former times, as to give Lawes to all that traded on the Ocean.

2 The Iſle of RE, is ſituate over againſt Rochell; to which it ſerved for an Out-work, on that ſide thereof. It is in length ten Engliſh miles, and about half as much in bredth, well fortified with deep mariſhes at the entries of it; to which the many Salt-pits every where intermingled, adde a very great ſtrength. Chief places in it, are, 1 La Butte du Mont. 2 St. John de Mons, 3 St. Hilarie, 4 St. Martins, the largeſt and ſtrongeſt of them all, from whence the whole Iſland hath ſometimes been called St. Martins. After the taking of this Town by Lewis the 13th, Anno 1622. (The Duke of Soubize then commanding in it for thoſe of Rochell) it was very well fortified; and ſince made unfortunately famous for the defeat of the Engliſh Forces under the command of George Duke of Buckingham, ſent thither to recover the Town and Iſland, on the inſtigation of Soubize, who before had loſt it. Anno 1627.

3 IARSEY, by Antonine called Cæſarea, is ſituate about ten miles from the Coaſt of Normandie, within the view and proſpect of the Church of Conſtance, part of which Dioceſe it was: in length conteining 11 miles, 6 in bredth, and in circuit about 33. It is generally very fruitfull of Corn, whereof they have not onely enough for themſelves, but ſome over-plus to barter at St. Malos with the Spaniſh Merchants: and of an Air not very much diſpoſed to diſeaſes, unleſs it be an Ague in the end of Harveſt, which they call Les Settembers. The Countrie ſtands much upon incloſures, the hedges of the grounds well ſtored with Apples, and thoſe Apples making ſtore of Sider, which is their ordinary drink: watered with many pleaſant rivulets, and good ſtore of Fiſh-ponds, yeelding a Carp for taſt and largeneſs inferiour unto none in Europe, except thoſe of Gernſey, which generally are ſomewhat bigger, but not better reliſhed. The people for the moſt part more inclinable to husbandrie, than to trades or merchandiſe, and therein differing very much from thoſe of Gernſey, who are more for merchandize than tillage. It containeth in it 12 Pariſhes, or Villages, having Churches in them, beſides the Manſions of the Seigneurs, and chief men of the Countrie. The principall is St. Hilaries, where is the Cohu, or Court of Iuſtice for all the Iland. It is about the bigneſs of an ordinary market Town in England; ſituate on the edge of a little Bay, fortified on the one ſide with a ſmall Block-houſe called Mount St. Aubin; but on that ſide which is next the Town with a very ſtrong Caſtle called Fort Elizabeth, ſituate upon craggie Rocks, and encompaſſed with two arms of the Sea; ſo named from Qu. Elizabeth, who built it to aſſure the Iſland againſt the French, and furniſhed it with 30 peece of Ordnance, and all other neceſſaries. There is alſo on the Eaſt ſide, oppoſite to the Citie of Conſtance, high mounted on ſteep and craggie Rocks, the ſtrong Caſtle of Mont-Orgueil; of great Antiquity, repaired by King Henry the fifth, now furniſhed with 40 peece of Cannon, and made the ordinarie reſidence of the Governours for the Kings of England.

4 On the North-weſt of Iarſey, lieth the Iland of GERNSEY, called Sarnia by Antoninus.

French Ilands.

in form Triangular, each ſide of nine miles in length. The Countrie of as rich a ſoyl as the other of Iarſey, but not ſo well cultivated and manured: the poorer people here being more given to manufactures, (eſpecially to the knitting of Stockins and Waſt-coats) and the rich to merchandize; many of which are Maſters of good ſtout Barks, with which, they traffick into England and other places. The whole Iſland conteining ten Villages with Churches; the Principall of which St. Peters Port, a very neat and well-built Town, with a ſafe Peer for the benefit of Merchants, and the ſecuring of the Haven, capable of handſom Barks; a Market Town, beautified with a very fair Church, and honoured with the Plaiderie or Court of Iuſtice. Oppoſite whereto, in a little Iſlet ſtandeth the Caſtle of Cornet, taking up the whole circuit and dimenſions of it: environed on all ſides with the Sea; having one entrance onely, and that very narrow: well fortified with works of Art, and furniſhed with no leſs than 80 peeces of Ordnance for defence of the Iſland, but chiefly to command the adjoyning Harbour, capable of 500 as good ſhips as any ſail on the Ocean. A peece of great importance to the Realm of England, and might prove utterly deſtructive of the trade hereof, if in the hands of any Nation that were ſtrong in ſhipping. For that cauſe made the Ordinarie Seat of the Engliſh Governours; though of late times not ſo much honoured with the preſence of thoſe Governours, as a place of that Conſequence ought to be. Pertaining unto Gernſey are two little Iſlets, the one called Iet-how, the Governours Park, wherein are ſome few Fallow Deer, and good plentie of Conies; the other named Arme, ſome three miles in compaſs, a dwelling heretofore of Franciſcan Friers, now not inhabited but by Pheſants, of which, amongſt the ſhrubs and buſhes there is very good ſtore.

5 ALDERNEY, by Antonine called Arica, by the French, Aurigni, and Aurney, is ſituate over againſt the Cape of the Lexobii in the Dukedom of Normandie, which the Mariners at this day call the Hagge: diſtant from which but ſix miles onely. Beſides many dwelling houſes ſcattered up and down, there is one pretty Town or Village of the ſame name with the Iland, conſiſting of about an hundred Families; and having not far off an Harbour, made in the faſhion of a Semi-Circle, which they call La Crabbie. The whole about 8 miles in compaſs, of very difficult acceſs, by reaſon of the high rocks and precipices, which encompaſs it on every ſide, and with a ſmall force eaſily defenſible, if thought worth attempting.

6 And ſo is alſo SARK, the adjoyning Iland, being in compaſs ſix miles; not known by any ſpeciall name unto the Antients; and to ſay truth not peopled till the fift year of Queen Elizabeth; who then granted it in Fee-farm to Helier de Carteret, the Seigneur of St. Oen in the Iſle of Iarſey, who from thence planted it, and made Eſtates out of it to ſeverall Occupants: ſo that it may contain now about 50 Houſholds. Before which time it ſerved only for a Common, or Beaſts-paſture to thoſe of Gernſey, ſave that there was an Hermitage, and a little Chappel, for the uſe of ſuch as the ſolitarineſs of the place invited to thoſe retirements.

Theſe two laſt Ilands, are ſubject to the Governour of Gernſey, all four to the Crown of England, holden in right of the Dukedom of Normandie, to which they antiently belonged, and of which now the ſole remainders in the power of the Engliſh. Attempted often by the French (the two firſt I mean) ſince they ſeized on Normandie, but alwayes with repulſe and loſs: the people being very affectionate to the Engliſh Government, under which they enjoy very ample Privileges; which from the French they could not hope for. Their Language is the Norman-French (though the better ſort of them ſpeak the Engliſh alſo) their Law, the Grand Cuſtomaire of Normandie, attempered and applied to the uſe of this people in their ſutes and buſineſs, by the Bailifs, and Chief Juſticiers of the two chief Ilands. Their Religion for the main, is that of the Reformed Churches: the Government in Iarſey by the Dean thereof, Suffragan heretofore to the Biſhop of Conſtance, now to the Biſhop of Wincheſter; in Gernſey, by a mixt Conſiſtory of Clergie and Lay-Elders, according to the new Modell of Geneva, introduced in both Ilands, Anno 1565. being the eighth yeer of Queen Elizabeth, and aboliſhed again in Iarſey, Anno 1619. being the 17th of King James.

But to return again to the ſtorie of France, thorow which we have now made our Progreſs both by Sea and Land: It took this name from the Frankes or French, a German People, who in the War of the Roman Empire poſſeſſed themſelves of it: not mentioned by that name by Ceſar, Strabo, Ptolomie, or any of the more antient Writers. Nor was it taken up by them, for ought appeareth, till an hundred years after the death of Ptolomie: the firſt expreſs mention of them occurring in the reign of Gallienus, then ranſacking the coaſts of Gaul, and joyning with Poſthumus the Rebell, againſt that Emperour. Afterwards often ſpoken of in the courſe of the Roman ſtories, under the Empire of Claudius, Probus, Dioclesian, and the Sonnes of Conſtantine: though only in the way of pillage and depredation. Their habitation in thoſe times, was from the meeting of the Rhene with the River Moenus, not far from Frankford, where they confined upon the Almans, to the German Ocean: conteining the particular Nations of the Bructeri, Sicambri, Salii, Cheruſci, Friſii, and Teucteri, beſides ſome others of leſs note: and taking up the Countries of Weſtphalen, Bergen, Marck, and ſo much of Cleve, as lieth on the Dutch ſide of the Rhene, the Lantgravedom of Haſſia the Dutchie of Gueldres, the Provinces of Zutphen, Utrecht, Over-Yſſell, both Frieſlands, and ſo much of Holland as lieth on the ſame ſide of the Rhene. United in the name of Frankes, to ſhew that Libertie or Freedom from the yoke of ſervitude which the Romans had endeavoured to impoſe upon them, and wherewith all the Nations on the other ſide of the River were ſuppoſed to ſuffer: Governed by Dukes, till the yeer 420. when Pharamond firſt took upon himſelf the name of King. Merovens their third King having diſpoſſeſſed the Sonns of Clodion, the Sonne and Succeſſor of Pharamond, was the firſt that ſet foot in Gaul: when ſeeing the Romans on the one ſide put to the worſt by Theodorick and the Gothes; and on the other ſide by the Burgundians; they paſſed over the Rhene, and poſſeſſed themſelves of the Province of Germania Secunda, containing all the Belgick Provinces on the French ſide of that River, together with the Diſtrict of Colen, Gulick, and the reſt of Cleve, then paſſing in the accompt of Gaul. His victories and fortunes were inherited by Chilperick his Sonne & Succeſſour, who added Picardy, Champaine, and the Iſle of France to the former conqueſt; took Paris, & made it the ſeat of his Kingdom Afterwards when they had fully ſeated themſelves here, and thereby opened a free paſſage to the reſt of the Country, they quickly made themſelvs Maſters of al that which formerly had been poſſeſſed by the Romans; whom they outed of their laſt hold in Soiſſons, under Clovis their fift King; who alſo took Aquitain and the parts adjoyning from the Viſi-Gothes, or Gothes of Spain: for theſe and many ſignal victories againſt the Almains, deſervedly ſurnamed the Great, but greater in ſubmitting to the Faith of CHRIST, and receiving Baptiſm, than by all his Victories. Childebert, and Clotaire, the Sonnes of this Clovis, vanquiſhed the Burgundians, adding that Kingdom to their own: as Theodebert his Grandchild, King of Mets, or Auſtraſia, did the Country of Provence, reſigned unto him by Amilaſunta, Queen of the Oſtro Gothes, or Gothes of Italy, by whom it had been wreſted from the Gothes of Spain. In the perſon of Clotaire the ſecond, the Realm of France improvidently diſmembred into many Kingdoms amongſt the Children of Clovis the firſt, that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of France, Soiſſons, Orleans, and Auſtraſia, (of which Orleans and Auſtraſia were of long continuance) were again united: Whoſe Succeſſor Dagobert the firſt, was the laſt conſiderable Prince of the Merovignians. After this time the reputation of the French Kings of this line began to diminiſh, ſcarce doing any thing that might ennoble and commend them to ſucceeding Ages; or leaving any monument behind them but their empty Names: which I ſhall repreſent in the following catalogue according to their ſeverall times, firſt taking notice, that though the Kings of this firſt race did many times divide the Kingdom, as before was ſaid, yet none of them were called Kings of France, but thoſe that had their Royall ſeat in the City of Paris: the reſt being called only Kings of Soiſſons, Mets, or Orleans, according to the Name of their Principall Cities. And therefore leaving thoſe to their proper places, we will here only take a Survey of thoſe, who paſſed in common eſtimate for the Kings of France.

The Kings of France of the French or Merovignian Line.

449 1 Meroveus, Maſter of the horſe to Clodion the Sonne of Pharamond, from whom this Line of Kings were called Merovignians. 10.

459. 2 Chilperic, the Sonne of Merove. 26.

485. 3 Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French. 30.

515. 4. Childebert, eldeſt Sonne of Clovis, his other Brethren Reigning in their ſeverall places. 45.

560. 5 Clotaire, Brother of Childebert, firſt King of the Soiſſons, afterwards ſole King of the French.

565. 6 Cherebert, Sonne of Clotaire.

574. 7 Chilperic II. King of Soiſſons, and Brother of Cherebert, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom. 14.

588. 8 Clotaire II. Sonne of Chilperic the ſecond. 44.

632. 9 Dagobert, Sonne of Clotaire the ſecond. 14.

645. 10 Clovis II. Sonne of Dagobert. 17.

663. 11 Clotaire III. Sonne of Clotaire the ſecond. 4.

667 12 Chilperic III. Sonne of Clotaire the third.

680 13 Theodorick Brother of Chilperic. 14.

694 14 Clovis III. Sonne to Theodorick. 5.

698. 15 Childebert II. Brother to Clovis. 18.

716. 16 Dagobert II. Sonne of Childebert, the ſecond.

722. 17 Chilperic IV. oppoſed by Charls Martel in behalf of Clotaire the fourth. 5.

727 17 Theodoric II. Sonne of Dagobert the ſecond.

742 19 Chilperic V. Sonne of Theodoric the laſt of the Merovignian Family, Depoſed by Pepin, Sonne to Charles Martel; the Pope giving approbation to his proceedings.

This Pepin and his Father Martel were Mayres of the Palace to the former Kings: which Mayres were originally Controllers of the Kings Houſe, and had nothing to do with the affairs of State. But Clotaire the third, to eaſe himſelf and his ſucceſſours of a burden ſo weighty, made the Mayres, Vicars generall of his Empire. From henceforward the Kings followed their pleaſures, ſhewing themſelves only on May-day: and then being ſeated in a Chariot, adorned with Flowers, and drawn by four Oxen. As for the Mayre, he openeth packets, heareth and diſpatcheth forrein Ambaſſadours, giveth remedy to the complaints of the Subjects, maketh Laws & repealeth them: An authority ſomewhat like that of the Prafecti Pratorio, in the declining times of the Roman Empire, or that of the Sultans under the Mahometan Caliphs, and the Vice-Roys of the old Egyptian Pharaohs. An office which had been born by the Anceſtors of this Martel, ever ſince the reign of Clotaire the ſecond, in whoſe time the Palatine or Mayre was one Arnulphus, deſcended lineally from Vitilo the ſecond Sonne of Adalgerio, the firſt King of the Boiarians, ans or Bavarians. Which Vtilo being a military Prince, and having done good service to Theodorick the first King of Austrasia, or Mets, against the Danes then grievously infesting the Coasts of the Lower-Germany; was by him made Warden of those Marches, and honoured with the mariage of his Daughter Clotilde, and liberally endowed with fair possessions in this tract. The fourth from Vtilo was this Arnulph, the first Mayre of this house; which Office having long enjoyed, he resigned it to Ansegisus his eldest Sonne (the first who drew unto himself the Managery of the whole Estate) and bidding farewell to the affairs of the World, became a Priest, and dyed a Bishop of Mets, Anno 641. Afterwards Canonized a Saint. Ansegisus dying in the year 679. left his authority and Office to his Nephew Martin, Sonne of Ferdulphus his younger Brother. But he being slain by Ebroinus, one of the Competitors, who a while enjoyed it, Pepin surnamed the Fat, Sonne of Ansegisus, revenging his Cozins death upon Ebronius, and crushing all the opposite factions which were raised against him, obtained that honour for himself. And having much advanced the affairs of France by the conquest of the Sueves and Frisons, died in the year 714. Succeeded to in this great Office after his decease (for Grimold his only lawfull Sonne, and Theobalaus the Sonne of Grimold, whom he had successively substituted in the same, died not long before him) by Charles his natural Son, begotten on Albieda his Concubine; from his martiall prowess called Martel. Who in his time, did to the Kings of France great service, especially in routing that vast Army of the Moores and Saracens, in the battel of Tours before mentioned, thereby not only freeing France from the present danger, but adding Languedoc to the Crown, formerly in possession of the Gothes and Moores; for which he was created Duke or Prince of the French, yet would he not usurp the Kingdom, or the title of King, though both at his dispossall wholly: it being his ordinary Saying, that he had rather Rule a King, than be one.

To him succeeded Carloman his eldest Sonne, Anno 741. who held the office but a year, and then left it to his Brother Pepin: Who being of less moderation than his Father was, made such use of his power, that partly by that means, and partly under colour of an election, confirmed by Pope Zacharie the first, he took the Kingdom to himself: and the unfortunate King Chilperick had his powle shaven, and was thrust into a Monasterie. For this investiture both Pepin and Charles his Son, did many good services for the Popes, destroying on their quarrel the Kingdom of the Lombards, and giving them most of the Lands which formerly belonged unto the Exrchs of Ravenna. And on the other side the Popes to requite these curtesies confirm'd the former in this Kingdom by their Papal Power (which then began to bear some sway in the Christian World) and gave the last (besides the opportunity of attaining the Western Empire) the Title of Most Christian King, continued ever since unto his Successors: And to say truth, he well deserved those honours, and had they been farr greater, by many victories obtained against the Enemies of the Gospel; the several Heathens by his means converted to the Faith of Christ; the great abilities he had of estate and judgement, inabling him to support the Majestie of the Roman Empire: For he not only was sole Monarch of the Kingdom of France, not parcelled out as formerly, and in times succeeding, into several petit Kingdoms and Principalities; but had added thereunto by his own proper vertue the greatest part of Italie, the best part of Germany, all Belgium, the two Pannonia's, and a great part of Spain.

But this vast Empier falling into weak hands which were not able enough to manage it, decaied in as little time as it was in raising: partly by the unnaturall Ambition of the Sonnes of King Lewis the Godly, the next Successor of this Charles, who to make themselves all Kings, first deposed their Father, and then divided his Estate amongst them, into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, France, Lorrain, and Germany: four of which falling at last into the hands of strangers, ceased to be French, and passed into such Famlies as proved the greatest enemies of the Crown of France: partly by alienating the best and goodliest Provinces of France it self; never again united till these later dayes, which made the French Kings less considerable both at home and abroad, which we have touched upon before: and partly by the weakness and unworthiness of the Kings of this race; there being no question to be made but Lewis the Stammering, Charles the Bald, the Gross, and the Simple, would have found better Attributes if they had deserved them. For by this means the issue of this brave Prince grew so despicable in the eys of their Subjects, that first Eudes the Sonne of Robert Duke of Anjou, and after Rodolph Duke of Burgundy, the Vncle of Eudes, (both of the race of Witikindus the last Prince of the Saxons, and consequently both Aliens to the Houle of Charles) possessed themselves severally of the Kingdom. And though they did not hold it long, being depressed and overborn by their opposite factions, yet did they lay a fair ground for Hugh Capet to build his hopes on. Who being Sonne of Hugh the Great, Constable of France, and Earl of Paris, the Sonne of Robert Duke of Anjou, younger Brother of Eudes, and neer kinsman of Rodolphe, never left practising his party in the Realm of France, till he had got possession of the Regall Diadem, wherewith two Princes of his house had been invested formerly by the like Elections. But for the Kings of this second Race, founded by two brave Princes, but on the unjust grounds of an usurpation, they are these that follow.

The

The second race of the Kings of France, of the Carolovinian or Boiarian Line.

A. Ch.

151. 1 Pepin, the Sonne of Charles Martel, succeeded in the Office of Mayre, Anno 742, and having got the Regal Crown, vanquished the Lombards, made the Boiarians tributarie, and crushed the Saxons, 18.

769. 2 Charles, surnamed the Great, the Sonne of Pepin, subdued the Kingdoms of the Lombards and Saxons, conquered the Boiarians and Avares, and vanquished the Saracens of Spain; Crowned Emperour of the West upon Christmas day by Pope Leo the third, Anno 800, 46.

815. 3 Lewis the Godly, Sonne of Charles King of France and Emperour, the last sole Monarch of the French, deposed by his ambitious and unnaturall Sonnes: the Empire of the French after his decease, being divided into the Kingdoms of Italie, Burgundie, Germanie, France, and Lorrein; and France it self distracted into many Soveraign Estates and Principalities, 26.

841. 4 Charles II. surnamed Calvus, or the Bald, youngest Sonne of Lewis, King of France and Emperour, vanquished by Charles the Grosse, in the War of Italie, 38.

879. 5 Lewis II. surnamed Balbus, or the Stammering, Sonne of Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperour.

881. 6 Lewis III. with Caroloman his Brother, the base Sonnes of Lewis the Stammering; Usurpers of the Throne in the infancy of Charles the Simple.

886. 7 Charles III. surnamed Crassus, or the Grosse, King of Germany and Emperour: called into France, and elected King during the Minority of Charles the Simple, 5.

891. 8 Odo or Eudes, Sonne of Robert Earl of Anjou, of the race of Witikindus the last King of the Saxons, elected by an opposite Faction, outed Charles the Grosse, 9.

900. 9 Charles IV. surnamed Simplex, or the Simple, the Posthumus Sonne of Lewis the Stammerer, restored unto the Throne of his Fathers, which, after many troubles raised against him by Robert the 2d, Earl of Anjou (whom he slew in battel) he was forced to resigne, 27.

927. 10 Rodolph of Burgundie, Sonne of Richard Duke of Burgundie the Brother of Eudes, succeeded on the resignation of Charles the Simple, 2.

929. 11 Lewis IV. surnamed Transmarine, in regard that during his Fathers Troubles he had lived in England; restored unto the Regal Throne on the death of Rodolph: opposed therein by Hugh Earl of Paris and Anjou, the Nephew of King Eudes by his Brother Robert before mentioned.

958. 12 Lotharius, Sonne of Lewis the 4th, disturbed in his possession by Hugh Capet, the eldest Sonne of the said Hugh, on the pretensions of that house, by which at last he got the Kingdom.

987. 13 Lewis V. Sonne of Lotharius, the last King of the House of Charles the Great. After whose death (being King onely for a yeer) the Crown was seized on by Hugh Capet: Charles Duke of Lorreine, Brother of Lotharius, and Uncle unto Lewis the fift, being pretermitted.

And now we are come to the present race of the Kings of France, founded in Hugh Capet, so called from the greatness of his head, Sonne of Hugh the great, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Grandchild of Robert the second Earl of Anjou: Which Robert was the Brother of Eudes, and Cousin German of Rodolph Kings of France. Who partly by his own wits, but chiefly by the weakness of the mungrel Issue of Charles the Great, having got the Diadem, transmitted it unto his Posterity; the Crown descending in a direct line from Father to Sonne, till the death of Lewis the 10th, surnamed Hutin. But here we are to understand, that the Realm of France was at that time shut up within narrower bounds than it is at the present: the large and rich Countries of Champagne, Normandie, Bretagne, Anjou, Poictou, Languedoc, and the great Dukedom of Aquitain, besides those Provinces which constituted and made up the Kingdom of Burgundie, being alienated and dismembred from it. How they became reduced to the Crown again, will be discerned in the ensuing History and Succession of

The third Race of the Kings of France, of the Capetine or Saxon Line.

988. 1 Hugh Capet, of whom sufficiently before, 9.

997. 2. Robert, the Sonne of Hugh Capet, Duke of Burgundie also, 34.

1031. 3 Henry, the eldest Sonne of Robert; his younger Brother Robert being setled in the Dukedom of Burgundie, 39.

1061. 4 Philip, the Sonne of Henry, who added Berry to the Crown, 49.

1110. 5 Lewis, VI. Sonne of Philip, surnamed the Grosse, 28.

1138. 6 Lewis VII. Sonne of Lewis the sixt, an Adventurer in the War of the Holy Land: as also did his Sonne and successour

7 Philip

1181. 7 Philip II. ſurnamed Auguſtus, by whom Normandy, Aquitain, & Anjou, with their ſeverall Appendixes, were taken from King Iohn of England. 43.

1224. 8 Lewis VIII. Sonne of Philip Auguſtus. 3.

1227. 9 Lewis IX. ſurnamed the Saint, renowned for his Wars in Egypt, and the Holy-Land. He reſtored Guienne to the Engliſh, and added the Earldoms of Tholouſe and Maſcon to the Crown of France. 44.

1271. 10 Philip III. Sonne of Lewis. 15.

1286. 11 Philip IV. ſurnamed the Fair, King alſo of Navarre in the right of the Lady Ioan his Wife. 28.

1314. 12 Lewis X. ſurnamed Hutin, King of Navarre in right of his Mother, whom he ſucceeded in that Kingdom, Anno 1305. After whoſe death the Kingdom of France was to have deſcended on Ioan his Daughter. 2.

1315. 13 Philip V. called the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, partly by threats, promiſes, and other practices, cauſed a Law to paſs (to which he gave the name of the Sal que Law) for diſabling Women from the ſucceſſion to the Crown; and thereby quite excluded his Brothers Daughter, ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf by his Brother Charles, who following his example, excluded, on the ſame pretence, his Neeces Joan and Margares, the Daughters of Philip. 5.

1320. 14 Charles IV. but in true accompt the fifth of that name, moſt commonly called Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip and Lewis the two laſt Kings. After whoſe death began the Wars of the Engliſh for the Crown of France, challenged by King Edward the 3d. as Sonne and Heir of Iſabel, the Daughter of King Philip the Fair, and Siſter to the 3 laſt Kings. 7.

1328. 15 Philip VI. ſurnamed de Valois, Son of Charles Earl of Valois, the ſecond Sonne of King Philip the third, and Vncle to the three laſt Kings, ſucceeded under colour of the Salique Law: of which Charles it is ſaid that he was Sonne to a King, Brother to a King, Vncle to a King, and Father to a King; yet himſelf was no King. In this Kings dayes was fought the famous Battle of Crecie, Anno 1343. in which the French Army conſiſted of about 70000 Souldiers; the Engliſh of 11800 only; yet the victory fell unto the Engliſh: by whoſe valour fell that day Iohn King of Bohemia, 11 Princes, 80 Barons, 120 Knights, and 30000 of the common Souldiers. He added unto his Eſtates, the County Palatine of Champagne, the Country of Daulphine, and the Citie and Earldom of Montpelier. 22.

1350 16 Iohn, the Sonne of Philip de Valois, in whoſe reign was fought the battel of Poictiers, wherein Edward the black prince, (ſo called for his black acts upon the French) with an handfull of wearied Souldiers (but 8000 in all) overcame the French army conſiſting of 40000 men: of which they ſlew beſides the Nobles, 10000 of the common Souldiers, and took priſoners King John himſelf and Philip his Sonne, 70 Earls, 50 Barons, and 12000 Gentlemen, 14.

1364. 17 Charles V. the Sonne of Iohn, recovered all thoſe peeces (except only Calice) which the Engliſh had before gotten from his Father and Grandfather. He is called commonly Charles the Wiſe, but Lewis the 11th. would by no means allow him that attribute: affirming that it was but a fooliſh part to give his younger Brother Philip the Dukedom of Burgundy, and withall the Heir of Flanders to wife. And ſo it proved in the Event.

18 Charles VI. a weak and diſtracted Prince, in whoſe reign Henry the fifth of England, called in by the faction of Burgundy againſt that of Orleans, maried the Lady Catharine Daughter of this King, and was thereupon made Regent of France during the Kings life, and Heir apparent of the Kingdom. But he had firſt won the great battel of Agincourt, in which the Engliſh having an Army but of 15000 vanquiſhed an Army of the French conſiſting of 52000 men, of which were ſlain 5 Dukes, 8 Earls, 25 Lords, 8000 Knights and Gentlemen of note, and 25000 of the Commons, the Engliſh loſing but one Duke, one Earl, and 600 Souldiers. This unfortunate Prince loſt what his predeceſſor Philip the 2d. had taken from King Iohn of England, and had not been reſtored by King Lewis the ninth.

1413. 19 Charles VII. Sonne of Charles the ſixt, after a long and bloodie War, recovered from the Engliſh (then divided by domeſtick diſſentions) all their Lands and Signiories in France, except Calice only.

1461. 20 Lewis XI. Sonne of Charls the ſeventh, added unto his Crown the Dukedom of Burgundie, the Earldom of Provence, (and therewithall a Title unto Naples and Sicil) and a great part of Picardy. A Prince of ſo great wants, or ſuch ſordid parſimony, that there is found a Reckoning in the Chamber of Accompts in Paris of two ſhillings for new ſleeves to his old doublet, and three half pence for liquor to greaſe his Boots

21 Charles VIII. Sonne of Lewis the 11th. who quickly won, and as ſoon loſt the Kingdom of Naples; which he laid claim to in the right of the houſe of Anjou. By the mariage of Anne the Heir of Bretagne, he added that Dukedom to his Crown.

1515. 23 Francis, Duke of Angolesme, Grand-sonne of John of Angolesme, one of the younger Sonnes of the said Lewis Duke of Orleans, succeeded on the death of Lewis the 12th, without issue male. Took Prisoner at the battel of Pavie, by Charles the fifth, with whom he held perpetual wars; he being as unwilling to indure a superiour, as the Emperour was to admit an equall. 32.

1547. 24 Henry II. Sonne of Francis, recovered Calice from the English, and drove Charles out of Germanie, and took from him Mets, Toul, and Verdun, three Imperial Cities, ever since Members of this Kingdom. 12.

1559. 25 Francis II. Sonne of Henry the 2d, King of the Scots also, in the right of Mary his Wife.

1560. 26 Charles IX. Brother of Francis the 2d, the Author of the Massacre at Paris, 14.

1574. 27 Henry III. elected King of Poland in the life of his Brother, whom he succeeded at his death. The last King of the House of Valois, stripped of his Life and Kingdom by the Guisian Faction, called the Holy League. 15.

1589. 28 Henry IV. King of Navarre, and Duke of Vendosme, succeeded as the next Heir-male to Henry the 3d, in the right of the House of Bourbon, descended from Robert Earl of Clermont, a youuger Sonne of Lewis the 9th. He ruined the Holy League, cleered France of the Spaniards, into which they had been called by that potent and rebellious Faction; and laid La Bresse unto the Crown, together with the Estates of Bearn, and Base Navarre; and after a ten years time of peace, was villainously murdered by Ravillac, in the streets of Paris. 21.

1610. 29 Lewis XIII. Sonne of Henry the 4th, the most absolute King of France since the death of Charles the Great. For to the reduction of the scattered and dismembred Provinces (the work of his many Predecessors) he added the reduction of all the Forts and Garrisons held by the Hugonots in that Kingdom; seized on the Dukedom of Bar, and surprized that of Lorreine, both which he held untill his death. 32.

1642. 30 Lewis XIV. Sonne of Lewis the 13th, and of the Lady Anne, eldest Daughter of Philip the third of Spaine, succeeded at the age of four years under the Government of his Mother, the 30th King of the Line of Capet, the 43 from Charles the Great, and the 64 King of France (or rather of the French) now living.

As for the Government of these Kings, it is meerly Regal, or, to give it the true name, Despoticall; such as that of a Master over his Servants: the Kings will going for a Law, and his Edicts as valid as a Sentence of the Court of Parliament. Quod Principi placuerit Legis habet vigorem, was a Prerogative belonging to the Roman Emperours, as Justinian tells us in his Institutes: and the French Kings, descending from Charles the Great, claim it as their own. The Kings Edicts alwayes ending with these binding words, Car tel est nostre Plaisir, for such is our pleasure. And though he sometimes send his Edicts to be verified or approved in the Parliament of Paris; and his Grants and Patents to be ratified in the Chamber of Accompts there holden: yet this is nothing but a meer formalitie, and point of circumstance, those Courts not daring to refuse what the King proposeth. It is Car tel est nostre plaisir which there goeth for Law. And by this intimation of his Royall pleasure, doth he require such Taxes, as the necessity of his Affairs, the greedines of his Officers, or the importunity of Suters doe suggest unto him: The Patrimonie of the Crown being so exhausted by the riot and improvidence of former Princes, that the King hath no other way to maintain his State, defray his Garrisons, reward such as deserve well of him, and support those that depend upon him; but only by laying what he pleaseth on the backs of his Subjects, against which there is no dispute by the common People: though many times the Great Princes have demurred upon it. And therefore to make them also instrumentall to the publick slavery, the Kings are willing to admit them to some part of the spoyl, to give them some exemptions from those common burdens; and to connive at their oppressing of their Tenants, against all good conscience, that being so privileged themselves, they may not interrupt the King in his Regal Courses.

The power of the French King over his Subjects being so transcendent, it cannot be, but that his Forces must be very great; and would be greater than they are, but that they dare not trust the common People with the use of Arms, for fear they should refuse to pay the accustomed Taxes, or forsake their Trades or turn their Farms back upon their Landlords. But for an Essay of what a French King is able to doe in this kind, It is said, that Charles the 9th, in Garrisons and severall Armies in the field, had 15000 Horse, and 100000 Foot of his own Nation, besides 50000 Horse and Foot of Swiſſes, Germans, and others. And for his ſtanding Forces, it is ſaid by others, that he is able to bring into the field for a ſudden ſervice no leſs than 60 Companies of Men of Arms, 20 Cornets of Light-Horſe, and five Companies of Harquibuſiers on horſe-back, which amount to 10000 in the totall: together with 20 Enſignes of French Foot, and 40 of Swiſſes, and yet leave his Garriſons well manned, and his Forts and Frontires well and ſufficiently defended.

What the Revenues are in a State ſo ſubject to the will and pleaſure of the King, it is hard to ſay; being alſo more or leſſe, as the times and their occaſions vary; according unto which the Revenues of this Crown have much altered. Lewis the 11th, gathered one Million and a half of Crowns; Francis the firſt, brought them to 3 Millions; his ſucceſſor Henry the 2d, to ſix; Charles the 9th, to ſeven; Henry the 3d, to ten; afterward they were inhanced to fifteen. And in the time of Henry the 4th, the Treaſurer of the Duke of Mayenne did not ſhame to ſay, That his Maſter had more improved the Revenue of France, than any King had done before him, advancing it from two, to five Millions Sterling. A fair Intrado, but far ſhort of thoſe infinite ſums which are extorted from the People, whereof a tenth part comes not cleerly to the Kings Exchequer. But what need more be ſaid than that of Lewis the 11th, who uſed to ſay, that France was a Medow which he mowed every year, and as often as he liſted: and indeed their Impoſitions cannot but be great, ſince there are no leſs than 30000 under-officers imployed to gather them. Hence I beleeve ſprung that wiſh of Maximilian the Emperour, which was, that he (if it were poſſible) might be a God; and that having two Sons, the eldeſt might be a God after him; and the ſecond King of France. And this was alſo the cauſe, that in the Wars between Charles the fift, and Francis the firſt, when the Emperours Herald had bid defiance to the King, from Charles Emperour of Germany, King of Caſtile, Leon, Aragon, and Naples, Arch-duke of Auſtria, &c. with the reſt of his titles: The King commanded the Heralds to return the challenge from Francis King of France, commanding them to repeat France as many times, as the other had petty Earldoms in his ſtile. And to ſay truth, conſidering the compactedneſs thereof within it ſelf, the admirable fertility of the ſoyl, the incredible multitudes of People, and the conveniency of ſituation betwixt Spain, Italy, and Germany, the name of France might ballance all the others titles.

The chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, were firſt of the Gennet, founded by Charles Martel, Mayr of the French Palace; and ſo called, either from Jane his Wife, as Haillan would have it; or from the Gennets of Spaine, over whom he triumphed at the battell of Tours, as Bellay writeth. It ended in the dayes of S. Lewis. The Knights of the order wore a Ring, wherein was engraven the form of a Gennet.

2 Of the Pairrie, or twelve Peers, ſo called, quaſi pares inter ſe, ſaid to be inſtituted by Charles the Great in his Wars againſt the Saracens. Six of theſe were of the Clergy. 1 The Archbiſhop and Duke of Rhemes, 2 the Biſhop and Duke of Laon, 3 the Biſhop and Duke of Langres, 4 the Biſhop and Earl of Beavois, 5 the Biſhop and Earl of Nayon, and 6 the Biſhop and Earl of Chaulons; and ſix others of the temporalitie. 1 The Duke of Burgundy, 2 Duke of Normandy, 3 Duke of Guienne, 4 Earl of Tholouſe, 5 Earl of Champagne, 6 Earl of Flanders. Theſe are they ſo much memoriz'd in the Legends of the old French Writers, but falſly, and on no good ground; it being impoſſible that thoſe ſhould be of the foundation of Charles the Great, in whoſe time there were none of thoſe Dukes and Earls, except the Earl of Tholouſe onely. Therefore with better reaſon it may be thus concluded on, that the twelve Peers were inſtituted by Charles the Great, though that honour not by him appropriated unto any particular Eſtates and Titles; but left at large to be diſpoſed of according to the perſonal merit of the beſt deſervers: it being moſt ſure, that neither Rowland, nor Oliver, nor Duke Naimes, nor Ogier the Dane, had any of the titles abovementioned. But for the fixing of this dignitie in the Dukedoms and Earldoms before named, it is ſaid by ſome to have been done by Hugh Capet, others referre it to Lewis the 7th, in whoſe times all thoſe Dukes and Earls were in Rerum natura. But by whomſoever firſt ordained, the Temporall Pairries are extinct; and others, of no definite number, created by the Kings, as they ſee occaſion to gratifie a well deſerver. Onely at Coronations, and ſuch publick Triumphs, the cuſtom is, to chooſe ſome principall perſons out of the Nobility to repreſent thoſe Temporall Peers; as at the Coronation of Lewis the 13th, the places of the Temporall Peers were ſupplied by the Princes of Conde and Conty, the Earl of Soiſſons, the Dukes of Nevers, Elbeuf, and Eſpernon: the Eccleſiaſticall Peers remaining as at firſt they were. So that though Charles the Great might deviſe this Order, and inſtitute the firſt twelve Peers, as is commonly ſaid: yet was not that high honour fixed in any of thoſe Temporall Princes, till the times ſucceeding; but given to men of ſeverall houſes, according to the Kings pleaſure, and their well deſervings.

3 Of the Star, begun by John King of France, Anno 1352. They wore about their necks a collar of gold, at the which hanged a Star: the word Monſtrant Regibus aſtra viam. This Order was disgraced by his Sonne Charles, in communicating it to his Guard; and ſo it ended.

4 Of S. Michael, inſtituted by King Lewis the eleventh, Anno 1469: It conſiſted firſt of 36 Knights, which afterward were augmented to 300. The Habit of the Order was a long Cloak of white Damask down to the ground, with a border interwoven with Cockle-ſhells of gold, interlaced and furred with Ermines, with an hood of crimſon Velvet, and a long tippet. About their necks they wore a collar woven with Cockle-ſhels: the word, Immenſi tremor Oceani. It took the name from the picture of Saint Michael conquering the Devill, which was annex'd to the collar.

Some

Some think, that the invocation of S. Michael, was in alluſion unto the tenth of Daniel. Others ſay, he took S. Michael, in regard of an apparition of that Saint, to his Father Charles the ſeventh, on Orleans Bridge, in his wars againſt the Engliſh. The Seat thereof was firſt at S. Michaels Mount in Normandy, a place which had held longeſt for the French Kings againſt the Engliſh; but it was afterwards removed to Bois de Vincennes, not far from Paris. S. Michaels day, the time of the Solemnity; and Mount S. Michael the name of the Herald which did attend upon the Order, which in moſt things was preſidented by that of the Garter.

5 Of the Holy-Ghoſt, ordained by Henry the 3d, Anno 1579. to rectifie the abuſes which had crept into that of S. Michael, having been of late times given to unworthy perſons: to reduce which to its firſt eſteem, he ordered, that the Collar of S. Michael ſhould be given to none who had not firſt been dignified with this of the Holy-Ghoſt; into which none to be admitted, but ſuch as can prove their Nobility by three deſcents. Their Oath is to maintain the Romiſh-Catholick Religion, and perſecute all Opponents to it. Their Robe a black Velvet Mantle, powdred with Lillies and Flames of Gold: the Collar of Flower de Lyces and Flames of Gold, with a Croſs and a Dove appendant to it. And hereunto he gave the name of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe this Henry was on a Whitſunday choſen King of Poland.

I omit the other petit orders, as thoſe of the Cock and Dog, by them of Montmorencie; of the Porcupine, by them of Orleans; and of the Thiſtle, by them of Burbon.

The Arms of the French Kings in the dayes of Pharamond and his three firſt Succeſſors, were Gules, three Crowns, Or. Clovis the Great altered them to Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or: and Charles the ſixt to Azure, 3 Flower de Lyces, Or. In which laſt changes they were followed by the Kings of England, varying the Coat of France, which they enquartered with their own, as the French Kings did: and by the Princes of the blood, who bear the Arms of France, with ſome difference onely for the diſtinction of their Houſes.

There are in France,

THE PYRENEAN HILLS.

BEtwixt France and Spain are the Mountains called Pyrenæi, the reaſon of which name is very differently reported. Some fetch the Original thereof from Pyrene, a Nymph, the Daughter of one Bebrix, ſaid by old Fablers to have been here raviſhed by Hercules: others conceive they were ſo called, becauſe much ſtricken with Lightnings, thoſe Celeſtial Flames. But being the name doth moſt undoubtedly proceed from a Greek word which ſignifieth Fire; the more probable opinion is, that they took this name from being fired once by Shepherds, (theſe Hills being then extremely overgrown with woods:) the Flame whereof raged ſo extremely, that the Mines of Gold & Silver being melted by the heat thereof, ran ſtreaming down the Mountains many dayes together: the fame of which invited many Forrein Nations to invade the Countrie. Which Accident they place 880 yeers before the Birth of our Saviour. Hereunto Diodorus Siculus, an old Greek Writer, addes no ſmall authoritie, who ſpeaking of this conflagration (as Ariſtotle, and Strabo alſo do,) addeth withall, τὰ μὲν ὄρη διὰ τὸ συμβεβηκὸς κληθῆναι Πυρηναῖα ἀπὸ τῆς πυρὸς συχνὰ ἡμέρας συνεχῶς ἐμφερόντος, that is to ſay, theſe Mountains had the name of Pyrenees, from the fire, which many dayes together ſo extremely raged. And this tradition backed by ſo good autoritie, I ſhould rather credit, than fetch the derivation (as Bochartus doth) from Purani, a Phœnician word, ſignifying dark or ſhadie; though true it is, that theſe Mountains antiently were very much overgrown with woods, as before was noted.

But whatſoever was the reaſon why they had this name, certain it is, that they have been of long time the naturall bound betwixt the great and puiſſant Monarch of France and Spaine, terminating (as it were) their deſires and purpoſes againſt each other, as well as their Dominions: if any thing could put a bound to the deſignes of ambitious Princes. Yet not more ſeparated by theſe Mountains, than by thoſe jealouſies and fears, which they have long ſince harboured of one another, each of them manifeſtly affecting the ſupreme command. So that we may affirm of them, as the Hiſtorian doth of others, on the like occaſion, Aut montibus aut mutuo metu ſeparantur. Theſe mountains alſo make that Iſthmus, or neck of Land, which conjoyn Spain to the reſt of Europe: the Cantabrian Ocean fiercely beating on the North-Weſt, the Mediterranean Sea more gently waſhing the South-Eaſt thereof. Their beginning at the Promontorie now called Oiarco, (the Oceſo of Ptolomie) not far from the Citie of Baionne in France, bordering on the Sea Cantabrick: From thence continued South-Eaſt-wards betwixt both Kingdoms, to Cabo de Creux, (by the antients called Templum Veneris) on the Mediterranean, not far from the Citie of Rhoda, now Roſas, one of the Port Towns of Catalonia.

The whole length, not reckoning in the windings and turnings, affirmed to be 80 Spaniſh leagues, at three miles to a league. The higheſt part thereof, by the Spaniards called Canigo, and by the Latines named Canus: from which (as it is ſaid by ſome) there is a Proſpect in a cleer day into both the Seas. But whether this be true or not, (for I dare not build any belief upon it) it is no doubt, the higheſt part of all theſe Mountains, and took this name from the whiteneſs or hoarineſs thereof, as having on its top or ſummit a Cap of ſnow for moſt part of the year, In which reſpect, as the Alpes took their name ab albo, that in the Sabine Dialect, being termed Alpum, which by the Latines was called Album, as before we noted: ſo did Mount Lebanon in Syria take its name from Leban, which in the Phœnician Language ſignifieth white, and Lebanah whiteneſs. Such people as inhabit in this mountainous tract, have been and ſhall be mentioned in their proper places. I only adde, and ſo go forwards towards Spain, that the barbarous people of theſe Mountains compelled Sertorius in his haſty paſſage into Spain, when he fled from the power of Sylla's Faction, to pay them tribute for his paſs: at which when ſome of his Souldiers murmured, as thinking it diſhonourable to a Proconſul of Rome to pay tribute to the barbarous nations; the prudent Generall replyed, that he bought only time; a Commoditie, which they that deal in haughty Enterpriſes muſt needs take up at any rate.

OF SPAIN.

HAving thus crossed the Pyrenees we are come to Spain, the most Western part of all the Continent of Europe, environed on all sides with the Sea, except towards France, from which separated by the said Mountains: but more particularly bounded upon the North with the Cantabrian; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the South, with the Streits of Gibraltar; on the East, with the Mediterranean; and on the North-East with those Pyrenees. The Figure of it compared by Strabo to an Oxes Hide spread upon the ground; the neck thereof being that Isthmus which unites it to France.

This Countrie hath in divers Ages been as diversly named. 1. Hesperia, either from Hesperus a supposed King hereof; or from Hesperus the Evening Star, under which it was supposed to be situate, as being the furtheſt Countrie West-ward; to difference it from Italy, which many of the Greek Authors termed Hesperia also, named Hesperia Minor. 2. It was called Iberia, either from the famous River Iberus; or from the Iberi, inhabiting that Countrie of Asia which we now call Georgia; as Celtiberia from the mixture of those Asian Iberi, and the Celts of Gaul; by which name it occurreth often in Appian of Alexandria, and sometimes in Strabo. 3 Hispania, as the soundest judgements agree, from Panus the Iberian Captain. For the Grecians call it Σπανία Spania, as may be proved in many places, that especially of the 15 to the Romans verse 28. ἀπαντῶμαι δὲ ὑμῖν εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν, I willcome by you into Spain. No doubt but from the Grecians the old Romans borrowed the name of Spania, which they often used: to which the Spaniards according to their custom adding E, (as in Escola, Escuda, &c.) made it Espania, and now Hispania. In like manner as the famous Citie of Sevill, called at first Spalis, according whereunto the Bishop hereof in the Councill of Eliberis subscribed himself (by the name of Sabinus Spalensis) in tract of time was called Hispalis. And yet I must not pretermit the fancie of Bochartus, who fetching the names of most places from the Punick Language, will have it to be called Spanija, or Sphanija, by the Carthaginians or Phœnicians, at their first discovery, from Saphan, which in the Punick tongue signifies a Conie, with which that Country much abounded in the former times; the Romans being hence furnished with them. Let the Reader like it as he list.

The greatest length hereof is reckoned at 800 miles, the breadth where it is broadest, at 560; the whole circumference 2480 Italian miles: But Mariana measuring the compass of it by the bendings of the Pyrenees, and the creeks and windings of the Sea, makes the full circuit of it to be 2816 miles of Italian measure. And though according to the smallest computation, it be above 400 miles in compass more than France, yet is it farr short thereof in numbers of people; France being thought to contain in it 15 millions of living souls; whereas Spain is reckoned to contain but 8 millions only, which is little more than half the number of the French. The reasons of which disproportion are, 1 The continuall wars which they had for 900 years together against the Moores, in their own Countrie, by which they were consumed in the very growth. 2. The Expulsion of so many thousand Families of Jewes and Moores, 124000 Families of the one in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick; and 110000. of the other by King Philip the 3d; which was as the lopping off of a main limb from the body Politick, though without any loss to the Ecclesiasticall. 3. The unnecessary wars maintained against all the rest of Christendom, ever since the time of Charles the fifth, out of meer ambition; before they were well cured of their former wounds. 4. The infinite Plantations made by them in the East and Western Indies, and all along the Sea-Coasts of Africa, and those great Garrisons maintain'd in Milan, Naples, Sicil, the Low-countries, and their Towns in Africk, consisting for the most part of natural Spaniards, 5. The barrenness of the Countrie in many places, unable to sustain great multitudes, but made more barren than it would be, for want of men to labour and manure the Land: And 6. and last of all, the Impotencie of both Sexes for Generation; the men being generally more hot upon their lusts, than able for Generation; and the women for the most part beginning to be Mothers so extremely young, that nature is decay'd, and spent in them, before they have run half their course. And tis a most true and undoubted Maxime, that the greatness of Cities, and populousness of Kingdoms and Common wealths doe much depend on the generative vertue of the men, and the nutritive vertue of the soyl in which they live.

It is situate in the more Southernly part of the Northern temperate Zone, and almost in the middest of the fourth and sixth Climates, the longest day being fifteen hours and a quarter in length, in the most Northern parts hereof; but in the extreme South neer to Gibraltar, not above fourteen. Which situation of this Countrie rendreth the Air here very cleer and calm, seldom obscured with mists and vapours, and not so much subiect to diseases as more Northern Regions.

They are a mixt People, descending from the Gothes, Moores, Jewes, and the antient Spaniards. From the Iewes they borrow superstition, from the Moores, Melancholy, Pride from the Gothes, and from the old Spaniards the desire of Liberty. The Jewes first planted here by the Emperour Adrian, who having totally banished them their Native Countrie, sent them hither to dwell: the total number of which Plantation is said to amount to 500000. men, women, and children: and yet their numbers much increased in the time of Vlidor Vlet the Great Caliph of the Sarazens, who having made a Conqueſt of Spain, ſent hither 50000 Families of Moores and Iewes, the better to aſſure it to him. And ſo we have the coming in of the Moores and Iewes; the Conqueſt of it by the Gothes, and their ſetling here, ſhall be ſhewn hereafter: which ſeverall Nations by long time, and intermariages together, were at laſt incorporated into one. For their conditions it is ſaid that they are highly conceited of themſelves, great Braggards, and extremely proud, even in the loweſt ebb of Fortune. Which laſt appeareth by the tale of the poor Cobler on his death-bed, who (as Barklay in his Icon Animorum reporteth the ſtorie) commanded his eldeſt Sonne, coming to him for his laſt bleſſing, to endeavour to retain the majeſty worthy ſo great a Family; Memineris (ſaid he) in majeſtatem aſſurgere familiæ tuæ dignam. The ſame Author relateth another ſtory to the like purpoſe. A woman of this Country, attended on by three of her brats, went a begging from dore to dore. Some French Merchants travelling that way, and pittying her caſe, offered her to take into their ſervice the bigger of her boyes. But ſhe, proud though poor, ſcorning, as ſhe ſaid, that any of her linage ſhould endure a Prentiſhip, returned them this anſwer: Quî aut tu, aut ego, ſciamus, in quæ fata ſit genitus? For ought that ſhe or any knew, her Sonne (ſimple as he ſtood there) might live to be King of Spain. Not much unlike to theſe is that tale of a Spaniſh Cavaleiro, who being for ſome faults by him committed, whipped thorough the principal ſtreets of Paris, and keeping a ſober pace, was adviſed by a friend to make more haſte, that he might the ſooner be out of his pain: but he half in choler replyed, That he would not loſe the leaſt ſtep of his pace for all the whipping in Paris. For indeed their gate is Gennet-Wiſe, very ſtately and majeſtical.

Of temperature they are hot and dry, which makes them very much given to women, and yet not very able for Generation. And this ſtrong inclination unto women which they find in themſelves, makes them ſo jealous of their Wives, that they permit them not to walk abroad, but when they go to Church; and then too veiled and ſo hooded, one can hardly ſee them; and not that neither, but attended with their Damoſels, and ſome truſty ſhe-friend, that is to give an Accompt of them at their coming back. Mendoza, an Ambaſſadour from Spain, in Queen Elizabeths time, uſed to find fault with the promiſcuous ſitting of men and women in the Church, uſed here in England, accounting it to be a great incentive unto laſciviouſneſs: To whom Doctor Dale one of the Maſters of the Requeſts is ſaid to have replied, that indeed in Spain, where the people even in the time of Divine Service could not abſtain from impure thoughts, and unclean geſtures, that mingled kind of ſitting was not ſo allowable; but the Engliſh were of another temper, and did not find any inconvenience in it. And it is poſſible, this humour of jealouſie might be derived on them from the Moores, who in the ſtrict guarding of their women, were the Spaniards Tutors; it being death in Barbarie to this very day for any man to ſee one of the Xeriffes Concubines; and for them too, if when they ſee a man, though but thorow a caſement, they doe not preſently cry out. A frenzie which much rageth in moſt Southern people; but not predominant in the Northern; who doe not only ſuffer their Wives to ſit with other men in the Church, but even in the open and common Bathes alſo: two things which a true Spaniard would rather die an hundred deaths, than give conſent to. But though the women are not permitted to ſtirre abroad, the men take liberty enough; and are as good ſmel-feaſts as in any Country: it being obſerved of them by a very good Writer, that howſoever in their own houſes they are temperate and content with little, yet when they go unto a Feaſt, they are as gluttonous, daintie, and deſirous to make good cheer, as any people whatſoever.

But not to conceal their vertues, and make our ſelves merry at their follies, (wherein all other Nations have a ſhare with them) they are queſtionleſs a people very grave in their cariages, in offices of Pietie very devout, and to their King very obedient, whoſe greatneſs they affect more cordially than any ſubjects in the world; exact in doing juſtice upon all Offenders, which commonly they adminiſter without partiality; indulgent unto one another, and of their duties to their betters not unmindfull. But that which deſerveth the greateſt commendation in them, is an unwearied patience in ſuffering adverſities, accompanied with a reſolution to over-come them. A noble quality, of the which in their Indian Diſcoveries they ſhewed excellent proofes, and received as glorious rewards. In reference to the French, it is ſaid that the French are wiſer than they ſeem, and the Spaniards ſeem wiſer than they are: wherein they agree with many particular men of other Nations, who according to that of the Philoſopher, Sapientes potius cupiunt videri & non eſſe, quam eſſe & non videri. In matters of war the Spaniards are obſerved to be generally too heavie, ſlow, and dull; the French too headie and precipitate; the one loſing as many fair occaſions by delayes, as the other overthroweth by too much haſte: but between them both they make one good ſouldier; who according to the preſent opportunities, is to make uſe of the ſpurre of courage, or the bit of reſpect.

The Women are ſober, loving their husbands or friends; wonderfull delicate, curious in painting or perfuming: and though they have Wine in abundance, yet are they not permitted to drink it; verifying therein the old Engliſh Proverb, that none are worſe ſhod than the ſhoomakers wife. Herein in worſe condition than the Women of France, who though they are reſtrained from Wine before their mariage; yet after that they take what liberty they liſt, and are no more reſtrained from it than the other ſex. But this is the leaſt liberty which the French Women have above the Spaniſh: theſe being ſo watched and overlooked, that it is hardly poſſible for them to hold ſpeech with any man, in buſineſs of moſt importance, and much leſs in matters of civilities only;

ly; thoſe having liberty to be courted at all times and places, even in the preſence of their husbands, without any diſtruſt or interruption. Heretofore they were wonderous ſtrong, and beyond belief patient of the throwes of Childbed; Strabo relating how one of theſe women being hired for harveſt work, and finding her travel come upon her, becauſe ſhe would not loſe her dayes wages, withdrew herſelf into a buſh: where being eaſed of her burden, ſhe returned from one labour to another. And many of them at this day uſe not to keep their Chambers above three dayes after their delivery, and then apply themſelves to their houſehold buſineſs without either danger or delay.

The language is not the ſame in all places, though all called the Spaniſh. In Portugall, Catalogne, and ſome parts of Valentia, it hath a great mixture of the French, who in theſe parts have had much trade and negotiation. In Granada, and ſome parts of Andaluzia, it partakes much of the Moore, and in the mountains of Alpuxarras, the Arabick or Mooriſh language ſtill remains in uſe. The Countries bordering on the Pyrenees and Cantabrian Ocean (but Biſcay ſpecially) have much in them of the Language of the ancient Spaniards, before made ſubject to the Romans. That which is common to them all is the vulgar Spaniſh or Caſtilian, and hath much affinity with the Latin; Breerwood in his Enquiries reporting that he hath ſeen a letter, every word whereof was both good Latin and good Spaniſh. Merula Shewes a Copy of the like, pag. 300. By reaſon of which conſonancy with the Latin, the Spaniards call their language Romance. The other ingredients of this Tongue are generally the Gotiſh, Arabick, and old Spaniſh, and in ſome places the French alſo, as before is ſaid; thoſe people having made great conqueſts, and having had great negotiations in this Country. It is ſaid to be a very lofty ſwelling ſpeech, as if it were faſhioned to command.

The Soil hereof, where it is fertile and productive of the fruits of Nature, yields not to any part of Europe, for delight, pleaſures, and commodities, which here appear in greater ripeneſs and perfection than in other places. But for the moſt part it is either overgrown with Woods, cumbred with wild and rockie Mountains, or of ſo hot a nature, and ſo ſandy withall, that it is not very fit for tillage; and ſo deficient in Water, as not good for Paſturage. So that we may affirm thereof, as of the Figs in the Prophet Jeremie, where it is good, no Countrie better; where bad and barren, few ſo inconvenient, and not any worſe. But this defect of outward beautie and Commodities is recompenſed by thoſe within, affording great plenty of Mines, both of Steel and Iron, and ſome Mines of Silver: of which laſt ſo abundant in preceding times, that it was never free from the Rovers of all Nations; and it is ſaid of Annibal, that out of one Mine onely in the Conntrie of the Turdetani (now part of Andaluzia) he received 3000 pound weight daily, for long time together. The principall Commodities which they vend in other Countries, are Wines, Oyl, Sugars, Metals, Rice, Silk, Liquoras, a fine ſort of Wooll, Cork, Roſin, Limmons, Raiſins, Orenges, and fruits of the like nature. In Corn, which is the ſtaff of life, they are ſo defective, that they receive the greateſt part of what they ſpend, from Italy, Sicily, and France. Their Cattle neither fair nor many, the Countrie not being able to breed them: ſo that their Diet is on Salads, and fruits of the Earth; every Gentleman being limited what Fleſh he ſhall buy for himſelf and his Familie: which if he ſend for to the Butcher, or the Poulterer, by the ſmalleſt child, able to doe the Errand for him, he is ſure not to be defrauded in price or quality. And yet they talk as highly of their gallant fare, as if they ſurfeited with the plenty of all proviſions: handſomly checked in that fond humour, by that worthy Soldier Sir Roger Williams. Of whom it is ſaid, that hearing once a Spaniard thus fooliſhly bragging of his Country ſalads, he gave him this anſwer, You have indeed good ſawce in Spain, but we have dainty Beefs, Veals, and Muttons to eat with that ſawce; and as God made beaſts to live upon the graſs of the earth, ſo he made men to live upon them. And it is obſerv'd, that if a Spaniard have a Capon, or the like good diſh to his ſupper, you ſhall find all the feathers ſcattered before his door by the next morning.

And as it is in private houſes, ſo for travelling alſo, the Innes and Vents of this Countrey are very ill provided; inſomuch, that moſt men that would not go ſupperleſs to ſleep, carry their proviſion at their ſaddle bowes, and men of worth their bedding alſo. So poor and mean is the entertainment in theſe places.

Here lived in antient times the Gyants Geryon and Cacus, which were quell'd by Hercules: and in the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire. Seneca the Tragedian, and the Philoſopher of the ſame name; a man of that happy memory, that he could repeat 2000 names in the ſame order that they were rehearſed; as alſo Quintilian the Oratour, Lucan, and Martial, excellent in their kindes, and Pomponius Mela the Geographer. In the middle times, Fulgentius, and Iſidore Biſhop of Seville: and in our Fathers dayes, Arias Montanus, famous for his Edition of the holy Bible; Maſius a learned Commentator; Oſorius, well ſeen in the Latine elegancies; and before all, as well in induſtrie as time, Toſtatus Biſhop of Avila, a man ſo copious and induſtrious in his writings, that it is thought he writ more ſheets than he lived dayes. But of late times we find but few of their Works which have paſſed the Mountains, the Latine which they write being very coarſe, and ſavouring too much of the School-man (wherein their excellency conſiſts) and therefore they ſet out their Works moſt commonly in their own tongue onely. The Chief for Soldiery amongſt them, were formerly Viriathus, who held out ſo long againſt the Romans; Trajan, and Theodoſius, both Roman Emperours; Theodorick the ſecond, King of the Gothes, the victorious Conquerour of the Suevians; Bernardo del Carpio, and Cid Ruis Diaz, famous for their atchievements againſt the Moors; and in late times, Gonſalvo the Great Captain; who ſubdued Naples; Ferdinand Duke of Alva, who conquered Portugall, &c.

The Chriſtian Faith, if we may beleeve the old Spaniſh Tradition, was firſt here planted by S. James the Apoſtle, within four yeers after the death of our Redeemer. To which tradition, though they held very conſtant a long time together, yet of late dayes, Baronius, and other learned men of the Church of Rome, doe moſt deſervedly reject it. That St. Paul had a purpoſe of coming hither, is evident in his 15th Chapter to the Romans: and that he did come hither accordingly, is poſitively affirmed by S. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and divers others of the Fathers; which was in Anno 61, as Baronius thinketh. Nor did St. Peter want his part in this great ſervice, but joyned with St. Paul, though not in the journey, yet in the ſending of Biſhops and other Preſbyters, to ſecond the beginnings made by that Apoſtle. For it is ſaid expreſly in the Martyrologies, that Cteſiphon, Torquatus, Secundus, Cecilius, Judaletius, Heſychius, and Euphraſius, being at Rome ordained Biſhops by the two Apoſtles, ad prædicandum verbum Dei in Hiſpanias directi, were diſpatched into Spain to preach the Goſpell. Biſhops, moſt likely, of thoſe Cities where they ſuffered death, the names of which occurre in the Martyrologie. Vnder the Empire of the Gothes, the faith of CHRIST, which at their coming hither they found right and Orthodox, was defiled with Arianiſm: not ejurated till the year 588. when that whole Nation did ſubmit to more Catholique tendries. Since that, they have been punctuall followers of the Church of Rome, and that too in the very errours and corruptions of it; taking up their Religion on the Popes autority: and therein ſo tenacious or pertinacious, that the King doth ſuffer none to live in his Dominions, which profeſs not the Roman-Catholique Religion; of which they have been, ſince the times of Luther, ſuch avowed Patrons, that one of the late Popes being ſick, and hearing divers men to moan his approching end, uttered ſome words to this effect. My life (ſaid he) can nothing benefit the Church, but pray for the proſperity of the King of Spain, as its chief Supporter. And though he ſpoke theſe words of King Philip the 2d, yet they hold good in his Succeſſors ever ſince, being eſteemed the greateſt Patrons and Protectors of the Catholick Cauſe. Which is indeed the proper intereſs of this King. For ſeeing that they have framed to themſelves an hope of the Weſtern Monarchy: and finding no fitter means of inlarging their own Temporall, than by concurring with the Pope in upholding his Spirituall Empire, they have linked themſelves moſt faſt to that See. To which end they have taken upon them to be the Executioners of the Popes Excommunications; by which Office Ferdinand the Catholique ſurprized Navarre: not without hope of working the like effect, in ſome courſe of time, on the reſt of the interdicted Eſtates of Europe; as may be ſeen, by the eager following of the French War againſt Henry the 4th, till he had reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome; and the like War managed for many years together againſt Queen Elizabeth of England. And the purſute of this Spaniſh Monarchy is ſo hotly followed by the Jeſuits, who in all their perſwaſions ſpeak not more of one God, or of one Pope, than they doe of one King; that they hold it forth for the only means to unite the differences of the Church, and ſubdue that great Enemy of Religion, the Turk. Nor is this onely a Conjecture, or a project of the Jeſuits onely, but a deſign avowed and declared in Print, that all the World may take notice of it: and that too in a Book not only licenced by the Provincial of the Dominicans, and the ſupreme Councell of the Inquiſition; but by Order from the Lords of the Counſell, with the Kings Privilege and Commendation prefixt before it, The Book entituled, La conveniencia de los dos Monarquias Catolicas, &c. The Agreement of the two Catholick Monarchies of Rome and Spaine, ſet out in the year 1612. by one John de Pnente. In the Frontiſpice whereof are ſet two Scutcheons, the one bearing the Croſſe-Keys of Rome, the other the Arms of Caſtile and Leon; in Vinculo pacis for the motto. On the one ſide of this there is a Pourtraiture repreſenting Rome, with the Sun ſhining over it, and darting his Beams upon the Keys, with this Inſcription. Luminare majus ut præſit Orbi et Urbi, the Greater light to govern the Citie and the World. On the other ſide another Image deſigning Spaine, with the Moon ſhining over that, and darting her Raies on the Spaniſh Scutcheon, with this Impreſs, Luminare minus ut ſubdatur Urbi et dominetur Orbi, i. e. The leſſer light made to be ſubject to the Citie (underſtand of Rome,) but to govern all the World beſides. Over all in the top of the Front or Title-page, in Capitall Letters, Fecit Deus duo Luminaria magna, God made two great Lights. The whole Book being an indifferent large Folio, is but a Comment on this Text; which for ſubſtance is conteined wholly in the Frontiſpice, but more at large diſcourſed of in the Volume it ſelf, and plainly ſhewes what is intended, and by whom. And yet perhaps the Pope and the Jeſuits both, may fail in that which is the main of their expectation, and if the project take effect, the Spaniard will then write himſelf Luminare majus, and make the Pope content with Luminare minus, for his part of the ſpoyl, and glad to borrow all his light from the Sun of Spain. For though the Kingdom of Spain, and Popedom of Rome be thus ſtraitly combined, yet herein the Popes have overſhot themſelves; in that leaning ſo much to the Spaniard, and ſo immoderatly increaſing his dominion, they doe in a manner ſtand at his devotion; and may peradventure in the end be forced to caſt themſelves into his arms as their good Lord and Maſter. For certain it is, that the Spaniſh Agents have openly braved the Cardinals, and told them, That they hoped to ſee the day, wherein the King ſhould offer to the Pope half a dozen to be made Cardinals, and he not dare to refuſe any; and that they themſelves ſhould chooſe no Pope, but one of their Maſters naming. So great an inconvenience it is more than poſſible it may be to the Popes, in making this Prince the one and onely ſtring to their bow; and faſtning the dependencies of his Roman Catholiques tholiques, upon him alone, excluding France and all other Kings in Christendom, of the Romish party, from the honour of it. And yet so firm they are to their Spanish principles, that no favours either granted to their persons or Religion are of value with them, or thought worthy of their acceptation, if it come from any other Fountain of Grace than the Court of Spain. Insomuch as I have heard from a great Minister of State, that when some favours were obtained for the English Papists on the treaty of the Match with Spain; they were ready with great greedines to embrace the same. But when the same favours were obtained for them on the Treaty with France, not a man of them would accept them. For which some of their Chiefs being asked the reason, returned this Answer, That by applying themselves to the French, they might lose the Spaniard, and it were great improvidence in them, to change an old and constant Friend who had never failed them for one of whose affections they had no assurance; and such a one, as by tolerating Hereticks in his own Dominions, shewed that he was no fit Patron for the Catholicks to relie upon.

The chief Rivers are, 1 Tagus, celebrated for his golden Sands, of which the Scepter of the old Kings of Portugal is affirmed by some Writers to be made, but I have not faith enough to believe the same. The head of it is in the Mountain Seira Molina, neer to Cuenca; from the which it runneth by the Citie Toledo, and then smoothly gliding by the Wals of Lisbon, doth pay his tribute to the Western Ocean. 2 Ana (now Guadiana) which arising about the same place, runneth afterward under the ground the space of 15 miles: and hence the Spaniards use to brag, that they have a bridge whereon 10000 cattle daily feed. An accident common to many other rivers, as to Mole, a small river in Surrey; Erasinus, in Greece; and Lycus, in Anatolia; of which last thus Ovid:

Sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus hiatu,
Existit procul hinc, alioque renascitur ore.

So Lycus, swallowed by the gaping ground,
At a new mouth, far off, is rising found.

But having gotten up again, loseth it self without recovery in the Western Ocean, on the South of Portugal, which it separateth from Extremadura. 3. Betis, now called Guadalquivir (which in the Arabick Language signifieth a great River) ariseth out of the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and passing by Corduba and Sevil, disburdeneth it self into the Southern Ocean, at the Haven of S. Lucars de Barameda. 4. Iberus, which having its head amongst the Mountains of Biscay, passeth on Eastwards by Saragossa and Tortosa, into the Mediterranean: the whole course thereof being 460 miles, of which it is navigable 200. A River of such note in the time of the Romans, that it divided this whole Countrie into Citeriorem, and Ulteriorem; of which more anon. 5. Duerus, which rising in the same Mountains passeth thorow Portugal, and so unto the Western or Atlantick Ocean. 6. Minius, of which more in Portugal.

Chief Mountains next unto the Pyrenees spoken of before, 1. The Cantabrian Mountains, called by Plinie Juga Asturum, which rising out of a spurr or branch of the Pyrenees, overspread the Provinces of Biscay, Asturia, and Gallicia (coasting along the shores of the Cantabrian Ocean) where at last they end. 2. Idubeda, Iubalda, or Aurantius Saltus, so called by Ptolomie, and others of the ancient Writers; which beginning not far from the head of the River Iberus, followeth the course of that River by the Citie of Burgos, and endeth not far from the influx of it into the Mediterranean. 3. Sierra Morena, by Cæsar called Saltus Castulonensis, and Mons Marianus by Ptolomie, which beginning about the Town of Alcoraz, coasteth along the right-hand shores of the River Betis to the Southern Seas. 4. Sierra Nevada, by Ptolomie called Mons Illipulus, and Orospeda by Strabo, but by the Moores the Mountains of Alpuxaras. A chain of hils which thwart the Kingdom of Granada from East to West; and amongst which the people to this day speak the Arabick tongue.

The Countrie is said to have been first inhabited by Tubal, the Sonne of Japhet. Of whom it is affirmed in the Berosus of Frier Annius, and by such Chronologers as he hath imposed on by the name of that Author, that in the twelf year of Nimrod, which was 140 years after the Flood, he seated himself in the Asturias a part of Spain, and there built the Town of S. Vval. A Device so fooliſh and absurd, that it is not to be honoured with a confutation: For either Tubal, must come hither by Sea or by Land: If by Land, then must he in the compass of a year or two, travell not less than 4000 miles (for so far it is at least from Biscay to the vallie of Shinaar) with woemen and children, thorough most unpassible Woods and Mountains; which no understanding man can give belief to. If by Sea, besides the short time he had to provide shipping for so great a Company, and so long a voyage, nothing is more improbable to a sober man, than that he should leave Italy and Africk upon either hand; or pretermit the opportunitie of possessing Valentia, Andulazia, Portugal, being fruitfull Countries, to fix himself in the most mountainous, woody, and barren Province of all this Continent; yet most of our Berosians are so confident in it, that they make him the first King of Spain, from whom to Gargaris, Melicola, they numbred 25 Kings more, who lasted 988 years: the chief of which are said to be, 1 Hesperus, who subduing also Italy, named both Countries Hesperia: but so, that Italy was called Hesperia the greater, and Spain, Hesperia the less. 2 Hispanus, whence they conceit the name of Hispania to be derived. 3 Tagus, 4 Betus, and 5 Anus, whence the three famous Rivers in Spain so called, must by all means be derived. 6 Idubeda, God-father no doubt, to the great Mountain so named. 7 Sicilus, from whom the Isle of Sicily is said to take denomination. 8 Hispalis, who is reported to have built the Citie Sevill, or Hiſpalis. 9. Brigus, the Founder of Flavia-Briga, and other Towns ending in Briga. 10 Luſus, who gave name to Luſitania or Portugall. The Catalogue of which Kings I deſire no man to beleeve farther, than that of our own State from Brutus to Caſſibeline. A Catalogue ſo ill contrived, that whereas Juſtin ſpeaks of Habis, and Herodotus of Arganthonius; Macrobius of Heron, and Plutarch of Indibilis; all Kings of Spain, none of all theſe are mentioned in it. So that the coming of Tubal (in perſon) hither, is a ſilly vanitie, though we deny not but the Spaniards, or ſome nations of them, may derive their Pedegree from Tubal, as being the deſcendants of the Iberi, whom Joſephus ſaith to have been antiently called Thobelos: a name in which are all the Radicall Letters of Tubal, and which differeth not much from it in ſound. For ſomewhat before the ſuppoſed time of Gargarus Melicola, the Iberians are ſaid to come in under Panus: divided after his deceaſe amongſt many petit Kings and Princes, for the ſpace of 900 and odd years, even till the firſt Attempts which the Carthaginians made upon it; who found here no ſuch Vniverſal or Supreme Monarch, as the Beroſian Fablers dream of. During which time, we find nothing more obſervable and certain in the ſtorie of it, than the planting of Colonies on the Sea-coaſts by divers Nations, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe elder times. Of which ſort were the Towns of Emporia, and Dianium, founded by the Maſſilians; Saguntum, by the Zacynthi, or people of Zant; Rhodope, by the Rhodians, as ſome think; the Citie and Iſle of Gades planted by the Tyrians, who after ſpread themſelves over all the Coaſts of Andaluzia. The firſt that came in bodies hither, in the way of Conqueſt, were the Celtæ, a great and potent Nation of Gaul, who mixing themſelves with the Iberi, cauſed the whole Countrie to be called Celtiberia: but the time when they came into it, is very uncertain. Of the invaſion of it by the Carthaginians there is greater certainty: Who being beaten out of Sicil by the conquering Romans, Anno V.C. 512. and not daring to look any more that way, bended their Forces to the Weſt, and paſſing thorough the ſtreights of Gibraltar, by the Iſle of Gades (their own long before) landed in Spain, under the Conduct of Amilcar, the Father of Annibal, four years after the loſs of Sicilie. In leſs than 20 years following, Amilcar, Aſdrubal his Sonne-in-Law, and Annibal the Sonne of Amilcar, had made almoſt all Spain ſubject to the Carthaginians, even from the Weſtern Ocean to the Pyrenees; deſtroyed Saguntum, built new Carthage, and ſtrook ſo great a terrour into all the Countrie, that had not Annibals deſign caried him to Italy, the State of Carthage had been abſolute Maſters of it without further oppoſition or reſiſtance. But Annibal having taken all his old Souldiers with him; and thoſe that came from Carthage to command in chief, not being men of parts ſufficient to goe thorough with it; they loſt it peece-meal to the Romans, but in leſs time than they had been getting it from the Spaniards; the valour and good fortune of Corn. Scipio, over-ruling the declining power of that mighty State. The laſt that here commanded for the State of Carthage was Aſarubal the Sonne of Gilgo, who being beaten by Scipio into the Iland of Gades, left that alſo to the keeping of Mago, one of his Commanders; by whom being pillaged and deſerted, it forthwith yeelded to the Romans; the Carthaginians after this never poſſeſſing foot of ground in all this Continent.

The Romans thus becoming Maſters of a great part of it, divided it into Vlteriorem, lying from the River Iberus Weſtward, becauſe the furtheſt off from them; and Citeriorem, between the ſaid River and the Pyrenees. But having totally ſubdued it, they divided it into three main parts, 1. Tarraconenſem, ſo called of Tarragon the chief Citie of it, conteining Arragon, Navarre, Biſcay, Gallicia, &c. 2 Baticam, ſo named of the River Bætis, which runneth thorow it, comprehending the now Countries of Granada, Andaluzia, and part of Extremadura. 3. Luſitanicam, denominated from the Luſitani, the moſt potent People of that part, differing in extent from the preſent Portugal, (though this called Luſitania by our modern Latiniſts.) For the old Luſitania comprehended part of Extremadura, and ſome part of the two Caſtiles; and no more of the preſent Portugal, than what lieth betwixt the two Rivers, Ana and Duero: that on the South of Ana being laid to Batica, and that on the North of Duero, unto Tarraconenſis. Of theſe three parts, Batica was in moſt eſteem under the Romans; inſomuch, that it contained 8 Roman Colonies, 8 Municipal Cities, and 29 other Towns, endued with the rights and privileges of the Latine. The reaſon thereof was, that the people of this Countrie having been formerly broken by the Carthaginians, with more quiet endured the yoke of the Romans; whereas the reſt, for a long time, reſiſted the entrie and Empire of that prevailing Citie. But to proceed to the affairs of Rome in Spain, Scipio Africanus laid the firſt foundation of the Roman Government in this Countrey: which building, though undertaken by many excellent work-men, was not throughly finiſhed till the dayes of Auguſtus, being almoſt 200 years ſince the firſt attempt. He rooſed it, ſtrengthened it, and made it a principal building in his Monarchical Citie. For the old Incolæ were exceeding valiant and reſolute, ſometimes diſgracing, ſometimes endangering the Roman reputation; inſomuch that there were more Commanders loſt in thoſe wars, than any other. At firſt the Romans fought not with the Spaniards, but with the Carthaginians in Spain: then periſhed both the Scipio's, viz. the Father and the Vncle of Africanus. Viriathus held war for 20 years, Numantia held out 15, the Aſtures remained unconquered till the time of Auguſtus; and all reſolutely maintained their particular liberties, ut dijudicari non poterat (ſaith Paterculus) Hiſpanis an Romanis plus eſſet in armis Roboris, & uter populus alteri pariturus foret. Such manner of men were the antient Spaniards under Rome and Carthage; the firſt people of the the Continent of Europe (excepting Italy) on which the Romans did begin to enlarge their Empire; and the laſt that wholly were ſubdued and conquered by them. But being conquered at thelaſt, and brought under the form of a Province by Auguſtus Cæſar, it was governed by their Proconſuls, Prætors, and other Magiſtrates, according to the diviſion before-mentioned. But Conſtantine the Great in his new modelling of the Empire, laying ſome part of Africk to it, made it a Dioceſe of the Empire, made ſubject to the Præfectus Prætorio for Gaul, by whoſe Vicarius it was governed: the whole being then divided into theſe ſeven Provinces, viz. 1 Betica, 2 Luſitania, bounded as before; 3 Gallicia, containing the modern Gallicia, Leon and Oviedo, the greateſt part of the Old Caſtile, and ſo much of Portugal as lieth betwixt the two Rivers of Minio and Duero. 4 Carthaginenſis, ſo called from the Citie of New Carthage, comprehending New Caſtile, Murcia, and Valentia, with part of the Old Caſtile, Aragon, and Andaluſia. 5 Taraconenſis, embracing all Biſcay, Navarre, and Catalogne, with the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Aragon. 6 Tingitana, ſo called from Tingis (now Tangier,) a Town of Africk, on the oppoſite Coaſt, in which are now the great Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco: And 7 the Province of the Ilands, containing Majorca, Minorca, Ebuſa, and Frumentaria. Of which ſeven Provinces, the three firſt were Conſulariæ, governed by Proconſuls; the other four from their being under Preſidents were called Preſidiariæ. Being thus ſetled, it continued a Roman Dioceſe till about the yeer 400, when it was ſubdued by Gundericus, King of the Vandals: of which People, their beginning, atchievements, and finall Period, we will ſpeak more when we come to Africk, where they fixed themſelves: invited thereunto, partly to eſchew the ill neighbourhood of the Gothes, who began to grow too potent for them, and partly to ſatisfie the deſires of Boniface, Governour of that Province for the Emperour Valentinian the 3d, againſt whom he had then rebelled, and wanted ſuch ſupport to make good his action. Theſe being gon, the Suevi and Alani, who entred with them, could not long ſubſiſt, but were finally broken by the Gothes, and afterwards diſpoſſeſſed of their Kingdoms alſo, (though ſuffered to remain in the Country ſtill) as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in its proper place. As for the Gothes (of whom we ſhall ſpeak more in Sweden, and have alreadie made ſome mention when we were in Gaule,) having ſacked Rome, and waſted Italy, under the conduct of Alaric, they were bought out of that Country by the gift of Narbonenſis in Gaule, and ſo much of Tarraconenſis in Spain as now makes up the Province of Catalogne: the Compoſition being ratified by the mariage of Athaulfus, the Succeſſour of Alaric, with Placidia Siſter to Honorius the Weſtern Emperour. Vallia, or Wallia, the Succeſſor of Athaulfus, having beaten the Alani out of Luſitania and Carthaginenſis, added thoſe Provinces alſo unto his Eſtates, and confined the Vandals within Betica, was the firſt of the Gothes which entituled himſelf King of the Gothes in Spain. By their Agreement with the Romans, they were to keep thoſe Provinces for the uſe of the Empire which they did conquer and recover from the barbarous Nations: but contrary to all Faith, and the Articles of their Agreement, having once beaten the Alani out of Luſitania, by the proweſs of Vallia, and the Suevi out of Betica, under the conduct of Theodoric the Brother of Toriſmund; they fell upon the Romans themſelves, whom Euricus and his Succeſſors, by little and little, diſpoſſeſſed of all Spaine on this ſide of the Streights. Tingitana held out longeſt, as furtheſt off, unfortunately attempted by Theudes the 9th King of the Gothes, whoſe Souldiers being ſet upon by the Romans on the Lords day, or Sunday, refuſed to fight in their own defence, and were ſo miſerably defeated, that there was never a man of them left to carry news of the overthrow. So early did the Superſtition of a Lords day Sabbath prevail upon this melancholick and devout people. But what this Theudes could not doe, was performed by Sintilla, who in the ſhort time of his reign, Anno 642. made the Conqueſt abſolute.

Let us next look upon the Gothes as Lords of Spain, and we ſhall find them to have been Chriſtians in Religion, and ſomewhat civilized by their long neighbourhood and converſation with the Grecians, before they turned their Forces into the Weſt. Their company more deſired in this reſpect, than that of the Vandals, who were not only Pagans, but far more barbarous. But theſe Gothes being for long time of the Arian Faction, did grievouſly afflict and perſecute the Orthodox Prelates: continuing in this errour till the death of Leonigild (or Leutigildus as ſome call him) the laſt Patron and Aſſertor of it. Their Government Monarchicall, but the Kings Elective, (though for the moſt part they kept themſelves to the Regall Family:) an Excommunication being laid on ſuch, by the firſt Councill of Toledo, as went about to alter that eſtabliſhed courſe. Their Rule of Government was Cuſtome, and that not left in writing, but committed to Memory and Tradition: written Laws being firſt made by King Euricus, which the enſuing Princes confirmed and perfected. What elſe concerneth them we ſhall find in the cloſe of this Catalogue of

The Kings of the Gothes in Spain.

716. 31 Roderick the last King of the Goths in Spain, elected to the prejudice of the Sonnes of Vitiza, which after proved the ruine and overthrow of the Kingdom. For though the Kingdom went for the most part by Election, yet had they respect to the next of blood, (as at this time in Poland and Bohemia :) very few interlopers being here admitted; yet some there were who either by their merit or some opportunity got the possession of the Kingdom, though not at all relating to the Royall family. Of which kind were Theudis, an Ostro-Goth, sometimes the Governour hereof for Theodorick King of the Gothes in Italy, Protectour of this Kingdom in the minority of Amalaric, and Theudegisolus, Nephew to Totilas one of the successors to Theodoric. The rest of principall note were 1 Theodoric the first, slain in the battell neer Tholouze against Attila the Hunn, in defence of his own Countries and the Roman Empire. 2 Theodoric the second, who beat the Nation of the Suevi out of Batica; and 3 Leonigild or Lemigilde, who deprived them of Galicia also. 4 Reccaredus the first, who first embraced the Catholick doctrine of the Church, and rejected Arianisme; and for that cause first honoured with the title of the Catholick King; afterwards resumed by Alfonsus the first King of Leon, and made hereditary by Ferdinand the King of Castile, Aragon, &c. Grandfather unto Charles the fift. 5 Euricus, or Henricus as some call him, as remarkeable for Civill Politie, as Reccaredus for piety: as being the Licurgus or Legislator of this people, not governed till his time by a written Law, but either by uncertain customes, or at the pleasure of such Officers as the Kings set over them. 5 Suintilla, Sonne of Reccaredus the second, who having in the short time of his reign expelled the Roman forces out of Tingitana Anno 642. was the first Monarch of all Spain, whereof Tingitana (though on the other side of the Sea)had been made a Province by the Emperour Constantine, as before was said. And of this Province was Iulianus Governour in the time of Rhoderick, who being of the faction of the Sonnes of Vitiza, stomacked his advancement to the Kingdom; and thereby got the greater portion of the Kings displeasure. Who sending him upon an Embassie to the Moores of Africa, in the mean time defloured his Daughter Cava: which the Father took in such indignation, that he procured the Moores (amongst whom he had gotten much credit) to come over into Spain. This request they performed under the conduct of Musa and Tariffe: and having made a full conquest, subjected it to the great Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperours. It is recorded in a MS. History of the Saracens, that at the first coming of Tariffe into Spain, a poor woman of the Country being willingly taken prisoner, fell down at his feet, kissed them, and told him, that she had heard her Father (who was lettered) say, that Spain should be conquered by a people, whose Generall should have a Mole on his right shoulder, and in whom one of his hands should be longer than the other. He, to animate his Souldiers against the next encounter, uncloathed himself, and shewed the marke, which so encouraged them that they now doubted not the victory. Roderick had in his Army 130000 foot, and 35000 horse. Tariff had 30000 horse, and 180000 foot. The battell continued seven days together from morning to night: at last the Moores were victorious. What became of King Roderick was never known; his Souldiers took one arrayed in their Kings apparell, whom, upon examination, they found to be a Sheepheard; with whom the King, after the discomfiture, had changed cloathes. It is written also in Rodericus Toletanus, that before the coming of those Saracens, King Roderick, upon hope of some treasure, did open a part of the Palace of long time forbidden to be touched; but found nothing but Pictures which resembled the Moores; with a Prophecie, that whensoever the Palace was there opened, the people there resembled should overcome Spain: and so it hapned Anno 724.

The Moores, now Lords of Spain by the treason of Iulian, (who having seen the miserable death of his wife and children, was starved in prison by the Africans) permitted the free use of Religion to the old Inhabitants. lest they seeking new dwellings for the liberty of Conscience, should leave their native soyl desolate. The Moores finished their conquest in five years, say some, others in two, and some again in eight Moneths. To keep the new conquered Country in subjection, no way was so convenient as to plant Colonies: but the Morisco women would not abandon their old seates. Hereupon Musa and Tariffe, by gifts, pardons, and perswasions, drew many Christian women to forsake their Religion, whom they maried to the Souldiers. Not long after Vlidor Vlit, the great Caliph, sent over about 50000 Families of Moores and Iewes; assigning them a convenient portion of lands, to be held with great immunities, & upon small rents. These Politick courses notwithstanding, the Moores long enjoyed not the sole Soveraignty herein for the Christians having now recovered breath, chose themselves Kings; and the Authority of the Caliphs declining, gave the Moores liberty to erect divers petit royalties; so that at last Spain fell into a thirteenfold division, into the Kingdoms and proprietary estates of 1 Navarre, 2 Biscay, and 3 Guipuscoa, 4 Leon and Oviedo, 5 Gallicia, 6 Corduba, 7 Granada, 8 Murcia, 8 Murcia, 9 Toledo, 10 Caſtile, 11 Portugall and the Members of it, 12 Valentia, 13 Catalonia, 14 the Kingdom of Majorca, and 15 that of Aragon, not to ſay any thing of the petit Kingdoms of Iaen, Algozire, and Sevill, beſides others of like nature to them, erected by the factious and divided Moores, but of ſhort continuance all of them, and of little note; All now reduced at this day under the three governments of Caſtile, Portugal, and Aragon, the Kingdoms and Eſtates of Leon, Navarre, Corduba, Granada, Gallicia, Biſcay, Murcia and Toledo, being under Caſtile; Portugall with Algarve, and the Iſles of Azores, an entire government of it ſelf; Valentia, Catalonia, and Majorca, under that of Aragon. Navarre.

1. NAVARRE.

NAVARRE, the firſt Kingdom for antiquitie in Spain, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Principality of Bearn, in the Kingdom of France; on the Weſt, firſt with the River Ebro, or Iberus, and after with a little River falling into it neer Calahorra, by which divided from Caſtile; on the North, with the Cantabrian Mountains, by which parted from Guipuſcoa, and on the South, with the River Aragon (or Arga) by which divided from that Kingdom.

It was called at firſt the Kingdom of Sobrarbre, from a Town of that name, ſituate in the moſt inacceſſible part of the Pyrenees, and therefore choſe by Garcia Ximines the firſt King hereof, for the ſeat of his Kingdom, as moſt defenſible againſt the fury of the Moores: Afterwards it took the name of Navarre, either from Navois, ſignifying a plain and champagn Countrie, firſt uſed by Inigo Ariſta the ſixth King, who having taken Pampelune, abandoned the hill Countries and betook himſelf unto the Plains; or from Navarriere, the chief of the three parts into which that Citie was divided, not only at the taking thereof, but a long time after.

The Countrie though environed on all ſides with mighty Mountains, yet of it ſelf is ſaid to be reaſonably fruitfull, well watered, and for the moſt part plain, and level, as before is ſaid. It taketh up ſome parts of both ſides of the Pyrenees: the Spaniſh ſide being fertile, and adorned with trees; the French ſide generally very bare and naked. That on the Spaniſh ſide, and on the ſummits of the Mountains, now poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, is called High Navarre; that on the French ſide, now called Baſe, or Low Navarre, eſtimated at a ſixth part of the whole Kingdom, is enjoyed by the French; incorporated by King Lewis the 13. to the Realm of France, Anno, 1620.

Places of moſt importance in Baſe Navarre, 1. S. Palais, formerly the place of Iudicature for this part of the Kingdom: but in the year 1620. removed to Pau in the Principality of Bearn: both Bearn and Baſe Navarre, which had before been governed as diſtinct Eſtates from the Realm of France, being then incorporate to that Crown. 2. Navarreux, a Town of great importance, ſeven Leagues from Pau; well fortified, and as well munitioned: King Lewis the 13. finding in it at his coming thither, Anno 1620. no fewer then 45 Cannons all mounted, beſides 40 Culverins and ſmaler Peeces, with Powder, Bullet, and Victuals anſwerable thereunto. 3. Pied de Port, or S. Iohn de Pied de Port, bordering on the edge of France, againſt which formerly a Peece of eſpeciall ſtrength, 4. Roncevallis or Roncevaux, ſituate in the moſt pleaſant Countrie of all Navarre, in the entrance of a ſmall but delightfull Valley, famous for the great battel fought neer unto it, in the ſtreights or entrances of the Mountains leading to this Valley, betwixt the French under Charlemagne, and a great Army of Moores and natural Spaniards, confederate together in defence of their common Liberty. In which battel, by the treachery of Gavelon, 40000 of the French were ſlain, and amongſt them, Rowland Earl of Mans, the Nephew of Charles, and others of the Peers of France, of whom ſo many Fables are reported in the old Romances, the firſt Author of which Fables paſſeth under the name of Archb. Turpin, ſaid to be one of thoſe twelve Peers, who taking on him to record the Acts of Charles the Great, hath interlaced his Storie with a number of ridiculous vanities: by means whereof the noble Acts of that puiſſant Emperour, and his gallant Followers, are much obſcured and blemiſhed by thoſe very pens, which in the times ſucceeding did employ themſelves to advance the ſame.

Of ſpecial note in High Navarre, 1. Victoria, firſt built or rather reedified by Sancho the 4th, King of Navarre, Anno 1180. by whom thus named in memory of ſome victory obtained thereabouts againſt the Caſtilians; as in like caſe, there had been many Towns built by the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Nicopolis, or the Citie of Victorie, which we ſhall meet withall hereafter. Situate in the place of the antient Vellica, but graced with the privileges, and name of a Citie by Iohn the 2d of Caſtile, after it came under the command of that Crown, Anno 1432. A Town belonging properly to the little Province of Olava, and the chief thereof: which Province being wholly in and amongſt the Cantabrian Mountains, was of old a member of Navarre, but being extorted from it Anno 1200, by Alphonſo the 2d of Caſtile, it was in the year 1332. incorporated into that Crown as a part thereof, as were ſome other Towns and members of this Kingdom alſo, won by the Caſtilians. 2 Viane, the title of the eldeſt Sonne of Navarre, who was called Prince of Viane; advanced unto this honour by King Charles the 3d, Anno 1421. in imitation of the like cuſtom in Caſtile, where the eldeſt Sonne was called Prince of the Aſturias: but not leſs memorable for the death of Caſar Borgia, ſlain neer unto it in an ambuſh, after all his wanderings, and interchangeableneſs of fortunes. For being ſonne of Pope Alexander the ſixth, by birth a Spaniard, he was by his Father made a Cardinal; but relinquiſhing that Title, by Charles

Navarre. the eighth of France created Duke of Valeatinois in the Province of Daulphine: during his Fathers life he had reduced under his obedience divers of the Eſtates which antiently had belonged to the Church of Rome: but after his deceaſe impriſoned by Pope Iulio the ſecond who was jealous (not without good cauſe) of his plots and practices. From Rome he ſtole unto Gonſalvo, then Vice-Roy of Naples for Ferdinando the Catholique; who notwithſtanding his ſafe conduct, ſent him priſoner to Spain: but breaking priſon (deſperarely ſliding down a window) he came at laſt into this kingdom, and was here ſlain in an Ambuſcado, as before was ſaid. So many times was Machiavels great Politician over-reached by Bookmen and Souldiers. 3 Sobrarbre, in the moſt inacceſſible parts of the Pyrenees, for that cauſe made the firſt ſeat of the Kings of Navarre, entituled from thence the Kings of Subrarbre. Made afterwards a diſtinct Kingdom from Navarre by Sancho the great, who gave it to Gonſales his youngeſt Sonne: after whoſe death (not having iſſue) it was ſeized on by Don Raymir the firſt King of Aragon, and made a Member of that Crown. 4 Sangueſſa, a Town of a large territorie and juriſdiction, privileged with a Suffrage in the Convention of Eſtates, and a ſtrong Fortreſs on the borders towards Aragon: for which cauſe formerly aimed at by the Kings thereof, who have had it ſometimes in their hands. 5 Pampelun in the Champagn Country, on the banks of the River Arga, the Metropolis of this Kingdom, and the ſeat Royall of its Kings ſince the Conqueſt of it from the Moores by Inigo Ariſta the ſixt King of Navarre. Of old divided into three parts, that is to ſay Bourg, Peuplement, and Navarriere; each having ſeverall Officers and Iuriſdictions (the cauſe of many quarrels and much blood amongſt them) till all united into one body, and reduced under the command of one chief Magiſtrate, by King Charles the third. An antient Town, firſt built by Pompey at the end of his wars againſt Sertorius: in memory of whom called Pompeiopolis, by our modern Latiniſts; but Pampelon, more neer unto the preſent name, by Ptolomie and Antoninus, now an Epiſcopall See, the ſeat of the Vice Roy, and one of the beſt fortified Towns of all Spain. 6 Moia, not far from the borders of France, where it joyneth on Guipuſcoa, a place of principall importance: the Caſtle whereof was one of the laſt peeces on this of ſide the Mountains which held out for King Iohn of Albret againſt Ferdinand the Catholique in his ſurprizall of this Kingdom. 7 Montreal, 8 Olite, and 9 Taſalla; all yielded with the reſt of this Kingdom, to Frederick of Toledo, Duke of Alva. Who had the happineſs to ſubdue this Realm to the Crown of Caſtile, as his Sonne Ferdinand had to conquer the Realm of Portugall. 10 Tudele, on the Eaſtern bank of the River Ebro, honoured with a little Univerſity there founded by Ferdinand the Catholick, on his ſurprizall of that Kingdom. 11 Calahorra, ſituate on the weſtern banks of the Iberus or Ibre, by Ptolomie called Calagorina, by Strubo, Calagurris, now a Biſhops See; taken from Raimir the 2d. King of Navarre, by Aiſonſo the 2d. of Caſtile, and made a Member of that Kingdom. As alſo was 12 Logrogno, on the ſame banks of the River alſo. 13 Eſtella bordering on Caſtile, to which adjudged (though on the Eaſtern ſide of the River) by Lewis the 11th. of France; made Vmpire for the attonement of ſome differences betwixt Henry King of Caſtile, and John King of Navarre and Aragon.

The old inhabitants thereof were the Vaſcones, poſſeſſed not only of this tract, but of Biſcay and Guipuſcoa alſo, from them denominated: who paſſing over the Pyrenees, made themſelves maſters of that Province which is now called Gaſcoigne by the French, and Vaſcovia in Latin. Wonne from the Romans by the Gothes, and from them by the Moores; it began to be a Kingdom under Garcia Ximines, a noble man of the Gothiſh blood, who with 600 men only began to make head againſt the Saracens, Anno 716. firſt under the title of the Kingdom of Sobrarbre, and after that of Navarre; for the Reaſons formerly delivered. The ſixt from Garcia Ximines was Inigo ſurnamed Ariſta, (ſo named from his vehemency and heat in War) the Sonne of Simon Earl of Bigorre in Gaſcoigne, elected to this Kingdom, on the death of Ximines the fift King, Anno 840 or thereabouts, as the next Heir (but in the collaterall Line) of Don Garcia Ximines the firſt King of Sobrarbre. To him the taking of Pampelune is aſcribed moſt generally, though Turquet in his Hiſtory referre the ſame to Garcia the ſecond King. But certainly the Town was in the hands of the Moores till forced from them by the proweſs of Charlemagne, by them again recovered after the defeat of Roncevals, and held till the time of this King, who poſſeſſed himſelf of it. To this King alſo is aſcribed the firſt beginning of the ceremony of Crowning and Anointing after the manner uſed by the Kings of France. But the old Roman Provinciall cited in the titles of honour acknowledgeth no ſuch honour to theſe petit Kings, communicated only, in that time, to the Emperors of the Eaſt and Weſt, the Kings of Hieruſalem, England, France, and Scicil. And therefore probable it is, that the cuſtome came into Navarre with the houſe of Champagne. Other Kings of moſt note in the courſe of Story were, 3 Fortun. the ſecond Nephew of Inigo Ariſta, by his Sonne Garcia the third, who added unto his Eſtate the Earldom of Aragon, deſcended to him by his Mother, the Daughter and Heir of Aſnarius, or Aznario, the laſt Earl thereof. 4 Sancho the fourth, ſurnamed the Great, who firſt aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Spain: his predeceſſors uſing no other title than Kings of Sobrarbre or Navarre; his Co-temperaries calling themſelves Kings of Leon, Toledo, Sevil, Corduba, according to the names of their ſeverall Kingdoms; the Gothes, Kings of the Gothes in Spain; and ſo the Vandalls and the Suevi. Onely the Earls of Barcelone, at their firſt Erection by the French, entituled themſelves the Dukes and Marqueſſes of Spain, as if all were theirs; with bragg and vanitie enough. But this Prince had ſome good ground for it, as being by inheritance poſſeſſed of Navarre and Aragon; of Caſtile in the right of his Wife Donna Nugna, or Elvira, Siſter and Heir of Sancho the laſt Earl thereof; and by conqueſt of a great part of the Realm of Leon: ſo that almoſt all Spain, not poſſeſſed by the Moores, was become his own. Had theſe Eſtates remained entire to his Succeſſors, the Moores no doubt had ſooner loſt their hold in Spain: and the whole Continent been brought under the obedience of one ſole Monarch. But this King either loving all his Sonnes alike; or elſe offended with the eldeſt, who moſt unnaturally had accuſed his own innocent mother of the crime of Adultery: divided his Eſtates amongſt them: giving to Garcia his eldeſt Sonne, the Realm of Navarre, with that part of Leon which he held by conqueſt; to Ferdinand his ſecond Sonne, Caſtile; and Aragon to his baſe Sonne Raymir; both which he erected into Kingdoms: and finally, to Gonſales his third Sonne, the Realm of Sobrarbre, then firſt diſmembred from Navarre. By means of which impolitick courſe, his Sonnes being all of equall title and Eſtates, inſtead of oppoſing the common foe, quarrelled with each other, and left the quarrell as a Legacie to their ſeverall Succeſſours: which miſchief might have been avoided, if he had not dignified them all with the title of Kings; or left the reſt as Homagers unto one Supreme. 5 Sancho the fift, Nephew of Sancho the Great, by his Sonne Garcia de Nagera, unnaturally and traiterouſly ſlain by his Brother Raymir. After whoſe death, and the ſhort interpoſition of his Murtherer, this Kingdom was ſeized on by the Kings of Aragon: three of which, viz. Sancho Raymires, Pedro, & Alfonſo, did ſeverally and ſucceſſively enjoy the ſame. 6 Alfonſo the laſt of the three Kings of Aragon reigning in Navarre, ſurnamed the Warriour, who for a time was King of Caſtile alſo in right of Urraca his Wife: in which reſpect he took unto himſelf the title of Emperour of Spain, though not acknowledged ſo by others. But finally, dying without iſſue, and his Brother Raymir, or Raymond called the Monk, ſucceeding in Aragon; the Kingdom of Navarre reverted to Garcia Raymir Lord of Monſon, the direct heir of Garcia de Nagera, by Raymir Lord of Calahorra his younger Sonne. 7 Sancho the 8th, the Nephew of this Garcias Raymir, by his Sonne Sancho the 7th ſurnamed the Wiſe, the laſt King of the maſculine and direct line of the Kings of Navarre: the Kingdom after his deceaſe paſſing by the Females, or Heirs generall, to the Earls of Champague, and ſo unto the Kings of France, the Houſes of Eureux, Foix, Albret, and Vendoſme; but never holding above 3 deſcents in any one Family. By meanes whereof, theſe Kings being barred from gaining any thing on the Moores, by the interpoſition of the Kings of Caſtile and Aragon; and having no way to enlarge their Revenue or Dominions by any undertakings and Adventures at Sea, as the Portugals did; incorporated to their Crown as fair and large poſſeſſions in the Realm of France, as any of the others did in the Spaniſh Continent. The Principality of Bearn, the Earldoms of Foix and Begorre, united in the perſon of Gaſton of Foix; as thoſe of Armaignac and Albret in the perſon of John Earl of Albret, all lying together on the other ſide of the Pyrenees, all added to this Crown by mariage with the Heirs hereof, made up a fairer and wealthier Eſtate than Navarre it ſelf; inferiour to few Provinces in the Realms of Spain. Not to ſay any thing of the acceſſion of the Countie Palatine of Champagne; exchanged afterwards for ſome Lands in the Countie of La March in Limoſin; or of the Earldoms of Eureux, and the Dutchie of Vendoſme; as lying further off, and of leſſe importance. Nor of the great Kingdom of France now herewith incorporate, as to the perſon of the K. though not in the poſſeſſion of this Kingdom alſo. With ſo much judgement and ſucceſs did the enſuing Kings (not otherwiſe able to enlarge their territories) beſtow their daughters; that the Diſtaff proved as happy to this little Kingdom, as the Sword to others. 8 Charles, the ſecond of that name, and the 30th King of Navarre, whom I mention not for any glorious Actions atchieved in his life, (for that was full enough of ignominy,) but for the ſtrangeneſs and hideouſneſs of his death. He was a Prince much given to voluptuouſneſs and ſenſuall pleaſures, which ſo waſted his ſpirits, that in his old age he fell into a kind of Lethargie. To comfort his benummed joynts, he was bound and ſewed up naked in a ſheet ſteeped in boyling Aqua-vitæ. The Chirurgion having made an end of ſewing the ſheet, and wanting a knife to cut off the threed, took a wax candle that ſtood lighted by him: but the flame running down by the threed, caught hold on the ſheet; which (according to the nature of Aqua-vitæ) burned with that vehemency, that the miſerable King ended his dayes in the fire. 9 John of Aragon, the ſecond Sonne of Ferdinand the firſt, in the life of his Brother Alphonſo was made King of Navarre, in right of Blanche his Wife, Daughter of Charles the 3d, and on the death of his Brother, King of Aragon alſo: And though his Queen died long before him, in whoſe right he reigned, yet he kept poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, till his death, (reigning 54 years in all) notwithſtanding the oppoſition made againſt him by Charles Prince of Viana, his onely Sonne by that mariage, and Heir apparent of that Crown; whom he vanquiſhed, impriſoned, and at laſt poyſoned. 10 John, Earl of Albret in Gaſcoigne, King of Navarre in right of Katharine his Wife: in whoſe reign the Kingdom of Navarre was ſeized on by Ferdinand the Catholique, Sonne of the ſaid John King of Aragon, and Navarre; by a ſecond Wife. The manner of it we ſhall relate with more particulars, when we have ſummed up the whole Succeſſion of whom remain the rights, but not the poſſeſſion of this Kingdom. For in the reign of Catharine and Iohn of Albret, Ferdinand gathered an Army under the pretence of rooting out the Moores, and ſurprized this Kingdom, altogether unprovided, and deſtitute of means to make the ſmalleſt reſiſtance, Anno 1512. The pretended reaſon of this ſurpizall, was an Excommunication laid on theſe Princes by the Pope, of which this King took upon him to be the Executioner: but the true cauſe was an antient deſire which this King had to poſſeſs this frontire kingdom; it being a ſtrong Bulwark againſt France. It hapned then that Lewis the 12th having incurred the diſpleaſure of Pope Iulio the ſecond, was together with all his adherents, excommunicated; and his, and their eſtates, given to ſuch as could or would ſubdue them. The King and Queen of Navarre were at this time both French ſubjects: he in reſpect of Albret, his paternall inheritance, and ſhe of her eſtates of Foix and Bearn, and therefore fided with the French King. Ferdinand having (as we ſaid) levied an Army under colour of extirpating the Moores, turneth upon the French King; and demanded of theſe Princes, not only a free paſſage thorough their countrey, but alſo to have certain places of ſtrength put into his hands, for his better aſſurance. Theſe unjuſt demands the Navarrois denied. Whereupon Ferdinand with all expedition invadeth the kingdom, the greateſt part of which he took without a blow given, the French King being as backward in affording due aſſiſtance, as the other was unprovided of means for defence. The French netled with this loſs, divers times attempted the recovery of it, but in vain: for the Spaniard ſtill keepeth thoſe parts of it which lie on that ſide of the Pyrenees; leaving the reſt, which lieth on the French ſide of thoſe Mountains (being about a ſixt part of the whole) to the Deſcendants of thoſe Princes whom he had diſſeized.

The Arms of Navarre are Gules, a Carbuncle nowed Or. Which Carbuncle having a reſemblance unto chaines of Gold, is ſaid to have been firſt taken by Sancho the 8th, in memorie that he and his Forces had firſt broken the Fortification made with chaines, about the Pavilion of Makomet Enaſer, ſer the Meramomolin of Morocco, at the great fight in Sierra Morena: before which time the Armes of this Kingdom had been Azure, a Croſs Argent. Leon.

The chief order of Knighthood was of the Lilly, begun by Garcia the ſixth; their Blazen a pot of Lillies with the Portraiture of our Lady ingraved upon it; their duty to defend the Faith, and daily to repeat certain Ave-Maries.

4. LEON and OVIEDO.

THe Kingdom of LEON and OVIEDO hath on the Eaſt the Countrie of Biſcay; on the North, the main Cantabrian Ocean; on the South, Caſtile; on the Weſt, Gallicia. So called from Leon and Oviedo, the chief Cities of it, and firſt ſeat of their Kings; the antienteſt Kingdom in all Spain. By a more antient name it was called Aſturia, from the Aſtures, who poſſeſſed it in the time of the Romans; divided into the two generall names of Auguſtani and Tranſmontani, but comprehending the particular Tribes or Nations of the Peſici, Gigari, Zoela, and Lancienſes.

The Countrey mountainous and woodie, but formerly of ſome eſteem for thoſe ſmall, though ſwift Horſes which the Romans (from hence) called Aſturcones; we may read it, Hobbies; which afterwards became a common name for all Nags or Gueldings: Aſturco Macedonicus being uſed for a Macedonian Nag, by Petronius Arbiter.

It is divided commonly into two parts, that is to ſay, Aſturia de Oviedo, bordering on Gallicia, towards the Weſt, and 2 Aſturia Santillana, confining on Biſcay, towards the Eaſt. From which diviſion of the Countrey the eldeſt Son of Caſtile is called Prince of the Aſturias, in the plural number, which Title ſome ſuppoſe to be given unto them, becauſe it was the firſt Countrey which held up againſt the Moores. But indeed the true Original hereof is referred by the beſt Spaniſh Writers, to the time of the mariage of Catharine, Daughter of Iohn of Gaunt, and in right of her Mother Conſtance, the right Heir of Caſtile, unto Henry Sonne of Iohn the firſt, then in poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. For to this new maried Couple it was granted, ſaith Mariana, that after the manner of England, where the Heir Apparant is called Prince of Wales, they ſhould be called Princes of the Aſturias. In times ſucceeding the Towns of Iaen, Vbeda, Biatia, and Anduiar were added to this Principate, and ſo continued to this day.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Avales, on the Sea ſide, not far from the Promontorie, called of old Promontorium Scythicum; but now Cabo de Pinas, 2. Sublanco, now a ſmall vllage, but once a Town of ſo great ſtrength that it was deſtroyed by the command of the Emperour Nerva, leſt it might animate theſe Mountainers unto a revolt. 3. LEON, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the place of the old Sublancia (as it was then called:) The town but mean, were it not beautified by a fair and large Cathedral; the Biſhop whereof acknowledgeth no Metropolitan but the Pope alone. Recovered from the Moores, Anno 722. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of the Kings of Leon; by ſome called Legio, becauſe the 7th Legion was here lodged; by Ptolomie called Legio Germanica, and by others Gemina. 4. S. Andera, ſo named from a Church there built to the honour of S. Andrew; by Ptolomie called Flavionavie; now a wel-traded Port on the Cantabrian Ocean. 5. Santillana, which gives name to the Eaſtern part of Aſturia. 6. Llanes, where the two Aſturias meet together. 7. Civdad Real in the Weſtern part of Aſturia, called Aſturia de Oviedo. 8. Villa Vicioſa, the only noted Port in this part of the Countrie. 9. OVIEDO, called for a time the Citie of Biſhops, becauſe many of the Biſhops of Spain, diſpoſſeſſed of their Churches by the Moores, had retired thither, and there preſerved the line of Epiſcopal Succeſſion, till their Sees were filled again with Biſhops in more happy times. Antiently it was called Lucus Aſturum, and was of old a Biſhops See; reedified by King Froila the firſt, in the yeer 757. Famous enough in giving the title of a Kingdom to the firſt Chriſtian Princes after the Conqueſt by the Moores, called from hence Kings of Oviedo. Afterwards, Anno, 896. they began to be ſtiled Kings of Oviedo and Leon; and at laſt Kings of Leon only; Oviedo being quite left out of the Regal ſtile by Raymir the 2d, Anno 904. More toward the Inlands of this Kingdom (now reckoned part of old Caſtile) are 10. Palenza, the Pallantia of Ptolomie and Antoninus, ſeated on the River Carrion; once a ſmall Vniverſitie, till the tranſlation of it unto Salamanca, by King Ferdinand the third. This Town firſt felt the furie of the Snevians, when they maſtered theſe parts of Spain. 11. Aſtorga, antiently called Auguſta Aſturica, whence the Aſtures of this tract were called Auguſtani, a Biſhops See frontiring on Gallicia; happy in this, that it felt not the fury of the luſtfull King Vitiza; who to ſecure himſelf in his unlawfull pleaſures, and to weaken his ſubjects, if they ſhould attempt any thing againſt him, diſmantelled all the Towns in his Dominions, except Leon, Toledo, and this Aſtorga.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Countrie hath been ſhewn already. When conquered by Auguſtus Cæſar they were under part of the Province of Tarragonenſis; part afterwards of the Province of Gallicia by the Emp: Conſtant. Won from the Romans by the Gothes, & from them by the Moores, though long they did not lye under their command. For as the luſt of Roderick the laſt King of the Gothes in Spain, occaſioned the coming in of the Moores; ſo the luſt of Magnutza, a Mooriſh Vice-Roy, occaſioned (though in long courſe of time) their expulſion thence. For Magnutza having employed Pelagius a young Prince of the Aſturias on an Embaſsy to Muſa, the Leiutenant Genetal of the Moores, then reſiding at Corduba; in his abſence raviſhed his Siſter, and at his return died by the edge of his ſword. Diſpairing of pardon for this Act, he was fain to ſtand upon his guard, and fortifie ſelf in the mountainous places of this Countrie: to which many of the old Inhabitants reſorted, put themſelves under his command, and elected him to be their King: firſt by the name of King of the Aſturias, and after by the Title of King of Leon, when he had got that Citie into his hands, as being the Citie of moſt note, and the ſtrongeſt hold that he was poſſeſſed of. The Kingdom at the firſt beginning contained only the more mountainous parts of the two Aſturias, enlarged a little further South on the taking of Leon by this firſt Pelagius. Afterwards by the valour of Ordogno the 2d, it extended over both Aſturias, Gallicia, and the old Caſtile: divided from the Moores by the Mountains of Avila and Segovia, but more defended by the valour of the people, and gallantry of their Princes, than it was by thoſe Mountains. Kings of moſt note, beſides the two before remembred, were 1. Mauregate, the baſe Sonne of Alfonſo the firſt, who having by the help of Abderamen, King of the Moores, obtained the Kingdom, came to a baſe agreement with them, in which he bound himſelf to pay them as an yeerly tribute 50 Virgins of noble Families, and as many of inferiour birth; for which he died hated and deteſted of all men. 2 Raymir the firſt, who ſo diſcomfited the Moores at the battel of Clavigio, Anno 826. that from that time the power and reputation of the Kings of Corduba began to languiſh. 3 Alfonſo the 3d, who refuſed to pay unto the Moores the ſaid tribute of Virgins; and for his many victories againſt the Moores, was ſurnamed the Great; who being outed of his Kingdom by his Sonne Garcia, not only patiently digeſted ſo great a wrong, but willingly became his Sonnes Leiutenant againſt the Moores. 4 Veramund the 2d, choſen King in the minoritie of Raymir the 3d, in whoſe time the Moores took Leon, and ſpoyled the Church of S. Iames in Gallicia; but were after beaten to their homes, with the loſs of many of their own places. 5 Veramund the 3d, who making war againſt Ferdinand the firſt King of Caſtile, was by him ſlain in battel; the Conquerour ſeizing on his Kingdom, in right of Sancha his Wife, the Siſter of Veramund; the three Kings next ſucceeding being Kings of both: 6 Ferdinand the 3d, Sonne of Alfonſo the 9th, and of Berengaria the younger Siſter of Henry King of Caſtile, by the power and policie of his Mother, ſeized on the Caſtiles, of right belonging to Blanch the elder Siſter, Wife of Lewis Sonne to Philip the 2d, King of France, and after the death of his Father ſucceeded in Leon. Of whom we ſhall hear more when we come to Caſtile. After this time theſe Kingdoms never were divided; but incorporate into one Eſtate, called for long time the Kingdom of Caſtile and Leon: though afterwards Leon was left out of the Regal ſtile, and only that of Caſtile mentioned, except in Legal inſtruments, Letters Patents, and Inſtruments of Negotiation with forrain Frinces. The whole ſucceſſion of theſe Kings, the Hiſtories of Spain thus preſent unto us.

The Kings of Oviedo and Leon.

Siſter of Henry of Caſtile, by the power and practices of his Mother ſucceeded in the Realm of Caſtile, whileſt his Father lived, Anno 1217. to the prejudice of Blanch her elder Siſter, maried to Lewis the 8th of France, by whom ſhe had Lewis the 9th, and other Children.

The

The Kingdoms never ſince that time diſ-joyned, as they had been once before ſince the firſt uniting. Biſcay & Guipuſcoa.

The Armes of this Kingdom are Argent, a Lyon Paſſant, crowned Or, which Armes when it was joyned to the Kingdom of Caſtile were quartered with the Coat thereof: that being the firſt time, (as Camden notes) that ever Armes were born Quartered. Followed herein by Edward the 3d of England, who not only took unto himſelf the Title of King of France, but (to ſhew his right unto that Crown) quartered the Flower de Lices, with his Engliſh Lions.

3 BISCAY, and 4 GVIPVSCOA.

OF theſe two we ſhall ſpeak together, becauſe of the ſimilitude and reſemblances which are between them, both in the Countrey and the people; the names being alſo forged from the ſame Originall: Bounded upon the Weſt with the Kingdom of Leon; on the Eaſt, with the Pyrenees, and Guienne in the Realm of France; on the North, with the Cantabrian Ocean; and on the South, with Navarre and old Caſtile. Thus named from the Vaſcones, inhabiting the neighbouring Kingdom of Navarre in the time of the Romans: part of which people in the year 640. or thereabouts, paſſed over unto the farther ſide of the Pirenees, where they took up thoſe parts of France, ſince from them called Gaſcoigne. The reſt continuing in their old ſeats, or ſpreading more into the Weſt towards the Cantabrians, gave to thoſe parts the name of Guipuſcoa and Viſcaia, (for ſo the Spaniarde write and ſpeak it) now by us called Biſcay: their language alſo (which is much different from the reſt of Spain) being called the Baſquiſh, more neer in ſound to that of Vaſcons the Originall name.

The whole Country is very Mountainous and woodie, yielding but little ſtore of Corn, and leſs of Wine: the defect of the firſt being ſupplied from other Countries, of the laſt by Sider, for which end they plant Apples here in great abundance. But from thoſe Woods they draw continually great ſtore of Timber for the building of ſhips: and from thoſe hills there do not only iſſue pleaſant Rivers (ſome ſay 150. in number) of which Iberus and Duero are ſaid to be two; but ſuch infinite ſtore of Iron and Steel, that no Country yieldeth better or in greater plenty, called and accounted for this cauſe the Armorie of Spain; and giving occaſion unto Plinie to report that there was in this Country, a whole Mountain of Iron, In Maritima Cantabriæ parte Mons prærupte altus (incredibile dictu) totus ex ea materia eſt, lib. 34. cap. 45. Nor do they only furniſh all Spain with Iron, which they make into inſtruments of War, and others for domeſtick uſes; but with Timber alſo for their ſhipping: with which ſo ſtored that whole Fleets may be built and armed from this Country only.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Eaſtern bordering on the Pyrenees, and the Realm of France, which is called GVYPVSCOA, and the Weſtern bordering on the Kingdom of Leon, which properly is called BISCAY: the Town of Montrico ſtanding in the confines of both. Both of them heretofore of the ſame Originall, though by ſeverall means united to the Crown of Caſtile; both ſpeak the ſame Cantabrian language now called the Baſquiſh, the people of both being more rude and ſimple than the reſt of Spain, but ſtanding much upon their Gentry, according to the cuſtome of moſt Mountainous and unconquered Nations. The difference is, that thoſe of Guipuſcoa by reaſon of their trafick and commerce with other Countries, ſavour a little more of Chriſtianity than the others do: in which the common Biſcaines are ſo far to ſeek, that though they have ſome generall notions of God and CHRIST, yet very few of them are able to render an account of their Faith, in any tolerable meaſure. And review being taken of thoſe general notions in which both Countries are concerned; let us next look upon them in their ſeveral and diſtinct capacities, with reference to their chief Towns and Stories.

And firſt for GVIPVSCOA. The places of chiefeſt note in it are, 1 S. Sebaſtians (Don Baſtia as the Vulgar call it) a noted and well-traded Port, at the mouth of the River Garvine, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, defended at the entrances with two ſtrong Caſtles founded upon the oppoſite Rocks, and honoured with an Epiſcopall See. 2 Toloſa (commonly called Toloſette) at the confluence of the Rivers Oria and Duarzo. 3 Placenza, on the River Denia, inhabited by none but Blackſmiths, who do attend their Hammers with ſuch endleſs diligence, that Vulcans forge may ſeem to be tranſlated hither from the Iſle of Lemnos. 4. Fonterabia at the mouth of the River Vidoſa, which divides this Country from Guyenne in France; for that cauſe very well fortified, and as ſtrongly garriſoned. 5 Renteria, ſituate neer a Brook abounding with moſt excellent Salmons. 6 Montrico, at the mouth of the River Denia, the fartheſt Town hereof on the edge of Biſcay. Moſt of which ſtands upon or neer the Sea; there being but few Towns of note within the land (though ſtore enough of ſcatered Villages, as in Biſcay alſo) becauſe of the roughneſs of the Mountains.

As for the Fortunes and affairs of this part of the Country after the ſubverſion of the Kingdom of the Gothes in Spain (for till that time they followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of this Countrie) it was at firſt a Member of the Crown of Navarre; afterwards wreſted from King Sancho the ſixt, by Alfonſo the firſt of Caſtile, Anno 109. by whom committed to the Government of Lopes Diaz de Haro Lord of Biſcay. Reſtored again to the Kings of Navarre upon ſome following Capitulations, it ſo continued till the year 1200. when having experience of the Government of both Kingdoms, and liking better that of Caſtile, they offered themſelves to the Biſcay. ſubject on of Alphonſo the third, who without ſo much as one blow ſtrook, became Maſter of all the Country; and left it ſetled and confirmed unto his ſucceſſors, as it hath ever ſince remained.

2 For BISCAY next, the Principall Towns thereof are, 1 Larrabecua, the chief Town of this Province in elder times, in the Chief Church whereof the Kings of Spain, as Lords of Biſcay, uſe to be ſolemnly inaugurated; here making Oath to maintain the liberties of the Country, and receiving the Homage and Allegiance of the people of it. 2 Berneo, an old Town alſo, and amply privileged, the franchiſes whereof the Kings are ſolemnly ſworn to keep, in the Church dedicated to the honour of S. Euphemia. 3 Guernica, the third Town for antiquity in this part of theſe Countries. Then of a later date we have 4 Bilbo, or Bilbao, ſituate ſome two leagues from the Sea, but on a fair and deep Creek thereof, on the other ſide ſurrounded with Mountains; built out of the ruines of the old Flaviobriga, by Diego de Haro Lord of Biſcay, Anno 1300. and ſituate the beſt of any Town in this Country for plenty of Victuals, eſpecially for fleſh and moſt excellent bread. Exceedingly enriched by making of Armour, and all ſorts of weapons (their chiefeſt manufacture) the Bilbo Blades in ſuch requeſt being brought from hence. Beſides which trade of Arms and Iron, they deal alſo in wool, by the vent of which commodities they are grown ſo wealthy, that here are many private Merchants which build yearly three or four good ſhips for their own trade only. 5 Laredo, a Sea Town alſo with a capable port. 6 Portugaletre, commodiouſly ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, which floweth up to their very houſes, and ſerveth them exceeding fitly for the lading and unlading of their commodities.

The old Inhabitants of this tract before the coming in of the Vaſcones, were the Cantabri; theſe ſubdivided into the ſeverall Nations of the Marbogi, the Cariſti, the Antrigones, the Varduli, and the Cantabri properly ſo called. From theſe deſcend the modern Biſcaines. An Argument whereof may be their Language different from the reſt of Spain, and ſaid by ſome to have continued in this Country ever ſince the Confuſion at Babel. And though they over-ſhoot themſelves that go as far as Babel for the Pedigree and Antiquity of it: yet that it was the antient language of Spain, is more than probable, becauſe this people have ever continued without any mixture of forrein Nations, as being never throughly ſubdued either by Romans, Carthaginians, Gothes, or Moores: and ſo they remained, as in their liberties not Maſtered, ſo in their language not altered. In like manner the Arabick continueth uncorrupt in the hilly parts of Granada; the Tongue of the old Britans in our Wales; and the antient Epirotick, in the high, woodie, and more Mountainous parts of that Country. And though thoſe of Guipuſcoa ſpeak the ſame language alſo, yet is it with a greater mixture of other words (by reaſon of their neighbourhood with France, and commerce with ſtrangers) than it is in Biſcay: where the old naturall language, whatſoever it was, is in far more purity.

Nor do the Biſcaines differ from the reſt of Spain in language only but in Cuſtomes alſo, four of which I will here ſet down as a light to the reſt. Firſt they account themſelves free from taxes and contributions to the Kings of Spain, yielding them obedience with their Bodies, but not with their Purſes. And when any of the Spaniſh Kings in their Progreſſes come to the Frontires of this Country, he bareth one of his Legs, and in that manner entreth into it. There he is met by the Lords and Gentlemen there dwelling, who proffer him ſome few ſmall Braſs pieces (Maravidis they call them, whereof 600 go to a Crown) in a leathern bag, hanged at the end of a Lance; but withall they tell him, that he muſt not take them. Which Ceremony performed, they all attend the King in his journey. Secondly, They admit no Biſhops to come amongſt them; and when Ferdinand the Catholick came in Progreſs hither, accompanied, amongſt others, by the Biſhop of Pampelune, the people aroſe in Arms, drave back the Biſhop, and gathering all the duſt on which they thought he had troden, caſt it into the Sea. Which averſneſs unto Biſhops, as they firſt took up in all probability, on ſome hard uſage which they found at the hands of their Prelates; and ſtill retain it out of a ſtubbornneſs of Nature, moſt peculiar to them: ſo poſſible enough it is, that the want of Biſhops, and of Epiſcopall Viſitations amongſt the Biſcaines, is not the leaſt cauſe of that ignorance and rudeneſs (ſpoken of before) which is found amongſt them. Thirdly, they allow not any Prieſts to live in their Villages, except he bring his Concubine with him: conceiving it impoſſible for to keep their Wives unto themſelves, if the Curate hath not a woman of his own. Fourthly, The Women at all meetings do firſt taſt of the Cup, and ſo diſpoſe of it to the men; which Cuſtom they have had amongſt them ever ſince Ogne, the Counteſs of Caſtile, attempted to have poyſoned her Sonne Sancho in a Cup of Wine.

But to return again to the old Inhabitants, they were a people of that courage, that they defended the liberty of that Countrey againſt the Romans, when the reſidue of Spain was ſubdued, and were at laſt, not without great effuſion of blood, and manifeſt tokens of manly reſolution, and heroick ſpirits on their parts, vanquiſhed by the darling of Fortune, Auguſtus. Such hilly and mountainous people are alwaies the laſt that are conquered, and the firſt that ſtand on their own guard: as beſides theſe Biſcaines, the Navarrois and Aſturians here in Spain, in reſpect of the Moores; and our Britans, in relation to the Saxons. Whether it be, that living in a ſharp air, and being inured to labour, they prove on occaſion good and able men; or that the Forts of Natures own building are not ſo eaſily wonne, as defended; or that the unpleaſantneſs of the Country, and unfruitfulneſs of the ſoyl, yeeld no occaſion to ſtrangers, to deſire and adventure for, I take not on me to determine.

But

But being overcome at last, they were first cast into the Province of Tarraconensis; and so continued after the new modelling of Spain by the Emperour Constantine. Under the Romans they continued till that Empire fell: and then not conquered by the Goths, but resigned over to them by the Romans, with the rest of that Province. Nor lost they any thing of their antient and naturall courage by the intermixture of the Vascons: continuing still good Souldiers both for Sea and Land; a stubborn, fierce, and couragious people; impatient of servitude, and not easie to be forced to any thing which they like not of. The last of all the Spaniards that submitted to the furie of the Moores (excepting those of the Asturia's never conquered by them) and one of the first Provinces which shook off that yoak, animated and conducted in that undertakingby Soria, descended of the blood Royall of Scotland, Anno 87. made upon that good service the first Lord of Biscay. After this they continued a free and distinct estate, under their own Proprietarie Lords and Princes of the noble Family of Haro, till that Nero of Spain, Don Pedro the Cruel, violently took it from Donna Ieanne, the right heir of it, Anno 1358. From which Donna Ieanne, the eldest Daughter, maried to Ferdinand the younger Sonne of Ferdinand de la Cerde, the right Heir of Castile, issued the Lady Ieanne Manuel, the Wife of Henry the second, and Mother of John the first, both Kings of Castile: by which last this Countrey was united to that Crown for ever, Anno 1379. The names of the Proprietary Lords of this Estate, we have in this following Catalogue of Galicia.

1290. 14 Diego Lopes III. the Brother of Diego Lopes Diaz the 2d, the Founder of the Town of Bilbo.

1319. 16 Iohn the Blinde, so called because he had lost an eye, Sonne of Iohn of Castile, and Mary Diaz of Haro, slain by King Alfonso.
1329. 17 Iohn Nugnes of Lara, in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Iohn the Blind (whose name I find not) succeeded after the decease of Donna Maria Diaz.
1350. 18 Nugno de Lara, an Infant of two yeers old, succeeded Iohn Nugnes of Lara his Father.
1351. 19 Ieane and Isabel, the Sisters and Heirs of Nugno de Lara, seized upon by Don Pedro and the whole Signeurie of Biscay subjected by strong hand to the Crown of Castile, with many other fair Estates which depended on it.

The Arms of these Lords of Biscay, were Argent, two Wolves Sable, each of them in his mouth a Lamb of the second.

5 GALLICIA.

GALICIA, or GALLÆCIA, is bounded on the East, with the Asturias, from which parted by the River Mouro; on the South, with Portugall, from which divided by the River Minio; on the North, with the Cantabrian; and on the West, with the Atlantick Oceans. The antient Inhabitants of it were the Gallaici, (whence it had the name) distinguished into the severall Tribes of the Bedyi, Seuri, Celini, Capori, and Lemavi, spoken of by Ptolomie.

The Countrie like that of the Asturias, mountainous, and almost inaccessible, overspread with the Cantabrian hils; and so the fitter to hold out against forrein invasions. in defence of Libertie and Religion; in that regard chosen for a retiring place by the distressed and vanquished Christians, in their first Wars against the Moores. Not well inhabited to this day, not so much for the hilliness of the Countrie, as for want of Water; which defect makes the people generally draw more towards Gallicia. towards the Sea, where they improve their fortunes by trade, and fiſhing. The barrenneſs of the Countrie recompenced heretofore by the rich mines of Gold and Silver; which in this Countrie, and the Aſtures, and ſome part of Luſitania, afforded yeerly 20000 pound weight of Gold unto the Romans, amounting in our money to two millions of Crowns; but now no mines found in it of any value. Inſtead of which, it yeeldeth the beſt mines for Iron, of any Provinc̃e of Spain, for which their Waters are ſo proper, that they are ſaid to fortifie and improve the metal.

Places of principall importance are, 1 Compoſtella, an Vniverſity, and Archbiſhops See, vulgarly called St. Iago, in honour of S. Iames, the ſonne of Zebedee, whom they pretend to be buried here; and of whom there is denominated an Order of Knights: his Relicks ſaid to be kept in the chief Church of it, worſhipped by the Romaniſts with great devotion, and drawing to this place a wonderfull concourſe of people comming thither on pilgrimage. 2 Baiona, not far from the mouth of the River Minio. 3 Coruuna, by Ptolomie called Flavium Brigantium, by us Engliſh, the Groyn; often mentioned in the ſtorie of our Wars with the Spaniard, in Qu. Elizabeths time; then taken by the Engliſh, but ſince very well fortified to avoid the like ſurprizall. Divided then as now, into the High Town, and the Low: ſituate on the Cantabrian Sea betwixt the Promontorie Trilencum, now Cabo Ortegal, lying towards the Eaſt, and that of old called Nerium, now Cabo Finis terre, as being the moſt Weſtern end of the then known World: 4 Oreus, upon the Minio, a Biſhops See, by Ptolomie called Aquæ Calidæ from the Bathes here being; now much commended for the beſt Wines. 5 Tui, on the ſame River, frontiring upon Portugall; a Biſhops See, in antient Writers called Tudæ. 6 Ponte-vedre, 7 Ribadeo, both upon the ſea, both fitted with convenient Harbours.

The antient Inhabitants hereof, as before is ſaid, were the Gallaici, one of the laſt Nations which ſubmitted to the power of the Romans: by whom firſt made a part of Tarraconenſis, after a Province of it ſelf, by the name of Gallicia, the Aſturias, and ſome part of the Old Caſtile and Portugall, being added to it. In the declining of that Empire, the Suevi, a potent Nation of Germanie, accompanying the Vandals and Alani in their tranſmigrations, invaded Spain, and firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of this Countrey. But not content with their Eſtate, they warred on the Silinges (a Vandal-tribe) then poſſeſſing Bætica; whom they vanquiſhed, and took that Province from them, under the conduct of Rechila their ſecond King. They added ſhortly after, Luſitania, to their former conqueſts: ſtopped in their careere, by Theodorick the 2d, King of the Gothes, by whom vanquiſhed, and confined again within Gallicia, which they enjoyed, till the finall ruine of their kingdom by Leutigild the Goth, Anno 858. reduced then to a Province of the Gothiſh kingdom. Their habitation before their comming into Spain, was in the Eaſtern part of Germanie beyond the Elb. Their Religion at the firſt under Recciarius their third King, was very Orthodox and ſound. But vanquiſhed by the Gothes, and obliged unto them for the reſtoring of their kingdom, they fell off to Arianiſm: perſiſting in that Hereſie for the ſpace of an hundred years; and then again returning to the Catholick Faith, under Theodomire their King, therein continuing conſtant till their finall overthrow. The Kings hereof (as many as are upon record) are theſe that follow.

Kings of the Suevi in Gallicia.

1 Hermenericus, who firſt brought the Suevians into Spain, and poſſeſſed Gallicia. Arcadius and Honorius then Emperours of the Eaſt and Weſt.
2 Rechila, who conquered the Silinges, and ſubdued Batica.
3 Recciarius, the firſt Chriſtian King, who won Luſitania; afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by Theodorick King of the Gothes, the Suevians for a time becomming ſubject to that King.
4 Maſdras, reſtored unto the kingdom by Theodorick.
5 Frumarius, the Sonne of Maſdras.
6 Remiſmundus, Brother of Frumarius, recovered ſome part of Luſitania, and fell off to Ariaviſm.
7 Theodomirus, the Reſtorer of the Catholick Faith amongſt the Suevians.
8 Ariamirus, Sonne to Theodomire.
9 Eboricus, the Sonne of Ariamirus, depoſed, and ſhorn Monk by Andeca.
10 Andeca, the laſt King of the Suevii in Gallicia, or rather the Vſurper of the Regall title, ſerved in the ſame kind by Leutigildis King of the Gothes, as he had ſerved Eboricus his Lord and Maſter. After which time Gallicia was made a Province of the Gothiſh Monarchy, and the name of Suevians no more heard of in Spain. In times enſuing it became a part of the Kingdom of Leon, erected to a Kingdom by Alfonſo the Great, King of Oviedo and Leon, and given unto his Sonne Ordogno, Anno 886. And though Ordogno came after to ſucceed in his Fathers Throne, his elder Brother Garcias dying without iſſue; yet did Gallicia continue as a State diſtinct till wreſted from the Owners of it by Alfonſo the ſixt of Leon, and the third of Caſtile; by whom incorporate with this Kingdom, never ſince diſ-joyned: the Caſtilians being too good Stateſmen to diſmember Kingdoms.

The Arms hereof were Azure, ſeme of Croſſets Fitchee; a Chalice covered, Or.

6. The Kingdom of CORDVBA. Corduba.

HAving thus surveied those Provinces under the Government of Castile, which lye at the foot of the Pyrenees, and on the shores of the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean; we will next look on those which lye more toward the Streights of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean: And so come round at last to Castile it self. And first we will begin with the Kingdom of CORDVBA, which at the first erection of it, contained all those parts of Spain conquered by the Moores, and not again recovered by the Kings of Leon and Navarre: contracted within narrower bounds when subdued by the King of Castile, at that time comprehending only the Provinces of Andalusia, Extemadura, Granada, and the Isle of Gades. We will consider it notwithstanding in both capacities; in the first and largest notion, as unto the storie and affairs thereof, till distracted by the Moores into many Kingdoms: in the last and strictest, as to the Chorographie, and Description of it.

The Kingdom of CORDVBA, as it stood when subdued by the Spaniards, was bounded on the East with Murcia and the Mediterranean; on the West, with Portugal and the Ocean; on the North, with the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and Castile; and on the South, with the Ocean, the streights of Gibraltar, and the Midland Seas; so called from Corduba the chief Citie of it and the Seat Royal of their Kings.

It contained as before was said, the Provinces of 1 Andalusia. 2 Gades. 3 Extremadura, and 4 Granada. But because Granada had the fortune to continue a Kingdom, when the rest were conquered, we will consider it by it self: and here proceed to the description of the other three.

1 ANDALVSIA is bounded on the East with Granada; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean, and Algarve, in Portugal; on the North, with Sierra Morena, and Extremadura; on the South, with the Ocean, the Streights, and the Mediterranean. By Plinie it is called Conventus Cordubensis, from Corduba, at that time the chief Citie of it; and after, Andalusia, quasi Vandalusia from the Vandals, who having won it from the Romans, had for some time, and till their expulsion into Africa, possessed themselves of it.

This is the most rich and fertile Countrie of all Spain, watered with the Rivers 1 Anas, 2 Odier, 3 Batis, and 4 Tenos, which makes it flouriſh with a continuall greenness of Olives, Vines, and other Fruits; of which the Hils, though watred only with the dew of Heaven, doe partake also in some measure. The Air hereof, by reason of its Southernly situation, is exceeding hot, in so much that their Corn there is ripe in Aprill: but those excessive heats much moderated by those constant refreshings, which the cool winds breathing from the North doe bestow upon it. In which respect King Ferdinand the Catholick did use to say, that it was best living in the Summer at Sevill, (one of the chief Cities of this Province) by reason of these cool refreshings; and in the Winter times at Burgos in old Castile, which though situate more Northernly, in a very sharp air, had yet many notable defences against the cold.

The Principall Cities and Towns hereof are, 1 Corduba, seated at the foot of Sierra Morena, on the left shore of Guadalquivir, over-looking towards the South, a spacious and fruitfull Plain; the first Colonie planted in this Province by the Romans, and the chief Citie of Betica. For a long time the seat of the Mooriſh Vice-Royes, Leiutenants to the Great Caliph of the Saracens; after of its own kings of that Nation, who built here for their Palace a magnificent Castle; Reduced by Ferdinand of Castile, it was restored unto the honour of an Episcopal See, which antiently it had, and doth now enjoy; A Citie of great Circuit, but of very few houses, by reason of the multitude of Gardens in it. Famous in former times for the birth of Lucan, and both the Seneca's.

> Duosque Senecas, unicumque Lucanum
> Fœcunda loquitur Corduba: saith Martial.
> Corduba glorying in her fruitfull field,
> One Lucan, and two Seneca's did yeed.

It is now vulgarly called Cordova; and hence commeth our true Cordovan leather, made of the skin of a Sardinian beast. Neer unto this Citie is a Wood of 30 miles in length, having nothing but Olive trees. 2 Iaen, a Bishops See, remarkable for nothing more, than that the Kings of Spain, ever since the first Recoverie of it, have stiled themselves Kings of Iaen, and use it to this day amongst the rest of their Titles, it having been before that time, the seat and title of some petit King amongst the Moores. Not far hence stood the famous Town of Illiturgis, (by Ptolomie Illurgis) mentioned so often in the wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3 Ossuna, of most note for the Dukes hereof, and a small Vniversity founded here, Anno 1549. 4. Eccia, on the River Genil, of more esteem formerly than at the present; by Ptolomie and Antoninus called Astygi, by Plinie, Augusta Firma, a Roman Colonie, and one of the four Iuridicall Reserts of Betica. 5 Marchena, situate on an Hill, where is said to be the best breed of Gennets (a swift race of Horses) not of this Province alone, but of all Spain; the River Batis (as it was thought) conveying some secret vertue into them. Of this race was the Horse which Cæsar so loved, that he erected his statue (when dead) in the Temple of Venus: and the antient Lusitani thought they were begotten by the wind. 6 Xeres, situate more within the Mid-lands, towards the borders of Granada, Corduba, nada, and therefore called Xeres de la Frontera, (the Asta of Ptolomie and Antoninus) famous for plenty of that wine, which we call Xeres Sack; but more for that great and fatall battel fought neer unto it, betwixt K. Roderick and the Moores, the loss of which drew along with it the loss of Spain. 7 Medina Sidonia (so called to distinguish it from a Town of Castile, called Medina Cœli;) the Duke whereof was General of all the Forces, both by Sea and Land, intended for the Conquest of England, Anno 1588. The Town called antiently Asinda, and Asido Cæsariana: the Duke whereof is of the Family of the Guzmans, and the greatest Prince for Revenue in all Spain, his Intrado being estimated at 130000 Crowns per Annum. 7 Algezire, on the Sea side, A Town of such strength and consequence, that it held out a Siege of 19 moneths for the Moores of Africk, against Alfonso the 5 of Castile, to whom surrendred at the last upon Composition, Anno 1343. Since which the Kings of Castile have stiled themselves Kings of Algezire; not yet discontinued. 8 Const, a Town on the sea-coast beyond the Isle of Gades, part of the Patrimonie of the D. of Medina Sidonia. 9 Gibraltar, a strong Town seated at the mouth of the Streights from hence denominated, lying at the foot of the mountain of Calpe, supposed to be one of Hercules Pillars; the furthest point Southwards of all Europe. 10 S. Lucar de Barameda, the Port-Town to Sevill, situate at the mouth of the River Bætis, or Guadalquivir: where the Ships of that rich Citie ride, either for a Wind to put to Sea; or for a tide to carry them up the River, as they come from America. 11 Tariffa, seated at the end of the Promontory which looks toward Africk, and so called, because Tariff, Leader of the Moores into Spain, here landed. Not far from these last Towns in a little Iland made by two branches of the Bætis where it falleth into the Sea, stood the famous 11 Tartessus, celebrated in most antient Writers for the abundance of Silver which the mines of it did produce. Which was so great, that (as we read in Aristotle's Book de Mirabilibus) when the Tyrians or Phœnicians first came thither, ὥστε μηκέτι ἔχειν δυνάσθαι, μήτε ἐπιδεῖξασθαι τὸ ἄργυρον, that their ships were neither able to contain it, or transport it thence: insomuch that they were fain to make their Anchors and other Utensils of Silver. The like commodity the Grecians found in their Voyages hither, of which Herodotus maketh mention Lib. IV. Hereupon some have been perswaded that the ships which Solomon built to go for Tarshish (whereof we read 1 Kings 10. v. 22.) were bound no further than this place. But we will not enter at this time upon that dispute. As for the situation of it, that it was neither Tariff, as some, or Carteia, as others doe conjecture; (though where Carteia was be a like uncertain, if not the same with Tariff) but in a small Iland at the mouth of the River Bætis, as before is said, doth appear by Strabo. Who telleth us that Bætis falls into the Sea with two mouths or channels, πόλιν ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ χώρῳ κατοικεῖσθαι, ἣν καλεῖσθαι Ταρτησσὸν, &c. and that in the middest thereof there is a Citie called Tartessus, of the same name with the River (for Bætis antiently was so named) from whence the whole Countrey thereabouts is called Tartessis. The like Pausanius saith expresly in his Eliaca. Which situation of this Town in an Iland, at the mouth of Bætis, occasioned Plinie and some others of the antient Writers, to give the name of Tartessus to the Isle of Gades; whereof more anon. In the mean time go we on to 12 Sevill, (in Latine, Hispalis,) the fairest Citie, not only of Andaluzia, but of all Spain. It is in compass 6 miles, environed with beautifull walls, and adorned with many magnificent and stately buildings, as Palaces, Churches, and Monasteries: amongst which, that of the Gertosins is endowed with 25000 Crowns of yearly revenue. It is also the See of an Archbishop, under whose Jurisdiction are said to be 20000 Villages; & a most flourishing Vniversity, wherein studied Avicen the Moore, that excellent and learned scholar; Pope Sylvester the second, and Leander. Famous also it is for two Provinciall Councills holden here, the first Anno 584, the last An. 636. and also that here are continually maintained 30000 Gennets for the service of the King. The River Bætis divideth it into two parts, both joyned together by a stately and beautifull Bridge. From this Town come our Sevill Orenges; from hence the Castilians set forwards towards America, and here they doe discharge the Fleets of Gold and Silver, which they bring from thence. To this Town come the Pearls of Cubagua, and the Emeralds of St. Martha, the Cochineile of Mexico, the Corals of Hispaniola; and in a word, the whole treasure of the New-found-World. Here is the publick Emporie of all Spain for her Wines and Oyls; sent from hence in so great abundance into all parts of Europe, that the People use to say in the way of a By-word, That if there enter not into Sevill 4000 Pipes of Wine every day in the yeer, the Farmer of the Customes is sure to break: insomuch as the Revenue coming out of this Citie onely, are worth a very good Realm to the Catholick King; Maginus reckoning it at no less than a Million of Crowns yeerly. Lastly, here resteth the body of Christopher Columbus, the fortunate Discoverer of the New-World, with this Epitaph upon his Tomb; but short (God knoweth) of the great merit of the Man.

To ſcull the Weſtern waves; and was delighted,
To find ſuch coaſts as were unknown before.
Th' event was good, for I deſcri'd the ſhore

And yet I greater matters left behind
For men of more means, and a braver mind.

The Archbiſhop of this Citie is of great both riches and autority: inſomuch that his Revenues are reckoned at 100000 Crowns per Annum, as having in his whole Dioceſe 2000 Benefices, beſides Frieries, Nunneries, and Hoſpitals; and that he is next in degree to him of Toledo; and is accompted the Metropolitan of Andaluſia, and the Fortunate Ilands. Iſidore ſo much renowned for his profoundneſs in learning, was Biſhop here, which is uſually called Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis, to diſtinguiſh him from another of that name in Egypt, called Peluſiota. As for the fortunes of the Town in civil matters, in the declining of the Moores, when their Eſtate was broken into many Realms and Principalities, it became kingdō a of it ſelf, continuing in that dignity till the year 1248. when taken and ſubdued by Ferdinand the 2d of Caſtile, and made a part of his Eſtates; but ſo, that it remaineth a Realm diſtinct in the Regall ſtile, in which the Kings of Spain are called Kings of Sevill. 2 South of Andaluſia, at the mouth of Guadalquivir, ſtands the Iſle of GADES, diſtant from the main land 700 paces, and joyned unto it with a Bridge called Puento de Suaco. It is in length 13 miles, of a very fruitfull ſoyl, beſides the riches which it gets by Fiſhing, and making of Salt: Firſt peopled by the Tyrians 562 yeers before the Birth of CHRIST; ſubdued by the Carthaginians, Anno V. C. 236. being invited by the Tyrians to aid them in a defenſive War againſt the Spaniards; and was the laſt hold which the Carthaginians had in Spain, out of which beaten by the valour and good fottune of Scipio Africanus. Here ſtood in antient times a Temple conſecrated to the honour of Hercules, in which all Seafaring men (at their being here) uſed to pay their vows, and offer ſacrifice, as being arived at the furtheſt parts of all the World.

Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1 Porto Real, a fair and capacious Haven, between the Town of Cadiz, and the main Land of Andaluſia. 2 Santa Maria, another Port more towards the North. 3 Cadis, or Gades, the chief Town of the Iland, and giving name unto the whole. Situate in the Weſtern part of the whole Iſle, on a large Bay ſerving as a Road for the Indian Fleet, by the reſort and trade whereof it is much enriched. Firſt founded the Tyrians, afterwards made a Municipal Citie by the Romans, and one of the Juridicall Reſorts for the Province of Batica: in whoſe times it was held to be the nobleſt and richeſt in all Spain, not yielding to any in the Empire for greatneſs, magnificence, or number of Inhabitants of account and quality: Inſomuch that here lived at one time 500 Roman Knights, which number was not equalled in any one place, except Padua onely: beſides the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of the World. Which great reſort, occaſioned Cornelius Balbus, a Native of it, to adde a new Town to the old; the whole circumference of both being 20 furlongs. By the Moores, at their conqueſt of Spain, it was utterly ruined, but ſince repaired, and well fortified, and made the Magazin for the Ammunition of the Spaniſh Navyes. Taken notwithſtanding in one day by the Engliſh, under the conduct of Charles Lord Effingham, Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Sir Walter Ralegh: in which they burned the Indian Fleet, conſiſting of 40 ſhips, whoſe lading was worth 8 Millions of Crowns; overcame the Spaniſh Navy, conſiſting of 57 Men of War; took the St. Michael, and the St. Andrew, two great Galleons, with their luggage; ſpoyled and carried away more martiall furniture, than could be ſupplyed in many yeers; and forced the Town, in which they ſlew and took Priſoners 4000 Foot and 600 horſe, and brought thence a very great bootie in the ſackage of it, Anno 1596. The fortunacie of which enterpriſe gave occaſion to one of the Wits then living to frame this excellent Anagram on the name of the Earl of Eſſex, (who was looked on as the greateſt Adventurer in it) viz. Devereux, Verè dux. Which he afterwards caſt into this Diſtich.

Verè dux Devereux, et verior Hercule; GADES,
Nam ſemel his vidit, vicit at ille ſimul.

Alcides yeelds to Devereux; he did ſee
Thy Beauties (Cales) but Devereux conquer'd thee.

Neer to this Iſle, is that ſo celebrated Streight called by ſome Fretum Gaditanum, from the neerneſs of it to this Iland; by others, Fretum Herculeum, not becauſe Hercules did there break out a paſſage to let the Ocean into the Mediterranean, as the Poets Fabled; but becauſe of the two Pillars which he cauſed to be erected on each ſide of it, with the Inſcription of Nil Ultra, this being ſuppoſed to be the furtheſt Countrie Weſtward. But when that ſuppoſition was proved untrue by the diſcovery of America, Charles the fift being in thoſe parts, cauſed two new Pillars to be placed where the old ones ſtood, or rather where he thought they ſtood, and Plus ultra to be written on them. As for thoſe Pillars ſo much memorized in the antient Writers, ſome place them in the Temple of Hercules, within this Iland; others on the Promontorie of Calpe in Spain, and that of Abila in Africk; and ſome again in two little Ilands neer thoſe Promontories. This therefore being a matter doubtfull and not worth the looking after, let us return unto the Streight; called led now the Streight of Gibraltar, from the Town and Caſtle of Gibraltar, ſituate on the brink hereof; the Streight being in length fifteen miles, and in breadth, where it is narroweſt, ſeven.

EXTREMADVRA hath on the Eaſt and North Caſtile; on the Weſt, Portugal; and on the South, Andalzia. It was firſt called Baturia, from the River Batis, which runneth thorow it; and for diſtinction ſake Baturia Celtica, from the Celtici, then the Inhabitants of this Tract, to difference it from Baturia Turdulorum, containing thoſe parts of Granada, and Andaluzia, which lye neereſt unto Tarraconenſis. And when firſt it had the name of Extremadura, it was of larger extent than now it is, reaching unto the banks of the River Duero, the bounds at that time of the Kingdom of the Moriſcos; ſo called by the Chriſtians, as lying on the extremities, or furtheſt ſide of that River.

Principall places in it, are, 1 Alcantara, on the banks of the River Tagus, ſituate neer the ruins of Norba Caſarea, deſtroyed by Petronius and Afranius, two of Pompey's Captains, for adhering faithfully to Caſar: now of moſt note for an Order of Knights here ſeated, and from hence denominated, whereof more hereafter. 2 Guadalcanal, famous for its Mines of Silver and Gold. 3 Merida, ſituate alſo on the Tagus, firſt called Auguſta Emerita, founded and made a Colonie by Auguſtus Caſar, who placed herein his old Souldiers, whom the Romans called Emeriti; hence it had the name. The chief Citie after that of Luſitania, and by Anſonius preferred before any in Spain; now ruinous, meanly built, and but ill inhabited: Famous for nothing but the Bridge upon the River Tagus, a Monument of the Roman greatneſs. Nigh to this Town was fought that memorable battel betwixt Wallia, the firſt King of the Gothes in Spain, and Atace King of the Alani and Silinges (this laſt a people of the Vandals) the victory whereof falling to the Gothes, cauſed the whole Nation of the Vandals to draw forth out of Spain. 4 Medelino, neer which the River Guadiana hideth it ſelf under the ground, for the ſpace of 10 Leagues; but more famous for the birth of Ferdinand Cortez, the fortunate Diſcoverer and Conquerour of the Realm of Mexico. 5 Badaios, a Biſhops See on the borders of Portugal. 6 Guadalupe, on a River of the ſame name, renowned amongſt thoſe of the Church of Rome, for the miracles and Image of our Lady of Guadalupe, as much reſorted to in Spain, as our Lady of Loretto is in Italy. 7 Placenza, a Biſhops See, neer the Hils of Caſtile, not far from which in a retired and ſolitarie place ſtandeth the Monaſterie of S. Juſtus, remarkable for a greater Miracle, than any the Lady of Guadalupe is able to boaſt of: which is, that Charles the fifth, that moſt puiſſant Monarch, having reſigned his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand, and all the reſt of his Dominions to his Son Philip the 2d, did here bid farewell unto the World, ſpending the reſidue of his time in prayers of devout Meditations. The greateſt Monument and example of Self-deniall which theſe later Ages have afforded, far beyond any abnegation of the World by our cloyſtered Monks; or any quitting of their Crowns by ſome Kings and Emperours in the darker Ages of the Church, who living in the time of Ignorance and Superſtition, ſaw not ſo cleerly what they did (or did it out of weakneſs, and want of ſpirit) as this Maſculine and Heroick Emperour.

The old Inhabitants of theſe Countries, were the Turduli, the Baſtuli. and the Turditani, of Andaluſia, and Granada; the Celtici, and ſome part of the Luſitani, in Extremadura; all vanquiſhed by the Romans, during the ſecond Punick war, under the fortunate command of Scipio African. From them extorted by the Vandals, who paſſing over into Africk left it to the Suevians; loſt by them to Theodorik the 4th King of the Gothes, who hereby added all Batica to his other Dominions. Vnder the Gothes it remained ſubject till their fatall over-throw by the Moores, who having made almoſt an entire Conqueſt of all the Continent of Spain, were at firſt ſubject to the Great Caliphs (Lords of the Saracenical Empire) governing here by their Lieutenants, from Vlidor Vbit, under whom they firſt made this Conqueſt, Anno 714, to Abdalla of the Houſe of Alaveci, Anno 757. At what time Abderamen, of the Line of Mahomet the Impoſtor, and firſt Caliph of the Saracens, flying the fury of Abdalla, by whom the old Line of the Caliphs, of the Race of Humeia (of which Race this Abderamen was) had been diſpoſſeſſed of that Empire; came into Spain, and was with great joy entertained by the Spaniſh Moores, cordially affected to his Houſe; whoſe Government he took upon him, diſcharged of all ſubjection and ſubordination to the Caliphs, or Mahometum Emperours, and making it an abſolute Kingdom of it ſelf. In his Race it continued without any fractions or ſubdiviſions, till the time of Hizen the 2d, the tenth King of theſe Spaniſh Moores; after whoſe death diſtracted amongſt many petit Tyrants, till they were all brought under by the Moores of Africk; of which more anon. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of the Kings of theſe Moores of Spain, called commonly from Corduba their Royal Seat.

1014. 20 Mahomet IV. the laſt King of the Moores in Corduba, before the ſecond Conqueſt of theſe parts of Spain by the Moores of Africa. Concerning which we are to know, that after the great Victory obtained at Clavigio, againſt Abderamen the 2d, by Ramir King of Leon, Anno 826. the power and reputation of the Spaniſh Moores began to decline: brought utterly to nothing, by the ſloath and negligence of Hizen the 2d; after a long and unprofitable Reign, depoſed by Zulcimen, who ſucceeded. But the Moores not eaſily brooking the command of a new Vſurper, fell into many Fractions, and Diviſions amongſt themſelves: every great man ſeizing on ſome part of the Kingdom, which he retained unto himſelf with the name of King; from whence we have a King of Sevil, another of Toledo, a third of Cordova; the names of which laſt only doe occurre in the former Catalogue. And 'twas a ſign the Kingdom was in the expiring, when ſo many Kings ſucceeded in ſo few yeers, after one another; there paſſing from the depoſing of Hizen the 2d, to the beginning of Mahomet the 4th, not above 34 yeers in all; during which time we find no fewer than ten Kiugs. The often change of Princes, and ſhort lives of Kings are the apparent ſigns of a ruinous ſtate, approaching very neer to its expiration; as may be ſeen by the ſhort lives and Reigns of the laſt Weſtern Emperours, nine of them hardly Reigning 20 yeers; as alſo of the Kings of the Gothes in Italy, of which the ſix laſt held the Throne no longer, than the nine Weſtern Emperours had done before them. But to proceed, Mahomet the laſt King of this firſt Rank, having left the ſtage, we find no good Conſtat of his Succeſſors in the kingdom of Corduba, made inconſiderable by the withdrawing ſo many Provinces from the body of it: the pride and inſolencie of which Roytelets and petit Tyrants, forced them at laſt to call unto their aid the Kings or Miramomolines of Morocco; by whom themſelves and all the reſt of their Corrivals were in fine ſubdued. Vnder ſeven Princes of Morocco, the Spaniſh Moores continued ſubject about 120 yeers, that is to ſay, from the firſt coming in of Ioſeph Telephin the Miramamoline, Anno 1091, unto the going out of Mahomet, ſurnamed the Green, Anno 1214, during which time the affairs of the Moores in Spain were ſo well conducted, that they loſt nothing to the Chriſtians, but Extremadura, taken from them by Alfonſo the 2d in the accompt of Caſtile, the 7th in the accompt of Leon, Anno 1147, and the Citie of Lisbon taken from them in the ſame yeer alſo by Alfonſo, the firſt King of Portugal. But Nahomet the Green being vanquiſhed in the great fight at Sierra Morena, by the joynt Forces of the confederated Chriſtians, left off all further care of the Moores in Spain; after his going thence diſtracted once again into many Kingdoms, all of them ſwallowed up in a little time by the Kings of Caſtile, Aragon, and Portugal. And amongſt them the kingdom of Corduba, not able to ſtand long on this new Foundation, was ruinated and brought under the command of the Caſtilians, by their King Ferdinand the 2d, Anno 1236. Since that time there is no more mention of the kingdom of Corduba.

Granada.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Lyon Gules, armed and crowned of the firſt, a Border Azure charged with 8 Towers Argent.

7 GRANADA.

GRANADA is bounded on the Weſt with Andaluſia; on the Eaſt, with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the North, with New Caſtile; on the South, with the Mediterranean only. So called from Granada, the chief Citie and Seat Royal of it.

It is in length 200 miles, 100 miles in breadth, and about 700 miles in compaſs. The North part of the Countrey plain, the South parts over-ſpread with the Alpuxarras, and other ſpurres and branches of the Oroſpeda. In the time of the Moores wonderfully well inhabited, and full of all ſorts of commodities; the Hils planted with Vines and Fruits, the Plains and Vallies ſwelling with Corn and Gardens: ſince their expulſion, neither much peopled nor very fruitfull, for want of men to dreſs and manure the Land. The principal Cities of it, are 1 Granada, ſituate on two Hils, divided by a Valley, thorow which runneth the River Darien; conſiſting of four ſeverall parts, called Alhambre, Sierre de ſol, Granada, and Antequerula; the two firſt ſtanding on the Hils, the two laſt in the Valley: the whole containing in the time of the Mooriſh kingdom about 200000 of ſouls. Fenced with ſtrong wals, fortified with 130 Turrets, and repleniſhed with abundance of wholſome and pleaſant Springs; the whole Circuit being about ſeven miles. The Merchants and Gentry of the beſt ſort doe dwell in that part which is called Granada; the houſes of which are for the moſt part built of free ſtone, with delicate and artificiall Maſonrie, ſhewing great magnificence. Herein ſtandeth the Cathedral Church, a work of admirable ſtructure, of Figure round, as having ſometimes been a Mahumetane Moſquit. Here is alſo the place which they call Alcazar, repreſenting a little Town, the which are ten Gates. In the Alhambre is the Palace of the Mooriſh Kings, covered with Gold, indented with Moiſaical work; and which by reaſon of the ſtructure, and multitude of Fountains which are about it, may be put amongſt the Wonders of the World; having withall a goodly proſpect over all the Town, lying under it upon the Eaſt, a ſpacious Champian towards the North, and the ſnowie tops of Sierra Nevade towards the South. This Citie is the ordinarie Parliament, and Court of Iuſtice for all the Southern Granada. thern parts of Spain, as Valladolit is for the Northern; Madrid, which is the higheſt Court, having jurisdiction over, and receiving Appeals from both. A Town firſt railed out of the ruines of Illiberis, ſituate not far off on the Hill Elvire, much mentioned in the ſtories of Rome and Carthage. In the two other parts of the Town, there is nothing remarkable, inhabited only by Mechanicks of the poorer ſort. 2 Alhama, ſeated amongſt ſteep and craggie rocks, out of which iſſue Medicinall Waters, occaſioning a great reſort of the Spaniſh Gentrie. 3 Guacir, an Epiſcopall See, about nine leagues from Granada, 4 Veles Malaga, (by Ptolomie called Sex, by Antoninus, Sexicanum) ſituate at the Foot of the Mountains called Alpuxarras, a large branch of the Oroſpeda, overſpreading a great part of this Countrie, heretofore planted with incredible numbers of Moores, who choſe to dwell there for the ſtrength and ſafety of the ſituation; ſince their expulſion, deſolate and unfrequented, nothing remaining of them now but the Arabick Language, which is ſtill ſpoke by thoſe few people which inhabit in it. The Mountains in this tract ſo high, that from the topps hereof a man may eaſily diſcern the whole courſe of the Streight of Gibraltar, together with the Towns of Seuta and Tangier in Africk. 5 Ronda, at the foot of another branch of the Oroſpeda, called from this Town, Sierra de Ronda. Not far from which, by Munda, now a very ſmall Village, was fought that memorable battell betwixt Ceſar and the Sonnes of Pompey: the honour of which fell to Ceſar, who then made an end of the Civill Wars, which that very day four yeares before were begun by Pompey the Father. In this fight was Cn. Pompeius ſlain, and his Forces broken: Ceſar himſelf being ſo put to it, that ſeeing his Soldiers give back, he was fain to maintain the fight by his own great courage, bidding them remember, that at Munda they forſook their Generall. The ſhame of which reproach, and his noble example, encouraged them to a new onſet, which was honoured with a ſignall and remarkable Victory: this being the laſt fight that Ceſar was in, murdered not long after in the Senate-houſe. And of this Fight he uſed to ſay, That in all other places he fought for his Honour, but in this for his life. 6 Antiquera, heretofore a well-fortified Town, bordering cloſe upon Caſtile. 7 Maxacra, on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, ſuppoſed to be the Margis of Ptolomie. 8 Vera, on the ſame ſhore, the furtheſt Town of Betica, and of this Countrie towards Murcia. 9 Malaga, or Malaca, ſituate at the mouth of Guadalquivir, once ſacked by Craſſus the rich Roman; Who flying out of Spain, to avoid the furie of Marius and Cinna, who had ſlain his Father and Uncle, hid himſelf and his Companions in a Cave hereabouts for eight moneths together: but after hearing of their deaths, iſſued out, and ranſacked, amongſt many other Cities, this Malaga. A Town of great traffick, and much reſort, eſpecially for Raiſins, Almonds, Malaga Sacks: well fortified, and of great importance, as a Town of War; and to the great prejudice of the Moors taken by Ferdinand the Catholick, Anno 1487. the conqueſt of the whole kingdom of Granada following not long after. It was ſince made a Biſhops See, or reſtored rather to that dignity which it had of old. 10 Almeria, a noted haven on the Mediterranean, the Abdera of Mela, a Colonie of the Carthaginians, and antiently a Biſhops See.

As for the fortunes of this Countrie, after the Conqueſt of it by the Moores and Saracens, it was a part or member of the kingdom of Cerduba, and ſo continued till that kingdom was ſubdued by the Spaniards: But the Moores were too ſtout to yeeld all at once. Having yet ground enough both to ſecure themſelves in, and endow their King: they are reſolved, though they had loſt one kingdom, to erect another. And therefore Cerduba being taken, and that kingdom ruinated, the Moores, with Mahomet Aben Alhamar their unfortunate, but valiant King, removed themſelves unto Granada, and there renew their ſtrength and kingdom, which laſted 256 yeers, under 20 Kings, whoſe names here follow in this Catalogue of

The laſt King of the Moores in Spain. Of all which there is little left upon Record, their whole time being ſpent in defending their borders againſt the encroachments of Caſtile; or elſe in Civil Wars and diſcords amongſt themſelves; in which they were ſo frequent, and ſometimes ſo violent, as if they had no Enemie neer them. Mahomet Aben Ezar the 4th King, depoſed by Mahomet Aben Levin, and he again thruſt out by Iſmael the Sonne of Ferrachen, before he could enjoy the fruits of his treaſon. Mahomet, Sonne of Iſmael, murdered by his Subjects; Toſeph, the Sonne of Mahomet ſlain by Mahomet Lagus; and he again depoſed by Mahomet Vermeil, who in the end was miſerably ſlain by Pedro the Cruell of Caſtile, to whom he had fled for help and ſuc-

dom, the Succeſſor never ſtaying for the death of his Predeceſſor, but violently making way for himſelf to enter on the Government: even Mahomet Boabdelin the laſt King hereof, not having patience to expect the death of his Father; but ſetting him beſides the Throne, and thereby opening a fair Gate for Ferdinand, King of Caſtile and Aragon, to bring in his Forces, to the ſubduing of them both. Such was the fortune of this kingdom, that as it began under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile: ſo it ended under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile alſo. In the tenth yeer then of this mans Reign, did the war begin, and about the yeer 1492, the Empire of the Moores ended in Spain; by the valour of Ferdinand the Catholick, and Iſabel his Wife; after their firſt entrance into it, more than 760 yeers.

Such of them, as after the decay of their kingdom had a deſire to ſtay in Spain, which had for ſo long time been their native Countrey, were ſuffered ſo to doe by the prudent Victors, (fearing a deſolation of the Countrie, if they ſhould abandon it) conditioned that they would be Chriſtned. And that they might be known to be as they profeſſed, the Inquiſition was ordained, conſiſting of a certain number of Dominican Friers; who finding any counterfeit, or Apoſtate Chriſtians, were firſt gently to reprove and exhort them; and after, if no amendment followed, to inflict ſome puniſhment upon them. This cuſtom in it ſelf, was wondrous tolerable and laudable: but from the Moores it was after turned on the Proteſtants, and that with ſuch violence and extremity of torture, that it is counted the greateſt tyrannie, and ſevereſt kind of perſecution under Heaven. Inſomuch, that many Papiſts who would willingly die for their Religion, abhor the very name and mention of it; and to the death, withſtand the bringing in of this ſlavery among them. This is it that made the people of Aragon, and Naples rebel, Countries where the people are all of the Papal ſide: and this was it which cauſed the irremediable revolt of the Low-countries; the greateſt part of that Nation at the time of their taking Arms, being Romiſh Catholicks. Yet is it planted and eſtabliſhed in Spain, and all Italy, (Naples and Venice excepted) the managing thereof committed to the moſt zealous, fierie, and rigorous Friers in the whole pack. The leaſt ſuſpition of hereſie, affinitie, or commerce with Hereticks, reproving the lives of the Clergy, keeping any books or Editions of books prohibited, or diſcourſing in matters of Religion, are offences ſufficient. Nay they will charge mens conſciences under pain of damnation, to detect their neareſt and deareſt friends, if they doe but ſuſpect them to be herein culpable. Their proceedings are with great ſecrecie and ſecurity: for 1. the parties accuſed, ſhall never know their Accuſer, but ſhall be conſtrained to reveal their own thoughts and affections. 2. If they be but convinced of any errour in any of their opinions, or be gainſayed by two witneſſes, they are immediatly condemned. 3. If nothing can be proved againſt them, yet ſhall they with infinit tortures and miſeries be kept in the houſe divers yeers, for a terrour to others: and 4. If they eſcape the firſt brunt with many torments, and much anguiſh, yet the ſecond queſtioning or ſuſpition brings death remedileſs. And as for torments and kinds of death, Phalaris and his Fellow-tyrants come far ſhort of theſe-blood-hounds.

The Adminiſtration of this Office, for the more orderly Reglement and diſpatch thereof, diſtributed into twelve Courts, or Supreme Tribunals, for the ſeverall Provinces of Spain; no one depending on another; in which thoſe of the Secular Clergy ſit as Iudges; the Friers being only uſed as Promoters to inform the Court, and bring more Griſt unto the Mill. Of thoſe Inquiſitors every one hath the Title of Lord, and are a great terrour to the neighbouring Peaſants. There goeth a Tale how one of their Lordſhips deſirous to eat of the Pears which grew in a poor mans Orchard not far off, ſent for the man to come unto him; which put the poor ſoul into ſuch a fright, that he fell ſick upon it, and kept his bed. Being afterwards informed, that all his Lordſhips buſines with him, was to requeſt a Diſh of his Pears, he pulled the tree up by the roots, and carried it unto him with the Fruit upon it. And when he was demanded the reaſon of that raſh and improvident action, he returned this Anſwer, that he would never keep that thing in his houſe, which ſhould give any of their Lordſhips cauſe to ſend further after him. Certain it is, that by this means the people of this kingdom are ſo kept under, that they dare not hearken after any other Religion, than what their Prieſts and Friers ſhall be pleaſed to teach them, or entertain the truth if it come amongſt them, or call in queſtion any of thoſe palpable and groſs Impoſtures, which every day are put upon them.

But to return unto the Moores, moſt of which by the terrour of this Inquiſition, profeſſed in ſhew the Chriſtian Faith. But being Chriſtians only in the outward ſhew, and practiſing on all occaſions againſt the State, the Kings of Spain reſolved long agoe on their Extermination; but never had opportunity to effect it, till the yeer 1609. At what time Philip the third having made a peace with England, and a truce with Holland; and finding the Moores of Africk to embroyled in wars, that they were not able to diſturb him; put that extreme rigour in execution, which had before been thought of in their conſultations, 1100000 of them being forced to quit this Countrie, and provide new dwellings, under colour that they went about to free themſelves from the Inquiſition, and to recover their old Liberty loſt ſo long before.

The Forces which the Kings of Granada in the times of their greateſt power were able to raiſe, were far beyond the Ameaſurement and extent of their kingdom, not above 700 miles in compaſs, as before is ſaid: but ſo exceeding populous, and well accommodated with all manner of neceſſaries, that within two dayes ſpace, the King hereof was able to draw together

Murcia, & Toledo.

50000 Horſe, and 200000 Foot, for defence of the Kingdom. The Armes whereof were Or, a Pomgranat (or Apple of Granada) ſlipped, Vert.

8 MVRCIA.

MVRCIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Granada; on the Eaſt, with Valentia; on the North, with Valentia; and a part of Granada; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Seas, ſo called from Murcia the chief Citie. In former times eſteemed a rich and wealthy Countrey, ſtored with all ſorts of fruits, and ſo abounding in Silver Mines, that when the Romans were Lords of it, they kept continually 400 men at work, and received 2500 Drachmas of daily profit: now for the moſt part barren, and but ill inhabited.

Cities of note there are not many in ſo ſmall a Countrey. The principal, 1 Murcia, by Ptolomie called Menralia, ſeated upon the River Segura, a Biſhops See, ſituate in a pleaſant and delightfull Plain, planted with Pomgranats, and other excellent fruits: From this the Countrey had the name of the Kingdom of Murcia. 2 Carthagena, or Nova Carthago, firſt built by Aſdrubal of Carthage, the Brother of Annibal, for the better receiving of ſuch aids, both of men and money, as ſhould come from Africa. Situate in a Demi-Iland, in the very jawes of the Mediterranean; by which, and by a deep Mariſh on the Weſt ſide of it, ſo impregnably fortified, that if Scipio, afterwards called Africanus, who then lay at the ſiege thereof, had not been ſhewed a way over that Mariſh, at a dead low Water, by ſome poor Fiſher-men of Tarragon, who knew the ſecret, he had there loſt both his time and Honour. Nothing more memorable, in the ſackage and ſpoyl thereof, (though there was found abundance of Armes and Treaſure) than the vertue of Scipio, who finding there many Spaniſh Ladies of great birth, and beauties, left there as Hoſtages for the Spaniards with the Carthaginians, would not permit any of them to be brought before him; for fear it ſhould betray him to ſome inconvenience. Being reedified it was made a Roman Colonie, and one of the ſeven Iuridicall Reſorts of Tarraconenſis: by Conſtantine made a chief Citie of the new Province of Carthaginenſis, which was hence denominated: Afterwards twice ſacked by the Gothes and Vandals, it lay for a long time buried in its own ruins. And though again new built and peopled, it is ſtill but ſmal; containing at the moſt but 600 Houſholds: and would be utterly abandoned, but for the ſafety of the place, and the ſtrength thereof, garriſon'd, and fortified very ſtrongly by King Philip the 2d, for fear of ſurpriſall by the Turks; and the ſecurity of the Haven (which is withall very large and capacious) coming from a little Iland, lying at the mouth thereof; by which aſſured from tempeſtuous winds, and the violent ragings of the Sea. Hence the occaſion of that Saying of Andreas Doria, Admiral unto Charles the fifth, that there were but three ſafe Ports in the Mediterranean; that is to ſay, Auguſt, Iuly, and the Carthagena: meaning as I conceive, that thoſe two moneths being commonly free from tempeſtuous weather, were of as great ſafety to the Mariners, as this famous Port. 3. Lorca, another Port Town, ſituate on a Creek more within the Land. 4 Almanca, 5 Sarazal, two ſtrong Towns bordering on Valentia; well fortified, when Murcia and Valentia were in ſeverall hands. 6 Cervillan. 7 Alhama. 8 Rus, &c.

This Countrey being part of the Province of Carthaginenſis, was by the Alani taken from the Romans, at their firſt entrance into Spain; from them recovered by Wallia, the firſt King of the Gothes in this part of Europe. Together with the reſt of Spain, it was ſubdued by the Moors of Africk; in the diſtractions of whoſe Empire after the going hence of the Moores of Africk, it was made a diſtinct Kingdom by Aben-Hut, of the race of the Kings of Saragoſſa, who had ſeized upon it, Anno 1228, and for a time was the moſt puiſſant King of the Moores in Spain, commanding over this Countrey Granada, and a great part of Andaluzia. Invited to a Feaſt, made drunk, and then baſely murdered by Aben Arramin a falſe ſervant of his, Anno 1236, one Aben Hudiel ſeized on the Realm of Murcia, diſturbed in his poſſeſſion by Alboaquis, the laſt King hereof. But he not able to defend himſelf againſt his Competitor, ſurrendred it to Ferdinand the 2d of Caſtile, whom he put into poſſeſſion of the Fort of Murcia, and many other places of great importance; conditioned, that Alboaquis ſhould enjoy the title of King of Murcia, as long as he lived under the Soveraignty of Caſtile; and that Ferdinand ſhould enjoy one half of the profits of it, this was in the yeer, 1241, after it had continued in the ſtate of a Kingdom, but 12. yeers only, united to Caſtile without blood or trouble, and ſo remains ever ſince.

9. The Kingdom of TOLEDO.

THe Kingdom of TOLEDO, ſo called from Toledo the chief Citie of it, contained once the greateſt part of that Countrey which is now called New-Caſtile; of which it is now reckoned only for a part or Member. The Countrey lying next unto it was antiently the Seat of the Carpentani; the nature of the ſoyl we ſhall find elſe-where.

Principal Cities of this Kingdom, 1. Toledo, of great Antiquity, as being taken by Fulvius a Roman Prætor, in the time of Scipio Africanus; and then a Citie of good note. Pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus, beautified with many Peeces of rare and excellent Architecture; and fortified with 30 Towers ſtanding on the wals. By reaſon of the ſituation of it in the very middeſt almoſt of Spain, it is paſſing well inhabited, as well by the Nobility, who reſide there for pleaſure, and by Scholars, who abide in it for their ſtudies; as by Merchants, who reſort thither for their profit; beſides, ſuch Souldiers and their Officers, who are continually garriſoned in it for defence thereof, thereof. The private buildings generally are but mean, and ordinary; though by farre more handſome in the inſide than the outſide promiſeth: moſt of them being furniſhed with water from the River Tagus, conveyed into them by the admirable inventions of one Iames, a native of Cremona in the Dukedom of Millain. The Streets narrow, cloſe, hilly, and uneven, exceeding troubleſome to walk or go upon, eſpecially in ſlippery or dirty weather, by reaſon of its ſteep and uneven ſituation on the ſide of a Rockie hill: by which, and by the River which almoſt ſurrounds it, it is naturally very ſtrong, and well helped by Art. For that cauſe made the ſeat of the Gothiſh Kings: by one of which called Bamba, ſo repaired and beautified (beſides the addition of a ſtrong Wall for defence of the place) that he is by ſome accounted for the founder of it. For ſo we find it in theſe old verſes. Caſtile.

Erexit (fautore Deo) Rex inclytus Vrbem
Bamba, ſua celebrem portendens Gentis honorem.

That is to ſay,

King Bamba (God aſſiſting) rais'd this Town,
Extending ſo the antient Gothes renown.

When the Gothes fell, it was in chief eſtimation amongſt the Moores, and by them advanced unto the honour of a Kingdom; whereof more anon: but under both (as it continueth to this day) the See of an Archbiſhop, who is the Metropolitan of Spain, and Preſident for the moſt part of the Inquiſition. His revenue anſwerable to his place; the greateſt of any Clergyman in the Chriſtian World, next to the Popes of Rome, as being eſtimated at 300000 Crowns per Annum. Finally, this City hath been honoured with no fewer than 18 Nationall Councills, here holden in the time of the Gothes, and is now a famous Univerſity for the ſtudy of the Civill and Canon Lawes, and hath to this day the temporall Juriſdiction over 17 walled Towns, beſides Villages. 2 Calatrava, the next Town of note, is ſituate on the River Ava, of moſt fame in theſe latter times for an Order of Knights, called the Knights of Calatrava; of which more when we come to Caſtile. Neighboured by the ruines of the ſtrong and Famous City Caſtulo, which being under the command of the Romans, was by the Gyreſoeny, a people that dwelt on the other ſide of the River, ſuddenly entred, and taken. But Sertorius following after them by the ſame Gate, put them all to Sword: and cauſing his men to apparrell themſelves in the cloathes of the Enemy, led them to the chief City of the Gyreſoeni; who ſuppoſing them to be their own party, opened their Gates, and were all either ſlain or ſold for ſlaves. More of this Town anon when we come to Caſtile; to which belonging now. 3 Talbora, commonly called Talvera de la Reyna, or the Queens Talvera: and called ſo occaſion of an execrable murder committed there by the command of Queen Mary, the Widdow of Alfonſo the ſixt, on the Lady Leonore de Guzman her husbands Paramour. A proper and neat Town it is, pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus; ſuppoſed to be the Libora of Ptolomie; and now belonging to the Archbiſhop of Toledo, as chief Lord thereof.

As for Toledo it ſelf, in the time of the Romans it was the Metropolis of the Province of Tarraconenſis, after that the ſeat Royall of the Gothiſh Kings; removed hither from Tholouſe in Languedoc: forced by the Moores at their firſt entrance into Spain Anno 716. more prudently aiming at the head, than the Gothes poſſibly expected from ſuch Barbarians. In the Confuſions of that Kingdom betwixt the beginning of the reign of Mahomet the fourth, and the ſecond coming in of the Moores of Africk, made a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, continuing in that eſtate, till taken from Haia Alcadudhir the laſt King hereof, by Alfonſo the firſt, King of Caſtile, Anno 1083. This Alfonſo being the younger Sonne of Ferdinand, the firſt King of Caſtile and Leon, had the Kingdom of Leon for his part. Ejected out of that by his Brother Sanctio King of Caſtile, he lived in Exile with the Moores, kindly received and entertained by this Hyaia King of Toledo, till the death of his Brother. After which coming to the Crowns of Caſtile and Leon Anno 1073. he picked a quarrell with his Hoſt, and beſiedged Toledo, his long abode there making him acquainted with all advantages that might facilitate his deſigns: which notwithſtanding held him a ſiedge of five years, before he could make himſelf Maſter of it: by him incorporated preſently on the taking of it, with the reſt of that Kingdom, and made the head of New Caſtile.

10 CASTILE.

CASTILE is bounded on the Eaſt with Navarre, Aragon, and part of Valentia; on the Weſt with Portugal; on the North, with Biſcay, Guipuſcoa, and the Aſturias; on the South, with Extremadura, Andeluzia, and Granada. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

This was the moſt prevailing Kingdom of all this Continent, to which the reſt are all united either by Mariages or Conqueſt. Divided commonly into the New and the Old, parted from one another by the hills of Segovia: the one being called the Old Caſtile, becauſe it was the antient Patrimony of the firſt Earles hereof; and the other named the New, from that addition which was made to the firſt inheritance, by the Conqueſt of the Realm of Toledo and other peeces from the Moores. The Old Caſtile is the leſs fruitfull of the two, more fit for Paſturage than than Corn; but better ſtored with that, and all ſorts of fruits, than the Neighbouring Countries, which lie betwixt it and the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean: the New more plain and Champain, better ſtored with fruits, and furniſhed with ſufficient plenty of Corn and other proviſions neceſſary for the life of man. The Old Caſtile watered with the Rivers of 1 Relaunos, riſing not far from Burgos; 2 Tormes, paſſing by Salamanca; 3 Duero, the Receptacle of the others: The New with 4 Xaruma, honoured with the Neighbourhood of Madrid; 5 Tavina, and 6 Tagus, the moſt famous River of all Spain.

The Old Caſtile is ſituate on the North of the New, and hath for the chief Cities of it 1 Soria, of great note in the antient Storie, by the name of Numantia, which for the ſpace of fourteen years withſtood the whole forces of Rome: During which time they valiantly repulſed their Enemies, and forced them to diſhonourable Compoſitions. But finding at the laſt no hope of holding longer out, they gathered together all their Armour, Money, and goods, laid them in an heap, then ſet fire unto them, and finally burnt themſelves in the midſt of the flame; leaving Scipio (who had brought them to that extremity) nothing but the bare name of Numantia to adorn his triumph. 2 Avila, ſituate under the great Mountains which are call'd from hence the Mountains of Avila. Known antiently by the name of Abule, and by that name giving the title of Abulenſis to the renowned Toſtatus, who was Biſhop of it. A Man, who in his time was Preſident to the Counſell to Iohn, King of Aragon, yet could find leiſure enough not only to attend his Epiſcopal charge, but to compile thoſe learned and painful Commentaries on a great part of the Bible. Of which, and his other abilities (beſides that which hath before been noted of him) we may take that Eulogie which Caſaubon hath given him, in his Book againſt Baronius, ſaying, Laudo acumen viri, ſi in meliora incidiſſet Tempora Longè maximi. 3 Valadolid, a fine neat Town, and one of the antienteſt Vniverſities of Spain; diſcontinued for a time by Students, and then reſtored again by King Philip the 2d, whoſe birth-place it was, and who erected here a College (among others) for the education onely of yong Engliſh Fugitives. Seated upon the River Piſuerga, and one of the Chanceries of the Kingdoms of Caſtile and Leon. By means whereof, and of the Kings Court here reſiding in the Summer times, it became in little ſpace, a fair, large, populous Citie, and of great reſort; not yeelding unto any in Spain, except Liſbone and Sevill. It is called in Latine, Vallis oletum, and Vallis Oletana, from the abundance of Olives growing neer it; but by Ptolomie, Pintia. 3 Segovia, a Biſhops See, of great trade in clothing, ſituate under a branch of the Mountain Idubeda, called from hence the hils of Segovia. 4 Burgos, neer the head of the River Relaunos, or Relanzon, at the foot of the great Mountain d' Oca, part of the Idubeda: built out of certain Villages lying hereabouts by Nugno Bellides, a German, Sonne-in-law unto one of the firſt Earls of Caſtile: for long time the ſeat of thoſe Kings, ſince of the Archbiſhops hereof, the Cathedrall being one of the faireſt in Spain, built with ſuch Art, that Maſs may be ſung aloud in five ſeverall Chappels, without diſturbing one another. This Citie doth contend from Primacie and Precedencie (in Civil maters) with that of Toledo; of which it hath the firſt place or vote, in all Parliaments or Aſſemblies of the States of Caſtile. But yet to ſatisfie Toledo, the Controverſie is ſtill undecided, and was once finely taken up by one of the Ferdinands, ſaying, that Burgos ſhould firſt ſpeak for it ſelf, and then that he would ſpeak for Toledo. Without the walls of this Citie is a famous Nunnerie, called De las Huelgas, conſiſting of 150 Religious women, all of noble Houſes. 5 Cividad Rodrigo, a Biſhops See, on the River Gada. 6 Zamora, a ſtrong and well-built Citie, and a Biſhops See, the Sentica of Ptolomie; ſituate on the River Duero, and now famous for the beſt Bag-pipes. 7 Tordeſillas, the Segiſana of the Antients. 8 Salamanca, the moſt famous Univerſitie of Spain, eſpecially for the ſtudie of the Civill and Canon Lawes: firſt inſtituted by Ferdinand the 2d of Caſtile, Anno 1240. and by an Order of the Popes, together with Paris, Oxford, and Bononia in Italie, created a Generale Studium, wherein there were to be Profeſſors of the Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabick Tongues, beſides thoſe of the Arts. It was of old called Salmantica, is now a Biſhops See, ſituate on the River Tormes, as before was ſaid.

Not far from this Citie, about the times of our Grandfathers, was diſcovered in a Valley ſituate amongſt high and impaſſable Mountains, a kind of Patoecos or Savage people, never heard of in Spain before. The occaſion this. An Hawk of the Duke of Alva's which he very much valued, flew over thoſe Mountains: and his men not being able to find her at firſt, they were ſent back by the Duke to ſeek her. Clambring from one hill to another, they hapned at laſt upon a large and pleaſant Valley, where they ſpyed a company of naked Savage people, hemmed in amongſt many craggie Rocks. The Salvages gazing a while upon them ran into their Caves, made in the hollows of the Rocks, the beſt houſes they had: Which being obſerved by the Falconers, they returned again unto their Lord, telling him, that inſtead of a Falcon, they had brought him news of a New World in the midſt of Spain, and of a race of People which came in with Tubal. Strongly affirming what they ſaid, they obtained belief. And the Duke ſhortly after went with a Company of Musketeers, and ſubdued them eaſily, they having no offenſive Weapons but only Slings. They worſhipped the Sun and Moon, fed upon nothing that had Life; but had good ſtore of excellent fruits, roots, and ſprings of water, wherewith Nature was very well contented. And though their language was not altogether underſtood by any; yet many of their words were found to be purely Biſquiſh. Reduced on this diſcovery unto Chriſtianity; but eaſily diſcernible from all other Spaniards, by their tawnie complexions, occaſioned by the reverberation of the Sun-beames from thoſe rockie Mountains, wherewith on all ſides they are encompaſſed. The truth hereof, beſides the Credit of Iames Howell in his Inſtructions for Forrein Travell, I have, upon enquirie, found to be atteſted by men of gravity and great place in this Realm of England, employed there in affaires of publick intereſs. Satisfied therefore in the truth of the Relation, I am partly ſatisfied in the men. Whom I conceive to be ſome remnant of the antient Spaniards, who hid themſelves amongſt theſe Mountains for fear of the Romans. Their language and Idolatry ſpeak them to be ſuch. For had they either fled from the Gothes or Moores, there had been found ſome Croſs or other Monument of Chriſtianitie, as in other places; or ſome ſuch mixture in their ſpeech, as would have ſavored ſomewhat of the Gothes or Romans. But it is time I ſhould proceed. Caſtile.

NEW CASTILE is ſituate on the South of the old. The chief Cities there, 1 Signenca, a Citie heretofore of the Celtiberi, now a Biſhops See, beautified with a fair Cathedrall; ſuppoſed to be the Condabora of Ptolomie. 2 Madrid, upon the Guadarama, now the ſeat of the Kings; whoſe reſidence there, though the Countrie be neither rich nor pleaſant, hath made it of a Village the moſt populous City in all Spain. It is a cuſtom in this Town, that all the upper Rooms in their houſes do belong to the King, except ſome Compoſition be made with him for them. And of this Town the Spaniards do uſe to brag to Strangers, that they have a Citie walled with Fire; and then make good the boaſt by ſaying, That it is ſituate in the middeſt of Quarries of Flint. 3 Alcala de Henares (of old called Complutum) renowned for an Univerſity of Divines, founded here in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick, by Franciſco de Ximines, Cardinall and Archbiſhop of Toledo. 4 Alcaraz, amongſt the mountainous tracts of Oroſpeda, called Sierra de Alcaraz; memorable for a great diſcomfiture given unto the Moores, Anno 1094. 5 Molina, in the ſame mountainous tract, hence called Monte de Molina; remarkable for giving the title of Lord to the Kings of Caſtile, who in the Regall ſtile are called Lords of Molina: the Signeurie hereof accrewing to that Crown by the mariage of Sancho the 3d with Mary the Daughter of Alfonſo the laſt Lord Proprietarie. The Territorie large, and the Town of ſtrength: well fortified in the times fore-going, both by art and nature. 6 Cuenca, ſeated at the ſpring head of the River Xucar, and not far from that of the Tagus alſo, amongſt the Mountains of Oroſpeda, built by the Moores on the top of thoſe craggie hils, whom it ſerved for an impregnable Fortreſs againſt the Chriſtians, till taken by Sancho the 2d of Caſtile, Anno 1177.

Here alſo is the Eſcuriall or Monaſtery of S. Laurence, built by King Philip the 2d. A place (ſaith Quade, who ſpendeth 13 pages in its deſcription) of that magnificence, that no building in times paſt, or this preſent, is comparable to it. The front toward the Weſt is adorned with three ſtately gates, the middlemoſt whereof leadeth into a moſt magnificent Temple; a Monaſtery in which are 150 Monkes of the order of S. Ierome; and a College: that on the right hand openeth into divers offices, belonging to the Monaſtery; that on the left, unto Schooles and out-houſes, belonging to the College. At the four corners there are four turrets of excellent workmanſhip; and for height, majeſticall. Towards the North, is the Kings Palace; on the South part, divers beautifull and ſumptuous Galleries; and on the Eaſt ſide, ſundry gardens and walks, very pleaſing and delectable. It containeth in all 11 ſeverall quadrangles, every one incloyſtred; and is indeed ſo brave a ſtructure, that a voyage into Spain were well imployed, were it only to ſee it, and return. Here is alſo in this Tract the old Town of Caſtulo (the Caſtaun of Strabo) then the chief Citie of the Carpentani, and the birth-place of Himilce the Wife of Annibal, from whence this whole Tract had the name of Saltus Caſtulonenſis; and ſo called by Caeſar: now a poor Village, known by the name of Caſtona la Veia; in which is ſomewhat to be found of the antient ruines. But of this more already, when we were in the kingdom of Toledo; to which it more properly belonged.

The old Inhabitants of theſe Caſtiles were the Vaccai, Ventones, Arevacæ, Oretani, Carpentani, Dittani, &c. From none of which the name of Caſtile can be deduced; ſo that we muſt fetch it either from the Caſtellani, once a People of Catalogne; or from ſome ſtrong fortified Caſtles erected in the frontires againſt the Moores. (This laſt conjecture may ſeem probable, becauſe the Arms of this Kingdom are Gules, a Caſtle triple-towred, Or. Neither is it any way ſtrange for Provinces, eſpecially ſmaller ones, ſuch as at firſt this was, (though now much extended both in bounds and power) to take their names from a Caſtle. For (to go no farther) even with us, Richmondſhire was ſo called from the Caſtle of Richmond, there built by Alan Earl of Bretagne; and Flintſhire took denomination from a Caſtle built of Flint-ſtones, by Henry the 2d. We may ſee hereby how much Celius Secundus Curio was deceived, who writeth that Alphonſo the third having overthrown Mahomet Enaſir King of Morocco, and put 60000 of his men to the ſword; aſſumed theſe Arms, that thus named this Kingdom, which was before called the kingdom of the Baſtitanes; becauſe that victory, like a ſtrong Caſtle, had confirmed his eſtates unto him. Whereas, in caſe there were no other Error in his ſuppoſition; the Baſtitanes were no Inhabitants of Caſtile, but of Valentia, and Murcia: Provinces far enough off from the Old Caſtile, at the firſt taking of that name. And for the former Etymologie, it appeareth moſt evidently, in that the people are by the Latines called Caſtellani, the Countrey Caſtella; the ſame name with thoſe elder Caſtellani, which inhabited Catalogne. But not to ſtand upon the name, certain it is, that the Inhabitants hereof having been conquer'd by the Romans, and made a part of their Empire, fell by degrees to the Alani, and from them to the Gothes, as hath been ſhewn already on ſome other occaſion. From them extorted by the Moores with the reſt of Spain, recovered foot after foot by the Kings of Leon: governed, under them, at firſt by Provinciall Earls, commanders of ſo many Caſtles in the Countrie of the Vaccæi, fortified and defended againſt the

Caſtile.

Moores. Ordogno the 2d harbouring ſome ſuſpitions againſt theſe Earles, cauſed them all to be cruelly murthered. The people upon this revolted from the Crown of Leon, governed firſt by Judges, then by Earls again, as an abſolute and free Eſtate. Ferdinand Gonſales, the firſt that re-aſſumed the title of Earl of Caſtile, coming to the Court of Leon with a brave retinue, ſold to King Sancho an Hawk, and an Horſe, of excellent kinds, for a ſum of money; conditioned, that if the money were not paid at the time agreed on, it ſhonld be doubled and redoubled, till the debt were ſatisfied. This money by the negligence of the Kings Officers, who looked upon the contract as a matter of jeſt, became ſo great a ſumme, that the King, to ſatisfie Gonſales, made him the firſt Proprietarie Earl of Caſtile, Anno 939. releaſing that Eſtate from all acknowledgement to the Kings of Leon. Nugna, or Elvira, as ſome call her, Siſter and Heir of Garcias the fourth Earl hereof, brought this Eſtate by mariage to Sancho, ſurnamed the Great, King of Navarre, Anno 1028. by whom it was erected into a kingdom, & given by him to Ferdinand his ſecond Sonne. An. 1034. Kings of moſt note and obſervation in the courſe of their ſtorie, are, 1 Ferdinand their firſt King, who added Leon to his kingdom in right of Sancha his Wife, Siſter and Heir of Veramund the laſt King thereof, of the race of Pelagius. 2 Alphonſo the firſt, who ſubdued the Kingdom of Toledo, adding it by the name of New Caſtile, unto his Eſtate. 3 Alfonſo the third, who conquered from the Crown of Navarre, whatſoever lay on the Caſtilian ſide of the River Iberus; and grew ſo great, that he cauſed himſelf to be ſolemnly Crowned Emperour of Spain, in the Cathedrall Church of Leon, by the Archbiſhop of Toledo; and gave his Sonne Sancho the title of King of Caſtile in his own life time. 4 Alphonſo the 3d, the chief of the Confederates againſt Mahomet Enaſer, the Miramomoline of Morocco, whom he vanquiſhed in the famous battell of Muradal, or Sierra Morena, Anno 1214. and added Alava and Guipuſcoa to his other Eſtates. 5 Ferdinand the third, who incorporated Leon and Caſtile into one Eſtate, and added the Kingdoms of Murcia, Corduba and Sevil, taken from the Moores, unto his Dominions. 6 Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, and the ninth of Leon, elected Emperour of the Germans, but more famous for his eminence in Aſtronomie; the Author of the Alfonſine Tables. 7 Pedro the Cruel, driven out of his Kingdom by Henry of Tranſtamare his Brother; reſtored again for a time by the valour of Edward the Black Prince, Sonne of Edward the third. 8 Iohn, Sonne of Henry of Tranſtamare, who maried his Sonne Henry to Catharine Daughter of Iohn of Gaunt, by Conſtance one of the Daughters of Don Petro the Cruel, ſo uniting both titles into one. The times in which theſe Princes and the reſt did reign, appeareth in theſe Catalogues of the Earls and Kings of Caſtile, which are theſe that follow.

1454. 19 Henry IV. Sonne of Iohn the ſecond. 21.

1475. 20 Iſabel, Siſter of Henry the fourth, maried to Ferdinand V. Sonne of John King of Aragon. Of whoſe Acts and iſſue we will make more ample mention when we ſhall come to ſpeak of the Monarchy of Spain, which began in them, and hath been ſince continued in their Poſterity.

The chief Orders of Knighthood within theſe Kingdoms of Caſtile and Leon, long ſince united into one, were three in all; partly Religious, partly Military; and one Order of Religious preſons, not known in any Country but Spain alone.

This of the laſt ſort is called the Order of Mercie, or de la merced; the practice and profeſſion of it to gather Alms amongſt the People, wherewith to redeem ſuch Chriſtian Captives as either by Pyracie, the chance of War, or by ſome other meanes are enthralled to the Turks and Moores: ſending their Agents yearly to Algeers and Feſſe, to inform them of the ſtate, age, and quality of each ſeverall Captive; and after on Inſtruction from the Brethren of this Society, to deal in the redemption of them. A buſineſs which they manage with great care and faithfulneſs, and are accordingly truſted with great ſummes of money given and collected to that end; few men here dying, who give not ſome legacie or other to this pious uſe. Nor are the Kings behind hand in ſo good a work, promoting it with a liberall purſe, and giving as much ordinarily out of his Eſtate as the brethren have collected in all Spain beſides. And to ſay truth, it doth concern him more than others, becauſe they are his Subjects chiefly for whoſe Redemption the whole ſumme is given and gathered: Religious perſons ranſomed firſt, and then the Laitie; the young and ſerviceable men before old and impotent: if after the Redemption of the Spaniſh Captives they have any ſtock left, they keep it not till another yeer, but therewith ranſome Captives of ſome other Nations. So that this ſeemeth to ſucceed in the place of the now antiquated and uſeleſs Orders of Knighthood, which were heretofore of great autority and power, that is to ſay,

1 Of Calatrava, a Town of the kingdom of Toledo, abandoned by the Templers, to whom the defence thereof belonged, on the approach of the Moores; made good by Raymond the Abbot of Piſaria, and the Monkes of Ciſteaux. Anno 1157. For the future preſervation and defence whereof, they ordained this Order, which in proceſs of time grew to ſuch eſtate, that beſides 8 fair Priories, they enjoyed in Spain no leſs than 61 Towns and Caſtles. The Knights hereof doe wear for their Habit, a White Robe with a Red Croſs upon their breſts, confirmed by Pope Alexander the 3d. Anno 1164. under the diſcipline of Ciſteaux. Their reſidence is at Caſtle-Novo, bound by their Order to ſerve in the Warres againſt the Infidels; upon which ſervices they have been ſometimes ſeen in the field with 300 great Horſe.

2 Of S. Jago, inſtituted by the Canons of Eloy, and certain Gentlemen of Caſtile, in imitation of the Order of Calatrava, for the ſecurity and entertainment of Chriſtian Pilgrims travelling to the Shrine of S. Iago, confirmed by the ſaid Pope Alexander the 3d, Anno 1175. under the Rule of St. Auguſtine. Their habit is a White Robe, with a Red Croſs like a Sword: the companions of it according to the firſt founders being part Eccleſiaſticall and part Secular; whereof theſe laſt are onely tied unto the vow of conjugall Chaſtitie. They grew in little time unto ſuch eſteem, that beſides two Colleges or Seminaries in Salamanca, and a College in Sevill, they had four Hermitages in the Mountains, and five Hoſpitals well endowed for the entertainment of Strangers, together with 90 Towns & Caſtles in ſeverall parts of the Kingdom. The whole number of Gentlemen, beſides Friers ſerving in their Cures, and other Miniſters, is above 600. Their firſt Reſidence, at the Hoſpitall of S. Mark in the Suburbs of Leon; on a diſlike with Ferdinand the ſecond King of Leon removed to Uceles in Caſtile, beſtowed upon them by Alfonſo the 4th. Vpon this occaſion being divided, they have ſince two Maſters, or Commendadors, the one called the Commendador of Leon, who reſides at S. Marks, the other the Commendador of Caſtile, who reſides at Uceles.

3 Of Alcantara, a Town of Extremadura, defended by Ferdinand of Leon againſt the Moores, where he framed this Order, confirmed by Pope Lucio, Anno 1183. Others aſcribe it to Alfonſo, the Suceſſor of that Ferdinand, Anno 1217. by whom endowed with all the Lands of the Calatravians in the Realm of Leon; but acknowledging the Superiority thereof, and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. Their device at firſt was a Pear-tree Vert, in a Field Or; to which hanged a pair of Shackles as a ſigne of their Subjection to them of Calatrava; Changed Anno 1411. to a White Robe, and a Green Croſs on their Breſts.

I omit the Order of the Dove and Reaſon, inſtituted by K. Iohn of Caſtile, becauſe of ſmall eſteem, and but ſhort continuance. And ſo much for Caſtile, the firſt of thoſe three greater Kingdomes of Spain, under which all the reſt are now reduced, conteining in this Continent all the Provinces and Eſtates before deſcribed, amounting to two third parts of the whole; and many large eſtates elſewhere, as ſhall be ſhewed hereafter in its proper place. Paſs we on next to Portugall, the Portugal, the second in repute of the said three kingdoms, not so much for the largeness of the Territories, which it had on the Continent, as for its great Appendixes in all other parts of the World.

11 The Kingdom of PORTVGAL.

THe Kingdom of PORTVGAL containeth 1 Portugal it self; 2 Algarve, or Regnum Algarbiorum; and 3 the Terceras or Isles of Azores: these last not reckoned parts of Spain by any of our Writers either old or new; but made by us a part hereof, because situate over against Portugal, one of the first additions which was made unto it on the Ocean; and finally, because I know not under what other head to reduce them better.

And first for PORTVGAL it self, it is bounded on the North, with the Rivers Minio and Avia, which part it from Gallicia; on the South, with Algarve; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; and on the East, with the two Castiles and Extremadura; from which divided by a line drawn from Ribadavia, standing on the Avia, to Badaios, on the Anas or Guadiana. Extended on the Sea-coast from North to South 400 miles; the bredth of it in the broadest place (not taking in the Ilands into this Accompt) 100 miles, in the narrowest 80, the whole circumference 879 miles, and in that compass 1460 Parishes.

It was first called Lusitania from the Lusitani, the chief Inhabitants thereof, and took the name of Portugal, either from the Haven or Port of Cale, now called Caia, sometimes a very rich and flourishing Emporie, or rather from the Haven Town of Porto, at the mouth of Duerus, where the Galls (or the French rather) used to land their Merchandise, which was therefore called Portus Gallorum, and which Town was given in Dower with Teresa, the Daughter of Alfonso the sixth, to Henry of Lorain, with the title of Earl of Portugal. Whose Successors coming to be Kings, extended this name to all those Countries which they got from the Moores, as it continueth at this day.

The Air is very healthy, the Conntrey for the most part hilly and bare of Corn, supplied from France and other parts of the North; that which they have being as good as any in Europe, if not better. The soyl and people in all places not rich alike. For where the soyl is richest, as in the parts lying on the North of Duero, there the People are poorest, in regard of the great distance thereof from Lisbon, and so not benefited by the trading of that wealthy Citie. And where the soyl is poorest, there the People be richest, helping themselves by trade and manufactures, especially by making of Silks, and Salt, sufficient for themselves, and for other Countries. But where there is a defect of Corn, that defect is othervvise sufficiently recompensed vvith abundance of Honey, Wine, Oyl, Allom, Fruits, Fish, Salt, white Marble, and some Mines of Silver, &c.

The people are of a more plain and simple behaviour than the rest of Spain; and (if we beleeve the old Proverb) none of the wisest: For whereas the Spaniards are said to seem wise, and yet to be Fools; the French to seem Fools, and yet to be wise; the Italians both to seem wise and to be so; the Portugals are affirmed to be neither wise indeed, nor so much as to seem so. But little different from which is the Spanish by-word, which telleth us of the Portugals, that they are Pocos y Locos, few and foolish; which others varie with the addition of another part of their Character; saying that they are Pocos, Sotos, y Devotos, few and foolish, but withall devout. They have great animosities (if it be not grown to an Antipathie) against the Castilians, for bereaving them of their Kingdom and Liberty, though both of late recovered by them: but when most Fools, were counted for good Sea-faring men, and happy in the discoverie of forrain Nations.

Rivers it hath of all sorts, both great and small, almost 200. Those of most note, 1 Minius, full of red Lead, (from hence called Minium by the Latines) navigable with small Vessels 100 miles. 2 Lethes, now Lavada. 3 Muliadas, now Mondego. 4 Tagus. 5 Duerus, and 6 Anas; these three last common also to the rest of Spain: Anas, or Guadiana passing by Portugal but for 7 Leagues only, Tagus for 18, and Duero for 80. None of them navigable for any long space by ships of burden; the Rivers of all Spain being generally swift of course, restrained within narrow Channels, banked on both sides with very steep Rocks, which make them incommodious for Navigation: Insomuch that it is reckoned for a great Prerogative of Tagus, and the Realm of Portugal, that this River is there navigable with great ships, 15 or 20 miles within the Continent. But here that want is somewhat tolerably supplied with 3 excellent Havens. 1 That of Lisbon upon Tagus, and 2 Porto on Duero, to the North of Lisbon, of which more anon; 3 of Setaval, South of Lisbon, situate on a Golf of 20 miles in length, and three in bredth; a place of principal importance to those parts of the Realm Rivers however of great fame, according to whose course the whole Countrey was divided by the Romans into Vlteriorem, lying beyond Duero North-wards; 2 Citeriorem, on the South of Tagus; and 3 Interamnem, betwixt both.

Principal Cities of this part, 1 Lisbon, seated upon Tagus, a famous Citie for traffick, the Portugals in all their Navigations setting sayl from hence. By the Latines called Olysippo, and Vlyssippo, because as some say Vlysses built it, coming hither in the course of his ten yeers travel: a thing meerly fabulous, it being no where found, that Vlysses did ever see the Ocean. But like enough it is, that this Town being seated conveniently for Navigation, and inhabited by Sea-faring men, might at the first be consecrated to the memory of so great a Traveller; as Athens being a place of Learning was dedicated to Minerva, whom the Greeks call Athene. It is in compass seven miles, and containeth upwards of 30 Parishes, and in them 20000 houses, all of neat and elegant building, Turrets, and Towers it numbreth upon the wals about 76. Gates towards the Sea-shore 22. And towards the Continent, situate upon five small Hils, betw xt which is a valley which runs down to the River: on the highest Hill an ancient Castle, not strong, but by reason of the situation, serving now only for a Prison for men of quality; the entry of the River, being defended by the Castle of Cascais, and neerer to the Citie by the Fort of S. Iulians, and the Rock of Belem munitioned with 20. Peeces of Ordinance. This Citie heretofore was honoured with the Seat of the Kings, since of the Vice-Roys; an Arch-bishops See, the Staple of commodities for all the Kingdom, and thought to be more worth than the whole Realm besides: said by some French Writers to be the best peopled Citie in Christendom, next unto Paris; aud by Botero an Italian, made to be the 4th Mart Town of Europe; the other three being Constantinople, Paris, Mosco: in which they doe great wrong to London, as populous and well-traded as the best them all. 2 Santarex, on the Tagus, so called from S. Irene, a Nun of Tomar, (a Monasterie, in which the old Kings of Portugal did use to be crowned) here martyred by the Moores; by Ptolomie called Scabaliscus, then a Roman Colonie. 3 Sintra, upon the main Atlantick, at the end of the huge Mountains, called Montes Lunæ; whither by reason of the cool refreshings from the Sea, and pleasure of the Woods adjoyning, the Kings of Portugal used to retire in the heats of Summer. 4 Conimbre, on both sides the River Mondego, pleasantly seated amongst Vineyards and Woods of Olives; a Bishops See, and an Vniversity; the Masters whereof made the Commentarie on most part of Aristotle, called from hence Schola Conimbricensis. Then on the North of the River Duero, betwixt that and Minio, are 5. Braga, by Ptolomie called Bracaria Augusta, reckoned by Antonine for one of the four chief Cities in Spain; the Royal Seat when time was, of the Suevian Kings, and now the See of an Archbishop, contending for the Primacie with him of Toledo. 6 Porto, the Haven of the Galls, on the mouth of Duero. 7 Miranda, a Bishops See on the same River. 8 Braganze, the Duke whereof is so great a Prince, that it is thought a third part of the people of Portugal are his Vassals, and live on his Lands; the later Dukes, since the time of King Emannel being withall of the Royal blood: two steps of main advantage to the Regal Throne, lately ascended and obtained by Iohn, Duke of Braganze, now called John the 4th. And finally on the South of Tagus, betwixt that and the Kingdom of Algarba, there is 9 Ebora, in the middest of a large and spacious Plain, an Arch-bishops See, and an Vniversitie, this last of the foundation of King Henry the Cardinall. 10 Portalegre a Bishops See. 11 Olivenca on the Guadiana. 12 Beia, by Plinie called Pax Iulia.

2 The Kingdom of ALGARVE, lieth on the South of Portugal, from which divided by a line drawn from Ascorin on the western Sea, to Odechere a Castle on the Guadiana; on the East bounded by Andaluzia, on the West and South by the Main Atlantick. This the most wild and desart part of all this Kingdom; barren and drie; peopled with few Towns, nor those very populous; hilly and Mountainous withall, but yielding by the benefit of the Sea a great trade of fishing, of Tunny specially, whereof more caught upon this coast than in all the Kingdom.

The name it took from the Western situation of it, for so the word Algarve signifieth in the Arabick tongue. The utmost end of it called anciently Promontorium Sacrum, now the Cape of S. Vincent, because the Bones of S. Vincent religiously preserved by the Christians, were here burnt and scatered about by the Moores. Places of most importance it in, 1 Silvis an Episcopall See, seated in the in-land parts. 2 Villanova, situate beyond the Cape. 3 Tavila, the Balsa, and 4 Faro, the Ossonoba of Ptolomie; both noted Ports on the Atlantick. 5 Lagos, an other Haven Town also.

This Country conquered by the Moores with the rest of Spain, and from them again recovered by the Kings of Leon, remained a Member of that Crown: till by Alfonso the tenth of that name in Leon, and the fift in Castile, it was given in dowrie with Beatrix his Daughter, to Alfonso the third of Portugal. From which mariage issued Dionysius or Denys King of Portugal, the first that ever used the title of Rex Algarbiorum, Anno 1274.

3 THE AZORES, are certain Islands lying in the Atlantick Ocean, opposite to the City of Lisbon, from which distant but 250 Leagues. Situate betwixt the 38 and 40 degrees of the Northern Latitude, and one of them in the first Longitude, which is commonly reckoned from these Islands; as being the most Western part of the World, before the discoverie of America.

They were thus called from the multitude of Gos-hawkes which were found there in the begining (the word Azor in the Spanish tongue signifying a Gos-hawke) though at this time there are none of them to be found. Called allso the Flemish Islands, because first discovered by the Flemings, and the great numbers of them in the Isle of Faial (one of the chief of all the pack) where there are yet some Families which resemble the Flemings both in their complexion and habit; and not far from the place of their abode a Torrent, which the Spaniards call Riberados Flamengos, or the River of Flemings. They are also called the Terceras from Tercera the chief Isle among them.

The Air of those Islands is generally good and subject unto few diseases, except that which the Portugals call the Blood, being an impostumation of the blood breaking out at the Eys or other parts of the Body. Some other inconveniences they are subject to, proceeding from the humidity of the AZORES. the place, the great winds and ſtormes, of ſuch a violent and ſtrange kind of working, that barres of Iron as big as a mans arm, have in ſix years been worn as little as a Straw. All of them well ſtored with Fleſh, Fiſh, and other things neceſſary, except Salt and Oyl, with which they are furniſhed out of Portugal. Wines they have alſo for their own uſe, but not to be tranſported far, becauſe of their weakneſs: for which cauſe alſo, the richer men provide themſelves of Canarie Wines, or thoſe of the Iland of Madera. Of like nature is their Wheat, and other fruits, which hold not good above a year. All of them ſubject unto Earthquakes, and ſome to breathings out of fire; which continually ſendeth forth fuming vapours. The chief commodities which they tranſport unto other Countries, are Canarie birds for Ladies, Oad for the Diers, Ioyners-work which they ſell to the Spaniards, and Beeves for the victualling of ſuch Ships as come there to be victualled.

AZORES.

The Inhabitants are generally Laborious, excellent husbands on their grounds, inſomuch as they make Vines to grow out of Rocks; much given to Ioynery, by which they make many prettie fancies, much eſteemed by the Spaniards; but not ſo expert at it as thoſe of Nuremberg. They take great pains to teach their Cattell underſtanding; the Oxen being taught to know when their Maſter calleth them. In other things they conform to the Portugals, both in their cuſtomes and apparell; but with ſome ſmattering of the Fleming, which Nation they affect above any other.

The Iſlands nine in number, and diſtinguiſhed by the ſeverall names of, 1 Tercera, 2 S. Michael, 3 Fayal, 4 Gratioſa, 5 S. George, 6. Pico, 7 Corvo, 8 Flores, and 9 S. Maries, of which S. Michaels and St. Maries lie next to Spain; Tercera on the North-Weſt of thoſe; (by conſequence the third in order, whence it had the name;) S. Georges, Gratioſa, Pico, Fayal, on the Weſt of that; and finally thoſe of Corvo and Flores, neereſt to America.

1 TERCERA, the chief of all the reſt, 18 miles in compaſs, well ſtored with Peaches, Apples, Limons, Oringes: and for the Kitchin, with Turneps, Cabages, plenty of Pot-herbs, and as good Batato-rootes (which are the beſt food the people have) as any be in the World, but more eſteemed in Portugal than they be in this Iland, by reaſon of their great abundance. Here is alſo great quantity of the beſt kind of Woad, (which from hence is called Iland-Woad) and a Plant about the height of a man, which beares no Fruit, but hath a Root as profitable as thoſe that doe: out of which the People draw a thin and tender film, wherewith they fill their matreſſes inſtead of Feathers. Fowl enough for the uſe of man, and yet none of prey. No Port of any ſafety in it but that of Angra; and that made ſafe by Art, and not by Nature: the whole begirt with Rocks, which ſtick out like a pointed Diamond, able to pierce the feet of any who ſhall venture over them. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Praye, on the Sea ſide, well-walled, but not very well peopled. 2 S. Barbara, 3 S. Sebaſtians, 4 Gualne, and 5 Villa nova, Burroughs of good note. 6 Angra, the chief not of this Iland only, but of all the nine; the Reſidence of the Governour, and an Archbiſhops See, who hath in it his Cathedrall Church. Seated on a convenient Bay made in the form of a Creſcent, with two Promontories on each ſide (like the two horns of a half-Moon) bearing into the Sea; each fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle for defence of the Haven, the Town it ſelf alſo well-walled about, and environed with ſharp Rocks on all ſides. Both Town and Caſtles well garriſoned, and no leſs diligently guarded. This in regard of its great ſtrength, and commodious Haven, is eſteeemed the principall of theſe Ilands, and communicates it's name unto all the reſt; though neither neereſt unto Spain, nor the greateſt in compaſs.

2 S. MARIES, ſo called from the Saint (as S. Georges and S. Michaels are) unto which it is dedicated; is the moſt Southern of theſe Iſles, and the next to Spain: twelve miles in circuit, inhabited by Spaniards onely, and thoſe much given unto the making of Earthen veſſels. So naturally fenced with Rocks, that it is, and may be eaſily kept by the Inhabitants, without the charge of a Garriſon. The chief Town of it hath the name of St. Maries alſo, which it either giveth unto the Iland, or borroweth from it.

3 S. MICHAELS, directly North of S. Maries, from which little diſtant, the biggeſt in the whole pack, as being 20 miles in length, though the breadth not anſwerable: much ſubject unto Earth-quakes and fiery vapours. Of moſt note amongſt our modern Geographers, who have removed hither the firſt Meridian (by which they divide the World into Eaſt and Weſt) from the Canaries or Fortunate Ilands, were it was fixed in the time of Ptolomie, and others of the antient Writers.

And this remove ſeems countenanced even by Nature it ſelf, it being obſerved that the Compaſs when it commeth under the Meridian drawn through this Iſle, hath little or no Variation at all, but pointeth almoſt directly towards the North; whereas in all other places or leſs Meridians, Eaſt, and Weſt, it pointeth not ſo directly North, but more or leſs to the North-eaſt, or the North-weſt, which the Mariners call the Variation, or the North-eaſting and the North-weſting of the Compaſs. And yet it is obſerved of late, that there is ſome more ſenſible variation of it in this Iſle of S. Michael, than in that of Corvo: which therefore is conceived more fit for this firſt Meridian.

The chief Town hereof, beſides many Burroughs and leſſer Hamlets, Punta del Gada, ſeated upon a dangerous Sea, and without any Port, yet more frequented by Strangers than the Port of Angra, becauſe here they may goe in and out as they pleaſe, but not ſo in the other.

4 FAYALL, 17 or 18 miles in length, plentifully provided with all things neceſſary for the life

chants of England. The chief Town of it Dorta, defended with a Caſtle, and that guarded by Spaniards; both Town and Iland taken by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1597. This Action was called the Iland-Voyage, undertaken as well to divert the War which the Spaniards threatned to bring to our own doors; as by ſeizing ſome of theſe Ilands to intercept the Spaniſh Fleets in their return, and to hinder them in their ſetting out: by which means, wanting their Indian gold, they might be brought to better terms with their neighbour Nations. And though the Engliſh were not able to hold it long, yet it was ſaid, that the bootie got in this Expedition, amounted to 400000 Crowns, beſides the honour of beating the Spaniard upon his own ground. It took this name from its abundance of Beeches.

5 GRATIOSA, not above five or ſix Leagues in compaſs; but ſo well furniſhed with fruits, that they ſend much yearly to Tercera; inhabited by Portugals onely, but ſo poor, that they are not able to bear the charge of a Garriſon. The chief Town of it called La Plaia.

6 S. GEORGES, twelve miles long, about three in bredth, mountainous and full of Foreſts, but thoſe Foreſts ſo well ſtored with Cedars, that they uſe them many times for ſhipping, and ſometimes for Fewell. The chief Town of it called S. Georges, as the Iland is.

7 PICO, lyeth on the South of the Iſle of S. George, and took this name from an high Hill in the form of a Pyramid, which the Portugals generally call a Pike, or Pico. Repleniſhed with fruits, ſome Cedars, and a Tree called Teixo, of great bulk, and as much beauty: the wood thereof exceeding hard, red within and waved; ſo admirably beautifull that it is allowed onely to the Kings Officers, the other Subjects being interdicted the uſe of it (but on ſpeciall licence) by a publick Edict. In bigneſs it is ſecond onely unto that of S. Michael, if not equall to it; hardly ſo much in length, but of greater bredth. The chief Towns of it, 1 S. Sebaſtians, 2 Callota de Neſquin, both upon the Sea, and in the Eaſt parts of the Iland.

8 FLORES, directly Eaſt from Fayall, ſo called from its abundance of Flowers, (as Gratioſa from the like flouriſhing Verdure of it) is in compaſs not above 8 miles, but plentifully furniſhed with Cattel and good grounds to feed them. The chief Town of it, Santa Crux. The Iſle (though ſmall,) yet twice as big as the Iſle of 9 CORVO, ſo called from it's abundance of Crowes, ſituate on the North hereof, and but little diſtant: both very unſafe, and both moſt miſerably poor, by reaſon of the many Pyrates which lie betwixt them, to intercept ſuch ſhips as trade towards America. But this, though much ſmaller than the others, may in time be of more eſteem than any of them: in regard it is conceived to be the moſt naturall place for the firſt Meridian; as before was noted: the Needle here pointing directly to the North, without Variation. Which whether it proceed from ſome ſecret inclination of the Loadſtone to that part of the World, more in this place than any other; or that being ſituate betwixt the two great Continents of Europe and America, it is drawn equally towards both, by the magneticall vertue of the Earth it ſelf: I leave to be diſputed by more able judgements.

Theſe Ilands were firſt diſcovered and ſubdued by the Portugals, under the conduct, or by the direction of Prince Henry, Sonne of John the firſt, who firſt made the Portugals in love with the Seas. And they were alſo the laſt members of the Crown of Portugal which held out for Don Antonio the Baſtard, againſt Philip the ſecond of Caſtile; againſt whom the Iland of Tercera was for a while gallantly defended by Emanuel de Silva, with the help of the French; but taken at the laſt by the Marqueſs of Santa Cruz, and the French, after promiſe of life, cruelly murdered in cold blood. After which, garriſoned at the firſt by none but Portugals. But upon ſome commotion hapning in that Kingdom, it was thought fit, on ſome reaſon of State, to make ſure of the beſt Ilands by Spaniſh Garriſons; which accordingly were put into the Caſtles of Angra, in Tercera; and the Towns of Punta del Gada, in S. Michaels; and Dorta, in Fayall. And to ſay truth, the Spaniards had good reaſon to be carefull of them, theſe Ilands being of ſuch importance as without them the Navigation of the Indies, Æthiopia, Braſil, and New Spain, could not be continued: becauſe the Fleets which come from thoſe Countries to Liſbon or Sevill, muſt in a manner of neceſſity touch upon ſome of them, as well in following their courſe if they come from the Weſt, as in recovering ſuch winds as are uſefull to them, if they come from the Eaſt.

But to return again to the main Land of Portugal; know, that the antient Inhabitants of it were the Luſitani, dwelling betwixt Tagus and Duerus, the old Luſitania being bounded within thoſe Rivers; the Celtici and Turditani, who took up alſo ſome part of Betica, dwelling on the South of Tagus; and the Gallaici Bracarii (ſo called to difference them from the Gallaici Lucenſes who poſſeſſed Gallicia) on the North of Duerus. Subjected firſt unto the Romans, by whom accompted one of the three parts of Spain. In the declining of their Empire conquered by the Alani, and from them taken by the Suevians, who for a time made the Citie of Braga the Royall ſeat of their Kings. The Suevians loſt it to the Gothes, and the Gothes to the Moores, as hath been ſhewn already in their ſeverall ſtories. Recovered in part by the Kings of Leon; to whom that part continued ſubject, till given by Alphonſo the ſixt of Leon in dowrie with his Baſe Daughter Teraſa, to Henry of Loreine, whoſe vertue and good ſervice merited no leſs reward, Anno 1099. who having fortunately governed it by the title of an Earl for the ſpace of 12 years, left his Sonne Alfonſo, Heir both to his Fortunes and Vertues, honoured with the title of King of Portugal by the Soveraignes of Leon, for his moſt gallant demeanor ſhewn in the battell of Obrique, An. 1139. He had before the Aſſumption of the Regal Stile ruled 27 years with a great deal of honour; and he reigned here

Portugal. with no leſs, 45 years after that Aſſumption, reverenced by his Friends, and feared by his Enemies. So that the whole time of his ſitting in the Chair of State was 72 years: a longer enjoying of Soveraignty than any Prince, ſince the firſt beginning of the Roman Monarchie. His Succeſſors we ſhall have in order in the following Catalogue. But we muſt firſt tell you, as in other places of this Work, that the Princes of moſt note in the whole ſucceſſion, are, 1 Henry of Loreine (whom ſome make a Burgundian of the Citie of Beſancon) who coming into Spain to the Holy Wars, and deſerving nobly in the ſame, was honoured by Alfonſo the ſixth, with his Daughter Teraſa and the Town of Portio for her Dower, given to him with the title of Earl of Portugal. He extended his Eſtate as far as Coimbre on the South of the River Duero; that River being before that time the utmoſt bound of it that way. 2. Alfonſo the firſt King, who took Lisbon from the Moores, Anno 1247 and made it the Seat of his Kingdom, which he extended South-ward as far as Algarve. 3. Alfonſo the 3d, who partly by Conqueſt, and partly by Mariage, added Algarve to his Eſtate, getting it by the Sword, and confirming it to him by the Bed. 4 Alfonſo the 4th, confederate with the fifth of the ſame name in Caſtile againſt Alboacen the Miramomolin of Africk, at the fight neer the River Salado, not far from Tariffe; where they diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Moores, conſiſting of 470000 Horſe and Foot. 5 Iohn the firſt, the baſe Sonne of Pedro the firſt, ſetting aſide the Lady Beatrix, Queen of Caſtile, the Daughter of Ferdinand the firſt, and the lawfull Children of his Father, being many in number: by force and colour of Election obtained the Kingdom. Fortified it by his mariage with the Lady Philip, Daughter of Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter; a ſtrong Competitor at that time for the Crown of Caſtile: on which Relation, this King, the four Kings next ſucceeding, and two of this Kings younger Sonnes, were made Knights of the Garter. 6 Henry, Duke of Viſeo (Viſontium the Latines call it) the ſecond Sonne of Iohn the firſt, created Knight of the Garter by King Henry the ſixth, Anno 1444. By whoſe incouragement and example the Portugueze began to be affected to forrain Voyages: diſcovering in his time, (and for the moſt part under his Conduct alſo) the Ilands of Azores, Madera, Holy-Port, thoſe of Cape Verde, and a great part of the Coaſt of Africk, as far as Guinea. He died An. 1463. 7 Alfonſo the fifth, who warring on the Moores in Africk, took from them the ſtrong Towns of Tanger, Alcaſer, & Arzilla. 8 Iohn the 2d, under whoſe reign the Portugals fully ſettled themſelves in Guinea and the Realms of Congo, diſcovering all the Coaſts and Iſles of Africk, (not before diſcovered) as far as to the Cape of Good-hope, Anno 1487 planting, and fortifying as they paſſed: the whole Diſcoverie of Africk, the Eaſt-Indies, and Braſil, being perfected in the Reign of King Emanuel; under whom alſo they diſcomfited great Armies of the Turks, and Sultans of Egypt, bringing by Sea the riches of the Eaſt into the Weſt. 9 Sebaſtian, the Grand-child of King Iohn, Sonne of Emanuel, imbarking himſelf unadviſedly in the wars of Africk, loſt his life (as it is generally ſuppoſed) at the battel of Alcaſar, in which three Kings fell in one day. But many of the Portugals are of opinion that he was not killed, but that for ſhame and ſorrow he returned not home, wandring from one place to another, and at the laſt was found and avowed at Venice; thence carried to Naples, where he was kept three days in a dark Dungeon without any ſuſtenance but a knife and halter, brought into Spain by the Kings command, where at laſt he died. A man in whom ſo many circumſtances met, to make up a truth, that the very Spaniards uſed to ſay, that either he was the true Sebaſtian, or elſe the Devil in his likeneſs. But whether true or not is not now materiall, death having put an end to that diſputation; though the controverſie which enſued upon his death for the Crown of Portugal, be not yet decided. For though King Philip the 2d of Spain ſucceeded next after Henry the Cardinal King (who only came upon the Stage that the Competitors might have time to declare their Titles) and claimed the Crown as eldeſt Heir male, and neereſt Kinſman to King Henry: yet all the World was not well ſatisfied in the Iuſtice and Equity of his demands. In the carrying on of which affairs he ſeemed to deal very candidly to the eyes of men, not biaſſed by their proper Intereſs; offering to ſubmit his Title to a Diſputation, profeſſing that the Lawes of Portugal were more favourable to him, than the Law of Caſtile; and openly acknowledging, that if he ſhould chance to die before the ſaid Henry, his eldeſt Sonne, as being a degree further off, would come behind ſome others of the Pretendants to it, of whom himſelf had the precedence. But finding nothing done by Henry, and meaning to make ſure work after his deceaſe, (Antonio the Baſtard having got poſſeſſion of Lisbon, and taking on himſelf as King, by a popular and tumultuous Election) he raiſed an Army under the command of Ferdinand de Toledo Duke of Alva, and ſubdued all that ſtood againſt him, Catharine the Dutcheſs of Braganze, Daughter of Prince Edward, ſurrendring alſo all her intereſs and pretenſions to him: So entring by a mixt Title of deſcent and Arms, Anno 1580. Threeſcore yeers it was peaceably enjoyed by the Kings of Spain, when ſuddenly diſpoſſeſſed by a potent faction appearing for Iohn Duke of Braganze, deſcended from the youngeſt Sonne of King Emanuel: which brought ſo cunningly and ſucceſſefully in his behalf, that the K. of Spain was ſooner diſſeized of Portugal, than he heard of any plot or practice ſet on foot againſt him, Anno 1639. In which it is to be obſerved, that as King Philip the 2d, for the better obtaining of this Crown, had embroyled the French, ingaging that King in a bloody war againſt the Proteſtants of that Kingdom, to make him ſure enough from troubling him in his preſent Enterprize: ſo the French Miniſters had cauſed a Revolt in Catalogne; to the end, that when the King of Spain was buſied in reducing that Province, the Portugals might have opportunity to redeem themſelves from the power of the Spaniards, whom the Antipathie betwixt the Nations made leſs pleaſing to them. Nor was it a partiall defection onely, or the loſs of Portugal and no more; but a generall falling off of the whole eſtate, in Africk, Aſia, America, in the Iſles and Continents; the Acceſſories, (excepting only the Town of Ceuta in Barbarie) going the ſame way as the Principall did. And here methinks that grave and deliberate Nation of the Spaniards may be juſtly taxed for committing a greater Solœciſm in point of State, than ever people did before them: in that having got the full and peaceable poſſeſſion of the Crown of Portugal, and all the out-parts and Members of it, they continued all the Garriſons and ſtrong holds of the whole Eſtate in the hands of the Natives. By means whereof, when Portugal it ſelf fell off from the King of Spain, the Provinces and Plantations did the like, without any hæſitancie: which, had ſome of the chief peeces in every Province, Factorie, and Plantation, been brought by little and litle (if not all at once) into the power of the Caſtilians, might have been eaſily prevented. Nor hath the Spaniard hitherto attempted any thing materiall for the recovery of that Kingdom: having been ever ſince ſo over-laid by the French in Catalogne, Navarre, Biſcay, Flanders, Artoys, and Italy, that he hath not had much leizure to attend that buſineſs. But leaving him and them to their own affairs; it is now time to repreſent you with a Catalogue of Portugal.

Nations

1578. 17 Henry the Cardinall, Sonne of King Emanuel 2. the laſt of the male iſſue of Henry of Loreine.
1580. 18 Philip the ſecond of Spain, Sonne of Charles King of Caſtile and Emperour, and of the Lady Marie his Wife, daughter of Emanuel. 18.
1598. 19 Philip II. of Portugal, and III. of Spain. 23.
1621. 20 Philip III. of Portugal, and IV. of Spain. During his reign the Portugueze wearie of the Spaniſh Government, choſe for their King, 1636. 21 Iohn, Duke of Bragance, the IV. of that name, a Prince of great poſſeſſions, and of Royall race, who hitherto hath peaceably enjoyed it.

Now that we may the better ſee by what title both the Kings of Spain and the Dukes of Bragance claim the Crown of Portugal; and what other Pretenders there were to it on the death of Sebaſtian: and what right as well Antonio the Baſtard (but alleging a ſentence of Legitimation) as the Princes of the Houſe of Savoy did pretend unto it: we will lay down their Genealogies from King Emanuel, in this following Scheme.

Emanuel had theſe Children
- 1 Iohn, King of Portugal — Iohn Prince of Portugal — Sebaſtian, King of Portugal.
- 2 Henry the Cardinall, King of Portugal.
- 3 Lewis — Don Antonio a Baſtard. — Chriſtopher and others.
- 4 Edward
  - 1 Mary, wedded to Alexander Duke of Parma. — Rainuccio Farneſis.
  - 2 Catharine, maried to Iohn Duke of Bragance.
- 5 Mary, maried to Charles the fifth, King of Caſtile. — Philip the II. King of Spain.
- 6 Beatrix maried to Charles Duke of Savoy.

By this it may appear how the claims are grounded; but whether title will prevail cannot now be told. Suffice it, that as the Royall line of Portugal did begin in an Henry, ſo it ended in an Henry alſo: the male line failing in the perſon of the Cardinall-King, and the Crown falling (on whomſoever it ſhall faſten) on the Heirs of the Females.

Valentia. The principall Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom are, 1 Of Avis, ſo called from a Town of that name in Portugal, the ſeat thereof; founded by Sanctius or Sancho the firſt, in imitation of the Order of Alcantara, whoſe Green Croſs they wear, but equall to it neither in power nor riches.

2 Of CHRIST, inſtituted by Denys King of Portugal, who conferred on them all the Lands and Poſſeſſions of the exautorated Templars, confirmed by Pope Iohn the 22th, Anno 1321. Their Robe is a Black Caſſock under a White Surcoat, over which a Red Croſs ſtroked in the midſt with a a white line: their duty to expell the Moores out of Betica, the next neighbour to Portugal; to which Crown they have added many gallant Countries in Aſia, Africk, and Braſil, and ſo improved their own Eſtates, that all the Iſles in the Atlantick doe belong to them; beſides the rents of the Mine of S. George in Guinea, amounting to 100000 Ducats of yearly income.

The Armes are Argent, on five Eſcocheons Azure, as many Bezants in Saltier of the firſt, pointed Sable, within a Border Gules, charged with ſeven Towers, Or. Which five Eſcocheons were given in memorie of the five Kings whom Alfonſo the firſt King ſlew at the battell of Obrique, An. 1139. And ſo proceed we on to thoſe Provinces which are under the government of Aragon, the third great bodie of this State.

VALENTIA hath on the Eaſt, the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, parts of Caſtile and Aragon; on the North, Catalogne; and Murcia upon the South. It is watered with the Rivers 1 Xucar, called of old Sucron and Surus. 2 Guadalander, ſignifying a River of pure water; and 3 Millar.

This Countrie ſtandeth in the moſt temperate and pleaſing Air of all Spain, full of Gardens, and places of wonderfull delight, where groweth abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, and Fruit; garniſhed all the yeer long with ſweet-ſmelling flowers, and miraculouſly fruitfull of Pomgranats, Limons, and other delicacies. It hath alſo mines of Silver at Buriol, of Gold at Lodar, of Iron at Finiſtrat, of Alabaſter at Piacent, and of Allom, Lime, and Plaiſter in many places. From thence alſo come the beſt Silks in the World, Cotton of Murcia, Crimſon, Scarlet, and other precious colours, and rich perfumes. Finally, all the ſenſes of man may be delighted and refreſhed with that which comes from this happy Region; in quality and ſweetnes much like that of Naples. The delicacie and great pleaſures whereof have made the Inhabitants of it to be thought leſs warlike than the other Spaniards. The Sheep of this Countrie alſo bear the fineſt Fleeces of any in Spain; firſt ſtocked with Cotſwold ſheep from England, at the requeſt of Iohn King of Aragon, An. 1465. by the imprudent curteſie of K. Edward the 4th.

Places of moſt note in it are. 1 Alicante, a noted Port on the Mediterranean, whence come our true Alicant Wines, made of the juyce of Mulberies; by Ptolomie called Illicias, by Mela, Ilice; from whence the Bay adjoyning is called Sinus Ilicitanus, now the Bay of Alicante. 2 Orivela, a Biſhops See, on the River Segura, which divides this Province from Murcia. 3 Sergorvo, a Biſhops See, by Ptolomie named Segobriga, the chief Citie in old times of the Celtiberi. 4 Xelva, ſuppoſed to be the Incibilis of Livie, where Scipio defeated Hanno and his Carthaginians. 5 Valentia, a fair, pleaſant, and well-traded Citie, the See of an Archbiſhop, and giveth name to the whole Province: in its firſt glorie, one of the chief Roman Colonies in theſe parts of Spain; in its laſt, the Royall ſeat of the Mooriſh Kings of this Countrie. Situate three miles from the Mediterranean, not far from the mouth of the River Dureas, now called Guadalander: and is by ſome ſaid to have been heretofore named Roma, which ſignifieth ſtrength. But when the Romans maſtred it, to diſtinguiſh it from their Rome, it was called Valentia: which in the Latine tongue, is of the the ſame ſignification, with the Greek Πωμη. Here is an Univerſity in which S. Dominick, the Father of the Dominicans, ſtudyed. 6 Laurigi, now a ſmall village, once a Town of great ſtrength, called Lauron, which Sertorius beſieged, took and burned, even then when Pompey, whoſe confederates the Lauronites were, ſtood with his whole Army nigh enough unto the flame to warm his hands; and yet durſt not ſuccour it. 7 Cullera, a Sea Town ſtanding at the mouth of the River Xucar. It was formerly named Sueron, after the name of the River; and is famous in Plutarch, for the victory which Sertorius here got of Pompey, Pompey's Army being not only overthrown, but himſelf with life hardly eſcaping. 8 Morvedre, ſituate in or neer the place of the old Saguntum: the People whereof when beſieged by Annibal, continued ſo obſtinate in the expectation of aid from Rome, that they choſe rather to burn themſelves, than yield up the Town: the occaſion of the ſecond War betwixt Rome and Carthage. Firſt Founded by the Zacynthians, and after this deſtruction of it, repaired, or re-edified by the Romans, (they could not poſſibly do leſs) by whom made a Colonie. 9 Gandia, which gives the title of a Duke to the houſe of Borgia, and was the ſtile of the eldeſt Sonne of Pope Alex. the ſixt (of this noble Family) called commonly in Guicciardine by the name of the Duke of Gandia: 10 Denia, ſeated on the brink of the Mediterranean, over which it hath a goodly Proſpect; the Marquiſate of the Duke of Lerma: firſt Founded by the Maſſilians, by whom called Dianium. Not far from which is the Promonterie Ferraria, of old called Promontorium Dianium, the Refuge of Sertorius in his Wars againſt Pompey and Metellus, both of great renown: the one aged, and of much experience; the other young, and of high reſolutions. And yet Sertorius found himſelf more troubled with the old mans gravitie, than the young mans gallantrie: insomuch as he was used to say, That he'd not been for the Old Woman Metellus, he would have whipped the boy Pompey home with Rods. For he had twice overcome this Great Pompey, before Metellus was joyned in the Action with him: the first time dangerously wounding, and the second time driving him out of the Field. But fighting against both he was over-matched; and yet seemed rather to retire than flie before them: the Spaniards behaving themselves very valiantly in the time of these Wars under him, to which Florus alludeth, saying, Nec unquam magis apparuit Hispani militis Vigor, quam Romano duce. At the last when he had a long time upheld the Marian faction, he was traiterously murdered by Perpenna one of his Associates; for which Metellus and Pompey had a Triumph at Rome. So high an estimate did they set upon the casuall death of this poor Proscript. Catalonia.

The Antient Inhabitants hereof were the Bastitani, the Edetani, Contestani, and some part of the Celtiberi: originally of the Province of Tarraconensis, afterwards (in the sub-dividing of that Province by Constantine) of Carthaginensis. In the declining of the Empire first subdued by the Alani, who were scarce warm in their new dwellings, when disseized by the Gothes. From the Gothes taken by the Moores, of whom reckoned as a Province, till the fatall overthrow given to Mahomet Enasir at the battell of Sierra Morena, and the departure of the Moores of Morocco to their own County, which followed presently upon it. By Zeit Aben-Zeit, the Brother of this Mahomet, made a distinct Kingdom of it self, Anno 1214. but taken from him by one Zaen a Prince of the Moores of Spain, under colour that he had a purpose of turning Christian, and making his Kingdom subject to the Crown of Aragon (as indeed he did) Anno 1228. Conquered from Zaen the new King, before he could enjoy the sweets of a new raised Kingdom, by James King of Aragon, Anno 1238. Since reckoned a Member of that Kingdom, never dismembred from the bodie of it since the first uniting. But still so overgrown with Moores (not to be blamed for loving such an excellent seat) that at the final expulsion of that people be King Philip the third, there were reckoned no fewer than 22000 Families of them in this little Countrie.

12 CATALONIA.

CATALONIA is bounded on the North-East, with the Land of Rousillon and the Pyrenees; on the East, with the Mediterranean; on the South, with Valentia; and on the North and North-West, with Aragon. The Country somewhat Mountainous and full of Woods, and not very well cultivated: beholding more in that respect for Corn, Fruites, and other necessary provisions unto the Courtesie of the Sea which serves them out of other Countries, than to the Goodness of the Land. And yet it is as well watered as most parts of Spain, having in it besides the Ebro, or Iberus, common to many other Provinces; and Cinia, which runneth betwixt it and Valentia; the Rivers of, 1 Lardera, 2 Lobregat, 3 Segre, 4 Francolino, 5 Besors, and 6 Orbar.

The name of Catalonia some derive from the Castellani, who formerly inhabited some part hereof: others will have it called Catalonia corruptly for Gothalania, from the mixture of the Gothes and Alani, successively the Masters of it; and some more improbably from one Carthalot, a Noble Man of this Countrie, who lived here they know not when. More like it is, that it took this name from the Catalauni, an old French people of Languedoc, the adjoyning Province, from whom the fields called Campi Catalaunici neer unto Tholouse took denomination. But from what root soever they came, certain it is that they are generally a perverse and obstinate people, little observant of the pleasure or profit of their naturall Princes, but on the other side so Zealous in defence of their own Privileges, that they have created more trouble to their Kings under that pretence, than all the rest of the subjects of Spain. Of which we need no other instance than their late revolt unto the French, Anno 1638. which drew after it the loss of the Realm of Portugal, and many Towns of great importance in Flanders, and the rest of the Netherlands.

Principall places in it are, 1 Barcelone, situate on the Mediterranean, neer the River Lobregat, accommodated with a large and commodious Port, where commonly the Spanish Souldiers do embark, which are bound for Italy. The Town adorned with large streets, handsome buildings, strong Walls, and a very pleasant situation: called Barcino by the ancient writers, in whose time it was a Roman Colonie, now honoured with a Bishops See, and the seat of the Vice-Roy. 2 Tarragone, seated also on the Mediterranean, East of the River Francolino: built, fortified, and peopled by the two Scipios, the Father and Uncle of Africanus, for a Counter-Fort to Carthagena (or New Carthage) not long before founded by the Carthaginians; afterwards made the Metropolis of Tarraconensis, hence denominated; stript of that honour by Toledo, and is now but two miles in compass, and containing not above 700 Families. Yet still it holdeth the reputation of an Archbishops See, contending with Toledo for the Primacie of all Spain (as Braga also doth in the Kingdom of Portugal) the controversie being undecided to this very day. 3 Ampurias, on the same sea also, once of great esteem, founded by the Massilians, a Roman Colonie, and a well traded Town, as the name doth signifie, this being the Emporia spoken Majorca. ſpoken of by Strabo and Ptolomie; now not obſerveable for any thing but a ſafe Road for Ships. 4 Blanos, 5 Palamos, and 6 Roſas, all Ports on the ſame Sea, but ſubject unto divers Winds, and not very ſpacious. More in the Land are 7 Girone, a ſmall, but handſomely built, and a well traded Town, a Biſhops See, and the title of the eldeſt Sonne of Aragon, called Prince of Girone. Which title was firſt given to Iohn the eldeſt Sonne of King Pedro the fourth immediately upon his birth, Anno 1351. and hath ſince continued. 8 Tortoſa, on the River Ebro, in the moſt rich and pleaſant part of all the Country. A goodly Town, and of great importance; garriſoned by the French, ſince the late revolt of Catalonia from the King of Spain, and like to draw a great part of this Province after it, whileſt it continueth in their power, or the poſſeſſion of their party. 9 Vrgel, a Earls honour, and a Biſhops See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees. 10 Momblane, which heretofore gave the title of Duke to the ſecond Sonnes of the Kings of Aragon. Here is alſo on the Eaſt part where it joyneth with the land of Ronſillon, the Promontary called of old Templum Veneris, now Cabo de Cenx: and not far from Barcelone the Mountain called Montſerrato, on the ſides full of Hermitages and Anchorets cells; and having towards the ſummit of it a Chappell dedicated to the Virgin Mary, much famed and reſorted to by Pilgrims from all parts of the World, for her miraculous Image which is there enſhrined.

The old Inhabitants of this Province were the Caſtellani, Auxitani, Indigites, Coſetani, with part of the Ilercones & Iaccetani; all of them part of Tarraconenſis. In the declining of the Empire ſeized on by the Alani, and they ſoon after vanquiſed if not diſpoſſeſſed by the power of the Gothes. Loſt to the Moores in the general ruine of the whole; from them recovered by the puiſſance of Charles the great; who having taken the City of Barcelone, Anno 801. gave it to one Bernard a Frenchman, with the title of Earl, who Governed the Country for that Emperor; as Wifredus, or Godfredus his ſucceſſor, did for Lewis the Godly. Godfredus Sonne to this Godfrede, by the gift of Charles the Groſs, was the firſt Proprietary; united unto Aragon, by the mariage of Earl Raymond with the Heir of that Kingdom.

The Earls of Barcelone.

The Arms hereof were four Pallets Gules, in a field Or; now the Arms of Aragon. Which Arms were given to Geofrie, ſurnamed the Hairie, the firſt Earl hereof, by Lewis the Stammering, Emperor and King of France, to whoſe aid he came againſt the Normans with a Troop of horſe, and being bloody in the fight, deſired of the Emperour to give him ſome Coat of Arms, which he and his Poſterity might from thenceforth uſe. Who dipping his four fingers in the blood of the Earl, drew them thwart his Shield (which was only of Plain Gold, without any Deviſe) ſaying, This ſhall be your Arms hereafter.

11 The Kingdom of MAIORCA.

THe Kingdom of MAIORCA contained the Ilands of Majorca, Minorca, Ebuiſa, and Frumentaria, in the Mediterranean, the Land of Ronſillon, Sardaigne, or Cerdagne, in the Continent of Spain, and the Earldom of Montpelier in France.

The Land of ROVSILLON, which is the firſt Member of this Kingdom, is ſituate betwixt two Branches of the Pyrenees; bounded on the South with the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, with Catalogne; on the North, with the ſaid Pyrenees; on the Eaſt, with Languedoc in France. Places of moſt importance in it, are 1. Helna, a Biſhops See on the River Techo. 2. Collibre, now a poor and ignoble Village, of note only for a ſafe and commodious Harbour; but formerly the great and famous Citie of Illiberis, ſo often mentioned in the wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Perpignan (in Latine, Perpinianum) built in the yeer 1068. by Guinard Earl of Rouſilion, in a pleaſant Plain on the River Thelis: now a rich Town, well traded, and as ſtrongly fortified againſt the French, to whoſe fury in the time of war it is ſtill expoſed. Beſieged by Henry, Sonne to King Francis the firſt, with a puiſſant Army, Anno 1542 Partly to be revenged ged upon Charles the fifth, who had before attempted Marſeilles in Provence, partly to get into his hands a chief door of Spain, by which he might at all times enter into that Kingdom. But he found here ſuch ſtrong reſiſtance, that he was fain to raiſe his ſiege, with as little honour, as Charles had gotten by the Expedition which he made into Provence. 4. Salſus (the Salſulæ of Strabo) a ſtrong place on the Frontire of Languedock; fortified according to the Rules of modern Fortification, and one of the chief Bulwarks againſt the French. 5. Rouſillon, a Caſtle of more honour and antiquity, than ſtrength or beauty, by Plinie, and other Antients, called Ruſcino, the Countrey Comitatus Ruſcinonenſis, now Rouſillon, and the Land of Rouſillon; accounted heretofore a part of Gaule Narbonenſis, and added unto Spain in the time of the Gothes. On the death of Gerard, the laſt Proprietarie Earl, it was added to the Crown of Aragon by Alfonſo the 2d; by Iames the firſt laid to the Kingdom of Majorca; united to the Crown again by King Pedro the 4th; after that ſold (or rather pawned) by King Iohn the 2d to Lewis the 11th of France for the ſumme of 300000 Crowns, Anno 1462. and freely returned back again to Ferdinand the ſecond (after called the Catholick) by King Charles the 8th, Anno 1493, conditioned that he ſhould not hinder him in the Conqueſt of Naples. Ioyning hereto as part of the Kingdom of Majorca, was the Countrey of Sardaigne, or Cerdague, the habitation of the Cerretani in former times, and afterwards accounted of as a part of Aragon. The chief Town of thoſe Cerretani, called Iulia Libyca; the principall now being hath the name of Cardona (or Sardona, as the Spaniards commonly pronounce it) retaining ſome reſemblance to the name of the Nation. The Countrey lying in the Vallies of the Pyrenees, and conſequently in a corner ſomewhat out of the way, was thought fit to be added to the Land of Rouſillon (for the better endowment of this Kingdom) the fortunes of which it hath ſince followed, as appendant on it; pawned when that was unto the French, and with that reſtored. Majorca,

2. The Earldom of MONTPELIER is ſituate in the Province of Languedoc, adjoyning to the Land of Rouſillon; ſo called from Montpelier, the chief Citie: for the deſcription whereof, we muſt ſend the Reader back to France, having ſpoken of it there already. All I ſhall here repeat is this, that Mary the Daughter of William the laſt Earl thereof, brought it in mariage to her Husband Peter the 2d, King of Aragon: and that it was ſold to Philip de Valoys the French King, by Iames King of Majorca, of that name the third.

3 The Iland of MAIORCA is ſituate in the Mediterranean, juſt over againſt Valentia; from which diſtant about 60 miles, about 300 miles in circuit, the length above an hundred, the breadth ſomewhat under; the number of Inhabitants reckoned at 30000. The Land on all ſides towards the Sea is ſomewhat mountainous, and barren withall: the In-lands more champian and fruitfull, yeelding ſufficient quantity of Oyl, Corn, Wines, and Fruits, for the uſe of its people. The whole Iland is divided into 30 parts, (as ſo many Wapentakes) in every one of which are reckoned from 300 to 600 Families. No hurtfull Creatures are here bred, except Conies only; and thoſe not hurtfull but by accident; of which more anon.

Places of chief note in the former times were. 1. Palma, and 2. Pallentia, which had the rights of Roman Citizens. 3. Civium, and 4. Cunici, which enjoyed the rights of the Latines; and 5. Bochri (or Bochorum) which was in the condition of a Town confederate; beſides divers others not ſo priviledged. Of theſe none left at this day but Palma only, vulgarly called Majorca, by the name of the Iland, a Biſhops See, the Seat of the Vice-Roy for theſe Iſles, and an Vniverſity, the birth-place of Raymundus Lullius, a man of great wit, and profound judgement, the Author of ſome Books in the Art of Chymiſtrie; whoſe Works are read and ſtudied in that Vniverſitie, as Ariſtotles are in others. This is the greater of the two Ilands called Baleares, whence it had the name. Ajoyning hereunto two others of inferiour note, called Dragonera, and Cabrera; of which nothing memorable.

4 MINORCA, ſo called becauſe it is the leſſer of the Baleares, is ſituate Eaſt-ward of Majorca, from which diſtant neer 100 miles; of about 60 miles in length, and 150 miles in Circuit. More fruitfull than the other, though leſs in quantitie; of a rich ſoyl, which breedeth them great herds of Cattell, and Mules of the largeſt ſize of any in Spain: accommodated alſo with two convenient Havens, the one called Maon, the other Farneſſus. Other conſiderable places are, 1 Minorca, now ſo called, by the name of the Iland, but antiently known by the name of Mago, ſituate in the Eaſt part thereof, firſt Founded by the Carthaginians as the name imports. And ſo was alſo 2 Iamno, ſeated in the Weſt (Duo parva Oppida quibus à Pœnis indita nomina, ſaith Severus, Biſhop of theſe Iſles, An. 420, or thereabouts.) It is now called Citadella, or the little Citie. Here was alſo in the mid-land a third Town called Saniſera by Plinie, of which I finde now no tract remaining.

5 EBVSA, now called YVICA, lyeth between the main Land and the Baleares, oppoſite to the Promontorie of Ferraria in the Realm of Valentia, from which diſtant about 50 miles, and neer an hundred miles in compaſs. The Countrey plentifull of Corn, and all manner of Fruits; breeding no hurtful Creature, except Conies onely; which many times deſtroy their Harveſt. The chief Town here, is Yvica, (of old called Ebuſus) the Inhabitants of which make yearly great ſtore of Salt, wherewith they doe not only furniſh Spain, but ſome parts of Italie.

6 FRVMENTERA, ſo called from the plenty of Corn, is diſtant ten miles from Yvica, and about 60 miles from the main Land of Spain; in circuit about 70 miles. Not well inhabited by

reaſon

Majorca. reason of the multitude of Serpents, for which cause called by the Grecians Ophiusa, and Colubraria by the Latines. Both Ilands antiently known by the name of Pityusa, and Pityodes, from the abundance of Pines there growing.

About these Ilands are three others of little worth, called 1. Vedra, 2 Conirello, and 3 Dragonego; 4 Another called Moncolibre, betwixt Majorca, and the influx of the River Iberus. 5 Alfaques, lying in the very mouth of that River; and 6 Scombraria, (antiently called the Iland of Hercules) over against Carthagena; so named from a kind of Tunny (in Latine named Scombri;) of which great shoales use to lye about it. All these, together with the Baleares, make up the Province of the Ilands the 7th Province of Spain.

But the chief glory of these Ilands were the BALEARES, so called (as the generall conceit is, from the Greek word βαλλειν, which signifieth to throw; because the people were so expert in throwing their Slings or Darts; but as Bochartus will needs have it (to the same effect) from Bual-jare, a Punick or Phœnician word, signifying a master in the Art of slinging. An Art so naturall and innative to them, that Parents used to give no meat unto their Children, after some fit age, but what they could hit down with their Slings from the top of a Beam. Of their dexterity at this weapon there is much mention made in the Antient Writers, as well Historians as Poets. And from this exercise they had the name also of Insulæ Gymnesiæ; or else because the people of it used to goe naked to the wars (and possibly enough in those first Ages of the World, and at other times also) from the Greek word γυμνος, the same with Nudus in the Latine. Nor were they good at Slinging only, but at Swiming too, an exercise not ordinarily performed but by naked People; at which the very women are at this day expert; Biddulph reporting, in the relation of his travels, that being becalmed about these Ilands, there came a Woman swiming from one of them with a Basket of fruit to sell. But that which made them most talked of in former times, was the harm done them by their Conies, which here and in the neighbouring Continent increased so wonderfully, that Varro telleth us of a Town in Spain undermined by them; and Strabo, that they did not only destroy their Plants, but rooted up many of their trees. Insomuch that the Inhabitants did request the Romans to give them some new seats to inhabit in; ἐκβάλλειδ γὰρ αὐτὸ ὑπὸ τῶν ζώων τούτων, being ejected by those creatures out of their possessions, whose multitudes they were not able to resist. And when that could not be obtained, they moved Augustus Cæsar (as Plinie telleth us) for some aid against them; who insteed of Souldiers sent them Ferrets, by which their numbers were diminished in a little time.

These Islands were first planted by the Tyrians or Phœnicians, the founders of many of their Cities; one of which in the Isle of Ebusus had the name of Phœnissa. From them also they derived the Art of Slinging. Made subject to the Carthaginians, under the Conduct of Hanno and Himilco, Anno M. 5500. or thereabouts, at what time the Decemviri Governed Rome. Under that State they remained subject till the end of the second Punick war: when Carthage was no longer able to protect them, made a State of themselves, till conquered by Metellus, the Brother of him who subdued Creet. The people were much given to Piracy, and seeing the Roman Navy sayling by their Coasts, supposed them to be Merchant Men, assaulted them, and at first prevailed. But the Romans getting betwixt them and the shore discovered from whence they came, and forced them to an unwilling submission; for which Metellus was rewarded with the honour of a Triumph. Being once made a Province of Spain, they alwaies after that followed the fortunes thereof. In the distraction of the Empire of the Moores in Spain, they were united into one Kingdom, by the name of the Kingdom of Majorca; won from the Moores by Raymond Earl of Barcelone, with the help of the Genoese, 1102. By the Genoese delivered to the Moores again, and from them reconquered by Iames King of Aragon, descended from that Raymond, Anno 1208.

Of these Estates consisted the Kingdom of Majorca, erected by King Iames the first, immediatly on his recovery of these Ilands from the hands of the Moores; and by him given unto Iames his second Sonne: who fearing the displeasure of his Brother King Peter the 3d, submitted his new Kingdom to the Vassalage of the Crown of Aragon, yet could not this so satisfie the ambition or jealousies of those mightier Kings, as to preserve his Successors in possession of it. By Pedro the 4th extorted from King Iames, the fourth and last King thereof, under colour of denying his accustomed Homage. So ended

The Kings of Majorca, of the House of Aragon.

1. Iames the first, Sonne to Iames the first, King of Aragon.
2. Iames II. Sonne of Iames the first.
3. Ferainand, Brother of James the 2d.
4. Iames III. Sonne of Ferdinand, over-come and slain in battel by Pedro the 4th King of Aragon. Majorca and other Members of this little Kingdom, remaining ever since united unto that Crown, except Montpelier, sold by this Iames unto the French.

13 ARAGON. Aragon.

ARAGON, hath on the East, the Land of Rousillon, and the Pyrenees; on the West, the two Castiles; on the North, Navarre; on the South, and South-East, Catalonia, and some part of Valentia: so called from the River Aragon, by which it is divided from the Realm of Navarre; where the first Princes of this house, having won certain Towns from the hands of the Infidels, commanded as Lords Marchers under the Kings of that Realm, and called themselves for that reason the Earls of Aragon, spreading the name as they enlarged their bounds by ensuing conquests.

The Countrie lieth on both sides of the River Iberus, and hath also severall Riverets, as Gallego, Senga, Xalon, and Cagedo, running like so many veines thorough the bodie of it, yet it is generally so destitute of waters, and so ill-inhabited, especially towards the Mountains of the Pyrenees; that one may travell many dayes, and find neither Town, nor house, nor people. But where the Rivers have their course the Case is different; the Valleys yeelding plenty both of Corn and Fruits, especially about Calataiub, where the air is good, and the soyl fruitfull.

The antient Inhabitants were the Celtiberi, who took up a great part of Tarraconensis; divided into lesser Tribes, not here considerable. These sprung originally from the Celtæ, (as before is said) the greatest and most potent Nation of all Gallia: who being too populous for their Countrey, or willing to employ themselves upon new Adventures, passed the Pyrenees, and mingled themselves with the Iberi. From thence the name of Celtiberi, and Celtiberia, according unto this of Lucan.

Gallorum, Celtæ miscentes nomen Iberi.

Who being chas'd from Gaule, their home, did frame,
Of Celtæ and Iberi mixt, one name.

Others of less consideration were the Jaccetani, and Lacetani, with parts of the Edetani and Illergetes.

Places of most importance in it, are, 1 Jacca, the chief Citie heretofore of the Iaccetani, seated amongst the Pyrenees, and for that cause chosen for the chief seat and residence of the first Kings of Aragon, continued there till the taking of Saragossa by Alfonso the first. 2 Calataiub, seated on Xalon in the best Countrey of Aragon; so called from Aiub a Moorish Prince, the first Founder of it. Not far from which upon an hill, stood the old Town Bilbilis, a Municipium of the Romans, and the birth-place of Martiall. 3 Venasque, amongst the Pyrenees. 4 Balbastro, on the Senga, formerly called Burtua, now a Bishops See. 5 Lerida, on the River Segre, as some say, but others place it on the Senga; which rising in the Pyrenees, divideth Catalonia from Aragon, and so passeth into Iberus. Now an Universitie, called formerly Ilerda, and famous for the Incounter happing nigh unto it betwixt Herculeius Treasurer or Quæstor to Sertorius, and Manilius Proconsul of Gallia: wherein Manilius was so discomfited, and his Army consisting of 3 Legions of Foot, and 1500 Horse so routed, that he almost alone was scarce able to recover this Citie, few of his souldiers surviving the overthow. 6 Moson, famous for entertaining the King of Spain every third year: At which time the people of Aragon, Valence, and Catalogne, present the King 600000 crowns, viz. 300000 for Catalogne, 200000 for Aragon, and 100000 for Valentia. And well may they thus doe, for at other times they sit Rent-Free as it were: only they acknowledge the King of Spain to be the head of their Common-wealth. This revenue is proportionably 200000 Crowns a year, all which, if not more, the King again expends, in maintaining his Vice-Royes in their severall Provinces. 7 Huesca, (called of old Osca) somewhat South of Iaca, an Universitie, a place long since dedicated to learning. For hither Sertorius caused all the Noblemens Sonnes of Spain to be brought, and provided them of School-masters for the Greek and Latine tongues, bearing their Parents in hand, that he did it onely to make them fit to undergoe charge in the Common-wealth; but indeed to have them as hostages for their Fathers Faith and Loyalty towards him. 8 Saragossa, on the River Iberus, called at first Salduba, by reason of the Saltpits there: but being afterwards re-edified by Cæsar Augustus, it had the name of Cæsarea Augusta (whence that of Saragossa hath its origination) by whom first made a Colonie of the Romans, and afterwards a Municipium or Free-Burrough; suffered to live according to the Lawes of the Countrey. Vnder the Romans it was one of the seven Iuridicall Resorts of Tarraconensis; under the Moores a peculiar Kingdom of it self; and now a Bishops See, and an Vniversity. Amongst the Kings of it, when it was a kingdom, two are chiefly famous; viz. 1 Marsilius, who joyned with the confederate Moores and Christians against Charles the Great, in the battell of Rancevaux. 2ly Aigoland, of whom there goeth a tale in Archbishop Turpine, that being by the said Charles perswaded to become a Christian, he came unto the Emperours Court very well accompanyed, according to the time apointed. Where finding many Lazars and poor People before the Gates, attending for their usuall Alms from the Emperours Table; he asked what and who they were, and was answered, that they were the poor Servants of God: upon which words he speedily returned again, Protesting that he would never serve that God, who could keep his Servants no better. Took from the Moores by Alfonso King of Aragon and Navarre, An. 1118. it was made the seat Roy-

Aragon. all of the Kings of Aragon, removed hither from Iacca: and of late times hath been the Seat of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Spain, which together with the being an Arch-bishops See, and an Vniversity, have so enriched it, that it is one of the faireſt Cities in all Spain, for handsomneis of Streets, and sumptuousneis of Palaces, and publick Buildings, containing 17 Parish Churches, and fourteen Monasteries, besides divers Chappels, erected in most parts of it to the Virgin Mary.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Tract, hath been shewn before; tossed from the Carthaginians unto the Romans; from them to the Gothes; and finally unto the Moores. Recovered from the Moores about the first beginning of the Kingdom of Leon and Sobrarbre; at which time one Aznar, a man of great puissance and action, possessed himself of some Lands on the Banks of the River Aragon, to be holden by him and his Successors of the Kings of Sobrarbre or Navarre, Anno 775, the Title of Earl being given unto him and them for their greater honour. The sixth of which from Aznar was Fortunio Ximines, whose Daughter Vrraca being maried to Don Garcia Inigo King of Navarre, Anno 867, conveied this Earldom to that Crown: of which it continued a Member till Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, and Earl of Aragon, erected it into a Kingdom, and gave it unto Raymir his naturail Sonne, Anno 1034. The whole succession I shall borrow from the Spanish Histories; first taking (as in other places) some short notes of the Princes most observable in the course of the Storie. Of which the principall were, 1 Aznarius the first Earl, his Estate then containing some few Towns on the River of Aragon: not much enlarged when made a Kingdom by Sancho King of Navarre, surnamed the Great, descended from Fortune the 2d of Navarre, and Vrraca the Sister and Heir of Fortunius Ximenes, the last Earl of Aragon. 2 Raymir the first King, base Sonne to Sancho the Great, advanced to this honour to the prejudice of Garcia, eldest Sonne of Sancho, for standing so generously in defence of Donna Elvira, the Wife of his Father, wrongfully and unnaturally accused of Adulterie, by the said Garcia her own Son, against whom he undertook to maintain her honour in a single Combat. 3 Raymund, Earl of Barcelona, who by mariage with Petronilla the Heir of Aragon, united Catalonia unto that kingdom. 4 Peter the 2d, who on a superstitious zeal first made his kingdom tributarie to the See of Rome, Anno 1214. But presently repenting of it, sided against the Pope with the Albigenses, slain in their cause by Simon de Montfort, and the rest of his Associates in that war. 5 Iames the first, who conquered the kingdoms of Valentia, and Majorca; and was the first that enlarged his Dominions upon the Seas; being shut up from making any further impression on the Moores, by the interjection of Castile betwixe him and them. 6 Peter the 3d, pretending a Title unto Sicil, in right of Constantia his Wife, the Daughter of Manfred King thereof, and by the last Will of Corradine, rightfull King both of that and Naples, extorted that Iland from the French, massacred by him at the fatall Sicilian Vespers. 7 Iames the 2d, by whom the Isle of Sardinia was added to the Crown of Aragon. 8 Martin the last of the masculine race of the House of Barcelone; to whom succeeded, 9 Ferdinand of Castile, Sonne of Iohn King of Castile, and Leonora the Daughter of Peter the 4th of Aragon. 10 Alfonso Sonne of Ferdinand, adopted by Queen Ioan the 2d, got the kingdom of Naples. Of Ferdinand the second, surnamed the Catholick, we shall speak more anon in the close of all.

In which regard he may well challenge the firſt place in the Catalogue of the Monarchs of Spain, to be preſented in due ſeaſon.

In the mean time to draw to a concluſion of the Affairs and Eſtate of Aragon, we are to underſtand, that of all the kingdoms which belong to the Spaniard, it is the moſt privileged, and free from the abſolute command of the Kings of Spain, having in it ſuch a temper or mixture of Government, as makes the Kings hereof to be well-nigh titular, of little more autority than a Duke of Venice. For at the firſt erecting of this Eſtate, the better to incourage the people to defend themſelves againſt the Moores, they had many Privileges indulged them; and amongſt others the creating of a Iuſtitiar of popular Magiſtrate, which like the Ephori of Sparta, had in ſome caſes ſuperioritie over their Kings, reverſing their judgements, cancelling their Grants, and ſometimes cenſuring their Proceedings. And though King Philip the 2d in the buſines of Antonio de Perez had made a Conqueſt of that kingdom, and annulled their Privileges; yet after of his own meer goodneſs he reſtored them (in part) again, as they continue at this day.

Chief Orders of Knight-hood in this kingdom are, 1 Of S. Saviour, inſtituted by Alfonſo the firſt, Anno 1118. to animate the Members of it againſt the Moores. Of the habit and cuſtoms of this Order I have met with nothing.

2 Of Monteſa, inſtituted by Iames the firſt King of Aragon, Anno 1270, or thereabouts; endowed with all the Lands of the Templars, (before diſſolved) lying in Valentia, together with the Town and Caſtle of Monteſa, made the Seat of their Order, whence it took the name. Subject at firſt unto the Maſter of the Order of Calatrava, out of which extracted; and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. But after, by the leave of Pope Benedict the 13th, they quitted themſelves of that ſubjection, and in ſign thereof changed the Habit of Calatrava which before they uſed, to a Red Croſs upon their Breſts; now the badge of the Order.

The Arms of Aragon ſince poſſeſſed by the Earls of Barcelone, are Or, four Pallets Gules: before which they were Azure, a Croſs Argent.

THE MONARCHIE OF SPAIN.

THus having ſpoke of Spain, and the Eſtate thereof, when broken and divided into many kingdoms; let us next look upon it as united into one main body: effected for the moſt part by Ferdinand the laſt King of Aragon, before mentioned. Before which time Spain being parcelled into many kingdoms was little famous, and leſs feared, the Kings thereof as the Author of the Politick Diſpute, &c. hath well obſerved, being only Kings of Figs and Orenges. Their whole puiſſance was then turned againſt one another; and ſmall Achievements had they out of that Continent, except thoſe of the Houſe of Aragon upon Sicilie, Sardinia, and the Baleares. Thuanus, a diligent Writer of the Hiſtorie of his own times, (if in ſome things he favour not more of the Partie, than the Hiſtorian) telleth us, that before this Kings Reign, the name and glory of the Spaniards was like their Countrey, hemmed in by the Seas on ſome ſides, and the Hils on the other: Potiuſq; patuiſſe exteris invadentibus, quam quicquam memorabile extra ſuos fines geſſiſſe. Tis true, that Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, aſſumed unto himſelf the Title of King of Spain, and that Alfonſo the firſt of Caſtile, and the ſixt of Leon, cauſed himſelf to be crowned Emperour of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon; Titles ambitiously affected upon no good ground, and such as ended with their Persons. But this Prince worthily named the Great, seized on the Kingdom of Navarre, conquered Granada from the Moores, subdued the Kingdom of Naples, united Aragon to Castile, banished 124000 Families of the Jewes, began by the Conduct of Columbus, the discoverie of the Western Indies: and finally, by marying his Daughter Ioan to Philip, Sonne of the Emperour Maximilian, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the greatest part of the Netherlands, laid the Foundation of the present Austrian greatness. Continued since by so many intermariages betwixt the Spanish and Imperiall Branches of that potent Family, that Philip the second might have called the Archduke Albertus, Brother, Cousin, Nephew, and Sonne. A strange Medley of Relations. Thus by the puissance of this Prince, the Spaniards became first considerable in the eye of the World, and grew to be a terror to the neighbouring Nations. Nomen Hispanicum obscurum antea et Vicinis pene incognitum, (saith the same Thuanus) tum primùm emersit, tractuq; temporis in tantam magnitudinem excrevit, ut formidolosum ex eo, & terribile toti terrarum Orbi esse cœperit. And he saith true, with reference to the French and Italian Nations, to whom the Spaniards have administred no small matter of fear and terrour: though unto others they appear no such dreadfull Bugg-Bears. But sure it is, and we may warrantably speak it without any such impressions of fear and terror, that this Kingdom since that time is wonderfully both enlarged and strengthned: strongly compacted in it self with all the Ligaments both of Power and State, and infinitely extended over all the parts of the World; his Dominions beholding (as it were) both the rising and setting of the Sun; which before the Spaniard no Monarch could ever say. A greater change than any man can possibly imagine to have been effected in so short a time, as was between the first yeer of Ferdinand the Catholick, to the last yeer of Charles the fift.

Concerning the title of the most Catholick King, re-attributed to this Ferdinand, I find that Alfonso the first of Oviedo was so named for his sanctity: with whom it died, and was revived in Alfonso the Great, the twelfth King of Leon and Oviedo, by the grant of Pope Iohn the 8th. After it lay dead till the dayes of this Prince, who re-obtained this title from Pope Alexander the sixt: either because he compelled the Moores to be baptized, banished the Iewes, and in part converted the Americans unto Christianity; or because, having united Castile to his Dominions, surprized the Kingdom of Navarre, and subdued that of Granada; he was in a manner the Catholique, or generall King of all Spain. The last reason seemeth to sway most in the restauration of this attribute; in that when it was granted or confirmed on Ferdinand by Pope Alexander the sixt; the King of Portugal exceedingly stomached at it; quando Ferdinandus imperio universam Hispaniam (saith Mariana) non obtineret, ejus tum non exigua parte penes Reges alios. It seems Emanuel could not think himself a King of Portugal, if the title of the Catholick King did belong to Ferdinand. Wherein he was of the same mind as was Gregory the Great, who when Iohn of Constantinople had assumed to himself the title of the Oecumenicall or Catholique Bishop, advised all Bishops of the World to oppose that arrogancie: and that upon the self-same reason, Nam si ille est Catholicus, vos non estis Episcopi, for if Iohn were the Catholick Bishop, they were none at all. But upon what consideration soever it was first re-granted, it hath been ever since assumed by his Posterity: to whose Crown as hereditarie and in common use, as the most Christian King to France, the Defendor of the Faith to England.

And yet there was some further reason why the Spaniard might affect the title of Catholick King, his Empire being Catholick in regard of extent (though not of Orthodoxie of doctrines) as reaching not over all Spain onely, but over a very great part of the World besides. For in right of the Crown of Castile he possesseth the Towns of Mellila and Oran, the Haven of Masalquivir, the Rock of Velez, and the Canarie Ilands in Africk; the Continent and Ilands of all America except Brasil, and some plantations in the North, of the English, Hollanders, and a few poor French. In the rights of the Kingdom of Aragon, he enjoyeth the Realms of Naples, Sicil, and Sardinia, with many Ilands interspersed in the Mediterranean; and in right of the house of Burgundie, the Counties of Burgundie and Charolois, the greatest part of Belgium, with a title unto all the rest: besides the great Dukedom of Millain, the Havens of Telamon and Plombino, and many other peeces of importance in Italie, held by investiture from the Empire. To which if those Estates be added which accrewed to Philip the second by the Crown of Portugal, we have the Towns of Ceuta, Tangier, and Maragon in Barbarie, the Fortresses of Arguen and S. George in Guinea, the Ilands of Azores, Madera, Cape Verd, S. Thomas, Del Principe on this side of the Cape, and of Mesambique on the other: in Asia all the Sea-coast almost from the Gulf of Persia unto China, and many strong holds in the Moluccoes, Bantan, Zeilan, and other Ilands; and finally in America the large Country of Brasil, extending in length 1500 miles. An Empire of extent enough to appropriate to these Monarchs the stile of Catholick.

The Monarchs of Spain.

A. Ch.

1478. 1 Iſabel, Q. of Caſtile, Leon, Gallicia, Toledo, Murcia, Lady of Biſcay, conquered Granada, and diſcovered America.

1504. 2 Joane, Princeſs of Caſtile, Granada, Leon, &c. and of Aragon, Navarre, Sicily, &c.
1504. 2 Philip, Archduke of Auſtria, Lord of Belgium.

1516. 3 Charles, King of Caſtile, Aragon, Naples, &c. Archduke of Auſtria, Duke of Millain, Burgundy, Brabant, &c. Earl of Catalogne, Flanders, Holland, &c, Lord of Biſcay, Friezland, Utreicht, &c. and Emperour of the Germans. He added the Realms of Mexico and Peru, the Dukedoms of Gelderland and Millain, the Earldom of Zutphen, and the Signeuries of Utrecht, Over-Yſſell, and Groning, unto his Eſtates. A Prince of that magnanimity and puiſſance, that had not Francis the firſt in time oppoſed him, he had even ſwallowed all Europe. He was alſo for a time of great ſtrength and reputation in Tunis and other parts of Africa, diſpoſing Kingdomes at his pleaſure: but the Turk broke his power there, and being hunted alſo out of Germany, he reſigned all his kingdoms, and died private. 42.

1558. 4 Philip II. of more ambition, but leſs proſperity than his Father; fortunate onely in his attempt on the kingdom of Portugal, but that ſufficiently balanced by his ill ſucceſſes in the Netherlands, and againſt the Engliſh. For the Hollanders and their Confederates drove him out of eight of his Belgic Provinces: the Engliſh overthrew his Invincible Armada, intercepted his Plate-Fleets, and by awing the Ocean had almoſt impoveriſhed him. And though he held for a time an hard hand upon France, in hope to have gotten that Crown by the help of the Leaguers: yet upon caſting up his Accompts, he found that himſelf was the greateſt Loſer by that undertaking. So zealous in the cauſe of the Romiſh Church, that it was thought that his eldeſt Sonne Charles was put to death with his conſent in the Inquiſition-houſe, for ſeeming favourably inclined to the Low-Country-Hereticks, as the Spaniards called them. Theſe four great Kings were all of the Order of the Garter; but neither of the two that followed.

1598. 5 Philip III. Finding his Eſtate almoſt deſtroyed by his Fathers long and chargeable Warres, firſt made peace with England, and then concluded a Truce for twelve years with the States of the Netherlands: which done, he totally baniſhed all the Moores out of Spain, and was a great ſtickler in the Warres of Germany.

1621. 6 Philip IV. Sonne of Philip the 3d, got into his power all the Lower Palatinate; but loſt the whole Realm of Portugal, and the Province of Catalonia, with many of his beſt Towns in Flanders, Artois, and Brabant, and ſome Ports in Italy, not yet recovered to that Crown from the power of the French.

This Empire conſiſting of ſo many ſeverall Kingdoms united into one Body, may ſeem to be invincible. Yet had Queen Elizabeth followed the counſell of her men of Warre, ſhe might have broken it in pieces. With 4000 men, ſhe might have taken away his Indies from him: without whoſe gold, the Low-Country Army (which is his very beſt,) could not be paid, and by conſequence muſt needs have been diſſolved. Nay Sir Walter Raleigh, in the Epilogue of his moſt excellent Hiſtory of the World, plainly affirmeth, that with the charge of 200000 l, continued but for two years or three at the moſt, the Spaniards might not only have been perſwaded to live in peace, but that all their ſwelling and overflowing ſtreams, might be brought back to their naturall channels, and old banks. Their own proverb ſaith, the Lion is not ſo fierce as he is painted; yet the Americans tremble at his name, it's true: and it is well obſerved by that great Politician Machiavel, that things which ſeem to be, and are not, are more feared farre off, than neer at hand. Nor is this judgement built upon weak conjectures but ſuch as ſhew the power of Spain not to be ſo formidable as it's commonly ſuppoſed: which I find marſhalled to my hand in this manner following. 1 The diſjointedneſs of his Realms and other Eſtates, ſevered by infinite diſtances both of Sea and Land, which makes one part unable to relieve or defend the other. 2 The ſlowneſs of his Preparations in offenſive or defenſive Wars, his Forces of neceſſity being long a gathering in places ſo remote from the Royall Seat; and being gathered, no leſs ſubject to the dangers both of Sea and Land, before united into a body, and made fit for action. 3 The danger and uncertaintie which the moſt part of his Forinſique Revenues are ſubject to, many times intercepted by Pirates and open Enemies; ſometimes ſo long delayed by croſs Winds and Seas, that they come too late to ſerve the turn. 4 The different tempers and affections of a great part of his Subjects, not eaſily concurring in the ſame ends, or travelling the ſame way unto them. 5 The diſcontentedneſs of the Aragonians, Portugueze, and Italian Provinces, not well affected, for their private and particular reaſons, unto the Caſtilians; apt to be wrought on by the Miniſters of neighbouring Princes; whom jealouſies of State keep watchfull upon all advantages, for the depreſſing of his power. 6 And laſt of all, the want of people of his own naturall Subjects, whom he may beſt relie on for the increaſe and grandour of his Eſtates; exhauſted and diminiſhed by thoſe waies and means which have been touched upon before; without any politique or provident courſe to remedy that defect for the time to come. And this I look on as the greateſt and moſt ſenſible Error in the Spaniſh Government: therein directly contrary to the antient Romans. Who finding that nothing was more neceſſary for great and important enterprizes than multitudes of Men, employed all their ſtudies to increaſe their numbers by Mariages, Colonies, and ſuch helps, making their Conquered Enemies free Denizens of their Common-wealth; by which means the number of the Roman Citizens became ſo great (all being equally interreſſed in the preſervation of it) that Rome could not be ruined (in Annibals judgement) by any forces but her own. But on the other ſide the Spaniards employ none in their Plantations but their own native Subjects, and ſo many of them alſo in all their enterprizes both by Sea and Land, that ſo many thouſands going forth every year, in the flower of their age, not one of ten returning home, and thoſe few which return, either lame or old, the countrey is not only deprived of the Men themſelves, but alſo of the Children which might be born. An evidence whereof may be, that John the firſt of Portugal, who reigned before the ſeverall Voyages and Plantations of that people, was able to raiſe 40000 Men for the War of Africk: whereas Emanuel, who lived after thoſe undertakings, had much a do to raiſe 20000 foot and 3000 horſe on the ſame occaſion, and Sebaſtian after that found as great a difficulty to raiſe an Army of 12000.

As for the forces which the King of Spain is able to make out of all his Eſtates, they may be beſt ſeen by his preparations for the Conqueſt of England, France, and Flanders. In his deſign for England, Anno 1588. he had a Fleet conſiſting of 150 ſail of Ships, whereof 66 were great Galleons, 4 Galleaſſes of Naples, 4 Gallies, the reſt ſmaller Veſſels: fraughted with 20000 Souldiers for land ſervice, 9000 Saylers, 800 Gunners, 400 Pioneers, 2650 peeces of Ordinance, not Reckoning into this accompt the Commanders and Voluntaries, of which laſt there were very great numbers, who went upon that ſervice for Spoil, Merit, or Honour. In the deſign of Charles the fift for the Conqueſt of Provence, he had no leſſe than 50000 in the field; and in that of Philip the ſecond for the reducing of Flanders, the Duke of Alva had an Army, at his firſt ſetting forward out of Italie, conſiſting of 8800 Spaniſh foot, and 1200 horſe, all of them old experienced Souldiers, drawn out of Naples, Sicil, and the Dutchie of Millain, 3600 German foot, 300 Lances, and 100 Harcubuſiers on horſeback of the County of Burgundy, all old Souldiers alſo, beſides many Voluntiers of great ranck and quality, very well attended, and his old ſtanding Army in the Belgick Provinces, a ſtrength ſufficient to have Conquered a far greater Countrie.

Of ſtanding forces in this Countrie he maintaineth in theſe Realms of Spain, but three thouſand horſe, and in his Forts and Garriſons no more than 8000 Foot, his Garriſons being very few, and thoſe upon the Frontires only, and in Maritime Towns; his Galies being ſerved with Slaves out of Turkie and Barbarie. And yet he is able on occaſion to raiſe very great forces, partly becauſe the ordinary Subjects are ſo well affected to their Prince, whom they never mention without reverence: and partly in regard there is ſo great a number of Fendataries and Noblemen, who are by Tenure to ſerve perſonally at their own charges for defence of the Realm. And certainly it muſt be a conſiderable force which the Noblemen of Spain are able to raiſe, conſidering the greatneſs of their Revenue, and the number of Vaſſalls which live under them: it being ſuppoſed that the Dukes of Spain (of which there were 23 when my authour lived) were able one with another to diſpend yearly from 50000 Ducats to a 100000, ſome going very much above that proportion; and that of 36 Marqueſſes and 50 Earls, the pooreſt had 10000 Ducats of yearly Rent, and ſo aſcending unto 50 and 60000. The Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and others of the greater Clergie, being all endowed with fairer Temporall eſtates, than in moſt places of Europe, are alſo bound to ſerve (though not perſonally) on the like occaſions. And to theſe ſervices the Noblemen are for two reaſons more forwards than the other Fendataries. 1 Becauſe their honours deſcend not de jure from the Father to the Sonne, unleſs confirmed to the Sonne by the Kings acknowledgment and compellation: which makes them more obſervant of him than in France or England, where it is challenged as a Birth-right. 2 Becauſe out of the groſs body of theſe Noblemen, the King doth uſe to honour ſome with the title of Grandees, privileged to ſtand covered before the King, and to treat with him as their Brother: which being the higheſt honour which that State can yield, keeps thoſe great perſons in a readineſs to obey his pleaſure, in hope to come unto an honour of ſo high eſteem.

For the Revenues of this King, which ordinarily ariſe out of his Eſtates (taking Portugal into the accompt) they are computed at 11 millions of Crowns yearly, that is to ſay 4 from his Dominions in Italie, 2 from Portugal and the Appertinents thereof, 3 from the Weſt-Indies, and the other 2 remaining from his Kingdoms in Spain. Beſides this he receiveth yearly the Revenues of the Maſterſhips of all the great Orders in his Kingdom, incorporated to the Crown by Ferdinand the Catholick, not without good Policie and reaſon of State: the Maſters (or Commendadors as they call them) of thoſe ſeverall Orders drawing after them ſuch troopes of the Nobility, Gentry, and other dependants, that their power began to be ſuſpected by the Kings themſelves. By which addition there accreweth to the Crown (beſides the opportunity of preferring ſervants of the greateſt merit) above 150000 l. of yearly Rents. As for his Caſualties and extraordinary waies of raiſing money, they are very great: reckoned by the Author of the Generall Hiſtory of Spain to amount (according to divers opinions) to 14. 18. and 23 millions of Crowns. For making up which ſum he puts in the Firſt Fruits, and ſome part of the Tenthes of Rectories, and other Church preferments, amounting to 3 millions yearly. And the Author of the Politique Diſpute, &c. affirmeth the Pardons ſent to the Indies, given him by the Pope, to be worth half a million of pounds yearly. Adde hereunto the ſall and diſpoſall of all Offices, which make up a good round ſum; and the free Gifts and Contributions of his Subjects, which amount unto a good Revenue. For the Kingdom of Naples preſents him every third year with a million & 20000 Crowns; and Caſtile only at one time granted a Contribution of four millions to be paid in four years: his Subjects generally being ſo well affected unto the Crown, that he can demand nothing in reaſon of them which they are not ready to grant: the King of Spain being called in that regard by the Emperor Maximilian, the King of Men. And yet this great King is not counted to be rich in treaſure, his expences being very great. Firſt, In keeping Forts and Garriſons in many parts of his Eſtates againſt the revolt of the Natives; Secondly, Maintaining ſo many Frontire places, againſt forein Invaſions; Thirdly, In the continuall pay of an Armada for Conducting his Plate-Fleets from America; And laſt of all the many and unprofitable Wars of King Philip the ſecond, ſo plunged the Crown in the Gulfes of Bankers and Money-Changers, that much of the Revennes of it ſtand ingaged for payment to this very day.

Spain

There are in Spain

OF THE OCEAN AND ISLES OF BRITAIN:

BEfore we can arive in Britain, the laſt Weſtern Dioceſe, we muſt croſs the OCEAN, that ingens and infinitum pelagus, as Mela calleth it; in compariſon of which, the Seas before-mentioned are but as Ponds or Gullets: a Sea in former times known more by fame than tryall, and rather wondred at on the ſhore ſide, than any more remote place of it. The Romans ventured not on it with their Veſſels, unleſs in the paſſage from France to Britain: and much famed is Alexander for his hazardous voyage on this unruly Sea, he having ſayled in all but 400 Furlongs from the ſhore. The name and pedegree take here both from the Poëts and Etymologiſts. The Poëts make Oceanus to be the Sonne of Cœlum and Veſta, or of Heaven and Earth. They termed him the father of all things, as, Oceanumq; patrem rerum, in Virgil, becauſe moiſture was neceſſarily required to the conſtitution of all bodies: and uſually painted him with a Buls head on his ſhoulders, (whence Euripides called him Ωκεανὸς Ταυρόκερως, Oceanus Tauriceps) from the bellowing and furie of the Winds; which from it come to the ſhore, and to which it is ſubject. As for the Children attributed unto him, they are doubtleſs nothing but the clouds and vapours hence ariſing. The name of ὠκεανὸς Oceanus, ſome derive from ὠκὺς, celer, becauſe of its ſwiftneſs; ſome from κέω, fundo, divido, becauſe it cleaveth and interlaceth the earth: and others make it ὠκεανὸς, quaſi ὠκυρανὸς παρὰ τὸ ἄκρως ῥεῖν, à celeriter fluendo, which agreeth in meaning with the firſt. Particular names it hath divers, according to the name of the ſhore by which it paſſeth, as Cantabricus, Gallicus, Britannicus, &c. The chief Iſles of it, appertaining to Europe, beſides thoſe called the Azores or Iſles of Tercera, which we have ſpoken of when we were in Portugal; thoſe of the Aquitain Ocean, deſcribed in our Hiſtorie of France; thoſe of the Netherlands and the Northern Seas, which are to be deſcribed hereafter in their proper places, are the Britiſh Ilands, by many of the moſt antient and approved Writers called ſimply BRITAIN, becauſe united all in that common notion; though afterwards diſtinguiſhed into the particular Appellations of Great Britain, Ireland, and the reſt. Of which, as lying in my way betwixt Spain and Germany; or rather, as the next Dioceſe of the Empire to France and Spain, under the Prætorio Præfectus of Italy, I am next to ſpeak.

OF BRITAIN:

BRITAIN, according to the largeſt latitude of that name and notion, comprehendeth all thoſe Ilands, both great and leſs, which lie in compaſs about Albion, or Britain properly ſo called: by Ptolomie called Britanniæ, in the plurall number. For ſpeaking of France he thus ſubjoyneth, Ex adverſo hujus Britannia Inſula, Albion ipſi nomen fuit, cum Britanniæ omnes vocarentur. i. e. Oppoſite hereunto lieth the Iland of Britain, which formerly by a more proper name was called Albion, the name of Britain comprehending all the Iles adjoyning. And in this Latitude and extent we now take the word, the whole dominion of theſe Ilands, diſtinguiſhed into ſeverall names, being united in the perſon and under the command of the King of Great Britain, that name including all the reſt, as appendants of it, with reference to this called the Iſles of Britain, or the Britiſh Ilands. Thus Ariſtotle in his Book De Mundo (if the Book be his) Quo in mari duæ Inſulæ Britannicæ ſitæ ſunt, quarum maximæ Albion & Ierna; i. e. In which Sea there are ſituate two Britiſh Ilands of great note and compaſs, Albion (or Britain properly ſo called) and Ireland. Ptolomie goeth to work more punctually, and he ſtates it thus. Complectitur prima hæc Europæ tabula duas Britannicas inſulas, quas Dionyſius Bretanides vocat, Hiberniam nempe & Albionem, cum minoribus aliquot adjacentibus inſulis, ut ſunt Orcades, Ebudæ, Thyle, Mona, et reliquæ ſuis nominibus expreſſæ: that is to ſay, This firſt Table of Europe comprehendeth the two Ilands of Britain, which Dionyſius calls the Bretanides, namely Ireland and Albion, with ſome leſſer Ilands joyning to it, as the Orcades, the Hebrides, Thule, Angleſey, (or Man) and others called by diſtinct names. By which we ſee, firſt that the generall name of Britain or the Britiſh Ilands, comprehendeth all thoſe which are ſituate in the Britiſh Ocean: and ſecondly, that the greateſt and moſt famous of them, more ſpecially called Britain by the following Writers, was antiently called Albion, by its proper name. And it was called Albion, as my Authors tell me, either from Albion the Brother of Bergion, the Sonne of Neptune, mentioned by Aeſchilus, Dionyſius, Strabo, Mela, Solinus, Plinie, and others; it being not improper that the greateſt Iland of the Ocean ſhould be denominated from a Sonne of the greateſt Sea-god: or from the old word Ἀλφὸν, ſignifying White amongſt mongſt the Greeks, (from whence the Latines had their Album,) by reaſon of the white chalkie cliffs, ſeen by the Mariners a farre off as they ſailed thoſe Seas.

But to return again to Britain in the generall notion, and to the ſeverall Ilands which that name includeth, we may diſtinguiſh them into the Greater and the Leſſer; the Greater ſubdivided into 1 Great Britain, or Britain ſpecially ſo called, and 2 Ireland; the Leſſer into 1 the Orcades, 2 the Hebrides, 3 Man, 4 Angleſey, 5 The Ilands of the Severn Sea, 6 the Sorlinges, or Iſles of Silly, 7 Wight, 8 Thanet, 9 Sunderland, and 10 Holy Iland.

GREAT BRITAIN.

TO ſpeak much of GREAT BRITAIN, or BRITAIN ſpecially and properly ſo called, I hold ſomewhat ſuperfluous, it being our home, and we therefore no Strangers to it. Yet as Mela once ſaid of Italie, De Italia, magis quia ordo exigit, quam quia monſtrari egeat, pauca dicentur, nota ſunt omnia, ſo ſay I of Britain. It is ſo obvious to the eye of every Reader, that he needs not the ſpectacles of Letters. Yet ſomething muſt be ſaid, though for methods ſake, rather than neceſſity. Firſt then, we will begin with laying out the bounds thereof (as in other places) which are, on the Eaſt, the German Ocean, dividing it from Belgium, Germanie, and Danemark; on the Weſt, S. Georges Channel, which divides it from Ireland; and to the North of that, with the main Vergivian or Weſtern Ocean, of which the Antients knew no ſhore; on the North, with the Hyperborean or Deucaledonian Ocean, as Ptolomie calls it, extending out to Iſeland, Freezeland, and the ends of the then known World; and on the South, the Engliſh Channel, which divides it from France.

The length hereof from North to South, is reckoned at 620 Italian mlles; the greateſt bredth from Eaſt to Weſt, meaſured in a right line no more than 250 of the ſame miles, but by the crooks and bendings of the Sea-coaſt, comes to 320 miles: the whole circumference accompted 1836 miles. The greateſt Iland in the World, except Java, Borneo, Sumatra, and Madagaſcar; and therefore by Solinus and ſome other Antients (to whom thoſe Ilands were not known) called the other World: by others of late times the Ladie and Miſtreſs of the Seas. Situate under the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th Climes: ſo that the longeſt day at the Lizard point in Cornwall (being the moſt Southernly part hereof) containeth 16 hours and a quarter; at Barwick, which is the Border of England and Scotland, 17 hours 3 quarters, and one hour more at Straithby head, in the North of Scotland: where ſome obſerve that there is ſcarce any night at all, in the ſummer Solſtice, but a darker Twilight. To which alludes the Poet, ſaying, Et minima contentos nocte Britannos: and the Panegyriſt in the time of Conſtantine, amongſt other commendations which he gives to Britain, ſaith, that therein is neither extreme cold in Winter, nor any ſcorching heats in Summer; and that which is moſt comfortable, long dayes, and very lightſome nights. Nor doth the Panegyriſt tell us onely of the temperateneſs of the Air, or the length of the dayes; but of the fruitfulneſs of the "ſoyl: affirming Britain to be bleſſed with all the commodities of Heaven and Earth; ſuch an a-"bundant plenty of Corn, as might ſuffice both for Bread and Wine; the woods thereof without "wild Beaſts, the Fields without noyſome Serpents, infinite numbers of milch-Beaſts, and Sheep "weighed down with their own Fleeces. Whereto adde that of Alfred of Beverley, a Poet of the middle times, ſaying thus of Britain.

Inſula prædives qua toto vix eget orbe,
Et cujus totus indiget orbis ope.
Inſula prædives, cujus miretur et op'et
Delicias SOLOMON, Octavianus opes.

A wealthy Iland, which no help deſires,
Yet all the World ſupply from her requires:
Able to glut King SOLOMON with pleaſures,
And ſurfet great Auguſtus with her treaſures.

Proceed we next to the name of Britain, of which I find many Etymologies, ſome forced, ſome fabulous and fooliſh, and but few of weight. That which hath paſſed for currant in former times (when almoſt all Nations did pretend to be of Trojan race) was that it took this name from Brutus, affirmed to be the Sonne of Silvius, who was the Grandchild of Æneas, and the 3d King of the Latines of the Trojan Blood. Which Brutus having unfortunately killed his Father, and thereupon abandoning Italy with his friends and followers, after a long voyage, and many wandrings, is ſaid to have fallen upon this Iland, to have conquered here a race of Giants; and having given unto it the name of Britain, to leave the Soveraignty thereof unto his poſterity, who quietly enjoyed the ſame till ſubdued by the Romans. This is the ſumme of the Tradition concerning Brute: Which though received in the darker times of ignorance, and too much credulity; in theſe more learned dayes hath been laid aſide, as falſe and fabulous. And it is proved that there was no ſuch man as Brutus, 1 From the newneſs of his Birth, Geofry of Monmouth, who lived in the reign of K. Henry the ſecond, being the firſt Author which makes mention of him: for which immediately queſtioned by Newbrigenſis, another Writer of that Age. 2ly, By the ſilence of all Roman Hiſtorians, in whom it had been an unpardonable negligence to have omitted an Accident ſo remarkable, as the killing of a Father by his own Sonne (eſpecially when they wanted matter to fill up the times) and the England. erecting of a new Trojan Empire in ſo great an Iland: 3ly. By the Arguments which Cæſar uſeth to prove the Britains to be derived from the Galls, as Speech, Lawes, Cuſtomes, Diſpoſition, Making, and the like. 4ly. And leſt it might be ſaid, that though the Britans in Cæſars time were of Gallick race, yet there had been a former and more antient people, who had their Originall from the Trojans: Tacitus putteth off that diſpute with an Ignoramus, Qui mortales initio coluerint parum & compertum eſt, ſaith that knowing writer. And 5ly. By the Teſtimony of all Roman Hiſtories, who tell us that Cæſar found the Britains under many Kings, and never under the command of one ſole Prince, but in times of danger. Summa Belli adminiſtrandi communi conſenſu commiſſa eſt Caſſivellauno, as it is in Cæſar: Dum ſinguli pugnabant, univerſi vincebantur, as we read in Tacitus. To omit therefore that of Brutus, and other Etymons as unlikely, but of leſs authority: the name of Britain is moſt probably derived from Brit, which in the antient Britiſh ſignifieth Painted; and the word Tain, ſignifying a Nation: agreeable unto the cuſtome of the antient Britains, who uſed to diſcolour and paint their bodies, that they might ſeem more terrible in the Eys of their enemies. Britain is then a Nation of painted men; ſuch as the Romans called Picts in the times enſuing. Which I prefer before the Etymologie of Bocartus, a right learned man, but one that wreſteth all originations to the Punick or Phœnician language: by whom this Iland is called Britaine or Bretannica, from Barat-anac, ſignifying in that language a Land of Tynne, wherewith the Weſtern parts of it do indeed abound. Other particulars concerning the Iſle of Britain, ſhall be obſerved in the deſcription of thoſe parts into which it now doth ſtand divided, that is to ſay, 1 England, 2 Wales, and 3 Scotland.

ENGLAND.

ENGLAND is bounded on the Eaſt, with the German; on the Weſt, with the Iriſh; on the South, with the Britiſh Oceans; and on the North, with the Rivers of Tweed and Solway; by which parted from Scotland: Environed with turbulent Seas, guarded by inacceſſible Rocks; and where thoſe want, preſerved againſt all forein invaſions by ſtrong Forts, and a puiſſant Navy.

In former time the Northern limits did extend as far as Edenburgh Fryth on the Eaſt, and the Fryth of Dunbriton on the Weſt, (for ſo far not only the Roman Empire, but the Kingdom of Northumberland did once extend:) the intervenient ſpace being ſhut up with a Wall of Turfes by Lollius Vrbicus, in the time of Antoninus Pius. But afterwards, the Romans being beaten back by the Barbarous people, the Province was contracted within narrower bounds; and fortified with a Wall by the Emperor Severus, extending from Carlile to the River Tine, the tract whereof may eaſily be diſcerned to this very day. A Wall ſo made, that at every miles end there is ſaid to have been a Caſtle, between every Caſtle many Watch-Towers, and betwixt every Watch-Tower a Pipe of Braſs, conveying the leaſt noiſe unto one another without interruption: ſo that the news of any approaching enemy was quickly over all the Borders, and reſiſtance accordingly provided. In following times the ſtrong Towns of Barwick and Carlile have been the chief Barres by which we kept the backdoor ſhut: and as for other Forts we had ſcarce any on the Frontires, or Sea Coaſts of the Kingdom, though in the midland parts too many. Which being in the hands of potent and factious Subjects, occaſioned many to Rebell, and did create great trouble to the Norman Kings: till in the latter end of the reign of King Stephen 1100 of them were levelled to the very ground, and thoſe few which remained diſmantled and made unſerviceable. The Maritime parts were thought ſufficiently aſſured by thoſe Rocks and Cliffs, which compaſs the Iland in moſt parts: and hardly any Caſtle all along the ſhore except that of Dover; which was therefore counted by the French as the Key of England. But in the year 1538. King Henry the eighth, conſidering how he had offended the Emperor Charles the fift, by his divorce from Queen Catharine, and incurred the diſpleaſure of the Pope by his falling off from that See; as alſo that the French King had not only maried his Sonne to a Neece of the Pope, but a Daughter to the King of Scots, thought fit to provide for his own ſafety, by building in all places where the ſhore was moſt plain and open, Caſtles, Platformes, and Blockhouſes, many of which in the long time of peace enſuing were much neglected, and in part ruined.

His Daughter Queen Elizabeth of happy memory, provided yet better for the Kingdom. For ſhe not only fortified Portſmouth, and placed in it a ſtrong Gariſon, but walled the Kingdom round with a moſt ſtately, royall, and invincible Navy: with which ſhe alwaies commanded the Seas, and vanquiſhed the mightieſt Monarch of Europe; whereas her predeceſſors in their Sea ſervice, for the moſt part, hired their men of Warre, from the Hanſmen, and Geneſe. Yet did neither of theſe erect any Caſtles in the inward part of the Realm: herein imitating Nature, who fortifieth the head and the feet only; not the middle of Beaſts; or ſome Captain of a Fort, who plants all his Ordnances on the Walls, Bulwarks, and Out-works, leaving the reſt as by theſe ſufficiently guarded.

The whole Iland was firſt called Albion, as before is ſaid, either from the Gyant Albion, or ab albis rupibus, the white Rocks towards France. Afterwards it was called Britain, which name being firſt found in Athenæus, amongſt the Grecians, and in Lucretius and Cæſar amongſt the Latines; followed herein by Strabo, Plinie, and all other antient writers, except Ptolomie onely, by whom called called Albion as at first; continued till the time of Egbert the first Saxon Monarch, who called the Southern parts of the Iland England, from the Angles, who with the Jutes and Saxons conquered it. England.

It is in length 320 miles, enjoying a soyl equally participating of ground fit for tillage and pasture: yet to pasture more than tillage are our people addicted, as a course of life not requiring so many helpers, which must be all fed and paid; and yet yielding more certain profits. Hence in former times Husbandry began to be neglected, villages depopulated, and Hinds for want of entertainment to turn way-beaters: whereof Sir Thomas Moore in his Utopia complaineth, saying, that our Flocks of Sheep had devoured not only men, but whole houses and Towns. Oves (saith he) quæ tam mites esse, tamq; exiguo solent ali; nunc tam edaces, et indomitæ esse cœperant, ut homines devorent ipsos, agros, domos, oppida vastent, ac depopulentur. To prevent this mischief, there was a Statute made in the 4th yeer of Henry the 7th, against the converting of Arable Land into Pasture ground: by which course Husbandry was again revived, and the soyl made so abounding in Corn, that a dear year is seldome heard of. Our Vines are nipped with the cold, and seldome come to maturity; and are more used for the pleasantness of the shade, than for the hopes of wine. Most of her other plenties and Ornaments, are expressed in this old verse following.

Anglia, 1 Mons, 2 Pons, 3 Fons, 4 Ecclesia, 5 Fœmina, 6 Lana.

That is to say,

For 1 Mountains, 2 Bridges, 3 Rivers, 4 Churches fair,
5 Women, and 6 Wooll, England is past compare.

1 First for the Mountains lifting up here and there their lofty heads, and giving a gallant prospect to the Lower Grounds; the principall are those of Mendip in Somerset, Malvern hils in Worcestershire, the Chiltern of Buckinghamshire, Cotswold in Gloucestershire, the Peak of Darbyshire, York Wolds, &c. All of them either bowelled with Mines, or clothed with Sheep, or adorned with Woods. The exact description of which, would require more time than I can spend upon that Subject. Proceed we therefore to

2 The Bridges, which are in number 857. The chief of which are, the Bridge of Rochester, over Medway, the Bridge of Bristoll, over Avon, and the Bridge of London, over Thames. This last standing upon 19 Arches of wonderfull strength and largeness; supporteth continuall ranges of buildings, seeming rather a street than a Bridge; and is not to be parallelled with any Bridge of Europe, though of late by some defacements made by fire, Anno 1632. the buildings are not so contiguous as they were before.

The Rivers of this Countrey are in number 325. The chief is Thamisis, compounded of the two Rivers, Thame and Isis; whereof the former rising somewhat beyond Thame in Buckinghamshire, and the latter beyond Cyrencester in Glocestershire, meet together about Dorcester in Oxfordshire: the issue of which happy conjunction is the Thamisis or Thames. Hence it flyeth betwixt Berks, Buckinghamshire, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex; and so weddeth himself to the Kentish Medway, in the very jawes of the Ocean. This glorious River feeleth the violence of the Sea more than any River in Europe, ebbing and flowing twice a day more than 60 miles: about whose banks are so many fair Townes, and Princely Palaces, that a German Poet thus truly spoke.

Artifici exculios dextra, tot vidimus arces;
Ut nunc Ausonio, Thamisis, cum Tibride certet.

We saw so many Woods and Princely Bowers,
Sweet Fields, brave Palaces, and stately Towers:
So many gardens, dress'd with curious care,
That Thames with Royall Tiber may compare.

The second River of note, is, Sabrina or Severn. It hath its beginning in Plinlimmon hill in Montgomeryshire, and his end about seven miles from Bristoll: washing in the mean space the wals of Shrewsbury, Worcester, and Gloucester. 3 Trent, so called, for that 30 kind of Fishes are found in it, or that it receiveth 30 lesser Rivers: who having his Fountain in Staffordshire, and gliding through the Countries of Nottingham, Lincoln, Leicester, and York, augmenteth the turbulent current of Humber, the most violent stream of all the Isle. This Humber is not, to say truth, a distinct River, having a spring head of his own, but rather the mouth or Æstuarium of divers Rivers here confluent and meeting together, namely, Ouse, Darwent, and especially Ouse and Trent. And as the Danow, having received into its Channell the Rivers Dravus, Savus, Tibiscus, and divers others, changeth his name into Ister: So also the Trent, receiving and meeting the waters above named, changeth his name into this of Humber; Abus, the old Geographers call it. 4 Medway, a Kentish River, famous for harbouring the Royall Navy. 5 Tweed, the North-East Bound of England, on whose Northern bank is seated the strong and impregnable Town of Barwick. 6 Tine, famous for Newcastle and her inexhaustible Coal-pits. These, and the rest of Principall note are thus comprehended in one of M. Draytons Sonnets.

Our

Our Flouds Queen Thames for Ships and Swans is crown'd,
And ſtately Severn for her ſhore is prais'd,
The Chriſtall Trent for Fords and Fiſh renown'd,
The Avons fame to Albions cliffes is rais'd, Carlegion Cheſter vants her holy Dee,
York many Wonders of her Ouſe can tell,
The Peak her Dove, whoſe banks ſo fertile be,
And Kent will ſay her Medway doth excell.
Cotſwoll commends her Iſis to the Tame,
Our Northern borders boaſt of Tweeds fair floud;
Our Weſtern parts extoll their Willies Fame,
And the old Lea braggs of the Daniſh blood.

4 The Churches, before the generall ſuppreſſion of Abbies, and ſpoyling the Church ornaments, were moſt exquiſite, the chief remaining, are 1 the Church of S. Paul founded by Ethelbert K. of Kent, in the place where once was a Temple conſecrated to Diana: A Fabrick of the largeſt dimenſions of that kind of any in the Chriſtian World; For whereas the ſo much celebrated Temple of S. Sophia in Conſtantinople hath but 260 foot in length, and 75 in bredth; this of S. Paul is 690 foot long, and 130 foot broad, the main body being 102 foot high, over which the Steeple of the Church was mounted 482 foot more: Which Steeple being made with Timber, and covered with Lead was by the careleſſeneſs of the Sexton in the 5th yeer of the reigne of Q. Elizabeth conſumed with fire; which hapning in a thundring and tempeſtuous day, was by him confidently affirmed to be done by lightning, and was ſo generally beleeved till honeſt Death: but not many years ſince to diſ-abuſe the world, he confeſt the truth of it; on which diſcovery the burning of St. Paul's Steeple by lightning was left out of our common Almanacks, where formerly it ſtood amongſt the ordinary Epoches, or accounts of time. A Church of ſuch a gallant proſpect, and ſo large dimenſions, that had not the late reparation of it been diſcontinued, it would have been the ſtatelieſt and moſt majeſticall Fabrick in the Chriſtian World. 2ly, the Collegiate Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, (wherein I have the honour to be a Prabendary) famous for the Inauguration and the Sepulture of the Kings of England, the Tombes whereof are the moſt ſumptuous, and the Chappell the moſt accurate piece of building in Europe. 3ly, the Cathedrall Church at Lincoln. 4ly, For a private Pariſh Church, that of Radcliffe in Briſtoll. 5ly, For a private Chappell, that of Kings College in Cambridge. 6ly, For the curious workmanſhip of the glaſs, that of Chriſt-Church in Canterbury. 7ly, For the exquiſite beauty of thoſe Fronts, thoſe of Wells and Peterborough. 8ly, For a pleaſant lightſome Church, the Abbey Church at Bath. 9ly, For an antient and reverend Fabrick, the Minſter of York. And 10ly, to comprehend the reſt in one, our Lady-Church in Salliſbury, of which take theſe Verſes.

Mira canam, ſoles quot continet annus in unâ,
Tam numeroſa, ferunt, ade, feneſtra micat.
Marmoreaſq; tenet fuſas tot ab arte columnas,
Comprenſas horas quot vagus annus habet.
Totq; patent portæ, quot menſibus annus abundat:
Res mira, at verâ res celebrata fide.

How many dayes in one whole yeer there be,
So many Windows in one Church we ſee.
So many marble Pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting yeer.
So many gates as Moons one yeer do view,
Strange tale to tell, yet not ſo ſtrange as true.

5 The Women generally are more handſome than in other places, ſufficiently endowed with naturall beauties, without the addition of adulterate Sophiſtications. In an abſolute Woman, ſay the Italians, are required the parts of a Dutch-Woman, from the girdle downwards; of a French-Woman, from the girdle to the ſhoulders; over which muſt be placed an Engliſh face. As their beauties, ſo alſo are their Prerogatives the greateſt of any Nation: neither ſo ſervilely ſubmiſſive as the French, nor ſo jealouſly guarded as the Italian: but keeping ſo true a decorum, that as England is termed the Purgatorie of Servants, and the Hell of Horſes; ſo it is acknowledged the Paradiſe of Women. And it is a common by-word among the Italians, that if there were a Bridge built over the Narrow Seas, all the Women of Europe would run into ENGLAND. For here they have the upper hand in the ſtreets, the upper place at the Table, the thirds of their Husbands Eſtates, and there equall ſhare in all Lands, yea even ſuch as are holden in Knights ſervice: priviledges wherewith other Women are not acquainted. Of high eſteem in former times amongſt forrein Nations, for the modeſtie and gravitie of their converſation; but of late times ſo much addicted to the light garb of the French, that they have loſt much of their antient honour and reputation amongſt knowing and more ſober men of forrein Countries, who before admired them.

6 The Wooll of England, is of exceeding fineneſs, eſpecially that of Cotſwold, in Gloceſterſhire; that that of Lemſter, in Herefordſhire; and of the Iſle of Wight. Of this Wooll are made excellent broad-clothes, diſperſed all over the world, eſpecially High Germany, Muſcovy, Turkie, and Perſia, to the great benefit of the Realm: as well in return of ſo much money which is made of them, as in ſetting to work ſo many poor people, who from it receive ſuſtenance. Before the time of King Edward the 3d, Engliſh men had not the art, or neglected the uſe of making cloth: till whoſe time our Wooll was tranſported unwrought. And as his Succeſſors have laid Impoſitions on every cloth ſold out of the Realm; ſo his Predeceſſors had, as their occaſions required, ſome certain Cuſtomes granted on every ſack of Wooll. In the beginning of this Edwards Warres with France, the Cities and Towns of Flanders, being then even to admiration rich, combined with him, and ayded him in his Warres againſt that King. And he for his part by the compoſition then made, was to give them 140000 l. ready money, to ayd them by Sea and Land, if need required, and to make Bruges, then one of the great Mart Towns of Chriſtendome, the Staple for his Woolls. Here the Staple continued 15 yeers, at which time the Flemmings having broke off from the King; and he having by experience ſeen what the benefit of theſe Staples were; removed them from Bruges into England. And for the eaſe as well of his Subjects in bringing their Woolls unto the Ports, as of ſuch Forrein Merchants as came to buy; he placed his Staples at Exceſter, Briſtoll, Wincheſter, Weſtminſter, Chicheſter, Canterbury, Norwich, Lincoln, York, and Newcaſtle, for England; at Caermarden for Walet; and at Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Tredah, for Ireland. He further Enacted, that no Engliſh, Iriſh, or Welch men ſhould tranſport this Stapled commodity, no not by Licenſe (if any ſuch ſhould be granted) on pain of Confiſcation, and Impriſonment during the Kings pleaſure. Laſtly, he allured over hither divers Flemmings, which taught our men the making of clothes, (who are now grown the beſt Cloth-workers in the World:) and to encourage men in that Art, it was by a Statute of the 27th of Edward the 3d, enacted to be Felony, to carry any Woolls unwrought. When England had ſome ſhort time enjoyed the benefit of theſe Staples, the King removed them to Callice, which he had Conquered, and deſired to make wealthy. From hence they were at ſeverall times and occaſions tranſlated, now to one, now to another Town in Belgium: and ſtill happy was that Town, in what Country ſoever, where the Engliſh kept a houſe for this Traffick; the confluence of all people thither to buy, infinitely inriching it. Antwerp in Brabant long enjoyed the Engliſh Merchants, till upon ſome diſcontents between King Henry the 7th, and Maximilian, Archduke, and Lord of Belgium, they removed: but at their return again, were received by the Antwerpians, with ſolemn Proceſſion, Princely Triumph, ſumptuous Feaſts, rare Banquettings, and expreſſions of much Love, but more Ioy. And the giving of ſome Cotſwold Sheep by Edward the 4th, to Henry of Caſtile, and John of Aragon, Anno 1465. is counted one of the greateſt prejudices that ever hapned to this Kingdom, England.

The Wooll tranſported bringeth into the Kingdom no leſs than 1500000 l. and the Lead half the ſumme, ſo that Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that before the Warres of the Low-Countries, the Flemmings and the Engliſh bartered wares yeerly for 12 Millions of Crowns.

The next commodity to the Wooll, though not mentioned in the verſe fore-going, are the rich and inexhauſtible Mines of Cole, Lead, and Tinne: to ſay nothing of the Mines of Iron, as bringing more damage to the publick by the ſpoil of Woods, than profit to particular perſons in the increaſe of their Eſtates. The mines of Cole chiefly enrich Newcaſtle in Northumberland, and by that the great City of London, and many other good Towns beſides: which could not poſſibly ſubſiſt in this generall decay of Woods, and neglect of planting, but by this commoditie. The Mines of Lead are moſt conſiderable in the Peak of Darbiſhire; thoſe of Tinne in Cornwall, where they digge Tinne not much inferior to Silver in fineneſs. A commodity which brought great wealth to England in former times, the art of making it not being elſewhere known in Europe: till one of the Tinne-workers, flying out of England for a murder, paſſed into Germany, Anno 1240. and there diſcovered ſome Tinne Mines in Miſnia, not known before, and ſet on Foot that trade amongſt them, to the great prejudice (ſaith my Author) of the Earls of Cornwall, who had before the ſole Monopolie of that uſefull metall.

To theſe particulars being matters of profit and neceſſity, If I would add ſuch things as are for delight and pleaſure; I might ſubjoyn the Bells, and Parks; for which this Kingdom is as eminent among forein Nations, as for any of thoſe mentioned in the ſaid old Verſe. The Bells ſo many, tunable, and of ſuch excellent Melody to a Muſicall eare (brought more to the command of the skilfull ringer than in former times) that it is thought there are more good Rings of Bells in this part of the Iland than in half Chriſtendom beſides. Parkes more in England than in all Europe. The firſt of which kind for the incloſing of Veniſon, being that of Woodſtock, made by King Henry the firſt; whoſe example being followed by his Succeſſors, and the Lords and great men of the Realm; the number ſo increaſed in a little time, that at the laſt, beſides 55 Forreſts, and 300 Chaſes, there were reckoned 745 Parkes in England, all well repleniſhed either with Red or Fallow Deere.

And that the Deere might graze with pleaſure, and the Sheep with ſafety, great care was taken by our progenitors for the deſtruction of Wolves. I know it hath been a tradition of old Writers, that England never had any Wolves at all, and that they would not live here brought from other places; but it is not ſo: here being ſtore of them, till Edgar King of England commuted the 20 l. of Gold, 300 l. of Silver, and 300 head of Cattell impoſed as an yearly tribute by England. King Athelſtane upon Idwallo Prince of Wales, for the like yearly tribute of 300 Wolves, by which means they were quite rooted out in time, the Welch proteſting at the laſt they could find no more.

King

The Air of this Country is very temperate, neither ſo hot as France and Spain in the Summer, becauſe of its northerly ſituation, nor ſo cold in the Winter, becauſe the air of this Kingdom being groſs, cannot ſo ſoon penetrate as the thin air of France and Spain. For to ſay truth, the air in the Winter time is thick and foggie, cloudy, and much diſpoſed to miſts, eſpecially near the Sea, and the greater Rivers: inſomuch that many times the Sun is not ſeen to ſhine out clearly for ſome weeks together. And thereupon there goeth a Tale, that the great Conſtable of Caſtile being Ambaſſador to King James in the firſt Winter of his reign, and tarying here about a month, is ſaid not to have ſeen the Sun all the time of his ſtay: which occaſioned him at his going on ſhip board, to deſire ſuch Lords and Gentlemen as attended him thither, to preſent his humble ſervice to the King their Maſter, and to the bleſſed Sun of Heaven when they chanced to ſee him. And ſomething alſo touching the temperature of the Air, may be aſcribed unto the Winds, which participating of the Seas, over which they paſs unto us, do carry with them a temperate warmth.

But if warmth were all the benefit we received from the Seas, it might indeed be ſaid, that we were come from Gods bleſſing, into the warm Sun: but it is not ſo. For there are no Seas in Europe that yield more plenty of fiſh than ours. Our Oyſters were famous in the times of the old Romans, and our Herrings are now very beneficiall unto the Netherlands, to whom, the Engliſhmen, reſerving to themſelves a kind of Royalty, (for the Dutch by cuſtom demand liberty to fiſh of Scarborough Caſtle in Yorkſhire) have yielded up the commodity by which thoſe States are exceedingly enriched, and our Nation much impoveriſhed, and condemned for lazineſs and ſloth. Beſides the loſs of imployment for many men, who uſing this trade might be a ſeminary of good and able Mariners, as well for the Wars, as for further Navigations and diſcoveries; cannot but be very prejudiciall to the ſtrength and flouriſhing of the Common-wealth and Empire.

But to make this appear more fully in all particulars, I ſhall extract ſome paſſages out of a M. S. diſcourſe of the late learned Knight Sir John Burroughs, principall King of Arms by the name of Garter, entituled, The Sovereignty of the Britiſh Seas. By which it doth appear, that there is fiſhing in thoſe Seas for Herrings, Pilchards, Cod, Ling, or other Fiſh, at all times of the year: and that too in ſo plentifull a manner, that not long ſince neer Minnegal on the Coaſts of Devonſhire, 500 Tonne of Fiſh were taken in one day, and 3000. pound-ſworth in another neer S. Ives in Cornwall; the Hollanders taking at one draught 20. laſts of Herrings. 2ly. That almoſt all Nations hereabouts, as French, Spaniards, Netherlanders, and thoſe of the Hanſe, do mightily improve themſelves both in power and wealth, by the benefit of the Engliſh Fiſhing; inſomuch as 10000. Sail of forein Veſſels (of which 1400. from the Town of Emden in Eaſt-Friſeland only) are thought to be maintained by this trade alone. 3ly. That the Hollanders in particular employ yeerly 8000 Veſſels of all ſorts for this trade of Fiſhing on our Coaſts, whereby they have a Seminarie of 150000 Saylers and Mariners, readie for any publick ſervice: all which maintain trebble that number of Men, Women and Children, of ſeverall trades upon the Land. 4ly. That for the holding up of this trade, the ſaid Hollanders, inhabiting a Tract of Land not ſo big as many of our Shires, doe build 1000 ſail of Ships yeerly; and thereby furniſh all the parts of the World (even as far as Braſil) with our commodities, returning home thoſe of other Countries in exchange thereof; which they ſell to us many times at their own prices. 5ly. That the ſaid Hollanders (as appeared upon computation) made in one yeer of the Herrings onely, caught upon theſe Coaſts, the ſumme of 5 Millions of our pounds, (the Cuſtomes, and tenth Fiſh, advancing to the publick Treaſurie no leſs than 800000 l. Sterling: it being thought, that the Herrings caught by thoſe of the Hanſe Towns, and other Nations, amount to as great a ſumme as that. 6ly. And finally, that by erecting onely 250 Buſſes, (Veſſels of great Bulk and Stowage, but not ſwift of ſail) for the Herring-Fiſhing, (which is not a ſixt part of thoſe which are employed yeerly by the Hollanders) either at the publick charge of the State of England, or by private Adventurers thereto authorized and regulated; there would be found imployment yeerly for 1000 ſhips, and at leaſt 20000 Mariners and Fiſhers at Sea, and conſequently for as many Tradeſmen and Labourers at Land: by means whereof, beſides the vindication of our credit now at ſuch a loſs, there would ariſe in Cuſtomes, Tonnage, Poundage, and other Impoſts, no leſs than 300000 l. per Annum to the publick Treaſurie. The proſecution of which Project (if not in greater proportion than that before) as it was once deſigned by Mr. Atturney Noy, my much honoured Friend: ſo do I heartily commend it to the care of the State, and to his Succeſſors in that Office, as the fitteſt Remembrancers to advance it; there being no readier way than this to make the people wealthy, and the Nation formidable.

For notwithſtanding theſe advantages of Fiſh, the Diet of England is, for the moſt part, Fleſh. In London only there are no fewer than 67500 Beefs, and 675000 Sheep ſlain, and uttered in a yeer, beſides Calves, Lambs, Hogs-fleſh, and Poulterers ware. To prove this, Suppoſe there be in London 60 Butchers Free of the City, whereof every one, and one with another, killeth an Oxe a day, for ſo at leaſt they doe. Then reckon (as the London Butchers do affirm) that the Foreiners in the Suburbs and Villages ſell four for their one. Laſtly, count for every Oxe ten ſheep,

(for this is alſo certainly known) to be killed and ſold, and you have both the numbers above-mentioned. The Earl of Gondamor, once the Spaniſh Leiger here, having in ſome ſeverall Market dayes ſeen the ſeverall Shambles of this great Citie, ſaid to them who made the diſcovery with him, That there was more Fleſh eaten in a moneth in that Town, than in all Spain in a yeer. Now had I his skill who by the length of Hercules Foot, found out the proportion of his whole body, I might by this Proviſion of Fleſh conſumed in the head, gueſs at the Quantity of that which is ſpent in the body of the Realm. But this I leave to be determined by an abler hand. The uſuall and naturall drink of the Country is Beer, ſo called from the French word Boire, (for Wines they have none of their own growing, as before is ſaid) Which, without controverſie, is a moſt wholeſome and nourſhing beverage; and being tranſported into France, Belgium, and Germany, by the working of the Sea is ſo purged, that it is amongſt them in higheſt eſtimation; celebrated by the name of la bonne Beere d' Angle Terre. And as for the old drink of England, Ale, which commeth from the Daniſh word Oela, it is queſtionleſs in it ſelf, (and without that commixture which ſome are accuſed to uſe with it) a very wholeſome drink; howſoever it pleaſed a Poet in the time of Henry the 3d, thus to deſcant on it: England.

Neſcio quid monſtrum Stygiæ conforme paludi,
Cerviſiam pleriq; vocant, nil ſpiſſius illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius eſt dum mingitur, ergo
Conſtat quod multas fæces in ventre relinquit.

In Engliſh thus,

Of this ſtrange drink ſo like the Stygian lake,
Men call it Ale, I know not what to make.
Folk drink it thick, and piſs it very thin;
Therefore much Dregs muſt needs remain within.

Now to conclude this generall diſcourſe concerning England, there goes a tale, that Henry the 7th, (whoſe breeding had been low and private) being once preſſed by ſome of his Counſell, to purſue his title unto France; returned this Anſwer: that France indeed was a flourriſhing and gallant Kingdom; but England in his mind was as fine a Seat for a Countrey Gentleman, as any could be found in Europe.

Having ſtaid thus long in taking a Survey of the Countrie it ſelf, together with the chief commodities and pleaſures of it; and amongſt them, of the Women alſo, (as the method of the old Verſe led me on:) it is now time that we ſhould look upon the men. And they are commonly of a comely feature, gracious countenance, for the moſt part gray-ey'd, pleaſant, beautifull, bountifull, courteous, and much reſembling the Italians in habit, and pronunciation. In matters of war, (as we have already proved) they are both able to endure, and reſolute to undertake the hardeſt enterpriſes: in peace quiet, and not quarrelſome; in advice or counſell, ſound and ſpeedy. Finally, they are active, hearty, and chearfull. And yet I have met with ſome Gentlemen, who upon the ſtrength of a little travell in France, have grown ſo un-Engliſhed, and ſo affected or beſotted rather on the French Nation, that they affirm the Engliſh, in reſpect of the French, to be an heavy, dull, and Phlegmatick People, of no diſpatch, no mettle, no conceit, no audacity, and I know not what not. A vanity, meriting rather my pity, than my anger: Perhaps in vilifying their own Nation they had conſulted with Iulius Scaliger, who in the 16 chap. of his 3d Book De re Poetica, giveth of the two moſt noble Nations, Engliſh, and Scotiſh, this baſe and unmanly Character, Gothi bellua; Scoti non minùs; Angli perfidi, inflati, feri, contemptores, ſtolidi, amentes, inertes, inhoſpitales, immanes. His bolt (you ſee) is ſoon ſhot, and ſo you may happily gueſs at the Quality of the Archer. A man indeed of an able learning, but of his own worth ſo highly conceited, that if his too much learning made him not mad, yet it made him to be too peremptory and arrogant. To revenge a Nationall diſgrace on a Perſonall, is an ignoble victory. Beſides Socrates reſolution in the like kind, in my opinion was very judicious, εἰ ἀπὸ ὄνος ἐλακτίσθη, δικὴν οὐκ ἔστιν ἐπ' ὄνῳ λαγχάνειν, If an Aſs kick us, we muſt not put him in the Court. To confute his cenſure in every point, would be to him too great an honour, and for me too a great labour; it being a task, which of it ſelf would require a Volume. The beſt is, many ſhoulders make the burthen light; and other Nations are as deeply engaged in this quarrell againſt that proud Man, as ours: for ſo maliciouſly hath he there taxed all other people, that that Chapter might more properly have been placed among his Hypercriticks.

How the Engliſh, and Germans, which of all Nations are thought moſt given to their bellies, do agree and differ in this point, the ſame Scaliger hath thus ſhewed in one of his Epigrams.

Tres ſunt Conviva, Germanus, Flander, et Anglus,
Dic quis edat melius, quis meliuſve bibat.
Non comedis Germane, bibis; tu non bibis Angle,
Sed comedis; comedis Flandre, bibiſq; bene.

Dutch, Flemmings, Engliſh, are your only gueſts,
Say which of all doth eat, or drink it beſt,
Th' Engliſh love moſt to eat, the Dutch to ſwill, Onely the Flemming eates and drinks his fill.

Thus

England. Thus was it in his time with the English Nation; though since, I fear, we have borrowed too much of the Dutch, and learnt a great deal more than needs of the Flemming also.

The Nobility of this Countrie is not of so much unlimited Power, as they are (to the prejudice of the State) in other Countries; the name of Dukes, Earls, and Marquesses being meerly titular; whereas in other places they have some, absolute, some, mixt government; so that upon any little distaste, they will stand on their own gnard, and slight the Power of their Soveraign. And on the other side, the Commonalty enjoy a multitude of Privileges above all other Nations, being most free from Taxes, and burdenous Impositions, but what they take upon themselves by their own consent. They have twice in a yeer a laudable custome (no where else to be seen) justice administred even at their own doores, by the Itinerary Judges of the Kingdom: an Order first instituted by King Henry the 2d. They dwell together with Gentlemen, in Villages and Townes, which makes them savour of civility and good manners; and live in farre greater reputation, than the Yeomen in Italy, Spain, France, or Germany; being able to entertain a stranger honestly; diet him plentifully, and lodge him neatly.

The Clergy was once of very great riches, as appeareth by that Bill preferred to King Henry the 5th, against the temporall revenues of the Church, in which it was suggested, that they were able to maintain 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6000 men of Arms, more than 1000 Alms-houses, and yet the King might cleerly put up 20000 l. per Annum into his Exchequer. How true this was, I cannot say. But after this King Henry the 8th took his Opportunities to pare away the excrescencies of it, demolishing the Monasteries, and Religious Houses, and paring off the superfluities of Bishopricks and Cathedrall Churches: in which he found not a few followers amongst the Ministers and great Officers of State and Court in the time of King Edward the 6th, and Queen Elizabeth. Yet left they not the Clergie so poor and naked, or destitute of the encouragements and rewards of learning, but that they have been still the objects of a covetous envy (that which the former Harpies left them being thought too much) though for abilities of learning (I dare boldly say it) not to be parallelled in the word. For besides 5439 Paro-Benefices, being no Impropriations; and besides the Vicarages, most of which exceed the competency beyond Seas, there were left in England at the time of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth 21 Bishopricks, (taking those of Wales into the reckoning) 26 Deaneries, 60 Archdeaconries, and 544 Dignities and Prebends; most of which, places of fair revenue. And as for the maintenance of Priests, Monks, and Friers, before the Reformation there were reckoned 90 Colleges, besides those in the Universities, 110 Hospitalls, 3374 Chanteries and free Chappels, and 645 Abbeys and Monasteries: more than half of which had above the yeerly income of 200 l. in old rents, many above 1000, and some 4000 almost. So studious were our Ancestors both in those times of blindness, and these of a clearer sight, to encourage men to learning, and then reward it.

The Soldierie of England is either for the Land, or for the Sea. Our Victories by Land are most apparent, over the Irish, Scots, Cyprists, Turks, and especially French, whose kingdom hath been sore shaken by the English many times, especially twice by King Edward the 3d, and Henry the 5th: this latter making so absolute a conquest, that Charles the 7th like a poor Roy d' Ividot, confined himself to Bourges, where (having cashiered his retinue) he was found in a little Chamber at Supper with a napkin laid before him, a rump of mutton, and two chickens. And so redoubted even after our expulsion from France, (our civil dissentions rather causing that expulsion, than the French valour) was the English name in that Countrey, that in the Wars between K. Charles the 8th, and the Duke of Bretagne, the Duke, to strike a terrour into his Enemies, apparelled 1500 of his own Subjects, in the arms and Cross of England. But as the Ass, when he had on the Lyons skinne, was for all that but an Ass and no Lyon: so these Britons, by the weak resistance they made against their Enemies, shewd that they were indeed Britons, and no English men. Spain also tasted the valour of our Land-Soldiers, when John of Gaunt pursued his title to Spain, was sent home with 8 Waggons laden with gold, and an annuall pension of 10000 marks; as also when the Black Prince re-established K. Peter in his Throne. And then also did they acknowledge, though they felt not the puissance of the English, when Ferdinand the Catholique surprized the Kingdom of Navarre. For there were then in Fontarabia, a Town of Guipuse, English Foot, who lay there to joyn with this Ferdinand, in an expedition against France. Concerning which Guicciardine giveth this item, That the Kingdom of Navarre was yeelded rather for the fear and reputation of the English Forces that were at hand, than by any puissance of the King of Aragon. Since those times the Spaniard much esteemed us, as appeareth by this Speech of theirs to our Soldiers at the Siege of Amiens. You are all tall Soldiers, and therefore when you come down to the Trenches, we double our guards, and look for blowes; but as for those base and cowardly French, when they come, we make account we have nothing to doe, but play, or sleep on our Ramparts The like the Netherlanders can testifie. onely this is the grief of it, The English are like Pyrrhus King of Epyrus, fortunate to conquer Kingdoms, but unfortunate in keeping them. Not to say any thing of the late but great experience, which the English Soldiery hath gotten by the Civill broiles among themselves. At which my heart so aketh, and my hand so trembleth, that I shall only adde in the words of Lucan,

Heu quantum potuit cœli pelagiq; parari
Hoc, quem Civiles ſuſerunt ſanguine dextræ. England.

That is to ſay,

How much both Sea and Land might have been gain'd
By that dear blood, which Civill Wars have drain'd.

As for their valour at Sea, it may moſt evidently be perceived in the battel of Scluſe, wherein King Edward the 3*d*, with 200 Ships, overcame the French Fleet conſiſting of 500. Sail of which he ſunk 200, and ſlew 30000. Souldiers. Secondly, at the battel in 88. wherein a few of the Queens Ships vanquiſhed the invincible Armado of the King of Spain, conſiſting of 134. great Galleons, and Ships of extraordinary bigneſs. Sir Francis Drake with 4 Ships, took from the Spaniard one million, and 189200 Duckats in one Voyage, Anno 1587. And again with 25 Ships, he awed the Ocean, ſacked S. Iago, S. Dominico, and Cartagena; carrying away with him, beſides Treaſure, 240 Peeces of Ordnance. I omit the Circumnavigation of the whole World, by this Drake and Candiſh; the voyage to Cales, as alſo how one of the Queens Ships named the Revenge, in which Sir Richard Greenvile was Captain, with 180 Souldiers (whereof 90 were ſick on the ballaſt) maintained a Sea-fight for 24 hours againſt above 50 of the Spaniſh Galleons. And though at laſt, after her Powder was ſpent to the laſt barrel, ſhe yeelded upon honourable terms: yet ſhe was never brought into Spain, having killed in that fight more than 1000. of their Souldiers, and ſunk 4 of their greateſt Veſſels. I omit alſo the Diſcovery of the Northern paſſages, by Hugh Willoughby, Davis, and Frobiſher; concluding with that of Kekerman, Hoc certum eſt, omnibus hodie gentibus navigandi induſtria & peritia ſuperiores eſſe Anglos; & poſt Anglos, Hollandos: Though now I acknowledge not by what neglect and diſcontinuance of thoſe honourable imployments, the Hollanders begin to bereave us of our antient Glories, and would fain account themſelves Lords of the Seas, and probably had been ſo indeed, had not His Majeſty by the timely reinforcing of his Navall Power, Anno 1636. recovered again the Dominion of it.

The Engliſh Language is a De-compound of Dutch, French and Latine, which I conceive rather to adde to its perfection, than to detract any thing from the worth thereof; ſince out of every Language we have culled the moſt ſignificant words, and equally participate of that which is excellent in them; their imperfections being rejected: For it is neither ſo boyſtrous as the Dutch, nor ſo effeminate as the French: yet as ſignificant as the Latine; and in the happy conjunction of two words into one, little inferior to the Greek.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted as ſome ſay, by S. Peter and Paul, more probably (as others ſay) by Ioſeph of Arimathea, whoſe body they find to have been interred in the Iſle of Avalo, where the Abbie of Glaſtenbury after ſtood. But that of his plantation being almoſt rooted out by long Perſecutions, and no ſupply of Preachers ſent from other places, Lucius, a King of Britaine (and the firſt Chriſtian King of Europe, Anno 180. or thereabouts, ſent his Ambaſſadours to Eleutherius the then Pope of Rome to be furniſhed with a new ſupply of Paſtors, if not to plant, yet at the leaſt to water, and confirm the Goſpel planted here before, but almoſt rooted out again by prevailing Gentiliſm. At which time Lucius did not only receive the Faith himſelf, but by the piety of his example, and the diligence of the firſt Preachers ſent from Rome (being both of them naturall Britans) it ſpread by little and little over all his Dominions; and in ſome tract of time over all the Iland. Which being thus recovered to the Faith of Chriſt, was forthwith furniſhed with Biſhops and Metropolitans, according to the number of the Provinces and principall Cities (twenty eight in all) continuing here as long as Chriſtianity it ſelf. For not to truſt herein to the autority of the Britiſh Hiſtory, we find three Biſhops of this Iſle ſubſcribing to the Councill of Arles, Anno 314. Eborius Biſhop of York, Reſtitutus Biſhop of London, and Adelfius Biſhop of Colcheſter, there called Colonia Londinenſium; and ſome of them alſo preſent in the Councill of Sardica, Anno 358. concurring with the reſt in voting to the condemnation of the Arian Hereſies; and the ſame or others the next yeer in the Synod of Arimin. And when the Britans were expulſed their native Countrie, or ſhut up in the mountainous parts of the Ordovices, and Silures, which we now call Wales, they caried Chriſtianity and Biſhops along with them: Auguſtine the Monk, finding no fewer than ſeven Biſhops in the Britiſh Church, when he was ſent by Gregory the Great to convert the Engliſh. And yet it is no fabulous vanity, (as ſome men ſuppoſe) to ſay that Auguſtine the Monk firſt preached the Goſpel in this Countrie, becauſe it muſt be underſtood in that ſaying, not with Relation to the Britans, but the Engliſh Saxons; from whom theſe parts of the Iſle had the name of England; and from whom both the Britans and the Faith it ſelf were driven into the Mountains of Wales and Cornwall, and Heatheniſm introduced again over all the Kingdom. Long after which it pleaſed God, that Gregory the Great (but at that time a Deacon only in the Church of Rome) ſeeing ſome handſom youths to be ſold in the open Market, demanded what and whence they were; to whom it was anſwered they were Angli: and well may they be ſo called (ſaith he) for they ſeem as Angels. Asking again of what Province they were amongſt the Angli; and anſwer being made, of the Province of Deira (part of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians) therefore (ſaid he) de ira Dei ſunt liberandi. And laſtly, underſtanding that the King of their Nation was named Alle; how fitly (ſaid he) may he ſing Alleluiahs to the moſt High God. After which time he ſeriouſly endeavoured the Converſion of the England. Brglish Nation; which being Pope he happily effected, by the travell and diligence of Augustine the Monk, the first Arch-bishop of Canterbury. And so well did the work prosper after this beginning, that not only all the Saxons did receive the Gospel, but communicated the Light of it to other Nations: the Hassians, Franconians, and Turingians being converted by Winifred; the Frisons or Hollanders by Wittikind the first Bishop of Vtrecht; the Saxons of Westphalen, by Willdrode, the first Bishop of Breme; all of them being English Saxons, as we find in Beda and some others.

Now as these parts of Britain were the first which generally entertained the Gospel; so were they the first also in these later times which universally submitted to the Reformation of such corruptions as had been brought upon them by the power and tyrannie of the Church of Rome. Endeavoured first in France, by the Albigenses, and Waldenses, as was said before: Who being suppressed and ruinated by the sword of the Kings of France, sheltred themselves in the mountainous parts of Gascoigne and Guienne, then in possession of the English; who by that means became acquainted with their Tenets, maintained here publickly by Wiclef, and spreading under-hand amongst the people of this Kingdom, till the times of Luther, and the Reformation by him aimed at. Which being in most other Countries received tumultuously by the power of the People, was here admitted upon mature deliberation by the autority and consent of the Prince and Prelates the Architects in this great work, without respect unto the Dictats of Luther or Calvin, but looking only on Gods Word, and the Primitive Patterns; abolishing such things as were repugnant unto either, but still retaining such Ceremonies in Gods publick worship, as were agreeable to both, and had been countenanced by the practice of the Primitive times. A point wherein they did observe a greater measure of Christian prudence and moderation, than their neighbour Churches, which in a meer detestation of the See of Rome, allowed of nothing which had formerly been in use amongst them, because defiled with Popish Errors and abuses: and thereby utterly averting those of the Papal party from joyning with them in the work, or coming over to them when the work was done. Whereas had they continued an allowable correspondencie in these extrinsecals of Religion with the Church of Rome, their partie in the World had been far greater, and not so much stomacked as it is. And so it was conceived by the Marquesse de Rhosne, after Duke of Sally, and Lord High-Treasurer of France, and one of the chief men of that partie there: when being sent Ambassadour to King Iames, from King Henry 4d. he had observed the Majesty and Decency of Gods publick Service, in some Cathedrals of this Kingdom; he said, Religion would be soon defaced, and trod under foot; if not preserved and fenced about with the hedge of Ceremonies.

As for the Government of the Church since the last Conversion, as by the piety and example of Lucius there were founded three Arch-Bishopricks, and 25. Bishopricks, according to the number of the Archi Flamines and Flamines (whose great Revenues were converted to more sacred uses) in the times of Idolatry: So by the like pious care of Pope Gregory the Great, by whose means this last Conversion hapned; Arch-Bishopricks, and Bishopricks were designed to convenient places. The number 26 in all, to each Province twelve, besides the two Archbishops and Metropolitans: wherein he had the happiness to have his desires fulfilled, though the number was not made compleat till these later dayes, nor with such equall distribution as he did intend. For in the Province of York laid wast and desolate by the Danes, and not so soon converted as the other was, the number of the Suffragan Bishops came not up to his purpose, but did as much exceed in the Province of Canterbury: especially when King Henry the 8th had incorporated Wales with England, and founded five Episcopall Sees out of the ruines and Revenues of some principall Monasteries, of which none but the Bishoprick of Chester (and that of the Isle of Man, which maketh up the 27th) were laid unto the Province of York. And so it stood, notwithstanding the alterations of Religion, without any dispute, till Calvin having hammered out his new Presbyterie, and recommended it to the use of all the Christian Churches (the History whereof we had succinctly in the Alpine Provinces) found many apt Scholars in most places to decry this Order, though consonant to the word of God, and most pure Antiquity.

But the truth is, it was not so much the Autority of Calvin, or the malignant zeal of Beza, or the impetuous clamours of their Disciples, which caused the Episcopall Order to grow out of credit: as the Avarice of some great persons in Court and State, who greedily gaped after the poor remnant of their Possessions. It had been else a miracle that Calvins Plat-form, made only for the use of a private Citie, and not proportioned, no nor intended at the first, to the estate of other Churches, especially where the Bishops had been instrumentall in the Reformation, should be so headily received in some Kingdoms, and so importunately and clamorously desired in others.

The most valorous Souldiers of this Countrey, when possessed by the Britains, were 1 Cassibelane, who twice repulsed the Roman Legions, though conducted by Cæsar; and had not a party here at home been formed against him; he had for ever done the like. 2 Pratusagus, King of the Iceni. 3 Constantine the Great. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies. In the times of the Saxons, 5 Guy Earl of Warwick, and 6 King Edmund Ironside; and 7 Canutus the Dane. Vnder the Normans, of most note have been; 1 William, surnamed the Conquerour, 2 Richard, and 3 Edward, both the first of those names, so renowned in the wars of the Holy-Land; 4 Edward the 3d, and 5 Edward the Black Prince, his Sonne, Duo fulmina belli, as famous in the warres of France; 6 Henry the fift, and 7 John Duke of Bedford his Brother, of equall gallantry with the other. 8 Montacute Earl of Salisbury. 9 S. John Faſtolf, and 10 S. John Hawkwood, of great eſteem for valour in France and Italy: not to deſcend to later times. And for Sea Captains, thoſe of moſt note, have been Hawkins, Willoughby, Burroughs, Jenkinſon, Drake, Frobiſher, Cavendiſh and Greenvile; of ſome of which we have ſpoke already, and of the reſt may have an opportunity to ſay more hereafter. England.

Scholars of moſt renown amongſt us. 1 Alcuinus, one of the Founders of the Vniverſity of Paris. 2 Beda, who for his Pietie and Learning obtained the Attribute or Adjunct of Venerabilis. Concerning which the Legends tels us, that being blind, his Boy had knaviſhly conducted him to preach to an head of ſtones; and that when he had ended his Sermon with the Gloria Patri, the very Stones concluded, ſaying Amen, Amen Venerabilis Beda. But other of the Monkiſh writers do aſſign this reaſon, and both true alike, that at his death ſome unlearned Prieſt intending to honour him with an Epitaph, had thus farre blundered on a verſe, viz. Hic ſunt in foſſa Bedæ oſſa: but becauſe the verſe was yet imperfect, he went to bed to conſider of it, leaving a ſpace betwixt the two laſt words thereof, which in the morning he found filled up in a ſtrange Character, with the word Venerabilis; and ſo he made his Verſe, and Beda (pardon this diverſion) obtained that Attribute. 3 Anſelm, and 4 Bradwardin, Arch-biſhops of Canterbury, men famous for the times they lived in. 5 Alexander of Hales, Tutor to Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventure. 6 Thomas of Walden, the profeſſed enemy of Wiclef, againſt whom he writ. 7 Iohn Wiclef parſon of Lutterworth, in the County of Leiceſter, who ſo valiantly oppoſed the power and Errors of the Church of Rome, though he vented many of his own. Then ſince the times of the Reformation, 1 Iohn Iewel, Biſhop of Salisbury, to whoſe learned and induſtrious labours, in defence of the Religion here by law eſtabliſhed, we are ſtill beholding. 2 Dr. Iohn Reynolds, and 3 Mr. Richard Hooker, both of Corpus Chriſti Colledg in Oxon; the firſt, a man of infinite reading, the ſecond of as ſtrong a judgment. 4 Dr. Whitakers of Cambridge, the Antagoniſt of the famous Bellarmine. 5 Dr. Thomas Bilſon, and 6 Dr. Lancelot Andrews, both Biſhops of Winchester, the Ornaments of their ſeverall times. 7 Biſhop Montagne of Norwich, a great Philologer and Divine. 8 Dr. Iohn Woltguſt, and 9 Dr. William Laud, Arch-Biſhops of Canterbury. Of which laſt, and his diſcourſe againſt Fiſher the Ieſuite, Sir Edward Dering, his profeſſed enemy, hath given this Character, that in that Book of his he had muzled the Ieſuits, and ſhould ſtrike the Papiſts under the fift rib, when he was dead and gone: and that being dead, whereſoever his grave ſhould be, PAVLS (whoſe reparation he endeavoured, and had almoſt finiſhed) would be his perpetuall Monument, and his own Book his laſting Epitaph. And as for thoſe who have ſtood up in maintenance of the Church of Rome, thoſe of moſt note were, 1 Dr. Harding, the Antagoniſt of Biſhop Iewel. 2 Nic. Sanders, and 3 Dr. Tho. Stapleton, to whoſe writings the great Cardinal Bellarmine doth ſtand much indebted. 4 Champian, and 5 Parſons, both Ieſuites, 6 and William Rainolds a Seminary Prieſt, and the Brother of Dr. Iohn Rainolds ſpoken of before. Of which two Brothers (by the way) it is very obſerveable, that William was at firſt a Proteſtant of the Church of England, and Iohn trained up in Popery beyond the Seas. William out of an honeſt zeal to reduce his Brother to this Church, made a journey to him: where on a conference betwixt them it ſo fell out, that Iohn being overcome by his brothers Arguments returned into England, where he became one of the more ſtrict or rigid ſort of the Engliſh Proteſtants; and William being convinced by the reaſons of his Brother Iohn, ſtaid beyond the Seas, where he proved a very violent and virulent Papiſt. Of which ſtrange accident Dr. Alabaſter, who had made triall of both Religions, and amongſt many notable whimſees had ſome fine abilities, made this following Epigram; which for the excellency thereof, and the rareneſs of the argument, I ſhall here ſubjoin.

Bella inter geminos pluſquam Civilia Fratres, Traxerat ambiguus Religionis apex.
Ille Reformatæ Fidei pro partibus inſtat;
Iſte reformandum denegat eſſe fidem.
Propoſitis cauſæ rationibus, alterutrinque;
Concurrere pares, & cecidere pares.
Quod fuit in votis, Fatrem capit alter-uterque;
Quod fuit in fatis, perdit uterque fidem.
Captivi gemini ſine captivante fuerant,
Et Victor victi tranſuga caſtra petit.
Quod genus hoc pugnæ eſt, ubi victus gaudet uterque;
Et tamen alter-uter ſe ſuperaſſe dolet.

Which excellent Epigram, though not without great diſadvantage to the Latine Originall, I have thus tranſlated.

In points of Faith ſome undetermin'd jars,
Betwixt two Brothers kindled Civill wars.
One for the Churches Reformation ſtood;
The other thought no Reformation good.
The points propoſed, they traverſed the field
With equall skill, and both together yield.

England

As they desired, his Brother each subdue's;
Yet such their Fate, that each his Faith did loose.
Both Captive's, none the prisoners thence to guide;
The Victor flying to the Vanquisht side.
Both joy'd in being Conquer'd (strange to say)
And yet both mourn'd because both won the day.

And then for men of other Studies, 1 Lindwood the Canonist, 2 Cosins, and 3 Cowel, eminent in the studies of the Civill Lawes; 4 Bracton, and 5 Briton, of old times; 6 Dier, and 7 Cook of late days, as eminent for their knowledge in the Lawes of England. 8 Iohannes de Sacro Bosco, the Author of the Book of the Spher, and 9 Roger Bacon, a noted Mathematician in the darker times. 10 Sir Francis Bacon the learned Viscount of S. Albans, of whom more hereafter. 11 Sr. Tho. More, Lord Chancellor, one of the Restorers of Learning to the Isle of great Britain. 12 Sr. Henry Savil of Eaton, the reviver of Chrysostom, 13 Sir Henry Spelman, a right learned antiquary, and a religious assertor of the Churches rights. 14 Camden, Clarentieux, the Pausanias of the British Ilands. 15 Matthew Paris, 16 Roger Hoveden, 17 Henry of Huntingdon, 18 William of Malmesbury, 19 Matthew of Westminster, and 20 Thomas of Walsingham; all known Historians. And finally for Poetrie, 1 Gower, 2 Lidgate, a Monk of Burie, 3 the famous Geofrie Chawcer, Brother in Law to Iohn of Gaunt the great Duke of Lancaster; of which last Sir Philip Sidney used to say, that he marvelled how in those mistie times he could see so cleerly, and others in so cleer times go so blindly after him. 4 Sir Philip Sidney himself, of whom and his Arcadia, more when we come to Greece. 5 The renowned Spencer, of whom and his Faerie Queen in another place. 6 Sam. Daniel, the Lucan, 7 with Michael Draiton, the Ovid of the English Nation. 8 Beaumont, and 9 Fletcher, not inferiour unto Terence and Plautus; with 10 My friend Ben. Johnson, equall to any of the antients for the exactness of his Pen, and the decorum which he kept in Dramatick Poems, never before observed on the English Theatre. Others there are as eminent both for Arts and Arms, as those here specified: of whom as being still alive I forbear to speak: according to that caution of the Historian, saying, Vivorum ut magna admiratio, ita Censura est difficilis.

But from the men to return again unto the Countrie, we find it to be subject (according to the severall respects of Church and State) to a treble division: viz. 1 into 6 Circuits destinated to the Itinerary Judges. Secondly, into 22 Episcopal Dioceses. Thirdly, into 40 Shires. The Realm was first divided into Circuits by King Henry the second, who appointed twice in the year, two of the most grave and learned Judges of the Land, should in each Circuit administer Iustice in the chief or head Towns of every Country. Of these Iudges one sitteth on matters Criminal, concerning the life and death of Malefactors; the other in actions Personall, concerning title of Land, Debts, or the like, between party and party. The first Circuit (for we will begin at the West) comprehendeth the Counties of Wilts, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, Dorset, and Southampton; The second containeth the Counties of Oxford, Berks, Gloceſter, Monmouth, Hereford, Worceſter, Salop, and Stafford; The third hath in it the Counties of Surrey, Sussex, Kent, Essex, and Hartford; The fourth consisteth of the Shires of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolke, and Suffolke; The fift of the shires of Northampton, Rutland, Lincolne, Nottingham, Derby, Leiceſter, and Warwick; And the sixt and last, of the Shires of York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancaster. So that in these six Circuits are numbred 38 Shires. The two remaining are Middlesex and Cheshire: whereof the first is exempted, because of its vincinity to London, and the second, as being a County Palatine, and having peculiar Iudges and Counsellours to it self.

The second division, but more antient far in point of time, is that of Dioceses, 22 in all, proportioned according to the number of Episcopall Sees: each Diocese having in it one or more Arch-Deaconries, for dispatch of Ecclesiasticall business, and every Arch-Deaconrie subdivided into Rurall Deanries, fewer or more, according to the bigness and extent thereof. Of these there are but four in the Province of York, that is to say, the Dioceses of York, Chester, Durham, and Carlile: the other 18 (together with the 4 of Wales) being reckoned into that of Canterbury. In respect of which great authority and jurisdiction, the Arch-Bishops of Canterbury had antiently the titles of Primates and Metropolitans of all England; for some ages before the Reformation, used to take place in all General Councils, at the Popes right foot. Which custom took beginning at the Council of Laterane, when Vrban the second called Anselm the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury from amongst the other Prelates then assembled, and placed him at his right foot, saying, includamus hunc in Orbe nostro tanquam alterius Orbis Papam, this hapned Anno 1079. They were antiently also Legati nati; which honourable title was first given to Arch-Bishop Theobald by Innocent the second, and continued unto his successors. And both to honour their calling in the course of their Government, and to have the benefit of their Council being men of learning, both the Arch-Bishops and the Bishops, were antiently privileged to have their place and suffrage in the High Court of Parliament (ever since any Parliaments were first held in England) as Peeres of the Realm; and that too in a double respect: first in relation had to their sacred Office, and secondly to those temporall estates and Barronies which they held held of the King, yet did they not enjoy in the times of their greateſt power and flouriſh all the Prerogatives and Privileges of the Temporal Barons: as neither being tryed by their Peers in Criminal cauſes, but left to an Ordinary Jury; nor ſuffered in examinations to make a Proteſtation upon their honour, to the truth of a fact, it put unto their Oathes like others of the lower Clergy. As for their Eccleſiaſticall Courts, it was antient Ordered alſo, that beſides ſuch as appertained to the Arch-Biſhops themſelves, beſides thoſe holden by the Chancellours and Arch-Deacons of every Biſhop in their ſeverall Dioceſes, and ſome in many private pariſhes which they called Peculiars; and finally beſides the Court of Viſitation, held every third year by the Biſhop himſelf in perſon, or his lawfull Deputy; there ſhould be alſo Synods or Convocations, which are the Parliaments of the Clergy, aſſembled primarily for the Reforming of the Church in Doctrin and Diſcipline, and ſecundarily for granting tenths and Subſidies to the King, and naturally conſiſting of all the Right Reverend Fathers, the Arch-biſhops, Biſhops, the Deans, Arch-deacons, and one Prebend out of each Cathedrall, and a certain number of the Clergy, (two for every Dioceſs) elected by the reſt to ſerve for them in that great Aſſembly; the Clergy not being bound antiently by any Act, to which they had not given conſent by thoſe their Proxies. England.

The third and laſt Diviſion, though the ſecond in courſe of time, is that of Shires, made by King Alfride, both for the eaſier Adminiſtration of juſtice, and to prevent ſuch Outrages and Robberies, as after the example of the Danes, the naturall Inhabitants of the Realm began in all places to commit. For over every one of theſe Shires or Counties, he appointed an High-Sheriff and divers Officers, to ſee into the behaviour of private men, and to puniſh ſuch as were delinquent: and in times of warre either already begun, or intended, he inſtituted a Prefect or Lieutenant; to whom he gave authority to ſee their muſters, their proviſion of armes, and if occaſion ſerved, to puniſh ſuch as rebelled or mutinied. This wiſe King ordained alſo, that his Subjects ſhould be divided into tens or tithings, every of which ſeverally ſhould give bond for the good abearing of each other; and he who was of that diſſolute behaviour, that he could not be admitted to theſe tithings, was forthwith conveyed to the houſe of correction. By this courſe every man was not carefull only of his own actions, but had an eye to all the nine for whom he ſtood bound; as the nine had over him: inſomuch that a poor girl might travell ſafely with a bagge of gold in her hand, and none durſt meddle with her. The antienteſt of theſe ten men, were called κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Tithingmen. Ten of the higheſt or neighbouring tithings, made the leſſer Diviſion which we call hundreds; which name cannot be derived from the like number of villages, for none of our hundreds are ſo large; and one of them there is in Berk-ſhire, which containeth five hamlets onely. We have then a diviſion of the Realm into 40 Shires; of the Shires into divers hundreds; and of the hundreds into ten tithings. And this diviſion made by Alfride ſtill remains in force: as alſo doth the High Sheriff, and the reſt of the ſubordinate Officers: the office of the High Sheriff conſiſting eſpecially at this time, in executing Arreſts, aſſiſting the Itinerary Judges, gathering the Kings Fines and Amerciaments, and raiſing the Poſſe Comitatus, if occaſion be. But for the Civill part of government in the ſeverall Counties, it is moſt in the hands of ſuch as we call Juſtices of the Peaces, authoriſed by Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England: appointed firſt by that prudent Prince King Edward the firſt, by the name of Cuſtodes Pacis, Guardians of the Peace, and firſt called Juſtices of the Peace in the 36. of King Edward the 3d, Cap. 11. A form of Government ſo much conducing to the proſperity of the Countrie, and the ſecuritie of the People, that King James, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain, eſtabliſhed it by Law in the Kingdom of Scotland. Then for the Courts, which are ſtill kept in every Shire, they are either the County Court holden every moneth, wherein the Sher ff or his ſufficient Deputy commonly preſideth; or the Aſſizes and Court of Gaol-delivery held twice a yeer by the Judges Itinerant, aſſiſted by the Juſtices of the Peace, and others in Commiſſion with them. There are alſo two Officers in every hundred choſen out of the Yeomanrie, whom we call the Conſtables of the hundred: who receiving the Precepts or Warrants of the Sheriff, or Juſtices diſpatcheth them to the Tithingman or Petit Conſtable of each town and village in their ſeverall Diviſions. And in each hundred, a Court kept once in three Weeks, by the Steward of the hundred, or his Deputy, capable of Pleas or Actions under the value of 40 s. though in ſome few of theſe Courts alſo (as in that of Slaughter-hundred in Glocester) the value of the Action by ſome ſpeciall Charter be left unlimited. The like Courts alſo holden in ſome antient Burroughs. And beſides theſe in every Village are two ſeverall Courts, and theſe two holden twice a yeer, if occaſion be, held by the Steward of the Manour: in the one of which called the Court Leet, there is Enquirie made into Treaſons, Felonies, Murders, and other Caſes falling between the King and the Subject; and in the other, which we call by the name of Court Baron, ſuch onely as concern the Lord and Tenants, and theſe laſt ſummoned for the moſt part at the will of the Lord: So that Comines had (we ſee) good reaſon for this Affirmation, that of all the Signeuries in the World that ever he knew, the Realm of England was the Countrie in which the Commonwealth was beſt governed.

To return again unto the Shires, ſome of them take their names from the old Inhabitants, as Cumberland from the Cymri or antient Britans; Eſſex, and Suſſex, from the Eaſt and South Saxons: ſome from the ſituation of them, as Northumberland, Norfolk, Suthfolk, Devonſhire; this laſt ſo called from Devinam, a Welch or Britiſh word, ſignifying Low Vallies, of which it very much conſiſteth: Some from the form or figure of them, as Cornwall, from the reſemblance which England it hath to an horn; and Kent, (in Latine, Cantium) becauſe it lieth in a Canton or Corner of the Iland: Some from Accidents therein, as Berk ſhire or Berock ſhire from the abundance of Boxe, which the Saxons call by the name of Beroc: the moſt part from the principall Town of all the Countie, as Gloceſter, Oxford, and the like. Of theſe Shires the biggeſt beyond all compare is the County of York, out of which 70000 men may be raiſed for preſent ſervice, if need ſo require. And in them all comprehended 8769 Pariſhes (beſides thoſe of Wales) not reckoning in ſuch Chappels as we call Chappels of Eaſe, in greatneſs not inferiour to many Pariſhes; 22 Cities, and 585 Market Towns which are no Cities: and in the Towns and Villages to the number of 145 Caſtles, or ruines of Caſtles; few of them places of importance, and ſuch as are, belonging generally to the King, who ſuffer not any of their Subjects to neſt themſelves in Strong Holds and Caſtles.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1 London, ſeated on the Thames, by which divided into two parts, conjoyned together by a ſtately and magnificent Bridge, ſpoken of before. The River capable in this place of the greateſt Ships, by means whereof it hath been reckoned a long time for one of the moſt famous Mart-Towns in Chriſtendom: and not long ſince had ſo much got precedencie of all the reſt, that the greateſt part of the wealth of Europe was driven up that River. A Citie of great note in the time of the Roman conqueſt: to whom it was firſt known by the name of Londinum, a Town at that time of great trade and riches; and by them honoured with the title of Auguſta. Increaſed of late very much in buildings, contiguous to ſome Towns & Villages, from which in former times diſjoyned by ſome diſtant intervalls. So that the Circuit may contain 8 miles at leaſt; in which ſpace are 132 Pariſh Churches; the Palace of the King, the houſes of the Nobility, Colleges for the ſtudy of the Laws, I mean not the Civill Law, which is Ius Gentium, but (as we call it) the Common Law, appropriate only to this Kingdom. It is wondrous populous, containing well nigh 600000 people, which number is much augmented in the Term time. Some compare London with Paris thus: London is the richer, the more populous, and more antient; Paris the greater, more uniform, and better fortified. But for my part, as I doe not think that London is the more populous; ſo neither can I grant that Paris is the greater Citie, except we meaſure them by the Walls. For taking in the Suburbs of both, and all that paſſeth in Accompt by the name of London: and I conceive, that if London were caſt into the ſame orbicular figure, the circumference of it would be larger than that of Paris. For uniformity of building Paris indeed doth goe beyond it; but may in that be equalled alſo in ſome tract of time, if the deſign begun in King Iames his reign, tending to the advancement of ſuch uniformitie, be not interrupted. For other things, certain it is that London is the antienter Citie, as being an Archbiſhops See in the time of the Britans, when the name of Paris was ſcarce heard of; a Biſhops See at the firſt converſion of the Saxons: increaſed ſo much in wealth and honour from one Age to another, that it is grown at laſt too big for the Kingdom: which whether it may be profitable for the State, or not, may be made a queſtion. And great Towns in the bodie of a State, are like the Spleen or Melt in the bodie naturall: the monſtrous growth of which impoveriſheth all the reſt of the Members, by drawing to it all the animal and vital ſpirits, which ſhould give nouriſhment unto them; And in the end cracked or ſurcharged by its own fulneſs, not only ſends unwholeſome fumes and vapours unto the head, and heavy pangs unto the heart, but drawes a conſumption on it ſelf. And certainly the over-growth of great Cities is of dangerous conſequence, not only in regard of Famine, ſuch multitudes of mouthes not being eaſie to be fed; but in reſpect of the irreparable danger of Inſurrections, if once thoſe multitudes, ſenſible of their own ſtrength, oppreſſed with want, or otherwiſe diſtempered with faction or diſcontent, ſhould gather to an head and break out into action. Yet thus much may be ſaid to the honour of London, though grown by much too bigg now for the kingdom, that it is generally ſo well governed, and in ſo good peace, that thoſe Murders, Robberies, and outrages ſo frequent in great and populous Cities beyond the Seas, are here ſeldom heard of. 2 York, in the Weſt-riding of that Countie, the ſecond Citie of England, as the old Verſe hath it.

Eboracum à primâ jure ſecunda venit.

That is to ſay,
In England, London is the chiefeſt Town;
The ſecond place York claimeth as its own.

And ſo it may, being indeed the ſecond Citie of the Kingdom, both for fame and greatneſs. A pleaſant, large, and ſtately Citie, well fortified and beautifully adorned, as well with private as publick Edifices; and rich, and populous withall. Seated upon the River Ouſe, or Vre, which divides it in twain, both parts being joyned together with a fair ſtone Bridge, conſiſting of high and mighty Arches. A Citie of great eſtimation in the time of the Romans, the Metropolis of the whole Province or Diocеſe of Britain; remarkable for the death and buriall of the Emperour Severus, and the birth of Conſtantine the Great: by conſequence the Seat of the Primate of the Britiſh Church, as long as Chriſtianity did remain amongſt them. Nor ſtooped it lower when the Saxons had received the Faith: and notwithſtanding thoſe mutations which befell this Kingdom, under the Saxons, Danes, and Normans, it ſtill preſerved its antient luſtre; and increaſed it too. Adorned with a ſtately and magnificent Cathedrall, inferiour to few in Europe; and with a Palace o. the Kings, (called the Manour-houſe) the dwelling in theſe later dayes of the Lord

Pre-

Preſident of the Court or Councell here eſtabliſhed by King Henry 8th, for the benefit of his Northern Subjects, after the manner of the French Parliaments, or Preſed all Seiges. 3 Briſtol, the third in rank of the Cities of England, ſituate on the meeting of the Frome and Avon, not far from the influx of the Severn into the Ocean: in that regard commodiouſly ſeated for trade and traffick: the Ships with full ſayl coming into the Citie, and the Citizens with as full purſes trading into moſt parts of the World with good Faith and Fortune. A Town exceeding populous, and exceeding cleanly, there being Sewers made under ground, for the conveyance of all filth and naſtineſs, into the Rivers. Churches it hath to the number 18 or 20, reckoning in the Cathedrall, and that of Ratcliff. The Cathedrall firſt built by Rob. Fitz. Harding, Sonne to a King of Denemark, once a Burger here, and by him ſtored with Canons Regular, Anno 1248. but made a Biſhops See by King Henry 8th, Anno 1542. The principall building next the Church, an antient Caſtle, a piece of ſuch ſtrength, that Maud the Empreſs having took King Steven Priſoner, thought it the ſafeſt place to ſecure him in. 4 Norwich, the 4th Citie of the firſt rank, of which more hereafter. 5 Oxford, the firſt of the ſecond rank of Engliſh Cities, ſeated upon the Ouſe or Iſis: but whether ſo called as Vadum Iſidos, Ouſeford, or the Ford of Ouſe, or Vada boum (as the Greeks had their Boſphori in former times) I determine not. An antient Town, and antiently made a ſeat of Learning, coevall unto that of Paris, if not before it; the Vniverſity hereof being reſtored rather than firſt founded by King Alured, Anno 806. after it had been overborn awhile by the Daniſh Furies; but hereof as an Vniverſity, more anon. This only now, that for the ſtatelineſſe of the Schooles and publick Library, the bravery and beauty of particular Colleges, all built of fair and poliſhed ſtone, the liberall endowment of thoſe houſes, and notable encouragements of Induſtry and Learning in the ſalarie of the Profeſſors in moſt Arts and Sciences, it is not to be parallelled in the Chriſtian World. The Citie of it ſelf well built, and as pleaſantly ſeated, formed in the Figure of a Croſſe, two long Streets thwarting one another, each of them neer a mile in length; containing in that compaſſe 13 Pariſh Churches, and a See Epiſcopall founded here by King Henry 8th, Anno 1541. The honourary Title of 20 of the noble Family of the Veres now Earls of Oxon. 6 Salisbury, firſt ſeated on the Hill, where now ſtands old Salisbury, the Sorbioduunum of the Antients. But the Cathedrall being removed down into the Vale, the Town quickly followed, and grew up very ſuddenly into great Renown, pleaſantly ſeated on the Avon (a name common to many Engliſh Rivers) which watereth every ſtreet thereof; and for the populouſneſs of the place, plenty of Proviſions, number of Churches, a ſpacious Market-place, and a fair Town-Hall, eſteemed the ſecond Citie of all the Weſt. 7 Gloceſter, by Antonine called Glevum, by the Britains, Caer Glowy, whence the preſent name; the Saxons adding Ceſter, as in other places. A fine neat Citie, pleaſantly ſeated on the Severn, with a large Key or Wharf on the banks thereof, very commodious to the Merchandiſe and trade of the place; well built, conſiſting of fair large Streets, beautified with a magnificent Cathedrall, and ſituate in ſo rich a Vale, that there is nothing wanting to the uſe of man, except onely Wine, which life or luxury may require. 8 Cheſter, upon the River Dee, built in the manner of a quadrate, incloſed with a wall, which takes up more than two miles in compaſſe, containing in that compaſſe 12 Pariſh Churches, and an old Cathedrall dedicated antiently to S. Wereburg, Daughter of Wolfere K. the Mercians, and Viſitreſs of all the Monaſteries of England; but a Biſhops See by King Henry the 8th. The buildings generally fair, the Streets wide and open, with Galleries before every door, under which a man may walk dry from one end to the other. The reſt of chief note ſhall be ſpecified on another occaſion, with this advertiſment, that the ordinary Cities of England are not to be compared with thoſe of France and Italy: Firſt becauſe the Nobles and Gentry of thoſe Countries live for the moſt part in the Cities, ours in Country-Villages: And ſecondly, becauſe the Londoners ſo ingroſs all trading, that they draw thither all the Wealth and treaſure of the Kingdom. By means whereof, that every day increaſeth in wealth and beauty; the reſt (except Briſtol only) doe decay as ſenſibly: that Citie being like the Spleen in the body naturall, the monſtrous growth whereof ſtarveth all the reſt of the Members. Liene excreſcente, reliquum corpus contabeſcit, as the Doctors have it. England.

There are in England but two Vniverſities, which may equall ſix, nay ten of all other Countries, (ſo that Paris be not in the number) moſt of them being no better than our Colleges of Weſtminſter, Eaton, or Winchester, and none ſo liberally endowed, as ſome one of theſe in the Vniverſities: Of which there are 16 in Cambridge, ſome of them called only by the name of Halls, but theſe endowed with Lands and Fellowſhips as the others are. In Oxford there 18 Colleges endowed with Lands, beſides ſix Halls, where Students live at their own charges in both of them. Profeſſors of the Arts and Sciences, as alſo of Divinity, Law, Phyſick, and the Learned Languages, with liberall Salaries: and in each to the number of 3000 Students, ſo regular in their lives and converſations, as are not to be found in the World beſides. The fairer and more antient, Oxford, which of long time, together with Paris in France, Bononia in Italy, and Salamanca in Spain, hath been honoured with the Title of Generale ſtudium For that the Vniverſity of Cambridge, (though giving upper hand to her Siſter of Oxford, ſhe may take place of all the Vniverſities in the World beſides) is not of ſo long ſtanding, as that of Oxford, is evident by the teſtimony of Robertus de Remington, cited by Maſter Camden, viz. Regnante Edwardo primo, (It ſhould rather be read ſecundo) de ſtudio Grantbridge facta eſt Academia, ſicut Oxonium: where the word ſicut doth not import an idenity of the time; but a relation to Oxford, as to the pattern.

We

England. We see this truth yet clearer in the Bull of Pope John the 21, the contemporary of our Edward 2d, as I find in the work of that great Searcher of Academicell Antiquities, Mr. Brian Twine: Apostolica authoritate statuimus (saith the Bull) quod Collegium magistrorum & scholarium ejusdem studij (speaking of Cambridge) Vniversitas sit censenda, &c. But what need more than Resolution of the Commons of the first Parliament, holden under King James. For when the Clerk of that House had put the name of Cambridge before Oxford; they, taking disdainfully that Hysteron Proteron, commanded the Antiquities of both Vniversities to be searched, and after search made gave the place to Oxford. But to proceed, the Vniversity of Cambridge as it was much of a later Foundation, so was it long before it grew into esteem: insomuch that when William of Wainflete Bishop of Winchester, and Founder of Magdalen College in Oxon (whereof I was once an unworthy Member) perswaded King Henry the sixth to erect a College in Oxford, as some of the Kings his Predecessors had done before him: immo potius Cantabrigiæ (replyed the King) Vt duas si fieri possit in Anglia Academias habeam. No said the King, in Cambridge rather, that so if possible I may have two Vniversities in my Realm of England.

As for the Storie of this Country, that it was first peopled out of Gaul is affirmed by Cæsar, & proved by many strong and concluding Arguments, as their Religion, Manners, Languages, Customs, and the neerness of the one to the other. To omit therefore the Fable of Brute, and the Catalogue of 68 Kings, which are said to have reigned here successively before the coming of the Romans; Certain it is, that Cæsar found the Countrey cantoned into many Kingdoms (four in Kent alone) and the people to be very rude and illiterate. Such Learning as they had was locked up in the brests of the Druides, who committed nothing unto writing, and by that means kept the People in continuall ignorance; communicating what they knew to none but those of their own Order, and therein being sought to by the Druides or Priests of Gaul, who came over into this Island to them, and did from them receive the knowledge of their sacred Mysteries. Being conquered or discovered rather by Iulius Cæsar, it was not so much as looked after by the two next Emperours: Augustus and Tiberius counting it an high point of Wisdom, not to extend the Empire beyond the Ocean. Caligula had once a mind to the Adventure, but he durst not follow it. But Claudius, his Successor, undertook the Enterprise, sollicited thereunto by Bericus a noble Briton, who for sedition and some practices against the publick, was expelled the Countrey. Hereupon Aulus Plautius is sent over with some Roman Forces, by whom and Publius Ostorius Scapula his Successor, Togodumnus and Caractacus, two Kings of the Britains were severally overcome in battel, a Roman Colonie planted at Camalodunum, and the Southern parts thereof reduced to the form of a Province. After this time by little and little the whole was conquered, as far as to the Frythes of Dunbarten and Edenburgh: Agricola in the time of Domitian, having the happiness and good fortune to goe beyond the furthest of his Predecessors; and so much moderation not to venture further, where there was nothing to be got but blowes, cold, and hunger.

At the first entrance of the Romans, the Iland was divided into severall Nations, each governed by its own Kings and particular Princes, different in their ends and counsels, and so more easily subdued by united Forces. The principall of which (for it is needless to make mention of inferiour Clans) were 1 the Danmonij, containing Devonshire and Cornwall, whose chief Cities were Isca, now Exeter, and Volcha neer the Town of Falmouth in Cornwall. 2 the Durotrigæ, inhabiting only in the County of Dorset; whose chief Citie was Danium or Durnovaria, which we now call Dorchester. 3 the Belgæ, planted in the Counties of Somerset, Southampton, and Wilts, whose chief Cities were Aquæ calidæ, now Bath, Ventu Belgarum, now Winchester, and Sorbiodunum, the seat of old Salisbury. 4 the Attrebatij, confined within Barkshire only, the chief Citie of whom was Gualleva, where now is Wallingford. 5 the Regni, possessed of Sussex and Surrey, whose chief Cities were Vindelis, now Winchelsey, and Neomagus, situate some ten miles from London. 6 the Cantiani, or the Kentish, having Durovernum now Canterbury, Dubris, now Dover, and Rhutupiæ, now called Rishborough for their principall Cities. 7 the Trinobantes of Midlesex and Essex, where London called afterwards Augusta Trinobantum, and Camaladunum the first Roman Colonie, now called Maldon; the Seat Royall of Cunabelinus, King of the Trinobantes in the time of the Romans. 8 The Catieuchlani, dwelling in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford and Hartford, whose Towns of most importance were Magivintum, now called Dunstable, and Verulamium, (neer S. Albans) the strongest Hold the Britains had in their wars with Cæsar. 9 The Iceni, living in the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Huntington, and Cambridge; their principall Cities being Villa Faustini, now S. Edmundsbury, Sito magus, now Thetford, Durolis, now Godmanchester, and Camboritum, or Cambridge. 10 Coritani, who took up the whole Counties of Lincoln, Leicester, Rutland, Nottingham, Northampton, and Darby; principall Towns of which were Lindum, now Lincoln, Rhegno, where now is Leicester, Guusenna not far from Stamford, now called Bridge-Casterton; Agelocis, now Litleborough, a small Village neer Newark upon Trent. Tripontium now Torcester, not far from Northampton. 11 the Brigantes, the greatest Nation of the Iland, filling all Yorkeshire, the Bishoprick of Durham, Cumberland, Westmerland, and the Countie Palatine of Lancaster, in a word all the North of England (except Northumberland, the dwelling of the 12 Oltadini, whose chief Town was Bremenium, thought now to be Riechester in Ruddisdale.) Principall places of which large and potent Nation, were Isaurium, now Aldborrow in the North Riding, Eboracum, or York in the West Riding, and Petuaria thought:

thought to be Beverley in the East Riding of Yorkshire; Vinovium, where now is Binchester, in the Bishoprick; Epiacum now Pap-Castle in Cumberland; Calatum, now Wealix-Castle in Westmorland; and Rhigodunum, now Ribble-Chester in the County Palatine of Lancaster. 13 The Cornavii, seated in the Counties of Chester, Salop, Worcester, Stafford, and Warwick, whose principall Towns were, Deuvania, or Legio vicesima Victrix, now West-Chester; Uriconium, now Wroxeter, an ignoble village; Pennocrucium, now Penkridge, not far from Stafford; Brannogenium, now Worcester; Manduessedum, now Manchester, on the River Anker. 14 And last of all, the Dobuni of Oxford and Gloucestershires; principall places of the which were, Dorcinia, now Dorchester, seven miles from Oxford, and Corinium, or Cyrencester, neer the head of the Thames. Such Nations as are comprehended under the name of Wales, and Scotland, shall be remembred when we come to speak of those Countries. England.

These, and the rest of Wales and Scotland (as far as the Romans did proceed) being once subdued; Britain became a Member of the Roman Empire, yet so that many of the Tribes had their own Kings, and were suffered to govern by their own Lawes: it being a known custome amongst the Romans, as we find in Tacitus, habere servitutis instrumenta & Reges, to permit Kings sometimes in the conquered Countries, making them instrumentall to the peoples bondage. And it is said of Lucius Verus the Roman Emperour, that having put an end to the Parthian war, Regna Regibus, Provincias Comitibus suis regendas dedisse: he gave those Kingdoms he had conquered to be ruled by Kings; the Provinces to be governed by Provinciall Earles. Kings of which kind were Codigunus and Pratusagus, spoken of by Tacitus; Lucius, before-mentioned, the first Christian King, and Coilus the Father of Helena, Mother of Constantine the great. But as afterward in the Heptarchie of the Saxons that King who over-ruled the rest, and was of most power and estimation, was called the Monarch of the English: so probable enough it is, that he amongst the British Kings, who was in most credit with the Romans, or of most power amongst his neighbours, might be permitted to assume the Title of King of Britain. The Catalogue of whom from Cassibelane to Constantine, I have here subjoyned, according to the tenor of the British Historie,

The Kings of Britain after the coming in of the Romans.

A. Ch.

1 Cassibelane, King of the Trinobantes, Commander of the Britans in the war against Julius Cesar.
2 Theomantius.
3 Cymbeline.
4 Guiderius.
45. 5 Arviragus, by Hector Boetius called Pratusagus, in whose times Britain was subdued by Aulus Plautius, sent hither from the Emperour Claudius.
73. 6 Marius.
125. 7 Coilus, the supposed Founder of Colchester.
180. 8 LUCIUS, the first Christian King of Britain, and of all the World; who dying without issue, left the Roman Emperour his Heir.
207. 9 Severus, Emperour of Rome, and King of Britain.
211. 10 Bassianus Caracalla, Sonne of Severus, Emperour of Rome after his Father; who lost the Kingdom of Britain to
218. 11 Carausius, a Native of the Iland, who rebelling against Caracalla, obtained the Kingdom for himself.
225. 12 Alectus.
232. 13 Aesclepiodorus.
260. 14 Coilus II. the Father of Helena.
289. 15 Constantius, Emperour of Rome, in right of Helena his Wife, succeeded on the death of Coilus the 2d.
16 Constantine the great, the Sonne of Helena and Constantius, who added his Estates in Britain to the Roman Monarchie.

But to proceed, Britain being thus made a Member of the Roman Empire, it was at first divided into three Provinces onely, that is to say, Britannia prima, (so called because first subdued) containing all the Countries on the South side of the Thames, and those inhabited by the Trinobantes, Iceni, Catieuchlani, whose Metropolis or chief City was London. 2 Britannia Secunda, comprising all the Nations on the further side of the Severn, whose chief City was Caer-Leon upon Usk, in the County of Monmouth; and 3 Maxima Cesariensis, including all the rest to the Northern border, whereof the Metropolis was York: each Province having severall Cities, 28 in all. Accordingly, the Church conforming to the Plat-form of the Civill State, there were appointed for the Government hereof eight and twenty Bishops, residing in those severall Cities; three of the which residing in the principall Cities, were honoured with the Title of Metropolitans, and a superiority over all the Bishops of their severall and respective Provinces. And in this state it stood till the time of Constantine, who in his new moulding of the Empire, altered the bounds, and enlarged the number of the Provinces; adding two more unto and out of the former, viz. Valentia, conteining all the Country from the Frith of Solway, and the Picts wall on the South, to the Friths of Edenburgh and England. Dunbritton North; and Flavia Cæsariensis, comprehending all between Thames and Humber: the rest betwixt the Humber and the bounds of Valentia, continuing under the old name of Maxima Cæsariensis, though now made less than any of the other four: The number of the Provinces being thus enlarged, he making the whole a full and complete Diocese of the Roman Empire, (whereas Spain had Tingitana added to it, as before was shewn) subordinate, as Spain was also, to the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, and governed by his Vicarius or Lieutenant Generall. By which division or rather subdivision of the Roman Provinces, there was no other alteration made in the Ecclesiasticall government, but that the British Church became more absolute and independent than it was before, and had a Primate of its own (as each Diocese had) residing in the same Citie with the Vicar or Lieutenant Generall (which was then at York) of as great power and jurisdiction in the Isle of Britain, as any Patriarch of Alexandria, Rome, or Antioch, in their severall Patriarchates. The Metropolitans were no more than before they were: It being ordered by a Canon of the Councill of Chalcedon, that their number should not be augmented by any alteration made of the Roman Provinces. As for the Forces which the Romans kept here in continuall pay, as well to keep their Coasts and Frontires against the Enemy, as for retayning of the Natives in their due obedience, they came in all (if Panciroll be not mistaken in his reckoning) to 23000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: three Legions keeping here their constant and continuall Residence, that is to say, the sixt Legion, surnamed Victrix, at York; the 20th Legion surnamed also Victrix, at West-Chester; and the second Legion sometimes at Isca Dannoniorum, which we now call Exeter, sometimes at Isca Silurum, which is now Caer-Leon upon Usk. Which Legions with their Aides and Cohorts, may well make up the number spoken of before. Of so high estimation was this Iland in the State of Rome.

Dun-

Yet could not all these Forces so preserve the Countrie from forrein Enemies, but that in the declining of the Roman Empire, the Saxons made great spoyles on the coasts thereof; as did the Scots and Picts on the Northern borders: against all which the Romans held out well enough, and made good their ground, till the recalling of the Legions out of Britain for defence of Italy it self, then wasted and destroyed by the barbarous nations. Which hapned in or about the yeer of Christ 407, and some 470 yeers from the first invasion; Honorius being at that time the Roman Emperour, and Victorinus the last Governour for the Empire, in the Isle of Britain. For though the noble Ætius, on the Petition and complaint of the slaughtered people, unmercifully butchered by the Scots and Picts, sent some small forces to assist them against those Enemies: yet were they presently called back for defence of Gaul, against the Hunnes breaking in upon it out of Italie. And then the wretched Britains hopeless of all help from Rome, and being unable, by their own strength to repell the Enemy, by reason of their long ease and disuse of Arms; applied themselves to Aldroenus, King of Armorica in France, (called Little Britain) a Prince extracted from the same stock, for relief and succour: whose Brother Constantine (according to the British storie) passing over with a competent Army, and having valiantly repulsed the barbarous people, was crowned King of Britain: the first of a new race of Kings, which swayed the Scepter, with much trouble and continual conflicts, either against the Scots or Saxons, till they were finally subdued and shut up in Wales. Those of most observation in the course of storie, were, 1 Constantine the first King, and the restorer of the Countrie to Peace and quiet, traiterously murdered by a Pict. 2 Vortiger, E. of the Gevilles, (now Cornwall) Protector of Constantius, the Sonne of Constantine, taken out of a Monastery; after whose death, (wherein he was conceived to have had an hand) he got the Kingdom to himself: but being unable to defend it against the Enemy, and make his title also good against the other children of Constantine, first called in the Saxons. 3 Vortimer, eldest Sonne of Vortiger, who overthrew the Saxons in many battels; but in the midst of his successes was poysoned by Rowena a Saxon Lady, second Wife of Vortiger. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies, of whom the Monkish writers and other Legendaries report so many idle and impossible actions. Doubtless he was a Prince of most perfect vertue, a great Preserver of his Countrie from approaching ruine, and worthy of the pen of an able Panegyrist: by whom his brave atchievements might have come entire unto us, without the intermixture of those feats of Chivalry, affabulated to him and his Knights of the Round-table. For by the overstraining of some Monkish Writers, Geofry of Monmouth and the rest, they have given too just occasion to posterity to suspect that vertue, which they intended to advance; and filled us with as much ignorance of the story, as admiration of the persons. But this hath not been the ill hap of King Arthur and his Nobles onely; Charlemagne and the Twelve Peers of France, men of great vertue and renown, suffering as deeply in the same kind, by the folly of the French Romances. It is affirmed of this Arthur, (but how true I know not) that he began the custome of celebrating the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour for the twelve dayes following, with such pastimes and sports as are (or have been used of late) by the Lords of Misrule in some Gentlemens houses: an Institution which the Scotish Writers of those times much blame, perhaps not unjustly; it being a time more fit for our devotions than such rude disports. But to proceed, King Arthur dying, left the Crown to 5 Constantine, the Sonne of Cador Duke of Cornwall, his neerest kinsman, slain by Aurelius Conanus, his own Nephew, who succeeded after him: which fraction did so weaken the distressed Britans, that they were forced to withdraw themselves beyond the Severn: as 6 Careticus, or Caradoc, by the joynt forces of the Saxons, to charge the plain Countries beyond the Severn, for the safer, but more fruitless Mountains. Of the rest, till Cadwallader, there is little left of any certainty but their names only; which are thus ranked in the second race of 687. 16 Cadwallader, the laſt King of the Britans, who on a ſuperſtitious zeal travelled in pilgrimage to Rome, there to receive the habit of a Religious Order from the hands of Pope Sergius; where he died not long after, Anno 689. After whoſe death, his Succeſſors were no longer called Kings of Britain, but Kings or Princes of Wales. And there we ſhall be ſure to find them.

And ſo the Britans leave the Stage, and the Saxons enter; a great and potent Nation amongſt the Germans, but greater by the aggregation of many people, under their name and ſervice, than in themſelves: the Jutes and Angles joyning with them, and paſſing in Accompt as the ſame one Nation. Their Countries different as their names, untill this Conjunction; but neighbouring neer enough to unite together: the Angles dwelling at the firſt in that part of the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe, which we now call Sleſwick, where ſtill the Town called Angoleu doth preſerve their memory; the Jnites upon the North of them, where there is ſtill a Province called by the name of Jniteland; the Saxons South of both in the Dukedom of Holſtein, ſituate in the very neck of that Cherſoneſe where it joyneth with Germany. Joyning their powers they ſpread themſelves with good ſucceſs to the South and Weſt; of which more hereafter. And growing Maſters of the Seas infeſted with continuall Pyracies the Coaſts of Britain; occaſioning herein an Officer of great truſt and power, appointed to defend and ſcour thoſe Seas, in the Notitia called Comes Littoris Saxonici. Known by this means amongſt the Britans, they were called in by Vortiger to aid him againſt the Scots and Picts, whom they overcame in a pitched field neer Stamford, in the County of Lincoln: for ſo far had the barbarous people marched without any reſiſtance. Rewarded for this victorie with the Iſle of Thanet, and after with the whole Countie of Kent, they began to quarrell with their hoſts: whom by degrees they diſpoſſeſſed of all the Countrey on this ſide of Severn; parcelling it into ſeven Kingdomes, called the Saxon Heptarchie, that is to ſay, 1 Of Kent, 2 of the South-Saxons, 3 of the Weſt-Saxons, 4 of the Eaſt-Saxons, 5 of the Eaſt-Angles, 6 of the North-Humbers, and 7 of the Mercians. The beginning, period, and Kings of which ſeverall Kingdomes, and the uniting of them into one Monarchie, we are next to ſhew.

1 The Kingdom of KENT, confined within that Countie onely, was begun by Hengiſt, who with his Brother Horſus had the leading of the Saxon forces, at their firſt entrie into Britain, Anno 455. being the ſixt yeer after their firſt coming in, who reſtoring Paganiſm to this Countrie, when the reſt of the Iſle was Chriſtian, occaſioned the diſtinction of Kent and Chriſtendom. The Kentiſh, afterwards the firſt of the Saxons who received the Goſpell by the preaching of Auguſtine the Monk, the Apoſtle of the Engliſh Saxons. Principall Cities of this Kingdom, were 1 Canterbury, once the Regall ſeat of the Kings of Kent, till given by Ethelbert, on his converſion, to Auguſtine the firſt Archbiſhop thereof, and his Suceſſors: afterwards the See of thoſe Archbiſhops, who had here their Palace and Cathedrall, the Kings removing to Reculver. Seated in the Eaſt part of the Countrie, about ſeven or eight miles from the Sea, a little Brook ſerving it thence with ſome commodities. A Citie of more Antiquity and fame, than beautie; being now ruinous and decayed, and having nothing in it worth obſervation, but the Cathedral Church, firſt founded by Ethelbert before-mentioned, but afterwards new-built upon his foundation, in the form it now ſtands by Archbiſhop Lanfrank, Will: Corboyle, and ſome other of their Succeſſors in the ſaid See. The Archiepiſcopall Palace is a goodly building, and the ruines of S. Auguſtines Monaſtery ſhew what once it was. 2 Dover, antiently called Dubris, ſeated on the Sea-ſhore, where the paſſage is ſhorteſt into France; for that cauſe fortified with a ſtrong and (in thoſe dayes accounted an) impregnable Caſtle, eſteemed one of the keys of England, and the chief of the Cinque-Ports, now giving the title of an Earl to the houſe of Hunſdon, chief of the Familie of the Caries, neerly allied to Queen Elizabeth of famous memorie. 3 Rocheſter, ſeated on the Medway, not far from Chatham (the ſtation of the Royall Navie) an antient Citie, but of no greatneſs; in former times called Durobrivis, after that Roffa, thence the name of Roff-cheſter, a Biſhops See, the ſecond for Antiquity in all the Iland. 4 Maidſton, upon the Medway alſo neer the head thereof, the largeſt and moſt beautifull in all this Countrey, and moſt commodiouſly ſeated for publick buſineſs.

II. The Kingdom of SOUTH-SEX, or of the SOU-SAXONS, was began by Ella, a noble Captain of that people, An. 488. It conteined only the two Counties of Suſſex and Surrey, which were thence denominated: the firſt ſo called quaſi South Sex, the Countrie of the South-Saxons, the ſecond quaſi South-Rey, as lying on the South-ſide of the River Thames, in the ſame ſenſe as S. Maries Church on the other ſide of that River (in reſpect of London) is called S. Maria Over-Rey. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as in other places, was reſtored again in the time of King Edilwalch, by the preaching of S. Wilfride, Archbiſhop of York, living here in Exile. Places of moſt importance in it, were, 1 Chicheſter, built by Ciſſa the 2d King hereof, and called Ciſſan-ceſter, encompaſſed almoſt round with the River Lavant, falling not far off into the Sea: the chief Town of Suſſex, and a Biſhops See, removed hither from Sealſey, a Demy-Iland, in the time of the Norman Conquerour, where it was firſt planted by Archbiſhop Wilfride. 2 Haſtings, one of the Cinque-ports, in Suſſex alſo; the landing-place of the Normans, and famous for the over-throw of King Harold in the fields adjoyning. 3 Guildford, upon the River Wey, the chief Town of Surrey, well-built, and having in it two Pariſh Churches. 4 Arundell, in a Dale or Valley on the River Arun, and from thence ſo named: belonging to the Crown in the time of the Saxons, when given by the Teſtament of King Alfride unto Anthelm, his Brothers Sonne. Of great note for a beautifull and capacious Caſtle; but more for giving the title of Earl to the noble Families of the Albeneys, the Fitz-Alans, and the Howards: this laſt of ſuch a large and diffuſed Nobilitie, that in the yeer 1641. there were no fewer than eight Howards in the houſe of Peers. 5 Kingſton upon the Thames, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Kingſton upon Hull in Yorkſhire: heretofore famous for the Coronation of the Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons, whence it had the name of Kingſton, or the Kings Town. This Kingdom had only 3 Kings, cruſhed in the infancy thereof by more potent neighbours.

4 Edelwach, or Ethelwolf, the firſt Chriſtian King, overcome and ſlain in battel by Ceadwill, King of the Weſt-Saxons, An. 687. After whoſe death Berthan and Authun, two Brethren, took on themſelves the Government, with the title of Dukes or Captains; and held it for a little while. But not being able to withſtand the puiſſance of the Weſt-Saxons, this Kingdom was ſubdued by Ina, the Succeſſor of Ceadwall, by whom united to that Crown.

III. The Kingdom of WEST-SEX, or of the WEST-SAXONS, the third in order, and that which did in fine prevail over all the reſt, conteined the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerſet, Dorſet, Wilts, Southampton and Berks: begun by Cerdic, a noble Commander of the Saxons ariving with new Forces out of Germany, Anno 495. who having overcome the Britans of this Weſtern tract, conducted by Natanland their Chieftain, entituled himſelf King of the Weſt-Saxons, Anno 522. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as elſwhere, was reſtored again in the time of Kingils, their firſt Chriſtian King, by the preaching of S. Birinus, Biſhop of Dorcheſter neer Oxford, then a great City of no fewer than ten Pariſhes, now reduced to one. Chief Cities of this Kingdom, were 1 Exeter, a fair and goodly Citie, and a Biſhops See, removed hither from Cridington or Kirton, by Leofricus, Anno 1049. Seated upon the bank of the River Ex, whence the name of Ex-ceaſter; environed with deep ditches, and very ſtrong wals, in compaſs about a mile and half beſides the Suburbs, in which are contained in all 15 Pariſh Churches, beſides the Minſter, a beautifull and ſtately Fabrick. 2 Bath, ſo called from the Bathes there being, the chief Citie of Somerſet; by the Latives called Aqua Solis, by the Greeks Ὕδατα θερμαὶ, for the ſelf ſame reaſon. Situate in a low Vallie, environed about with Hils very ſteep and high, from whence come many Rivulets and freſh Springs, to the great commodity of the people. A fine neat Town, and beautified with as neat a Church, heretofore a Monaſterie, partner with Wels, the Biſhops See

See, in the ſtile Epiſcopall; and gives the Title of an Earl to the noble Family of the Bouchiers. SAXONS.
3 Falemouth, in Cornwall, ſeated upon a large and capacious Bay, ſo full of Creeks and Roads, capable of the beſt Ships, that it is ſaid an hundred ſayl of Ships may be lodged therein with ſuch convenience, that from the top of the one, the Maſt of another is not to be ſeen; the mouth or entrance of it defended for the greater ſafety with two very ſtrong Caſtles built by Henry the 8th, that of S. Mandits on the Eaſt, and that of Pendinnis (commonly called Pendennis) upon the Weſt. 4 Dorcheſter, the chief Town of Dorſetſhire, which is thence denominated, by Antoninus called Durnovaria, the principall at that time of the Durotriges: an Inland Town, and conſequently of no great trading: not ſo much famous for ought elſe as giving the Title of a Marqueſs to Henry Earl of Kingſton, of the noble Family of the Pierrepoints. 5 Wilton, the head Town, in thoſe times, of Wiltſhire, and a Biſhops See, honoured with the reſidence of nine ſeverall Biſhops. But by tranſlating of the See to Sarum, (or Sarisbury,) as the fitter place, and carrying thither therewithall the thorow-fare which before was here, it fell by little and little into decay, and is now hardly worth the reputation of a Market-Town. 6 Winchester, called Venta in the times of the Romans, by the Saxons Vent-ceaſter, ſituate on the banks of a pleaſant River, the ſeat Royal of the Weſt Saxon Kings, who had here their Palace called Wolves-eye, ſo named from the Kings of the Wolphian Family, and the ſituation of it in the circlings of the fore-ſaid River, which the old Saxons called an Eye: not from the Wool-Staple here kept, as ſome, much leſs from Cardinal Wolſey, as others moſt abſurdly think. The houſe given after to the Biſhops, and made their Palace. The Town in compaſs two miles, beſides the Suburbs, commodiouſly ſeated in a low place, between very ſteep Hils, by which it is defended both from cold and wind: afflicted very much ſince thoſe times both by war and fire, half of the ground within the Town being fields and gardens; but ſtill adorned with a magnificent Cathedrall, and a gallant (but no great) Caſtle, bravely mounted upon an hill for defence and proſpect; beſides a College, and an Hoſpital added ſince thoſe dayes. 7 Southampton, conveniently ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of burden to the very Key; which maketh it one of the richeſt Towns in thoſe parts of England. Well built of fair large ſtreets, beautified with 5 Pariſh Churches, and fortified with high walls, a double ditch, and a right ſtrong Caſtle: but the Caſtle now decayed and ruined. 8 Reading, on the Banks of the River Kennet, where it falleth into the Thames, by which means it hath the convenience of both Rivers: A Town of great trade for clothing, well-built, and of three Pariſh Churches; heretofore beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle and a goodly Monaſterie, but both now decayed. 9 Windſor, called Windleſhores in the old Saxon, ſituate neer the Banks of the Thames on a riſing ground, which gives it a fair proſpect over all the Countrey, adorned in ſucceeding times with a Palace Royall of the Kings of England, and the ſeat of the Order of the Garter. 10 Wallingford, the Gualleua of the Antients, and then the chief Town of the Attrebatii, as it was afterwards (in the time of the Saxons) of the Countie of Berks: a mile in compaſs at that time, within the walls, fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, and adorned with twelve Pariſh Churches. So deſolated by a Plague, Anno 1348. that there is now but one Church left, hardly Inhabitants enough to keep that in repair; and nothing of the wals left (as not much of the Caſtle) but the tract and ruins.

IV. The Kingdom of EAST-SEX, or the EAST-SAXONS, was begun about the yeer 527, by Erchenwin, deſcended from Woden, the common Progenitor of the Saxons, from whom we have the name of Wedneſday, or Wodenſday, as they called it formerly. It contained only the Counties of Middleſex, Eſſex, and ſo much of Hartfordſhire as is in the Dioceſe of London. The Chriſtian Faith expulſed here as in other places, was reſtored again in the time of Sebert, the Founder of the Abby Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, by the preaching of Mellitus the firſt Biſhop of London after the entrance of the Saxons; ſuppreſſed again by Seward and Sigebert the Sonnes of Sebert; but ſetled ſtronger than before by Cedda, the next Biſhop there. Principall Cities of this Kingdom, beſides London, ſpoken of already, were 1 Weſtminſter, ſituate in thoſe times, a mile from London, now adjoyning to it. The See of the Archbiſhop of London in the time of the Britains: afterwards by the Saxons called Thorn-eye, or the Thorny Iland, till the new Minſter built by Sebert as before is ſaid, and the weſtern ſituation of it in regard of S. Pauls, built at the ſame time by Ethelbert the King of Kent, gained it this new name. A Citie honoured with the Saxons. ſeat of the Kings of Eaſt-Sex, and ſince thoſe times with that of the Kings of England; the names of the old Palace of the one, and the new Palace of the other, ſtill remaining there; beautified upon that occaſion with more ſtately and magnificent houſes, belonging to the King, Biſhops, and Nobility, than all the other in the Kingdom, having of late a new Town added to it in the Convent Garden (a place belonging formerly to the Monks of Weſtminſter) for uniformity of building, and handſome ſtreets, inferiour to no Citie of France or Italy. 2 Colcheſter, the chief Town of Eſt-ſex, ſituate neer the Sea, on the River Coln, a Colonie of the Londoners in former times thence called Colonia Londinenſium, and Colonia only, then a Biſhops See, from which, or from the River, with the Addition of Ceaſter, after the manner of the Saxons, came the name of Colcheſter. A fair and well built Town, and of good reſort, fortified with an old Roman wall, and having in it to the number of 14 Churches. 3 Ithanceſter in Dengey Hundred, where S. Ceadda the ſecond Biſhop of London baptized the relapſed Eaſt-Saxons. 4 Hartford, the chief Town of the Countie ſo called; by Beda named Herudford, and of great note in his time for a Synod there held in the dawning of the day of Chriſtianity among the Saxons, in which S. Auguſtine the Monk, the firſt Apoſtle of that People, had a conference or conſultation with the Britiſh Biſhops; more memorable in the following times, for giving the title of an Earl to the illuſtrious Family, furnamed De Clare, the addition of an Honour, and a goodly Patrimonie to John of Gaunt, D. of Lancaſter; and at this time the title of Earl and Marqueſs to the noble Family of the Seymours.

V. The Kingdom of the EAST-ANGLES, ſo called from the Angli or Engliſh, which poſſeſſed theſe parts, and the Eaſtern ſituation of it; begun by Uffa, a great Commander of the Saxons, Anno 575. contained the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge-ſhire, and the Iſle of Ely. The Chriſtian Faith firſt planted here in the Reign of Redwall the third King, by the Miniſterie of Felix a Burgundian, the firſt Biſhop of the Eaſt-Angles, the See whereof was afterwards removed to Norwich. Places of moſt importance in it, were 1 Dunwich, on the Sea-ſhore, the firſt Biſhops See of the Eaſt-Angles, for the Countie of Suffolk, then a Town capable of that Dignity, now ruinous, decayed, and for the greateſt part worn into the Sea. 2 Ipſwich in the ſame Countie of Suffolk, and the chief of the Countrie, a rich, populous, and well traded Emporie, conſiſting of no fewer than 5 Pariſh Churches. 3 Norwich, the head Citie of Norfolke, ſituate on the River Yare, which runs thence to Yaremouth; lying out in length a mile and an half, half as much in breadth, and in that Circuit comprehending about 30 Pariſhes; well walled about with many a Turret, and 12 Gates for entrance; but hath within it much waſt ground, the Citie ſuffering great loſs both in wealth and buildings by Kets Rebellion, in the time of K. Edward the ſixth; recovered of the firſt blow by the Dutch Manufactures, of the laſt ſtill languiſhing; yet ſtill it glorieth in the beauties of a fair Cathedrall, the three Palaces of the Biſhops, the Dukes of Norfolke, and the Earls of Surrey; and the ruins of an antient Caſtle of the Saxons building. 4 North Elmham, the Biſhops See of the Eaſt-Angles for thoſe parts which we now call Norfolk: both this, and that of Dunwich ruinated in the Daniſh Wars, but this reviving at the end of 100 yeers, and here continuing (both Sees united) unto one, till removed to 5 Thetford, another Town of this Countie, ſituate on the confluence of the Thet, and the leſſer Ouſe, a larger Town than either of the other two, from whence at laſt removed to Norwich. 6 Cambridge, the chief Town of that Countie, by Antonine called Camboritum, whence the modern name: unleſs we rather fetch it from a Bridge over the River Cam or Grant (for ſome call it Grantbridge) as perhaps we may. A Town well built by reaſon of the Vniverſity, ſaid to be founded by Sigebert, King of the Eaſt-Angles, of whom it is affirmed by Beda that he Founded a School for the education of Children in the wayes of good Learning; but he ſpeaketh neither of Vniverſitie, nor nameth Cambridge for the place. 7 Ely, ſituate in the Iſle ſo named, occaſioned by the divided ſtreams of Ner and Ouſe, with the over-flotes of other Rivers turning a great part of this tract into Fens and Mariſhes the Inhabitants whereof were called Girvii. A place of no great beauty or reputation, as ſituate in a foggy and unhealthfull ayr, but only for a Fair Monaſtery, built by S. Ethelreda, Wife of Egfride, King of the Northumbers, by her made a Nunnery; afterwards rebuilt and repleniſhed with Monks by Ethelwold B. of Wincheſter, Anno 970. or thereabouts; finally made a Biſhops See in the time of King Henry the firſt, Anno 1109.

After whose death the Kingdom was possessed by the Danes, till vanquished by King Edward the Elder, by whom it was united unto the rest of England.

VI. The Kingdom of NORTHVMBERLAND, so called from the situation on the North of Humber, contained the Counties of York, Lancaster, Durham, Westmorland, Cumberland, and Northumberland properly so called, and all the Southern parts of Scotland, as far as to the Frythes of Edenburgh and Dunbritton, formerly reckoned of as Members of the Roman Empire. Extorted from the Britans by Octa, the Sonne, and Ebusa, the Brother of Hengist, Conducters of new Forces hither, (all of the nation of the Angli) by the leave of Vortiger, under pretence of guarding these Countries from the in-roads of the Scots and Picts. By them divided into two Provinces, the one called Deira, extending from the Humber to the River of Tweda; the other called Bernicia, reaching from Tweda to the two Frythes before-mentioned: both Governed a long while by Dukes, under the Soveraigntie and homage of the Kings of Kent. In the yeer 547. Duke Ida takes unto himself the title of King of Bernicia, and Anno 559 Duke Ella doth the like in Deira. Towns of most notice in this last (for the former is now reckoned as a part of Scotland) besides York, spoken of before, were 1 Loncaster, the chief Town of that County, situate on the River Lon, which with the addition of Ceaster much used by the Saxons, made the name thereof; called for the same reason Longovicus by the Emperour Antonine. The Town not very well peopled, nor much frequented, but of sufficient fame in our English Annals for those noble persons, which have successively born the titles of Earls and Dukes of it; the greatest Princes for revenue, of any Subjects in Christendom. 2 Kendall, or Candale, situate in a dale on the River Can, whence it had the name; the chief Town of Westmorland: built in the manner of a Cross, two long and broad streets thwarting one another. A rich, populous, and well-trafied Town, especially for the making of fine woollen cloth; but of more fame for giving the title of an Earl to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, and John de Foix, created Earl hereof by Henry the sixt. 3 Carlile, upon the River Eden, a frontire Town betwixt the Romans and the Scots, as now between the Scots and English: consumed to Ashes in the time of the Danish Furies, afterwards re-built by William Rufus, made an Episcopall See in the reign of King Henry the first, and beautified with a Cathedrall foundedat the perswasion of Athelwolfus, the first Bishop thereof. 4 Monk-chester, on the Northern banks of the River Tine, which maketh there a safe and capacious Haven. Of no great note, till the Norman conquest, when from a Castle built by Robert Sonne of William the Conqueror, it was called New-Castle: growing from that time forwards to such wealth and trading by the neighbourhood of the Cole-mines there, that it is now the goodliest Town in all the North; fortified with strong walls, beautified with five fair Churches, and giving to the L. Will. Cavendish Viscount Mansfield, the honourarie titles of Earl and Marquess. 5 Hagnestade, or Hextold, by the Romans called Axelodunum, by the Normans, Hexham, a Bishops See, in the first times of Christianity amongst these Northumbers, specially so called, converted to the faith in the time of Oswald their tenth King, by the Ministery of Aidan the first Bishop of Lindisfarn. Eata the fift Bishop, erecting here an Episcopall See, for the better propagation of the Gospell amongst this people; after a succession of ten Bishops ruinated and suppressed by the Danish Furies. 6 Dunholm, now Durham, situate on an hill as the name importeth, a Bishops See, translated hither with the body of S. Cutbert, Anno 990, or thereabouts, from Lindisfarn a small Iland on the coast of Northumberland, where it was first erected by S. Aidanus, the first Bishop thereof: planted in Lindisfarn, because of the solitude of the place; translated hither to avoid the Furie of the Danes, who then raged extremely in these Quarters. And being setled here, was fortified with such ample Privileges and possessions by the Saxon Kings, that the Bishops were reputed for Countie Palatines at and before the Norman Conquest. 7 Halifax, in the West-riding of Yorkshire, of great wealth by making of cloth. 8 Rippon, in the same, adorned with a fair Cathedrall or Collegiate Church, subordinate to that at York. 9 Godman-ham, (by Beda called Gotmandin Gaham) famous in those dayes for a Temple of the Saxon-Idols, burnt down and utterly destroyed by Coifi, the chief Priest thereof, converted to Christianity by Paulinus the first Archbishop of York, and the Apostle of the Northhumbers in these parts. The Cata-

SAXONS. logue of the Kings of which mighty Nation, by reason of the division of it into two Kingdoms, as before is said, is very intricate and confused; the Kingdomes being sometimes united, and sometimes dis-joyned But in regard that the most prevalent King of either was called King of Northumberland, the other of Bernicia or Deira onely, I shall accordingly subjoyn them in this order following.

Predecessors had been before) the Kingdom became distracted into parts and factions; invaded by the Danes on the one side, the Scots and Picts on the other, who during these distractions had possessed themselves of all the Countries on the other side of the Twede. At the last Anno 827. they yeelded themselves to Egbert the most potent King of the West-Saxons, ruled by his Deputies for a while, then subdued by the Danes, and finally recovered to the Crown of England by Athelstan and Edred, Anno 950, or thereabouts. Content since that to give the Title of an Earl to some eminent persons, both of English and Normans races: as it hath done since the first yeer of King Richard the 2d to the noble Family of the Percies, descended by Joceline of Brabant, Brother of Adelize the second Wife of King Henry the first, from Charles the Great, Emperor, and King of France.

VII. The Kingdom of MERCIA, was begun by Cridda, or Creodda, a great Commander of the Angli, or English Nation; who setling in the heart of Britain, where the people were least used to Armes, made themselves masters of the Counties of Glocester, Worcester, Hereford, Salop, Chester, Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, Northampton, Warwick, Oxon, Buckingham, Bedford, and the rest of Hartfordshire: which bounded in a manner by all the rest of the Saxon Kingdoms, had the name of Mercia, from the word Meare, which signifieth a bound or limit. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other Kingdoms of the Saxons, was restored again in the reignes of Penda, Peada, and Wolfhere, by the Preaching of S. Chad, the first Bishop of Lichfield. Places of mostobservation in it, 1 Hereford, seated on the banks of the River Wye, in the middle of most flourishing meadows, and no less plentifull Corn-fields; raised out of the ruines of Ariconium here placed by Antonine, the tract of which name it doth still retain. A Bishops See in the time of the Britans, restored to that dignity by the Saxons, Anno 680. the honourary title of the Bohuns, once Earls hereof; and afterwards of Henry of Bullingbrook, Duke of Hereford. 2 Worcester, pleasantly seated on the Severn, over which it hath a very fair Bridge with a Tower upon it. A Bishops See, Anno 679. beautified with a fair Cathedrall, and every way considerable for situation, number of Churches, neat buildings, the industrie of the Inhabitants, and giving the title of an Earl to the noble familie of the Somersets, extracted by the Beauforts from John of Gaunt. 3 Lichfield, the first Bishops See amongst the Mercians, founded there Anno 656. by Oswy King of the Northumbers, but fixed and setled by S. Chad in the reign of Wulfhere, King of the Mercians; endowed in the very infancy with such fair possessions, that in the yeer 793 Aduluus, the Bishop hereof, was made Archbishop of the Mercians. But it proved onely a personall honour, and died with him. 4 Coventry, so called from an old Covent or Religious house, which gave name unto it. Situate in Warwick-shire, and now the principall of that County, though esteemed a County of it self. Beautified with a goodly wall two fair Parish Churches, large streets, and very handsom houses. A City of great trade and riches though destitute of all advantages which a navigable River might afford it; heretofore of great fame for a stately monastery, to which the See Episcopall was for a while removed from Lichfield; now a ruine onely. 5 Leicester, once a Bishops See, the Diocese taken out of Lichfield, Anno 733, removed to Dorchester neer Oxon, and thence to Lincoln. Beautified in those dayes with a fair Collegiate Church, a magnificent Abbie, and a strong Castle; all decayed and ruined by the iniquity and injury of these later times: the Town remaining in as good plight both for trade and buildings, as most Towns do which want a Navigable River. Of most fame for the Earls thereof, Algar and Edwin, noble Saxons, Simon de Montfort the Catiline and great Incendiary of this Kingdom; the Princes of the house of Lancaster, who bore this title; with some others since. 6 Darby, upon the River ver Derwent, a well-traded Town, and of good resort; adorned with five Churches a goodly stone-bridge, and a large Market-place; the honourarie title of the noble Familie of the Stanleys, created Earls hereof by King Henr, the 7th. 7 Nottingham, seated on the Trent, but very high upon an hill which over-looks it: For buildings, fair streets, and a spacious Market-place, not giving way to many Cities; but of most fame for a Royall and magnificent Castle, which for strength, statelinesse and prospect, may justly challenge the precedencie of most in England. 8 Lincoln, a Town in those dayes of great strength and note, one of the best peopled Cities in all the Heptarchie, and of great merchandise and traffick both by Sea and Land: insomuch that Remigius, then Bishop of Dorchester, thought fit to translate hither the Episcopall See. Now much decayed, and thence the Proverb, that Lincoln was, London is, &c. The chief fame which it now hath is for the Minster, one of the stateliest Piles in England, and perhaps in Christendom; high seated on an hill, and from thence discerned over all the Countrie. 9 Huntingdon, or the Hunters Town, from the great sport the Hunters found in the neighbouring Forest, commodiously seated on the Northern bank of the River Ouse, rising unto the North with a soft ascent, consisting of four parish Churches, and shews the ruines of a Castle built by Edward the Elder, Anno 917. 10 Peterburgh, seated in a Nook or Angle of Northamptonshire, where formerly had been a gulf or whirl-pool of exceeding depth: but made firm ground by Wolfere King of the Mercians, when he laid the foundations of the Monastery, Anno 633. dedicated to S. Peter, whence it had this name, before then called Medanshede. A Town, but for the Church, of no great esteem, as standing out of the way for trade, and in no plausible place for health or pleasure: yet shewing two handsom streets, a large Market-place, and a fair Parish Church (besides the Abbie) made an Episcopall See by King Henry the 8th. 11 Northampton, built on the Northern bank of the River Antona, (now Nen) whence it had the name. A Town which for the beauty and circuit of it need not give way to many Cities; fortified heretofore with a very strong Castle, and seated in so good an Air, that once the Students of Cambridge had a purpose to remove their Vniversity hither. The noble Family of the Comptons are now Earls hereof. 12 Bedford, so called from Beds and Lodgings on the Ford, built on both sides thereof, for the use of Travellers; growing in time to so great bignes as to contain in it five Parish Churches: famous in former times for the great battell fought in the adjoyning fields, Anno 572, in which Cuthwulf the Saxon vanquished the Britans, and became Master of the Countrey. But more famous for giving the title of Duke to John of Lancaster, Regent of France for King Henry the sixt, and Jasper of Hatfield, Vncle to King Henry the 7th. 13 S. Albans, so called from a famous Monastery here founded by Offa the great King of the Mercians, in honour of S. Alban, the Proto-Martyr of Britain, a Citizen of Verulamium, neer adjoyning to it: out of the ruines whereof, decayed by Age, and destroyed by War, arose the present greatnes of S. Albans, the fairest and best-traded Town in the County of Hartford. 14 Buckingham, the chief Town of the County so called, situate on the River Ouse: fortified by King Edward the Elder against the Danes, Anno 915. otherwise not much observable, but for those many noble personages which have had the title of Dukes hereof.

SAXONS

The Kings of Mercia.

675. 7 Etheldred.
704. 8 Kenred.
709. 9 Chelred.
716. 10 Ethelbald, overcome by Cuthert, K. of the West-Saxons, at a fight neer Burford in the Countie of Oxon, the place still called Battelage hill.
758. 11 Offa the great.
796. 12 Egfride.
797. 13 Kenwulf.
819. 14 Kenelm.
820. 15 Ceolwulf.
821. 16 Bernulf.
824. 17 Ludecan.
826. 18 Withlaf, overcome in fight (as were his two Predecessors) by Egbert King of West-Sex, became his tributary.
839. 19 Berthulf.
852. 20 Burdred, a Substituted King of the West-Saxons, and the last King of the Mercians (the short reign of his six Predecessors portending that fatall period to be neer at hand.) After whose death, Anno 886, this Kingdome for some few yeers tyrannized over by the Danes, was united by King Alured, to the English Monarchie.

Such was the Order and Succession of the Saxon Kings during the Heptarchie, or division of it into seven Kingdoms, continuing separate & distinct till the prevailing fortune of the West-Saxons, brought them all together into one, by the name of England. But so, that they were subject for the most part unto one alone, who was entituled Rex Gentis Anglorum: those which were stronger than the rest giving the Law unto them in their severall turnes; and are these that follow.

England.

The Monarchs of the Engliſh-Saxons in the time of the Heptarchie.

A. Ch.

455. 1 Hengiſt, King of Kent, who firſt brought the Saxons into Britain.
481. 2 Ella, the firſt King of the South-Saxons.
495. 3 Cerdic, the firſt King of the Weſt-Saxons.
534. 4 Kenrick, King of the VVeſt-Saxons.
561. 5 Cheulme, or Celingus, King of the VVeſt-Saxons.
562. 6 Ethelbert, King of Kent, the firſt Chriſtian King of the Saxons.
616. 7 Redwald, King of the Eaſt-Angles.
617. 8 Edwin, King of Northumberland.
634. 9 Oſwald, King of Northumberland.
643. 10 Oſwy, King of Northumberland.
659. 11 Wulfhere, King of Mercia.
675. 12 Etheldred, King of Mercia.
704. 13 Kenred, K. of Mercia.
709. 14 Chelred, K. of Mercia.
716. 15 Ethelbald, K. of Mercia.
758. 16 Offa the Great K. of the Mercians.
794. 17 Egfride, K. of Mercia.
796. 18 Kenwolf, K. of Mercia.
800. 19 Egbert, the Sonne of Alcmond, K. of the Weſt Saxons, vvho having vanquiſhed all the reſt of the Saxon Kings, and added moſt of their Eſtates unto his own, cauſed the whole united Body to be called Engel-lond, or England, in a Parliament or Counſell held at Wincheſter, Anno 819, being the 19th yeer of his Reign over the Weſt-Saxons; and by that name was then crowned in the preſence of his Nobles, and the reſt of his Subjects, leaving it unto the reſt of his Succeſſors.

But before we come to the recitall of their names, we are to take notice of the Danes, the next conſiderable Actors on the Stage of England, vvho in the time of this Egbert firſt invaded the Countrey, and after exerciſed the patience of his Poſterity, till in fine they got the kingdom to themſelves. Of the Originall and firſt Succeſſes of this people, vve ſhall ſpeak more at large vvhen we come to Denmark. Suffice it here to knovv, that having taken up the void Rooms of the Iuites and Engliſh in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, they thought it not amiſs to followv them into Britain alſo, making a Diſcovery of ſome part of the Coaſts thereof vvith three Ships only, Anno, 787, being the firſt yeer of Bithric (the Father of Egbert) King of the Weſt-Saxons. Which having done, and prepared themſelves for the undertaking, in the time of Egbert they invaded Northumberland, the Iſle of Shepey in Kent, and the Coaſts of Wales; not without much difficulty driven out by him. In the Reign of the three Kings ſucceeding, having vanquiſhed the Northumbrians, Eaſt-Angles, and a part of the Mercians, they erected in thoſe kingdoms many petit Tyrannies: By Alfred firſt ſtopped in their Career; by Edward the Elder outed of the Eaſt-Angles, and by Athelſtan of Northumberland alſo; the Danes for ſome time after being ſubject to the Engliſh Government, mixing in mariages and alliance, and incorporate with them. By the valour and good Fortune of Swain their King, they recovered their power again in England; and in the perſon of Canutus obtained the kingdom: who having impolitickly ſent back his Danes into their Countries (as if a kingdom got by force could be held by favour) opened a way to their execluſion from the Crown, which hapned within ſeven yeers after his deceaſe. Which ſaid, we come to the Succeſſions of

The Kings of England of the Saxon Race.

819. 1 Egbert, the laſt King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the firſt of England. 18.
837. 2 Ethelwolf, the Eldeſt Sonne of Egbert. 20.
857. 3 Ethelbald, the Eldeſt Sonne of Ethelwolf. 1.
858. 4 Ethelbert, the Brother of Ethelbald. 5.
863. 5 Ethefred, the Brother of the two former Kings, the third Sonne of Ethelwolf, and as much moleſted by the Danes, as his Brethren were. 10.
873. 6 Alfride, the fourth Sonne of Ethelwolf, who totally united the Saxon Heptarchie into one Eſtate; vanquiſhed the Danes, whom he made ſubject to his commands though he could not expell them; he divided England into ſhires, and reſtored the Vniverſity of Oxon.
900. 7 Edward, ſurnamed the Elder, the Sonne of Alfride, who recovered the Eaſt-Angles from the power of the Danes, whom he ſhut up in Northumberland. 24.
924. 8 Athelſtan, the Sonne of Edward, who ſubdued the Britans of Cumberland, and Cornwall; and compelled the Danes to ſubmit themſelves to the Engliſh Government. In his time lived S. Guy of Warwick. 16.
940. 9 Edmund, the Brother of Athelſtan, by whom the Danes of Northumberland were brought under under obedience; and the kingdom of the Britans in Cumberland utterly ſubverted. England.

946. 10 Edred, the Brother of Edmund and Athelſtan, ſo fortunate againſt the Danes, that he compelled them to be chriſtned. 9.

955. 11 Edwy, the Sonne of Edmund.

959. 12 Edgar, the Brother of Edwy, ſurnamed the Peaceable, the moſt abſolute Monarch of England ſince the time of the Saxons; by whom the tribute of money impoſed by Athelſtan on the Welch was exchanged into a tribute of Wolves. 16.

975. 13 Edward II. Sonne of Edgar, treacherouſly murdered by his Stepdame, to make way for Ethelred her Sonne, hence ſurnamed the Martyr. 3.

978. 14 Ethelred, the younger Sonne of Edgar, and half Brother of Edward, enjoyed the Crown unquietly which he got unjuſtly. Oppreſſed and broken by the Danes, he was fain to buy his peace of them at the yeerly tribute of 10000 pounds, inhanced to 48000 pounds within ſhort time after; which monies were raiſed upon the ſubjects, by the name of Dunegelt. Weary of theſe exactions, he plotted warily with his Subjects to kill all the Danes, as they ſlept in their beds; which accordingly was put in execution on S. Brices night, Novemb. 12. Anno 1012. To revenge this out-rage and diſhonour, Swaine King of Denmark, with a fayl of 350 ſhips, came into England; the fear whereof compelled Ethelred, a weak and impuiſſant Prince, to fly into Normandy, leaving his poor Subjects to the mercy of the Daniſh Tyrant; who miſerably plagued them till his death. To whom ſucceeded his Sonne Cnute (Canutus) a more temperate Prince, who maugre Ethelred now returned, or his Sonne Edmund Ironſide, a moſt valiant King, did in the end poſſeſs himſelf of the whole Kingdom.

1016 15 Edmund II. ſurnamed Ironſide, having in vain attempted to recover his Kingdom; at laſt divided it with Canutus: not long after which he was treacherouſly and baſely murdered by Edward, ſurnamed the Out-Law, his Eldeſt Sonne; he was Grand-father of Edgar Athelings, and of Margaret, Wife of Malcolm the third King of the Scots.

The Daniſh Kings.

1017. 1 Canutus, King of Denmark and Norwey, after the death of Edmund the 2d, ſole King of England. 20.

1037. 2 Harald, the baſe Sonne of Canutus.

3 Hardy-Cnute, the lawfull Sonne of Canutus, by Emma the Widow of Ethelred the 2d, and Mother of Edward, ſurnamed the Confeſſor; the laſt King of the Danes in England. After whoſe death, that People having tyrannized in England for the ſpace of 255 yeers (of which they had Reigned only 26) were utterly expelled the Countrey, or paſſed in the Accompt of Engliſh; Edward the Confeſſor, the youngeſt Sonne of Ethelred, being advanced unto the Throne, by the power and practices of his Mother Emma, and the abſence of the Children of Edmund Ironſide his Elder Brother.

Now concerning the Danes abiding here, and going hence, as they did, I obſerve three cuſtoms yet in uſe amongſt us. Firſt, each Engliſh houſe maintained one Dane, who living idly like the Drone among the Bees, had the benefit of all their labour, and was by them called Lord Dane; and even now when we ſee an idle Fellow, we call him a Lordane. 2 The Danes uſed when the Engliſh drank, to ſtab them, or cut their throats: to avoid which villany, the party then drinking, requeſted ſome of the next unto him, to be his ſurety or pledge, whilſt he paid nature her due: and hence have we our uſuall Cuſtom of pledging one another. 3 The old Romans at the expulſion of their Kings annually ſolemnized the Fugalia: according to which pattern the joyfull Engliſh having cleared the Countrey of the Danes, inſtituted the annuall ſports of Hock-tide; the word in their old tongue, the Saxon, importing the time of ſcorning or triumphing. This ſolemnity conſiſteth in the merry meetings of the Neighbours in thoſe dayes, during which the Feſtivall laſted, and was celebrated by the younger ſort of both ſexes, with all manner of exerciſes, and paſtimes in the ſtreets, even as Shrovetide yet is. But now time hath ſo corrupted it, that the name excepted, there remaineth no ſign of the firſt Inſtitution.

The Saxons reinthroned.

A. Ch.

1046. 16 Edward III. ſurnamed the Confeſſor, half Brother both to Edmund Ironſide, and Hardy-Cnute the Dane, ſucceeded in the Realm of England. This King collected out of the Daniſh, Saxon, and Mercian Laws, one univerſall and generall Law; whence our Common Law is thought to have had its Original: which may be true of the written Laws, not of the cuſtomary and unwritten Laws; theſe being certainly more antient. He was in his life of that Holineſs, that he received power from above to cure many Diſeaſes; amongſt others the ſwelling of the throat, called by us the Kings Evill: a Prerogative that continueth Hereditary to his Succeſſors of England. Finally, after his death, he was Canonized for a Saint; and dyed having Reigned 24 yeers.

1066 17 Harald, a Sonne to Earl Godwin, was choſen King in the nonage of Edgar Atheling, Grand-child to Edmund Ironſide, the true Heir of the kingdom. But William Duke

England. of Normandy, (of which people we have ſpoke already when we were in France, and ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark, as the laſt Actors on the Theatre or Stage of England: This William I ſay) pretending a Donation from Edward the Confeſſor invaded England, ſlew Harald, and with him 66654 of his Engliſh Souldiers; poſſeſſed himſelf of the kingdom; uſing ſuch Policie in his new Conqueſt, that he utterly diſheartned the Engliſh from hopes of better Fortune. From him beginneth the new Accompt of the Kings of England, thoſe of the former Line being no longer reckoned in the computation of the firſt, ſecond, or third, &c.

The Norman Kings.

1067. 1 William, ſurnamed the Conqueror, after the vanquiſhment and death of Harald, acknowledged and Crowned King, altered the antient Lawes of England, and eſtabliſhed thoſe of Normandy in place thereof; governing the people abſolutely by the povver of the Sword, and giving a great part of their Lands to his former Followvers, and ſuch as vvere ingaged in the Action vvith him, from vvhom moſt of our antient Families doe derive themſelves; thoſe Lands to be holden in Knights-ſervice, vvhich drevv along vvith it the Wardſhip of the Heir in Minority, as a charge laid upon the Land.

1089. 2 William II. ſurnamed Rufus, ſecond Sonne to the Conqueror, ſucceded by the appointment of his Father, and was crowned King; ſlain afterwards in the New Foreſt, by an Arrow levelled at a Deer.

1102. 3 Henry, for his learning ſurnamed Beau-clerk, in the abſence of his Brother Robert (in the Holy-Land Wars) entred on the Kingdom, and afterwards took from him alſo the Dukedom of Normandie, and put out his eyes. Deprived of all his male-iſſue, he left one only Daughter whoſe name was Maud, firſt maried to the Emperour Henry the fift, and after to Geofrie Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine. 34.

1136. 4 Stephen, ſecond Sonne of Stephen Earl of Champagne and Blais, and of Alice Daughter to the Conqueror, ſucceeded; who to purchaſe the peoples love, releaſed the tribute called Dane-gelt: he ſpent moſt of his reign in War againſt Maud the Empreſs. 19.

The Saxon blood reſtored.

1155. 5 Henry II. Sonne to Maud the Empreſs, Daughter to Henry the firſt, and to Maud Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland, and Margaret, Siſter to Edgar Atheling; reſtored the Saxon blood to the Crown of England. His Father was Geofrie Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; which Provinces he added to the Engliſh Empire, as alſo the Dutchie of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Poiſtou, by Eleanor his Wife; and a great part of Ireland by conqueſt. Happy in all things, the unnaturall rebellions of his Sonnes excepted. 34.

1189. 6 Richard, the Sonne of Henry, ſurnamed Cœur de Lyon, warred in the Holy-Land, overcame the Turks, whom he had almoſt driven out of Syria; took the Iſle of Cyprus; and after many worthy atchievments, returning homewards to defend Normandy and Aquitain againſt the French, was by Tempeſt caſt upon Dalmatia, and travelling thorough the Dominions of the Duke of Auſtria was taken Priſoner, put to a grievous ranſom, and after his return ſlain at the ſiege of Chaluz in the Province of Limoſin. 12.

1201. 7 Iohn, Brother of Richard, an unhappy Prince, and one that could expect no better, as being an unnaturall Sonne to his Father, and an undutifull Subject to his Brother. Diſtreſſed for a great part of his reign by Wars with his Barons, outed of all Normandie, Aquitain, and Anjou, by the power of the French; to whom alſo he was likely to have loſt the Realm of England. Finally, after a baſe ſubmiſſion of himſelf and his kingdom to the Popes Legat, he is ſaid to have been poyſoned at Swinſtede Abbey. 17.

1218. 8 Henry III. Sonne of Iohn, expelled the invading French out of England, and by a Compoſition with King Lewis the 9th, was reſtored unto the Dukedom of Guyenne, held by his Succeſſors till the reign of K. Henry the ſixt. Exhauſted by the Pope, and oppreſſed a long time by his factious and unruly Barons: but at laſt victorious. 56.

1274. 9 Edward, the Sonne of Henry, awed France, ſubdued Wales, brought Scotland into ſubjection; of whoſe King and Nobility he received homage. 34.

1308. 10 Edward II. Sonne of Edward the firſt, a diſſolute Prince, hated of the Nobles, and contemned by the vulgar for his immeaſurable love to Pierce Gaveſton, and the Spencers, was twice ſhamefully beaten by the Scots; and being depoſed by a ſtrong Faction raiſed againſt him by his Queen, and Roger Lord Mortimer, was barbarouſly murdered in Barkley Caſtle. 19.

1327. 11 Ed-

1327. 11 Edward III. Sonne of Edward the 2d, a moſt vertuous and valorous Prince, brought the Scots to obedience, overthrew the French in two great Battails, took the Town of Callice, and many fair Poſſeſſions in that Kingdom. 50. England.

1377. 12 Richard II. another of our unfortunate Kings, loſt many of his Peeces in France, and at laſt being over-awed by his two great Vncles of Lancaſter and Gloceſter, and taken Priſoner by his Coſin, the Duke of Hereford, he was forced to reſign his Crown, and afterwards was murdered at Pomfret Caſtle.

The Lancaſtrian Line.

1399. 13 Henry IV. Sonne to Iohn of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter, the fourth Sonne to Edward the 3d, was by the power of the Sword, but with the conſent of the people, ſetled in the Throne, and ſpent his whole Reign in ſuppreſſing home-bred Rebellions. 15.

1414. 14. Henry V. the mirrour of Magnificence, and Pattern of true vertue, purſued the Title of France, and won it, being ordained Heir apparent to the French Crown, but lived not to poſſeſſe it. 9.

1423. 15 Henry VI. a pious, but unfortunate Prince, was crowned K. of France in Paris; which he held during the life of his Vncle Iohn of Bedford, and Humphrey of Gloceſter, after whoſe deaths, he not only loſt France to the French, but England and his life, to the Yorkiſh Faction. 38.

The Yorkiſh Line.

1484. 17 Edward V. his Sonne, was before his Coronation murdered by his Vncle Richard, in the Tower of London.

1484. 18 Richard III. Brother of Edward the 4th, a moſt wicked and tyrannicall Prince, to make way unto the Diadem, murdered King Henry the 6th, and Prince Edward his Sonne, 3. George Duke of Clarence, his Brother, 4 Haſtings, a faithfull ſervant to King Edward, 5 Rivers, Vaughan, and Grey, the Queens kindred, 6 Edward the 5th his Soveraign, with his young Couſin Richard, 7 Henry Duke of Buckingham his dear Friend, and greateſt Coadjutor in theſe his ungodly Practices, and his Wife Anne; ſo to make way to an inceſtuous mariage with his Neece Elizabeth, the Eldeſt Daughter of Edward the 4th, but before the ſolemnity he was ſlain at Boſworth. 3.

The Vnion of the Families.

1487 19 Henry VII. Earl of Richmund, Heir to the Houſe of Lancaſter, (as Sonne of Margaret, Daughter of Iohn Duke of Somerſet, Sonne of Iohn Earl of Somerſet, Sonne of Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter) after the overthrow of Richard, maried Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir to Edward 4th, uniting by that mariage the divided Families. He was alſo extracted from the Britiſh and French Royall blood, as being Sonne to Edmund Tudor Earl of Richmund, Sonne to Owen Tudor (deſcended from Cadwalladar, the laſt of the Britans) and Katharine of France, Widdow of Henry the 5th. His whole wars was againſt home-bred Rebels; the chief being Lambert, and the Followers and Fautors of Perken Warbeck. 23.

1509. 20 Henry VIII. Heir to both Families, between which were fought for the Diadem, 17 pitched Feilds; in which periſhed 8 Kings and Princes 40 Dukes, Marqueſſes, and Earls, 200000 of the common people, beſides Barons, and Gentlemen. This King baniſhed the uſurped Supremacie of the Popes, and began the Reformation of Religion; though formerly he had writ a Book againſt Luther, for which the Pope gave him the honourable Title of The Defender of the Faith, afterwards made Hereditarie by Act of Parliament to his Heirs, and Succeſſors. A Prince of great vices, but of greater vertues. 38.

1547. 21 Edward VI. the Sonne of Henry the 8th by Iane Seymour his 3d Wife; out of whoſe womb he was fain to be cut, to come into the World, as Caſar was: but he had neither Caſars Fortune, nor length of life; dying very young, and his affairs conducted by divided

England. divided Counſels; though otherwiſe of great hopes, and of a pregnancie of judgement above his yeers. 6.

1553. 22 Mary, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th by Katharine of Spain, the Widow of his Brother Arthur, reſtored the Popes Supremacy baniſhed by her Father, with the whole maſs of Popery aboliſhed in her Brothers Reign. To which Religion ſo addicted, that in the ſhort time of her Reign there was more blood ſhed, than in the whole 44 yeers of her Siſter Elizabeth. In the laſt yeer of her Reign ſhe loſt Calice to the French, which proved the loſs of her life alſo, as it was ſuppoſed. 5.

1558. 23 Elizabeth, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th by the Ladie Anne Bullein his ſecond Wife, a moſt gracious and Heroick Princeſs, was by the divine providence of God preſerved from the practices of her Enemies in her Siſters reign, to ſway the Scepter of the kingdom. She purſued the Reformation of Religion begun in the times of her Father and Brother; refined the corrupt coin brought in by her Father; furniſhed the Royall Navy with all kind of warlike Ammunitions; encreaſed the Revenue of the Univerſities by the Statute of Proviſions; ſuccoured the Scots againſt the French, the French Proteſtants againſt the Papiſts, and both againſt the Spaniard: defended the Netherlands againſt the attempts of Spain; commanded the whole Ocean; entred League with the Moſcovite; and was famous for her prudence and government amongſt the Turks, Perſians and Tartars, yea her very Enemies. Finally ſhe died in the 45 yeer of her reign, and the 70th of her life, on the 24th of March, Anno 1602. according to the computation of the Church of England, which beginneth the new yeer with the Feaſt of the Annunciation. To whom ſucceeded IAMES the ſixt, King of the Scots, with the joy of all men, as the next undoubted heir of the Crown. Of whom we ſhall ſay more when we come to ſpeak of the Monarchs of Britain; of which he was the firſt ſince the fall of the Roman Empire, and ſuch more properly than the greateſt of all thoſe Emperors had been before; None of them having all the North parts of Britain it ſelf, or any part of Ireland at all, nor many of the Iſles adjoyning, under their Dominion.

In the mean time to look on England as a State diſtinct, we will conſider it and the Kings thereof with reference to Reputation abroad, and power at home; with the Revenues, Armes, and Military Orders of it, as in other places. And firſt for Reputation, when all Chriſtendom in the Councill of Conſtance, was divided into Nations, Anglicana Natio was one of the Principall, and not Subaltern; and had its vote of equall balance with the Nations of Franco or Italy, in all affairs concerning the doctrine, diſcipline, and peace of the Church, which were there debated. And for the place due to the Kings hereof in thoſe Generall Councils, and the rank they held among other Chriſtian Princes; I find that the Emperor of Germany was accounted Major filius Eccleſiæ; the King of France, Minor filius; and the King of England, Filius tertius, & adoptivus. The King of France in Generall Councils, had place next the Emperor, on his right hand; the King of England on his left hand; and the King of Scotland, next before Caſtile. Now indeed the King of Spain being ſo much improved, is the dearly beloved Sonne of the Church; and arrogateth to himſelf the place above all other Princes: but in the time of Pope Iulius, the controverſie ariſing between the Ambaſſadors of the two Princes for precedencie; the Pope adjudged it to belong of right unto England. And Pope Pius the fourth, upon the like controverſie, ariſing between the Ambaſſadors of France and Spain, adjudged the precedencie to the French.

Touching the Souldierie of England, and their moſt notable atchievements, both by Sea and Land, ſufficient hath been ſaid already. What Forces the Kings hereof have been able to raiſe, and may command for preſent ſervice, will beſt be ſeen by the action of King Henry the 8th at Fuſen, the Armies of Queen Elizabeth in 88. and the numbers of the trained Bands of the ſeverall Counties. Firſt, for the Action of King Henry the 8th, he had in his Avantguard 12000. Foot, and 500 Light Horſe in new Jackets with red Guards; in the Rere-ward a like number both of Hore and Foot; and in the main Battail 20000 Foot and 2000 Horſe, all in Red Jackets and yellow Guards: the whole number 44000 Foot, and 3000 Horſe. They drew after them 100 great Peeces, beſides ſmall ones; and for conveyance of their Ordinance, Baggage, and other neceſſaries, no fewer than 25000 Draught-horſes, beſides other cariages. In the next place, for 88. the Queen diſperſed in ſeverall places on the Southern Coaſts of the Kingdom, to hinder the landing of the Enemy 25000 Souldiers of both ſorts; at Tilbury for the defence of the Citie of London, under the command of the Earl of Leiceſter, 22000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe; and for the Guard of her own perſon under the Lord Hunſdon 34000 Foot, & 2000 Horſe: in all, the number of 84000 men, beſides thoſe goodly Troops which the Nobility and Gentry did preſent her with at their own proper charges. And as for the trained Bands, the number of both ſorts diſciplined and muſtered to be ready upon all occaſions, in the 8th yeer of King James, (for I have ſince ſeen no Muſter-Roll of them) amounted, to 96150 able men, 144300 Armed men, 935 Demilances, 677 Light-Horſe, and 16545 Pioneers; beſides what was required of Peers and Prelates, ſuppoſed to amount to 20000 Armed men, and 4000 Light Horſe. And for their ſtrength at Sea, beſides the Navy Royall conſiſting of about 30 gallant Ships, beſides the leſſer Veſſels; the beſt and braveſt that any Prince in Chriſtendom can boaſt of, as his own propriety: there are ſuch ſtore of Colliers and Merchants ſhips, fit for any ſervice, that in the yeer 88 aforeſaid, the Queen had 100 Sayl of good Ships to oppoſe the Spaniard, and 20 more to wait upon the motions of the Duke of Parma: And in the yeer 1597 ſhe ſet out for the Iland Voyage no fewer than 120 Sayl of all ſorts, of which 60 were men of war.

As

As for the Revenues of this Kingdom, Boterus reckoned them in the time of King Henry the 7th, to be no more than 400000 Crowns per Annum; but grants, that afterward they were improved to a million more by King Henry the 8th, the diſſolution of Monaſteries, and the benefit redounding from the Court of Wards, making that improvement. And to ſay truth, the Vniverſall diſſolution of Religious Houſes of all ſorts, did for the time ſo mightily increaſe his annuall Income, that he was fain to erect two new Courts (the Court of Augmentation, and the Court of Surveyours) for the better managing of the ſame. But theſe Additions being waſted by his own exorbitant expences, and the ſeverall Alienations made by King Edward the ſixth; thoſe Courts of new Erection were diſſolved again; and the Revenue fell ſo ſhort of its former height, that in the 12 yeer of Queen Elizabeth, the profits of the Crown (beſides the Court of Wards, and the Dutchie of Lancaſter) came to no more than to 188197.l. 4s. Of which 110612.l. 13.s. went out that yeer upon the Navie charge of Houſhold, and other neceſſary Aſſignments: Since which time the great increaſe of trading both at home and abroad, and the great glut of money in all parts of the World, hath added very much to the Intrada: The certaintie whereof as I doe not know, ſo neither will I aim at it by uncertain Hear-ſay. England.

The Arms of the Realm of England, are Mars, 3 Lions paſſant Gardant, Sol. The reaſon why theſe Arms quartered with the French, took the ſecond place, are 1 becauſe that France at the time of the firſt quartering of them, was the larger and more famous kingdom. 2 That the French ſeeing the honour done to their Arms, might more eaſily be induced to have acknowledged the Enbliſh Title. 3 Becauſe the Engliſh Arms were compounded of the Lion of Aquitaine, and the two Lions of Normandy, being both French Dutchies.

The principall Orders of Knight-hood are, and were, 1 of the Round Table, inſtituted by Arthur King of the Britans, and one of the Worlds nine Worthies. It conſiſted of 150 Knights, whoſe names are recorded in the Hiſtory of King Arthur, there where Sir Vre, a wounded Knight, came to be cured of his hurts: it being his Fate, that only the beſt Knight of the Order ſhould be his Chirurgion. The Arms of moſt of theſe, with their ſeveral Blazons (I know not on how good autoritie) we find in Bara the French Herald: The principall of them were Sir Lancelot, Sir Triſtrum, Sir Lamorock, Sir Gawin, &c. all placed at one Round Table, to avoid quarrels about priority and place. The Round Table hanging in the great Hall at Wincheſter, is falſely called Arthurs Round-Table, it being not of ſufficient Antiquity, and containing but 24 Seats. Of theſe Knights there are reported many fabulous Stories. They ended with their Founder, and are feigned by that Lucian of France, Rablaes, to be the Ferry-men of Hell; and that their pay is a piece of mouldy bread, and a phillop on the noſe.

2 Of S. George, called commonly the Garter, inſtituted by King Edward the third, to increaſe vertue and valour in the hearts of his Nobility; or, as ſome will, in honour of the Counteſs of Salisburies Garter, of which Lady, the King formerly had been inamoured. But this I take to be a vain and idle Romance, derogatory both to the Founder and the Order; firſt publiſhed by Polidore Virgil a ſtranger to the Affairs of England, and by him taken up on no better ground than fama vulgi, the tradition of the common people, too trifling a Foundation for ſo great a building, Common bruit, being ſo infamous an Hiſtorian, that wiſe men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it: But for this fame or common bruit, the vanity and improbabilities thereof have been elſewhere canvaſſed. Suffice it to obſerve in this time and place, that the Garter was given unto this Order, in teſtimony of that Bond of Love and Affection wherewith the Knights or Fellowes of it were to be bound ſeverally unto one another, and all of them joyntly to the King as the Soveraign of it. So ſaith the Regiſter of the Order, (in which occurreth not one word of the Ladies Garter) affirming that King Edward did ſo fit the habit into that deſign, Vt omnia ad amicitiam & concordiam tendere nemo non intelligat: But to return unto the Order, there are of it 26. Knights, of which the Kings of England are Soveraignes: and is ſo much deſired for its excellencie, that 8 Emperors, 21 forein Kings, 22 forein Dukes and Princes, beſides divers Noble-men of other Countries have been Fellowes of it. The Enſign is a blew Garter, buckled on the left leg, on which theſe words are imbroydered, viz. Honi ſoit qui mal y penſe. About their necks they wear a blew Ribband, at the end of which hangeth the Image of S. George; upon whoſe day the Inſtallations of the new Knights are commonly celebrated.

3 Of the Bath, brought firſt into England 1399, by Henry the fourth. They are created at the Coronation of Kings and Queens, and the Inſtallation of the Princes of Wales: their duty to defend true Religion, Widows, Maids, Orphans, and to maintain the Kings Rights. The Knights hereof diſtinguiſhed by a Red Ribband, which they wear ordinarily about their necks, to difference them from Knights Batchelors, of whom they have in all places the Precedencie; unleſs they be alſo the Sonnes of Noble-men, to whom their birth gives it before all Orders.

4 Of Baronets, an Order inſtituted by King Iames in the 9th yeer of his Reign, for the furtherance of the Plantation of Vlſter. They have Precedency of the Knights of the Bath, but not of thoſe of the Garter, nor of the younger Sonnes of the Nobility. But this being Hereditarie not perſonall, and rather civill than militarie, is not ſo properly to be rancked amongſt Orders of Knight-hood.

There were in England, at, and ſince the time of the Reformation,
Arch-Biſhops 2. Biſhops 20.

WALES.

WALES is bounded on all ſides with the Sea, except towards England, on the Eaſt; from which ſeparated by the River Dee, and a Line drawn to the River Wie. Antiently it extended Eaſtwards to the River Severn, till by the puiſſance of Offa, the great King of the Mercians, the Welch or Britans were driven out the plain Countries beyond that River, and forced to betake themſelves to the Mountains: where he cauſed them to be ſhut up and divided from England by an huge Dich, called in Welch, Clawdh Offa, i. e. Offa's Dike: which beginning at the influx of the Wie into the Severn, not far from Chepſtow, extendeth 84 miles in length, even as far as Cheſter, where the Dee is mingled with the Sea. Concerning which Ditch, there was a Law made by Harald, That if any Welchman was found with a Weapon on this ſide of it, he ſhould have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

The name of Wales ſome derive from Idwallo, the Sonne of Cadwallader, who with the ſmall remainder of his Britiſh Subjects, made good the faſtneſſes of this Countrie, and was the firſt who had the title of King of Wales. Others conceive that the name of Welch and Wales was given them by the Saxons: who having poſſeſſed themſelves of all the reſt of the Countrie, called the Britans who lived here by the name of Walſh, which in their Language ſignifieth as much as Aliens, becauſe they differed from them both in Lawes and Language; which is the generall Opinion. Moſt probable it is, that as the Britans derive their Pedigree from the Galls, (as before was proved) ſo they might ſtill retain the name, and were called Walliſh by the Saxons, inſtead of Galliſh: the Saxons uſing in moſt words W. for G. as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and the like. And this to be believed the rather, becauſe the Frenchmen to this day, call the Countrey Galles; and the Eldeſt Sonne of England, Le Prince de Galles: as alſo that the Dutch or Germans (of whom the Saxons are a part) doe call ſuch Nations as inhabit on the skirts of France by the name of Wallons.

The antient Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, before it had the name of Wales, were the Silures, poſſeſſing the Counties of Hereford, Brecknock, Radnor, Monmouth and Glamorgan, all Gloceſterſhire beyond the Severn, and the South parts of Worceſterſhire on the ſame ſide alſo; their chief Towns Ariconium, now Hereford (not reckoned ſince the time of Offa as a part of Wales;) Balleum, now Buelth in Brecknock; Gobannium, now Abergevenny in Monmouth; Magni, now New Radnor in the Countie ſo named; and Bovium, now Boverton in Glamorgan. 2 The Dimetæ, poſſeſſing Cardigan, Caermarthen, and Pembrokeſhires, whoſe chief Towns were, Loventium, now New Caſtle in Caermarthen; Maridunum, or Caermarthen it ſelf, and Octopitæ, where now ſtands S. Davids, by the Welch called Menew, whence that Biſhop hath the name of Menevenſis in Latine. 3 The Ordovices, inhabiting the Counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, Angleſey, Denbigh, Flint, and Montgomery; with the North part of Worceſterſhire beyond the Severn, and all Shropſhire, on the ſame ſide of the River. Their chief Towns were, Segontium, now Caer Seont in Carnarvonſhire; Conovium, now Conwey in the ſame County; Bonium, where after ſtood the famous Monaſtery of Banchor in Flintſhire; and Mediolanium, now Llanvillin in the County of Montgomerie. By theſe three Nations was all that tract poſſeſſed which lyeth on the other ſide of the Severn, a very ſtout and hardie people, and ſo impatient of the yoke, that two of the three Legions which the Romans kept conſtantly in Britain, as before is ſaid, were planted in and neer theſe people, the better to contein them in due obedience: that is to ſay, the ſecond Legion at Caer Leon upon Uſk, of which more anon; and the twentieth at Deuvana, where now ſtands Weſt-Cheſter. So difficult a thing it was to make this Nation ſubject to the power of Rome; and no leſs difficult to bring them under the command of the Saxons: whom they withſtood, when all the reſt of Britain had been conquered by them; and lived to ſee their Victors overcome by the Normans, before themſelves had yielded to a forrain yoke.

The Chriſtian Faith planted amongſt the Britans in the time of Lucius, they ſtill retained, when all the reſidue of the Iland had relapſed to Paganiſm: and they retained it not in ſecret, as afraid to own it, but in a well-conſtituted Church. Inſomuch that Auguſtine the Monk, when he firſt preached the Goſpell to the Engliſh Saxons, found here no fewer than ſeven Biſhops, that is to ſay, Herefordenſis, Tavenſis, Paternenſis, Banchorenſis, Elwienſis, Wiccienſis, and Morganenſis (or rather Menevenſis:) all which, excepting onely Paternenſis, doe ſtill remain amongſt us, though in other names, Hereford and Worceſter (Wiccienſis) reckoned now in England; S. Davids or Menevenſis, Tavenſis or Landaff, Bangor, and Elwyenſis or S. Aſaph, in Wales, according to the preſent boundaries and limits of it. And as they did retain the Faith, ſo they retained it after the tradition of their Predeceſſors, neither ſubmitting unto Auguſtine, as Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor to the Pope from whom he came, as Oecumenicall, or chief Paſtor of the Church of Chriſt; nor receiving any new doctrines or traditions from them; but ſtanding on thoſe principles of Liberty and Religion which they were poſſeſſed of, till all the world almoſt had yeelded to that powerfull See. Not manumitted from the vaſſalage and thraldom to it, till they embraced the Reformation on of the Church of England, in Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Worſhip: the Liturgie whereof was by the command of Queen Elizabeth tranſlated into the Welch or Britiſh; as the Bible alſo was by vertue of an Act of Parliament in the fift of that Queen; the care thereof committed to the Biſhop of Hereford, and the four Biſhops of Wales. But becauſe the Bible then ſet forth was onely in the large Church volume; it was in the beginning of the Reign of King Charles reduced to a more portable Bulk, at the coſt and charge of my Couſin Mr. Rowland Heylyn, one of the Aldermen of London, who alſo cauſed the book called The Practice of Pietie to be printed in that Language for the inſtruction of the People; and a Welch or Britiſh Dictionarie to be made and publiſhed for the underſtanding of the Language. Wales.

But to return unto the Church, and affairs thereof, for the better ordering of the ſame, it hath been long agoe divided into four Dioceſes (beſides that of Hereford) for the exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtick Diſcipline, thoſe Dioceſes ſubdivided into 9 Archdeaconries, as before in England: all ſubject heretofore to their own Primate or Archbiſhop, reſiding in the City of Iſca Silurum, the Metropolis of the Province of Britannia Secunda; called by the VVelch or Britans, Caer-Leon, or the Citie of the Legion, from the ſecond Legion fixt there for defence of the Province; and Caer-Leon upon Uſk, becauſe ſituate on the River ſo named. But this City being too much expoſed to the fury of the Saxons, the Archiepiſcopall See was tranſlated to Menew, ſtanding on a Promontorie in the extreme Angle of Pembrokeſhire, by David then Archbiſhop thereof, and neer of kin to Arthur that renowned King of the Britans: from whom, in tract of time, the name of Menew being left off, the See and Citie came to be called S. Davids. From David unto Samſon, the 26 Archbiſhop of the VVelch, (being above 400 yeers) did they hold this dignity: but then the Peſtilence extremely raging in theſe parts, Archbiſh. Samſon carried with him the Epiſcopall Pall, and therewith the dignity it ſelf, to Dole in Bretagne. After which time we hear of no Archbiſhops in Wales in name and title, though the power proper thereunto ſtill remained amongſt them: the VVelch Biſhops acknowledging no other Primate, nor receiving conſecration from any other hands than their own Biſhop of S. Davids, till Biſhop Bernard was compelled to ſubmit himſelf to the power and juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the time of King Henry the firſt.

But its time to look upon the face of the Country as it ſtands at the preſent, which we find mountainous and barren; not able to maintain its people but by helps elſewhere. To make amends for which defect there were ſome Silver mines diſcovered in it not long ſince, by Sir Hugh Middleton, Knight and Baronet, not onely to the great honour of his own Countrie, but to the profit and renown of the whole Iland of Great Britain. Their chief commodities are courſe Clothes, entituled commonly by the name of Welch Freeze, and Cottons, which Merchandiſe was heretofore brought to Oſweſtre (the furtheſt Town of Shropſhire) as the common Emporie; and there bought by the Merchants of Shrewſbury. But the Welch coveting to draw the Staple more into their own Countrey, occaſioned the Merchant to hold off from buying their commodities: till in the end the Merchant got the better of them, and inforced them to ſettle the whole trade at Shrewſbury, where it ſtill continueth.

To ſpeak of Mountains in a Country which is wholly mountainous, were a thing unneceſſary: yet of moſt note are thoſe of 1 Snowdon, 2 Brecheu, 3 Rarduvaure, and 4 Plinlimmon. Not much obſervable but for their vaſt height, and thoſe many notable Rivers which iſſue from them. The principall whereof are, 1 Dee, in Latine called Deva, ariſing out of Rarduvaure hils in Merionethſhire, and running into the Sea not far from Cheſter. Over this River Edgar King of England was rowed triumphantly in his Barge, by eight inferiour Kings, Vaſſals and Tributaries to him, that is to ſay, Kenneth King of the Scots, Malcolm King of Cumberland, Mac-cuis King of the Iſles, Duſwall, Gryffith, Howel, Iago, and Indethel, Princes or Kings of Wales: uſing theſe words to ſuch as attended on him, that then his Succeſſors might call themſelves Kings of England, when they did the like. This was in the yeer 973, and the laſt of his reigne. 2 Wie, in Latine called Vaga, ariſing from Plinlimmon hils, and emptying it ſelf into the Severn at Chepſtow. More in the heart of the Countrie (for theſe are but borderers for the greateſt part of their courſe) 3 Conwy, which riſing in Merionethſhire, and dividing the Counties of Denbigh and Carnarvon, mingleth with the Sea at Abur Conwey. 4 Tyvie, which riſing in Montgomeryſhire, and paſſing between the Counties of Cardigan, Pembroke, and Carmarthen, runneth into the Sea a little below Cardigan. 5 Chedlaydy, which running quite thorow Pembrokeſhire, emptieth it ſelf into Milford Haven, one of the moſt capacious and ſafeſt havens, not of England onely, but of all the world.

The men are of a faithfull carriage towards all men, eſpecially towards one another in a ſtrange Countrie, and towards ſtrangers in their own. Of a temper queſtionleſs much inclining to choler, as being ſubject to the paſsion by Ariſtotle called Ακροχολια, by which men are quickly moved to anger, and as ſoon appeaſed: of all angers the beſt and nobleſt. Their Language (the old Britiſh) hath the leaſt commixture of forein words of any in Europe, and by reaſon of its many Conſonants and gutturall Letters, is not ſo pleaſing as ſome others in the Pronunciation. A Language not much ſtudied by thoſe of other Nations, in regard that ſuch of the Inhabitants who have addicted themſelves to learning, have rather choſe to expreſs themſelves in the Latine or Engliſh tongues, than that of their own Native Countrie: The principall of which (not to ſay any thing of Merlin (the Tages of the Welch or Britiſh) were 1 Gildas, for his great knowledge ſurnamed Sapiens; 2 Geofry of Monmouth, and 3 Giraldus Cambrenſis the Hiſtorians; and of later times, 4 William Morgan, the Tranſlator of the Bible into Welch, for which performance moſt

Wales, deservedly made Bishop of Landaff. 5 Sir John Price the Antiquary. 6 Owen the Epigrammatist, &c.

The whole Countrey (not taking the Counties of Shropshire and Monmouth into the reckoning) containing in it 12 Shires onely: of which, seven were set out by King Edward the first, that is to say Glamorgan, Pembroke, Carmarden, Cardigan, Merioneth, Anglesey, and Carnarvon. The other five, viz the Counties of Denbigh, Flint, Montgomery, Radnor and Brecknock, were after added out of the Marchlands by King Henry the 8th. These 12 Shires are again contracted or subdivided into 4 Circuits, for the administration of Iustice. Of which the first containeth the Counties of Montgomery, Flint, and Denbigh; the second those of Carnarvon, Anglesey, and Merioneth; the third those of Carmarden, Cardigan, and Pembroke; and the fourth those of Glamorgan, Brecknock, and Radnor.

In these 12 Shires are reckoned one Chase, 13 Forests, 36 Parks, 230 Rivers, and an hundred Bridges. They contain also 1016 Parishes, amongst which, four Cities, 55 Market-Towns, and 41 Castles of the old erection. The Cities small, poor, and inconsiderable. The Market Towns, those specially on the Marches and outparts of the Countrie, very fair and strong: as being not only built for commerce and trade, but fortified with Walls and Castles to keep in the Welch: and so employed, till the incorporating Wales with England took away all occasion of the old hostilities. And for the Castles in the In-lands, partly by the iniquity of time, which is Edax rerum, but chiefly by the policie of the Kings of England, who would not suffer any places of strength to remain in a Countrie almost inaccessible, and amongst men apt to take the advantage offered; the very ruines of them are now brought to ruine.

But to proceed more particularly, the four Cities (or Episcopall Sees) are 1 S. Davids, formerly the Metropolitan of Wales, situate on the Promontorie in Pembrokeshire, by the Antients called Octopitæ; in a safe place, and far enough from the Saxons, whom the Welch most feared; but incommodious enough for all the rest of the Clergie to repair unto it: and not so safe neither unto the Inhabitants of it, in respect of sundry other nations who have often spoyled and defaced it. For standing neer the Sea, it hath been frequently visited and spoyled, by the Danes, Norwegians, and other Pirats, insomuch that the Bishops were inforced to remove their dwelling to Caermarthen; which brought the City, (small enough before, when it was at the biggest) to the condition of a Village. 2 LLandaffe, upon the River Taffe, whence it took the name, LLan in the Welch or British signifying a Church; LLandaffe the Church upon the Taffe: the Bishops whereof derive their Lineall succession from those of Caer-Leon upon Usk, though the Primacie or Archbishops See were removed to Menew: A small Town now it is God wot, nothing to rank it for a City, but the Cathedrall Church and the Prebends houses. 3 St. Asaph, a small Town in Flintshire, so called from S. Asaph, the second Bishop hereof, left here by Kentigern a Scot, by whom the Cathedrall Church was founded about the year 560. Situate on the banks of the River Elwy, thence called LLan-Elwy by the Welch, the Bishop Elwyensis in some Latine Writers. 4 Bangor, upon the Menai, a branch of the Irish Sea, of no more beauty and renown than the other three, but onely for the Cathedrall founded here by the first Bishops, defaced by Owen Glendower, and afterwards reedified by Henry Dean, Bishop hereof, An. 1496.

Towns of chief note, (for these Cities have not much in them which is worth the noting) are, 1 Shrewsbury, counted now in England, but heretofore the seat of the Princes of Powysland, who had here their Palace: which being burnt in some of their broyls with England, is now converted into Gardens for the use of the Townsmen. The Town well traded and frequented by the Welch and English, the common Emporie of both; well built, and strongly situate on a rising ground, almost encompassed with the Severn, that part thereof which is not fenced with the River, being fortified with a very strong Castle, the work of Roger de Montgomery the first Earl hereof, An. 1067. Over the River for convenience of passage, it hath two Bridges, and but two, the one towards England, and the other called the Welch-bridge, which is towards Wales, built by Leoline, or LLewellen the first, one of the Princes of North-Wales: whose they conceive to be that Statua which is there standing on the Gate. Remarkable since the times of King Henry the sixt, for giving the title of Earl to the Noble Family of the Talbots: a Family of great honour, and as great an Estate, till the parcelling of the Lands betwixt the Daughters and Co-heirs of Gilbert Talbot, late Earl hereof; according to the ill custom of England, where many times the Estate goes to the Females, and the Honour (with nothing to mainiain it) to the next Heir Male. 2 Banchor, by Beda called Bancornaburg, a famous Monastery of the Britans; conteining above 2000 Monks, attending their devotions at the times appointed, at other times labouring for their livelihood; most cruelly and unmercifully slaughtered by the Saxons, at the instigation of Austin the first Archbishop of Canterbury, offended that they would not yeeld unto his autoritie. 3 Carnarvon, on the Menai beforementioned, not far from Bangor (the Monastery of Banchor being in Flintshire,) well walled, and fortified with a strong Castle, by King Edward the first, after his conquest of the Countrie; formerly much resorted to for the Chancery and Exchequer of the Princes of North-Wales. 4 Denbigh, well seated on the banks of the River Istrad, which from thence runnes into the Clwyd, the faireſt River of all those parts. A Town well traded and frequented, especially since it was made by King Henry the 8th the head-Town of a Countie: before which time of great resort, as being the head-Town of the Baronie of Denbigh, conceived to be one of the goodliest territories in England, having more Gentlemen holding of it than any other. 5 Mathravall, not far from Montgomery.

gomery, heretofore a fair and capacious Town, honoured with the Palace, and made the chief Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, thence called Kings of Matravall; now a poor village. 6 Caermarthen, Maridunum antiently, whence the modern name, the Britans adding Caer unto it: not called so from Caer-Merlin, or the Citie of Merlin, inchanted by the Lady of the Lake, in a deep Cave hereabouts, as old Fablers and Romances tels us. A fair large Town, beautified with a Collegiate Church, to which there was a purpose in the time of King Edward the 6th, of removing the Episcopall See from S. Davids. Not far off, on the top of an Hill, stands Dinevour Castle, the chief Seat of the Princes of South-Wales, thence called Kings of Dinevour; who had their Chancery and Exchequer in the Town of Caermarthen. 7 Haverford West, situate in the Chersonese or Demy-Iland of Pembroke-shire, by the Welch called Ross, by the English, Little England beyond Wales, by reason of the English tongue there spoken; a Town the best traded and frequented of all South Wales. 8 Milford, in the same County of Pembroke, famous for giving name to the most safe and capacious Haven in all the Iland, consisting of sundry Creeks, Bays, and Roads for Ships, which makes it capable of entertaining the greatest Navie; the landing place of Henry the 7th when he came for England. 9 Monmouth, situate at the mouth or influx of the River Munow (where it falleth into the Wie) whence it had the name. A Town belonging antiently to the House of Lancaster, the birth place of King Henry the fift, called Henry of Monmouth. That one particular enough to renown the place, and therefore we shall add no more. 10 Ludlow, a Town of great resort by reason of the Court and Councell of the Marches, kept here for the most part ever since the incorporating of Wales with England, for the ease of the Welch, and bordering Subjects, in their sutes at Law. Situate on the confluence of the Temd, and Corve, and beautified with a very strong Castle, the Palace heretofore of some of the Princes of Wales of the blood Royal of England, at such times as they resided in this Countrey (of which more anon;) and of late times the ordinary Seat of the Lord President of Wales: now reckoned, as all Shrop-shire on that side the Severn, as a part of England. Of Anglesey and the Towns thereof, we shall speak hereafter, now taking notice only of Aberfraw, the Royall Seat sometimes of the Princes of North-wales, called thence Kings of Aberfraw. Wales.

The Storie of the Britans till the time of Cadwallader their last King we have had before. After whose retirement unto Rome, the whole name and Nation became divided into three bodies; that is to say, the Cornish-Britans, the Britans of Cumberland, and the Britans of Wales. The Cornish-Britans governed by their own Dukes, till the time of Egbert the first Monarch of England, by whom subdued, Anno 809, and made a Province of that kingdom. The Britans of Cumberland had their own Kings also (some of whose names occur in Storie) till the yeer 946. when conquered by Edmund K. of England, the Son of Athelstan. But the main body of them getting into the mountainous parts beyond the Severn, did there preserve the name and reputation of their Countrey; although their Princes were no longer called Kings of Britain, but of the Welsh-men or Welch; and much adoe they had to make good that Title: all the plain Countrey beyond Severn being taken from them by Offa King of the Mercians, and themselves made Tributaries for the rest by Egbert before mentioned, by Athelstan afterwards. Which last imposed a tribute on them of 20 pounds of Gold, 300 pounds of Silver, and 200 head of Cattel yeerly, exchanged in following times for a tribute of Wolves. But howsoever they continued for a time the Title of Kings, whose names are thus set down by Glover in his Catalogue of Honour published by Millet.

843. 5 Rodorick II. surnamed the Great, who divided his Kingdom small enough before amongst his Sonnes: giving Guinedh, or North-Wales, to Amarawdh his eldest Sonne; to Cadel his second Sonne Deheubarth or South-Wales. and Powis-land to his youngest Sonne Mervin, conditioned that the two younger Sonnes and their Successors should hold their Estates in Fee of the Kings of North-Wales, and acknowledge the Soveraignty thereof, as Leigemen and Homagers. According unto which appointment it was ordained in the Constitutions of Howell Dha, the Legislator of Wales, that as the Kings to Aberfraw were bound to pay 63 pounds in way of tribute to the Kings of London; so the Kings of Dynevour and Matravall should pay in way of tribute the like summe to the Kings of Aberfraw. But notwithstanding the Reservation of the Soveraignty to the Kings of North-Wales, Roderick committed a great Solœcism in point of State by this dismembring of his Kingdom; especially at a time when all the kingdoms of the Saxons were brought into one, and that one apt enough upon all occasions to work upon the weakness of the neighbouring Welch: which had they been continued under one sole Prince, might have preserved their Liberty, and themselves a Kingdom, as well as those of Scotland, for so long a time against the power and puissance of the Kings of England: Yet was not this the worst of the mischief neither; his Successors subdividing (by his example) their small Estates into many, insomuch that of the eight tributary Kings which rowed King Eagar on the Dee, five of them were the Kings or Princes of Wales. But Roderick did not think of that which was to come, whom we must follow Wales. in our Storie according to the Division of the Countrey made by him into three Estates, of North-Wales, South-Wales, and Powys-land.

1. NORTH-WALES, or Guinedth, contained the Counties of Merioneth and Carnarvon, the Isle of Anglesey, and the greatest parts of Denbigh and Flint-shires. The chief Towns whereof are Bangor, Denbigh, Carnarvon, Aberfraw, spoken of before, and some in Anglesey whereof we shall speak more hereafter. The Countrey (Anglesey excepted) the most barren and unfruitfull part of all Wales; but withall the safest, and furthest from the danger of the incroaching English; which possibly might be the reason why it was set out for the portion of the Eldest Sonne, in whom the Soveraignty of the Welch was to be preserved, by the Kings or the British Race. Of whom it is said, that once consulting with a Witch, he was told by her that it was his destiny to be caried in triumph thorow London with a Crown on his head. Hereupon making some excursions on the English Borders, he drew upon himself the whole power of King Edward the first, which not being able to withstand, and the King as willing on the other side not to fight with Mountains; Commissioners were appointed to conclude the differences: Robert Lord Tiptoff, and some others for the King of England; and for the Welch Prince, Grono ap Heylyn, a great man of that Countrey, descended from Brockwell Skythrac, one of the Princes of Powys-land (from whom, if Camden (Iurenticux be of any credit, the Author of these Papers doth derive his Pedegree) under whom that Family had the Office of Hereditarie Cup-Bearer, and from thence their name; (Heylyn, Promus, sive à poculis, quæ vox in proprium nomen abiit, saith the Welch Dictionarie) By those Commissioners it was concluded and agreed on, that LLewellen should enjoy a part of the Countrey with the Title of Prince during his life: the rest in present, and the whole after his decease, to be surrendred over to the King of England. But David the Brother of LLewellen finding himself excluded by this Agreement, from the hope of succession, incensed his Brother and the Welch to a new Revolt: the issue whereof was the taking of David, executed by the hand of justice; and the death of LLewellen, slain in Battail, neer the Buelth in Brecknockshire. Whose head being pitched upon a stake and adorned with a Paper-Crown, was by a Horseman caried triumphantly thorow London, Anno 1282. And so the Propheeie was fulfilled. In him ended the Line of the Princes of North-Wales, after they had for the space of 405 yeers resisted not only the private undertakers and Adventurers of England, but the Forces of many puissant Monarchs: whose attempts they alwayes made frustrate by retiring into the heart of their Countrey, and leaving nothing for the English to encounter with but their Woods and Mountains. But now the fatall period of the British Liberty being come, they were constrained to yeeld to the stronger. What followed after this we shall see anon.

The Arms of these Princes was quarterly Gules and Or, four Lions Passant gardant, counterchanged.

2 POWISLAND contained the whole Counties of Montgomery and Radnor, all Shropshire beyond the Severn, with the Town of Shrewsbury, and the rest of Denbigh and Flintshires; comprehending by the estimate of those times, 15 Cantreds or hundreds of Villages, the word Cant signifying an hundred, and Tret a Village. The principall Cities or Towns of it, were S. Asaph, Shrewsbury, Matravall, spoken of before. A Countrey more partaking of the nature and fertility of England, than the parts belonging unto Guinedth, or North-Wales, but alwayes lying in harms way, by reason of the Neighbourhood of the more potent English; and therefore given by Roderick, to Mervyn, his youngest Sonne, partly because he was the youngest, but chiefly because he was a man of approved valour, and so more fit to have his portion upon the Borders. In his Line it continued a long time together, but much afflicted and dismembred by the Earles of Chester and Shrewsbury, who took from them a good part of Flint and Denbigh, and Shropshire; and by the Princes of North-Wales, who cast many a greedy eye upon it. Of the Successors of Prince Mervyn, I find no good Constat, more than of Brockwell Skythrac before remembred. The last that held it all entire was Meredyth ap Blethyn, who following the ill example of Roderick Mawr, divided it betwixt Madoc and Gryffith, his two Sonnes. Of which Madoc died at Winchester, Anno 1160, in the time of King Henry the 2d, his part hereof depending after his decease on the Fortunes of Guinedth: and Gryffith was by Henry the first made Lord of Powys (the stile of Prince left off as too high and lofty.) In his Race it continued till the time of King Edward the first, to whom at a Parliament holden in Shrewsbury, Owen ap Gryffith the fifth from Gryffith ap Meredith before mentioned surrendred his place and Title, and received them of the King again to be holden in Capite and free Baronage, according to the Custom of England. Avis, or Hawis, Daughter and Heir of this Owen ap Gryffith, was maried unto John Charleton Valett (or Gentleman of the Privie Chamber) to King Edward the 2d, by whom, in right of his Wife, he was made Lord Powis, Edward, the fift also of this Line of the Charletons, was the laſt of that Houſe; his Daughter Jane conveying the Eſtate and Title to the Houſe of the Greyes: and of them alſo five enjoyed it, the laſt Lord Powis of the Line or Race of Mervyn, being Edward Grey, who died in the dayes of our Grand-Fathers. And ſo the title lay extinct, untill revived again in the perſon of Sir William Herbert of Red-caſtle, deſcend from the Herberts, Earls of Pembroke, created Lord Powys by K. Charles the firſt, Anno 1629. Wales.

The Arms of the Princes of Powyſland, were Or, a Lyon Rampant Gules.

2 SOUTH-WALES, or Dehenbarth, conteined the Counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, Caermarden, Cardigan, and Brecknock; the greateſt and moſt fruitfull part of all Wales, but more expoſed to the invaſion of forrain Nations, Engliſh, Danes, Flemmings, and Norwegians, by whom the Sea-Coaſts were from time to time moſt grievouſly plagued; Inſomuch that the Kings and Princes hereof were inforced to remove their ſeat from Caermarthen, where it was fixt at firſt, unto Dynevour Caſtle, as a place of greater ſtrength and ſafety; where it continued till the Princes of it were quite extinct, called from hence Kings of Dynevour, as before is ſaid. The chief Towns of it, Caermarthen, Monmouth, Landaffe, S. Davids, ſpoken of alreadie. The Kings and Princes, as farre I can find upon any certainty, are theſe that follow.

of South-Wales of the Line of Cadel, after they had with great ſtrugling maintained their liberty for the ſpace of 300 years and upwards: but ſo, that though they ſtill preſerved the title of Princes, they loſt a great part of their Countrie to the Norman-Engliſh. For in the reign of William Ruſus. Bernard de Newmark a noble Norman, ſeized upon thoſe parts which now make the Countie of Brecknock, being then a fair and goodly Lordſhip; and Robert Fitz-Haymon, with ſome other noble adventurers, made themſelves maſters of Glamorgan; in which the poſteritie of ſome of them are ſtill remaining. Incouraged by their good ſucceſs, Arnulp of Montgomery, in the time of King Henry the firſt, won from the Welch a great part of Dyvet, which we now call Pembrokeſhire; as the Earls of Warren, and Lord Mortimer, about the ſame times, did prevail exceedingly in the conqueſt of Cardigan and Monmouth. So that the poor Princes had no one Countrie left entire but Caermarthen onely; too little to maintain them in ſo high a title. And though this laſt Gryffith, in the time of the Warres in England, betwixt Maud the Empreſs and King Stephen, had recovered a great part of this loſt Eſtate: yet neither he nor his did enjoy it long; himſelf deceaſing ſhortly after, and his two Sonnes, Cynnerick and Meredith being taken by King Henry the ſecond, who moſt cruelly put out their eyes: yet did the Welch, as well as poſſibly they could, endeavour to preſerve the liberty which their Fathers left them, till the felicitie and wiſdome of King Edward the firſt put an end unto the warre of Wales, and ſetled them in ſome degree of peace and quiet.

But before we come to ſpeak of this, we are to ſhew another Catalogue of the Kings and Princes of Wales, different from the ſucceſſion of them before laid down; and made according to the Hiſtory of Wales writ by Humfrey LLoyd: this Catalogue conteining the Succeſſion of the greater and predominant Princes, whether of Guynedh, Dehenbarth, or Powyſland; ſuch as gave law unto the reſt, and had the honour to be called Kings of Wales, though Princes onely of their own proper and particular Countries; as formerly we had a Catalogue of the Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons, made out of the Predominant Princes of the Saxon Heptarchie. Onely we ſhall find ſome in the following Catalogue, who were not naturally and lineally Princes of any of the three, and therefore not expreſſed in the former Tables; but ſuch as by ſtrong hand had intruded into thoſe Eſtates, to the prejudice of the right heirs, over-powred by them.

1246. 26 LLewellen, Sonne of Gryffith, the Brother of David, the laſt Soveraign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwallader, overcome and ſlain in battell by King Edward the firſt, An. 1282. as before is ſaid: by means whereof the Principalitie of Wales was added to the Crown of England.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great buſineſs, he gave unto his Engliſh Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signeuries and Eſtates; as well to reward them for their ſervice in the conqueſt, as to engage ſo many able men, both in purſe and power, for the perpetuall defence and ſubjugation of it. As for the Lordſhip of Flint, and the Towns and Eſtates lying on the ſea-coaſts, he held them into own hands, both to keep himſelf ſtrong, and to curb the Welch: and (wherein he dealt like the politick Emperour Emperour Auguſtus) pretending the eaſe of ſuch as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himſelf onely.

This done, he divided Wales into ſeven Shires, viz. 1 Glamorgan, 2 Carmarden, 3 Pembroke, 4 Cardigan, 5 Merioneth, 6 Carnarvon, and 7 Angleſey, after the manner of England. Over each of theſe, as he placed a particular Engliſh Lieutenant, ſo he was very deſirous to have one generall Engliſh Vicegerent, over the whole body of the Welch. But this when they mainly withſtood, he ſent for his wife, then great with child, to Carnarvon: where ſhe was delivered of a Sonne. Upon the newes whereof, the King aſſembled the Britiſh Lords, and offered to name them a Governour born in Wales, which could ſpeak not one word of Engliſh, and whoſe life no man could tax. Such a one when they had all ſworn to obey, he named his young Sonne Edward; ſince which time our Kings Eldeſt Sonnes are called Princes of Wales. Their Inveſtiture is performed by the impoſition of a cap of eſtate, and a Coronet on his head that is inveſted, as a token of his Principality; by delivering into his hand a verge, being the Emblem of government; by putting a ring of gold on his finger, to ſhew him how now he is a Huſband to the Countrey, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a patent, to hold the ſaid Principality, to him and his heirs Kings of England. By which words, the ſeparation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themſelves ſo exceſſent an occaſion of obliging unto them their eldeſt Sonne, when they pleaſe. In imitation of this cuſtom, more ex Anglia tranſlato (ſaith Mariana) Iohn the firſt of Caſtile and Leon, made his Sonne Henry Prince of the Aſturia's; which is a countrey ſo craggie and and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Wales of Spain. And all the Spaniſh Princes even to theſe times are honoured with this title of Prince of the Aſturia's.

Notwithſtanding this provident care of Edward the firſt, in eſtabliſhing his Empire here, and the extreme rigor of Law here uſed by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extract from the Welch blood) they ſeldom or never contained themſelves within the bounds of true Allegeance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by Act of Parliament) one Nation with the Engliſh, ſubject to the ſame Laws, capable of the ſame preferments, and privileged with the ſame immunities: He added 6 Shires to the former number, out of thoſe Countries which were before reputed, as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and enabled them to ſend Knights and Burgeſſes unto the Engliſh Parliaments; ſo that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the Engliſh and Welch; an happy Vnion.

The ſame King Henry eſtabliſhed for the eaſe of his Welch Subjects, a Court at Ludlow, like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are miniſtred according to the faſhion of the Kings Courts of Weſtminſter. The Court conſiſteth of one Preſident, who is, for the moſt part, of the Nobility, and is generally called, the Lord Preſident of Wales; of as many Counſellors as it ſhall pleaſe the King to appoint; one Attourney, one Sollicitor, one Secretary, and the 4 Iuſtices of the Counties of Wales: The Town it ſelf (for this muſt not be omitted) adorned with a very fair Caſtle which hath been the Palace of ſuch Princes of Wales, of the Engliſh blood, as have come into this Countrie, to ſolace themſelves among their people. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father, and here dyed Prince Arthur, Eldeſt Sonne to Henry the 7th, both being ſent hither by their Fathers to the ſame end, viz. by their preſence to ſatisfie and keep in Order the unquiet Welchmen. And certainly, as the preſence of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, ſo would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people. The Borders.

What the Revennes of this Principality are, I cannot ſay: yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very ſmall, by theſe reaſons following, viz. 1 By the Compoſition which Llewellen, the laſt Prince of Wales, made with Edward the firſt: who being Prince of North-Wales onely, and diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of that, was fain to redeem the reſt, of the ſaid King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 100000 pounds of our preſent mony) to be paid down in ready Coin, and for the reſidue to pay 1000 l. per Annum. And 2dly, by thoſe two circumſtances, in the mariage of the Lady Katharine of Spain, to the above named Prince Arthur. For firſt, her Father Ferdinando being one of the warieſt Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats, required for her Ioynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Cheſter. And ſecondly, After the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm perſwaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that ſo great a Treaſure as the yeerly Revenue of her Ionyture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from thoſe of England, only by the addition of a Label of three points. But the proper and peculiar device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Arms, is a Coronet beautified with thee Oſtrich Feathers, and inſeimbed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I ſerve: alluding to that of the Apoſtle, The Heir while he is a Child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the black Prince, at the battell of Creſſie, from Iohn King of Bohemia; who there wore it, and whom he there ſlew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now ſhut up my diſcourſe of Wales with that teſtimony of the people, which Henry the 2d uſed in a Letter to Emanuel Emperour of Conſtantinople: The Welch Nation is ſo adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men; ready to ſpend their blood for their Countrey, and pawn their life for praiſe: and adding onely this, that ſince their incorporating with the Engliſh, they have ſhewed themſelves moſt loyall, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King; and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties, and Religion, as well as any of the beſt of their fellow-ſubjects, whereof they have given good proof in theſe later times.

There are in Wales
Arch-Biſhops 0. Biſhops 4.

THE BORDERS.

BEfore we come into Scotland, we muſt of neceſſity paſſe thorough that Battable ground, lying betwixt both Kingdoms, called THE BORDERS, the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, ſubtile, nimble, and by reaſon of their often skirmiſhes, well experienced, and adventurous. Once the Engliſh Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edenburgh on the Eaſt, and that of Dumbritton on the Weſt (the firſt Fryth, by the Latines called Bodotria, and the later Glotta:) betwixt which, where now ſtandeth the Town of Sterling, was an atient Bridge built over the River which falleth into the Fryth of Edenburgh, on a Croſs ſtanding whereupon, was writ this Paſport.

I am Free march as paſſengers may kenne,
To Scots, to Britans, and to Engliſh-men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Daniſh oppreſſion, the Scots well husbanded that advantage, and not onely enlarged their Borders to the Tweed, but alſo took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Weſtmorland. The Norman Kings again recovered theſe Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdomes to be Tweed, Eaſt; the Solway, Weſt; and the Cheviot hills in the midſt. Of any great wars made on theſe Borders, or any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the firſt, who taking advantage of the Scots diſagreements, about the ſucceſſor of Alexander the 3d, hoped to bring the Countrie under the obedience of England. This Quarrell betwixt the two Nations he began began, but could not end; the Wars ſurviving the Author; ſo that what Velleius ſaith of the Romans, and Carthaginians, I may as well ſay of the Scots and Engliſh: for almoſt 300 yeers together, aut bellum inter eos populos, aut belli præparatio, aut infida pax fuit. In moſt of theſe conflicts the Scots had the worſt. So that Daniel in his Hiſtory ſeemeth to marvail how this Corner of the Iſle could breed ſo many, had it bred nothing but men, as were ſlain in theſe wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the 2d, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became ſo terrible to the Engliſh Borderers, that an huudred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a cuſtom among the Turks not to beleeve a Chriſtian or a Iew complayning againſt a Turk, except their accuſation be confirmed by the Teſtimony of ſome Turk alſo; which ſeldom hapning, is not the leaſt cauſe why ſo little Iuſtice is there done the Chriſtians. In like manner it is the Law of theſe Borderers, never to beleeve any Scots complaining againſt an Engliſh-man, unleſs ſome other Engliſh-man will witneſs for him; and ſo on the other ſide; Ex jure quodam inter limitaneos rato (ſaith Camden in his Elizab.) nullus niſi Scotus in Scotum, nullus niſi Anglus in Anglum, teſtis admittitur. This Cuſtom making void in this Faſhion all kinds of accuſations, was one of the greateſt cauſes of the Inſolencies of both ſides committed. Beſides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but ſometimes were Scots, ſometimes Engliſh, as their preſent crimes and neceſsities required protection or pardon. To keep in this people, and ſecure the Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the Eaſt, the other over the Weſt, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Warden of the Eaſt Marches had his Seat at Barwick (a Town of great ſtrength, and which for the conveniencie of its ſituation, was the firſt thing which the Engliſh took care to defend, and the Scots to ſupriſe) of which he was alſo Governor. The Warden of the Weſt Marches, had his Seat in Carlile, which Henry the 8th for that cauſe well fortified. The Warden of the middle Marches had no ſet place of reſidence, but was ſometimes in one place, ſometimes in another, according as occaſion required; the Office being executed for the moſt part, by the Wardens of the Eaſtern or Weſtern Marches. But Imperii medium eſt, terminus ante fuit, by the bleſſed mariage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of one, which was then the bounds of two Empires; theſe Officers, and the cauſe of them, the wars, are quite extinguiſhed.

SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is the Northern part of Britain, ſeparated from England by the River Tweed and Solway, and the Cheviot Hils, extending from the one to the other. It is in length (according to Polydore Virgil) 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place diſtant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Countrey ending like the ſharp point of a Wedge. And for the length aſſigned unto it by Polydore, it muſt be made up by meaſuring the crooks and windings of the ſhores, every where thruſting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For meaſuring in a ſtrait Line from North to South, the length thereof from Solway Frith to the Straitby-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Barwick unto Straitby-head is a great deal ſhorter. So that there is no ſuch over-ſight in the Maps of Britain, nor ſuch neceſsity to correct them, as was ſometimes thought.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonii a chief People of it: ſometimes Albania, from Albanie or Braid Albin, a principall Province in the North. But the moſt uſuall name is Scotia, or Scotland; though the reaſon of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Ægyptian Pharaoh; of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reaſon (though that none of the beſt) from the Scoti, Scitti, or Scythi, a German, or Sarmatian people of noted fame; whom they will have to ſeize firſt on ſome parts of Spain, from thence to tranſplant themſelves into Ireland, and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Weſtern Ilands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is, that they were no other than mere Iriſh, (whoſe language, habit, and the moſt barbarous of their cuſtoms, the Highlanders or naturall Scots doe ſtill retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot ſignifying in their Language, a body aggregated into one, out of many particulars; as the word Alman in the Dutch. Scot illud dicitur, (ſaith Camden out of Matthew of Weſtminſter) quod ex diverſis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur. Firſt mentioned by this name in ſome fragments of Porphyrie (who lived about the time of the Emperour Aurelian) as they are cited by S. Hierome: after the death of Conſtantine much ſpoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts in haraſſing the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Iriſh Scots, inhabiting the Hebrides, and the Weſt parts of the Continent adjoyning to them, more barbarous than the Wild Iriſh at this day: not to be civiliz'd (as King JAMES obſerved in his moſt excellent Baſilicon Doron) but by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders, or Engliſh Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this ſide the two Frythes of Dunbritton and Edenburgh, and the plainer Countries all along the Germane Ocean, are the more civill of the two, as being of the ſame Saxon race with the Engliſh. This is evident, firſt, by their Language, being only a broad Northern Engliſh, a Dialect onely of that tongue; ſecondly, by the teſtimony ſtimony of the Highlanders themſelves who are the true Scots, and ſpeak the old Iriſh language, by whom the Lowlanders and the Engliſh are called by the ſame name of Saxons: 3ly, by the generall conſent of all Hiſtorians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northumbers or Eaſtſaxons beyond Humber extended as far Northwards as the two Friths before-mentioned; and there continued for the ſpace of 300 yeers: and 4ly, by the confeſſion of ſome ingenuous Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet, that the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain much about the ſame time; the Saxons might extort the Eaſtern ſhore, lying next their Countrie, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Weſtern parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands, from whence they firſt paſſed into Britain.

The Countrey, for the moſt part, eſpecially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitfull, not able to afford ſuſtenance for the Natives of it, were they not a people patient of want and hunger, temperate in diet, and not accuſtomed unto that riot and exceſs, uſed commonly in richer and more plentifull Countries. Fruit they have very little, and not many trees either for building or for fewell: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not induſtrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are courſe cloth, Fiſh in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal; of which two laſt their mountains do afford ſome rich undecaying Mines.

The People have been noted by their beſt Writers, for ſome barbarous cuſtoms entertained amongſt them. One of which was, if any two were diſpleaſed, they expected no law; but bang'd it out bravely, one and his kindred, againſt the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the peace. This fighting they call their Feides, a word ſo barbarous, that were it to be expreſſed in Latine, or French, it muſt be by circumlocution. Theſe deadly Feides, King Iames in his moſt excellent Baſilicon Doron adviſeth his Sonne to redreſs with all care poſſible; but it pleaſed God to give him ſo long a life as to ſee it in his own dayes remedied: wherein he got a greater victory over that ſtubborn people, than ever did any forein Prince, or any of his Predeceſſors could doe before him; an act indeed truly royall, and worthy himſelf. Another cuſtom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongſt the Heathen, and much leſs in Chriſtendom, which took beginning as the Scotiſh Hiſtorians affirm, in the reign of Ewen the 3d, who is the fifteenth King in the Catalogue, after the firſt Fergus. This Ewen being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto laſciviouſneſs, made a Law, that himſelf and his ſucceſſors ſhould have the maidenhead, or firſt nights lodging with every woman, whoſe husband held land immediately from the Crown: and the Lords and Gentlemen of all thoſe, whoſe husbands were their tenants or homagers. This was, it ſeems, the Knights ſervice which men held their ſtates by; and continued till the dayes of Malcolm Comnor, who at the requeſt of his wife Margaret, (ſhe was the ſiſter of Edgar Atheling) aboliſhed this Law; and ordained, that the tenants by way of commutation, ſhould pay unto their Lords a mark in money; which tribute the Hiſtorians ſay is ſtill in force. It was called Marcheta mulieris: but whether from Mark, a horſe in the old Galligne, (implying the obſcene ſignification of Equitare) as Mr. Selden thinks; or from Marca, the ſumme of money by which it was afterward redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this laſt cuſtom was of ſuch a barbarous and brutiſh nature, that the cuſtom of the Indians in giving to the Bramines the firſt nights lodging with their Brides, and that of many Savage unconverted Nations in proſtituting their Wives and Daughters to the Luſts and pleaſure of their Gueſts, have not more unchriſtianity in them, than this of thoſe Scotiſh Chriſtians, if I may ſo call them.

Theſe Cuſtoms ſhew the antient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civilitie of the Neighbouring Nations, nor are they ſo broken of the former, but that they are obſerved by a modern Writer to be ſtill greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as alſo to be a ſubtile and politick people, inclined to Factions and Seditions amongſt themſelves, which he that reads their Stories cannot chooſe but ſee. A people as King Iames obſerveth in his Baſilicon Doron, ever weary of the preſent ſtate, and deſirous of novelties; accuſtomed to judge and ſpeak raſhly of their Kings and Princes, towards whom they have alwayes caried themſelves with ſuch untractableneſs, that more Kings have been betrayed, murdered, and depoſed by the Scots, than by all the Nations in the World. But take them in themſelves without theſe relations, and they are ſaid to be an induſtrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well verſed in Grammaticall Learning, of which moſt of their Gentry have a ſmattering. And of moſt note in point of Learning, have been 1 Marianus (ſurnamed) Scotus, and 2 Hector Boetius, the Hiſtorians, 3 Iohn Major, a well known School-man, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4 George Buchanan, an ingenious Poet, but an unſound Stateſ-man, whoſe Hiſtorie, and Dialogue de jure Regni, have wrought more miſchief in the World, than all Marchiavels Works. Not to have been remembred here, but becauſe he was Pædagogue to 5 King Iames, of moſt famous memory; whoſe printed Works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6 Napier, the Laird of Marchiſton. 7 8 Barclay, the Father and the Sonne. 9 Iohn Skene, the beſt Antiquary of this Nation. 10 Doctor Iohn Maxwel, the late learned Biſhop of Roſs, and my very good Friend, beſides ſome others of leſs note.

The Chriſtian Religion was here planted by divers men, according to the ſeverall Nations who did here inhabit; amongſt the Low-Landers, or Saxon-Scots, by Aidan, the firſt Biſhop of Lindisfarn, or Holy Iland; amongſt the Picts inhabiting the South-Eaſtern parts, by Ninias, Biſhop Scotland. of Candida Casa, or Whit-herne, in Galloway, amongst the Northern-Picts, Anno 555. and finally amongst the Scots, by Palladius a Deacon of Rome, sent to them hither for that purpose by Pope Celestine, Anno 435, or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion over grown with the rust and rubbish of the Romish Church (degenerated from it self in the later dayes) it was here made by a strong hand, according to judgement of Knox and others: not taking counsell with the Prelates, nor staying the leisure of the Prince as they did in England, but turning Prince and Prelates out of all autority; made by that means more naturally subject unto alterations than it had been otherwise; or only to be made good by the same violence, which first introduced it. Tis true, that for a while, being in danger of the Freneh, and of necesity to support themselves by the power and favour of the English, they bound themselves by a solemn Subscription to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to observe that form of Worship, which was there established. Religionis cultui, & Ritibus cum Anglis communibus subscripserunt; as is affirmed by Buchanan their own State-Historian. But no sooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity and leisure to effect their end; and have endeavoured ever since by practices, and correspondencies with that party here, and finally by Force of Arms, to thrust their Constitutions and Form of Worship on the Church of England.

As for the Government of the Church, it was originally by Bishops, (as in all parts else) but so as they exercised their Functions and Iurisdictions in all places, equally, whereseoever they came; The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceses, till the time of Malcolm the 3d, Anno 1070, or thereabouts. Nor had they any Arch-Bishops till the yeer 1478. The Arch-Bishop of York being accounted and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once setled in an orderly & constant Hierarchie, they held the same untill the Reformation began by Knoxe, when he and his Associats approving the Genevian plat-form, took the advantage of the Minoritie of K. James the sixth to introduce Presbyterian Discipline, and suppress the Bishops, forbidding them by their own sole autority to intermedle any more in matters which concerned the Church, cantoning the Kingdom into Presbyteries of their own assigning, and that the King might not be able to oppose their doings they kept him under by strong hand, imprisoned him at Sterlin, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithfull servants, and seized upon his principall Fortresses; and in a word so bafled and affronted him upon all occasions, that he was minded many times to have left the kingdom, and retire to Venice. Which doubtless he had done, (as I have heard affirmed by some of great place and power) had not the hopes of coming at the last to the Crown of England, made him stay it out: So that his Maxim of no Bishops no King, was not made at Random, but founded on the sad experience of his own condition. And though upon the sense of those inconveniences which that alteration brought upon him, he did afterwards with great both Policie and Prudence restore again the Episcopall Order, and setled it both by Synodicall Acts, and by Acts of Parliament; yet the same restless spirit breaking out again in the Reign of his Sons, Anno 1638. did violently eject the Bishops, and suppress the calling, and set up their Presbyteries thorowout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Countrey, are, 1 the Lake of Mirton, part of whose waters doe congeal in Winter, and part of them not. 2 That in the Lake of Lennox, being 24 miles in compass, the Fish are generally without Fins, and yet there is great abundance of them. 3 That when there is no wind stirring, the waters of the said Lake are so tempestuous, that no Mariner dares venture on it. 4 That there is a stone called the Deaf-stone, a foot high and 33 Cubits thick, of this rare quality, that a Musket shot off on the one side, cannot be heard by a man standing on the other. If it be otherwise (as he must have a strong Faith who beleeves these wonders) let Hector Boetius bear the blame, out of whom I had it.

Chief Mountains of this Kingdom are the Cheviot Hills upon the Borders, and Mount Grampius spoken of by Tacitus, the safest shelter of the Picts, or Northern Britans against the Romans, and of the Scots against the English; now called the hills of Albanie, or the mountainous Regions of Braid-Albin. Out of these springeth the 1 Tay or Taus, the faireſt River of Scotland, falling into the Sea about Dundee, in the East side; and 2 the Cluyd, emptying it self into Dunbritton Frith, on the West side of the Kingdom. Other Rivers of most note, are, the 3 Banoc, emptying it self into the Frith of Edenburgh; on the banks whereof was fought that fatall battell of Banocks-bourn, of which more anon. 4 Spey, 5 Dee, the Ocasa of Ptolomie: none of them of any long course, by reason that the Countrey Northward is but very narrow.

In reference to Ecclesiasticall affairs, this Kingdom hath been long divided into 13 Dioceses, to which the Diocese of Edenburgh (taken out of that of S. Andrews,) hath been lately added: and in relation to the Civil, into divers Seneschalsies and Sheriffdoms, which being for the most part hereditary, are no small hinderance to the due execution of Justice. So that the readiest way to redress the mischief (as King James advised) is to dispose of them as they fall or Escheat to the Crown, according to the laudable custom (in that case) in England.

The greatest Friends of the Scots, were the French, to whom the Scots shewed themselves so faithfull, that the French King committed the defence of his Person to a selected number of Scotish Gentlemen: and so valiant, that they have much hindered the English Victories in France. And certainly the French, feeling the smart of the English puissance alone, have continually heartned the Scots in their attempts against England, and hindred all means of making union betwixt them: as appeared, when they broke the match agreed on, between our Edward the sixth, and Mary the young Queen of Scots. Their greateſt enemy was the Engliſh, who overcame them in many battels, ſeized once upon the Kingdom, and had longer kept it, if the mountainous and inacceſſible woods had not been more advantagious to the Scots, than their power: for ſo much King Iames ſeemeth to intimate in his Speech at Whitehall, 1607. And though (ſaith he) the Scots had the honour and good fortune never to be conquered, yet were they never but on the defenſible ſide; and may in part thank their hills and inacceſſible paſſages, that ſaved them from an utter overthrow at the hands of all them that ever pretended to conquer them. But Scotland.

Jam cuncti gens una ſumus, ſic ſimus in ævum:

One onely Nation now are we,
And let us ſo for ever be.

The chief Cities are, Edenburgh, of old called Caſtrum Alatum in Lothien, where is the Kings Palace, and the Court of Juſtice. It conſiſteth chiefly of one ſtreet, extending in length one mile, into which runne many pretty lanes; ſo that the whole compaſs may be nigh three miles: extending from Eaſt to Weſt on a riſing ground: at the Summit or Weſt end whereof ſtandeth a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle, mounted upon a ſteep and precipitious Rock, which commandeth the Town; ſuppoſed to be the Caſtrum Alatum, ſpoken of by Ptolomie. Under the command or rather the protection of which Caſtle, and thorough the neighbourhood of Leith, ſtanding on the Fryth, and ſerving as a Port unto it; and finally by the advantage of the Courts of Juſtice, and the Court Royall called Holy-Rood-Houſe, it ſoon became rich, populous, well-traded, and the chief of the Kingdom: but withall factious and ſeditious, conteſting with their Kings, or ſiding againſt them upon all occaſions. No way to humble them, and keep them in obedience to their Soveraign Lords, but by incorporating Leith, indulging it the privileges of a City, and removing thither the Seat Royall and the Courts of Judicature; which they more fear than all the Plagnes that can befall them. It belonged in former times to the Engliſh-Saxons, (as all the reſt of the Countrey from the Fryth to Barwick) from whom, oppreſſed by the tyranny of the Danes, it was taken by the Scots and Picts, Anno 800. or thereabouts. 2 Sterling, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Forth or Fryth, in the Sheriffdom ſo called, a ſtrong Town, and beautified withall with a very fair Caſtle, the birth-place of King Iames the ſixt, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain. Neer to which Town, on the banks of the River Bannock, hapned the moſt memorable diſcomfiture that the Scots ever gave the Engliſh: who beſides many Lords and 700 Knights and men of note, loſt in this Fight (as the Scotiſh Writers do report) 50000 of the common Soldiers (our Engliſh Hiſtories confeſs 10000, and too many of that) the King himſelf (Edward the 2d) being compelled to flie for his life and ſafety. Some of the Scotiſh Writers tell us, that the purer ſort of Silver, which we call Sterling money, did take name from hence; they might as well have told us, that all our Silver Bullion comes from Bouillon in Luxembourgh, or from the Port of Boulogne in France: the truth being, that it took that name from the Eaſterlings, or Merchants of Eaſt Germany, drawn into England by King Iohn to refine our Coin. 3 Glaſco, in Clydsdale, honoured with an Archbiſhops See, and a publick School (to which ſome give the name of an Univerſity) founded here by Archbiſhop Turnbal, Anno 1554. 4 S. Andrews, the chief Town of Fife, an Archiepiſcopall See, and an Vniverſity; by the Latines called Fanum Reguli, which, and the Engliſh name, it took from the bones of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, tranſlated firſt from Patras in Peloponneſus where he ſuffered death, unto Conſtantinople; and thence brought hither by a Monk called Albatus Regulus, in the yeer 378, (if they be not miſtaken in the time who made the ſtorie.) Over which Relicks he is ſaid to have built a Monaſtery, which after grew to be a City: called from the Founder Fanum Reguli; in honour of the Saint, S. Andrews. The Biſhop hereof is the Metropolitan of all Scotland; the City ſeated on the Ocean, neer the fall of the Ethan, overlooked with a ſtrong and goodly Caſtle the Archbiſhops ſeat. 5 Falkland, in the ſame Province of Fife, beautified with a retiring houſe of the Kings, reſorting often thither on receſs from buſineſs, or for the commodity and pleaſure of hunting which the place affords. 6 Dundee, in Latine, Taodunum, a rich and noted port at the mouth of the Tay, the chief Town of Anguis. 7 Aber-don, at the mouth of the River Done, whence it hath the name, (the word Aber in the Britiſh ſignifying the mouth or influx of a River) an Vniverſity and Biſhops See. 8 Perth, or S. Iohns Town, ſeated on the Tay, but in the middle of the kingdom; walled, and repleniſhed with an induſtrious people; the chief Town of the Sheriffdom of Perth. 9 Scone, on the further ſide of the Tay, adorned heretofore with a famous Monaſtery, the uſuall place for the Inauguration of the Scotiſh Kings: the fatall ſtone, on which they did receive their Crown, (the Palladium of the Scotiſh Kingdom,) here kept, till the removall of it unto Weſtminſter, by King Edward the firſt. Vpon which ſtone there were of old ingraven theſe Verſes.

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocunque locatum
Invenient lapidem regnare tenentur ibidem.

Tranſlated in old Meeter thus,

The Scots ſhall brook that Realm as natif ground,
If Weirds fail not, whaire ere this Stane is found.

Moſt happily accompliſhed in the Succeſſion of King James the ſixt to the Crown of England.

10 Dun-

Scotland. 10. Dunbritton (Britannodunum in the Latine) ſeated in a graſſie Plain, at the fall or influx of the River Levin into the Cluyd, upon two ſteep and precipicious Rocks, flanked on the Weſt with the ſaid two Rivers, and on the Eaſt with a myerie Flat, drowned at every full Sea: the ſtrongeſt Hold of all the Kingdom, and thought to be impregnable but by Famine or Treaſon; and the chief Town of the Weſt ſide of Scotland; the name hereof communicated to the Fryth adjoyning.

The Antient Inhabitants of this Countrie dwelling within the limits of the Roman Province, were the Gadeni, poſſeſſing Tevidale, Twedale, Merch, and Lothien, whoſe chief Citie was Caſtra Alata, now Edenburgh. 2 the Damnii, dwelling in Cluydsdale, Lennox, Sterling, and Menteith, whoſe chief Citie was Vanduara, now Renfraw; Lindum, now Linlithquo. 3 the Selgovæ, inhabiting in Liddſdale, Euſedale, Eskdale, Annandale, and Niddiſdale, whoſe chief place was Carbantorigum, now Caer-Laverock: and 4 the Novantes, conteining Galloway, Carrick, Kyle and Cunningham; principall places of the which were, Leucopibia, now Whit-herne, and Rerigonium, now Bargenie. Without the Province, amongſt the Picts or barbarous Britans, divided generally into Caledonii and Meatæ, the Nations of moſt note were, 5 the Caledonii properly ſo called, taking up all Strathern, Argile, Cantire, Albanie, Lorn, Perth, Angus, and Fife. 6 the Verminet of Mernis and Mar. 7 the Talzali of Buquhan. 8 the Vacomagi of Loghuabre and Murray. 9 the Cantæ of Roſs and Sutherland. 10 the Cantini of Cathneſs; and 11 the Cornubii of Strathnavern, the furtheſt Countrey Northward of all the Iland. Chief Towns of which were, Tamia, Banatia, Orea, Devana, and Tueſis; which we know not where to find upon any certainty.

The fortunes of this people, as they related to the Romans hath been ſhewn before: On the withdrawing of whoſe Forces, ſo much hereof as formerly had belonged to that Empire, was poſſeſſed by the Saxons, the reſidue thereof, as formerly, by the Scots and Picts: ſave that the Saxons not content with that which the Romans held, made themſelves maſters alſo of the plain Countries, lying on the German Ocean, to which the paſſage out of Germany was both ſhort and eaſie. By which accompt, beſides thoſe places in the Eaſt, they were poſſeſſed of the Counties or Sheriffdoms of Teſidale, Tweedale, March, Lothien, Liddiſdale, Euſedale, Eskdale, Annandale, Nidiſdale, Cluydsdale, Galloway, Carick, Kyle, Cunningham, Lennox, and Sterling, being the richeſt, and moſt flouriſhing part of the modern Scotland. The Scots, for their part, had the Counties of Cantire, Argile, Braid Albin, (or Albanie) Lorn, Loquhabre, and Strathnavern, lying on the Weſt and North: the other Northern moyite (excepting ſome parts neer the coaſt of the German Ocean poſſeſſed by the Saxons) conteining the now Counties of Catneſs, Sutherland, Roſs, Murray, Buquhan, Marre, Mern, Anguis, Athol, Perth, Fife, Strathern and Menteith, being only left unto the Picts. From whence the Saxons and Scots came into theſe parts, hath been ſhewn already. And for the Picts, (to omit here the refutation of thoſe who will have them to deſcend from the Agathyrſi, a People of Scythia) they were no other than ſuch of the naturall Britans as never were brought under the Roman Empire, but ſtill preſerved their Countrie in its former Libertie; called therefore by Tertullian, inacceſſa Romanis loca, as indeed they were: and uſing ſtill their antient cuſtom of painting their bodies, after the reſt of their Countriemen had conformed themſelves to more civill courſes, were by the Romans called Picts, and by that name firſt mentioned in the Panegyrick of Eunomius, in the time of Conſtantine the Great. They long poſſeſſed theſe parts without any In-mate, even till the yeer 424. when the Iriſh-Scots wanting room at home, and having formerly poſſeſſed themſelves of the Weſtern Iſles firſt ſet foot in Britain: with whom they had continuall Warre, till in the end the Scots prevailing, compelled the Picts to abandon to them the Weſtern parts, and withdraw themſelves into the Eaſtern. Afterwards growing into better terms with one another, and willing to enlarge their borders towards the more flouriſhing South, they contracted an Offenſive and Defenſive League againſt the Britans: whom on all ſides they moſt miſerably tortured, till vanquiſhed and beat back by the conquering Saxons, againſt whom they contracted a new Confederacy. Taking the advantage of the death of Etheldred, King of the Northumbers, and the invaſion of the Danes on the reſt of England; they got into their hands all Bernicia, or ſo much of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, as lay on the North of Twede, and Solway; reckoned from that time forwards as a part of their Dominions. But this good neighbourhood held not long betwixt theſe two Nations. It hapned at the laſt, that Achaius King of the Scots, maried Ferguſia, Siſter unto Hunguſt King of the Picts, and had by her a Sonne called Alpine, who after the death of Hunguſt, dying without iſſue, and having none of a neerer kindred, was in the judgement of the Scots to ſucceed in that Kingdom. But the Picts, alleging a Law of not admitting Aliens to the Crown, choſe one Ferreth of their own Nation to be their King: with whom Alpine contended in a long Warre, victorious for the moſt part, in concluſion ſlain. The quarrell notwithſtanding did remain betwixt the unfriendly Nations, till at the laſt, after many bloody battels, and mutuall overthrows (the Scots being for the moſt part on the loſing ſide) Kenneth, the ſecond of that name, vanquiſhed Donsken, the laſt King of the Picts, with ſo great a ſlaughter of his People, that he extinguiſhed not their Kingdom only, but their very name; paſſing from that time forwards under that of Scots. No mention after this of the Piciſh Nation: unleſs perhaps we will believe that ſome of them paſſed into France, and there, forſooth, ſubdued that Countrie which we now call Picardy.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings of the Scots in Britain, I ſhall begin the ſame with Fergus, the ſecond of that name in the Accompt of their Hiſtorians: leaving out that rabble of 38 Kings (half (half of them at the leaſt before Chriſts Nativity) mentioned by Hector Boetius, Buchanan, and others of their Claſſick Authors. Neither ſhall I offend herein, as I conjecture, the more judicious and underſtanding men of the Scotiſh Nation, (and for others I take little care) ſince I deal no more unkindly with their firſt Fergus, and his Succeſſors, than I have done already with our own Brutus, and his. The firſt Scotiſh King that ſetled himſelf in the North of Britain, is, according to the above-named Hector Boetius, one Fergus, which in the time that Coyle governed the Britans, came (forſooth) into theſe parts out of Ireland. From him, unto Eugenius, we have the names of 39 Kings in a continued ſucceſſion: which Eugenius, together with his whole Nation, is ſaid to have been expelled the Iland, by a joynt confederacy of the Romans, Britans, and Picts. Twenty and ſeven years after the death of this Eugenius, they were reduced again into their poſſeſsion here, by the valour and conduct of another Fergus, the ſecond of that name. To this Fergus I refer the beginning of this Scotiſh Kingdom in Britain, holding the ſtories of the former 39 Kings, to be vain and fabulous. Neither want I probable conjecture for this aſſertion, this expedition of Fergus into Britain, being placed in the 424 year of CHRIST, at what time the beſt Writers of the Roman ſtorie for thoſe times, report the Scots to have firſt ſeated themſelves in this Iland. Scotland.

The Kings of chief note in the courſe of the whole Succeſſion are, 1 Achaius, who died in the yeer 809. and in his life contracted the offenſive & defenſive league with Charles the Great, between the Kngdoms of France and Scotland. The conditions whereof were, 1 Let this league between the two Kingdoms endure for ever; 2 Let the enemies unto one, be reputed and handled as the enemies of the other; 3 If the Saxons or English-men invade France, the Scots ſhall ſend thither ſuch numbers of Souldiers as ſhall be deſired, the French King defraying the charges; 4 If the Engliſh invade Scotland, the King of France ſhall at his own charges ſend competent aſsiſtance unto the King of Scots. Never was there any league, which was either more faithfully obſerved, or longer continued, than this between theſe two Kingdoms: the Scots on all occaſions ſo readily aſsiſting the French, that it grew to a proverb, or by word, He that will France win, muſt with Scotland firſt begin. 2 Kenneth the ſecond, who having utterly ſubdued and deſtroyed the Picts, extended his Dominions over all the preſent Scotland, deſervedly to be accompted the firſt Monarch of it: the Picts (being either rooted out, or ſo few in number, that they paſſed afterwards in the name and accompt of Scots) from that time forwards never mentioned in any Author. 3 Malcolm the firſt, who added Weſtmorland and Cumberland unto his Dominions, given to him by King Edmund of England, the Sonne of Athelſtane, to have his aid againſt the Danes, or to keep him neutrall. After which time, thoſe Counties were ſometimes Scotiſh, and ſometimes Engliſh, till finally recovered by King Henry the 2d, and united to the Crown of England; never ſince diſ-joyned. 4 Kenneth the 3d. who by conſent of the Eſtates of his Realm, made the Kingdom hereditary, to deſcend from the Father to his Eldeſt Sonne; before which time (keeping within the compaſs of the Royall Family) the Uncle was ſometimes preferred before the Nephew, the eldeſt in yeers, though further off before the younger Kinſman, though the neerer in blood. After which time (the oppoſition and interruption made by Conſtantine the 3d, and Donald the 4th, excepted only) the Eldeſt Sonnes of the Kings, or the next in birth, have ſucceeded ordinarily in that Kingdom. This Kenneth was one of thoſe Tributary and Vaſſal-Kings, which rowed K. Edgar over the Dee, neer Cheſter, in ſuch pomp and majeſtie. 5 Macbbeth, of whom there goeth a famous ſtory, which ſhall be told at large anon. 6 Malcolm the 3d, the Sonne of Duncane, who lived in England during the whole time of Macbbeths tyranny, and thence brought into Scotland at his return not only ſome Civilities of the Engliſh garb, but the honourarie titles of Earls and Barons, not here before uſed. At the perſwaſion of the Lady Margaret his wife, (Siſter of Edgar, ſurnamed Atheling, and after his deceaſe the right Heir of the Crown of England,) he aboliſhed the barbarous cuſtom ſpoken of before. He did homage to William the Conqueror for the Crown of Scotland, but afterwards ſiding againſt him with the Engliſh, was ſlain at Alnwick. 7 David, the youngeſt Sonne of Malcolm the third, ſucceeded his two Brothers, Edgar and Alexander (dying without iſſue) in the Throne of his Father; and in right of his Mother the Lady Margaret, Siſter and Heir of Edgar Atheling, and Daughter of Edward the Eldeſt Sonne of Edmund the 2d, ſurnamed Ironſide, K. of England, had the beſt Title to that Kingdom alſo: but diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Norman Conquerors; with whom, by reaſon of the great puiſſance of thoſe Kings, and the little love which the Engliſh bare unto the Scots, not able to diſpute their Title by force of Arms; From Maud the Siſter of this David, maried to Henry the firſt of England, deſcended all the Kings of England (King Stephen excepted) to Queen Elizabeths death: from David all the Kings of Scotland, till King Iames the ſixth, who on the death of Queen Elizabeth ſucceeded in the Crown of England, in right of his Deſcent from another Margaret, the Eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the 7th. So that in his perſon there was not an union of the Kingdoms only, under the Title of Great Britain, but a reſtoring of the old Line of the Saxon Kings (of which he was the direct and indubitate Heir,) to the Crown of England; the poſſeſſion whereof had for ſo long time continued in the Poſterity of the Norman Conqueror. And upon this deſcent it followeth moſt undeniably, that though the Norman Conqueror got the Crown of England by the power of the Sword, from the true Heirs of Edmund the 2d, ſurnamed Ironſide; and that his Succeſſors had enjoyed it by no other Title till Queen Elizabeths death: yet Iames, the firſt Monarch of Great Britain, ſucceeded by a right deſcent from the Saxon Line, without relation to the Conqueſt of the Norman Baſtard. 8 William, the Brother of Malcolm the 4th, and Nephew of David before mentioned by his Sonne Prince Henry (who died in the life of his Father) being taken Priſoner at the Battail of Alnwick, did Homage to King Henry the 2d for the Crown of Scotland, and was thereupon reſtored to his Liberty, and his Realm to peace. What doth occur concerning the ſucceeding Kings, when their Affairs with England and the World abroad became more conſiderable, we ſhall ſee anon.

In the mean time proceed we to the Storie of Machbeth, than which for variety of Action, and ſtrangeneſs of events, I never met with any more pleaſing. The Storie in brief is thus. Duncan King of the Scots had two principall men, whom he employed in all matters of importance; Machbeth, and Banquho. Theſe two travelling together through a Forreſt, were met by three Fairies, Witches (Weirds the Scots call them) whereof the firſt making obeyſance unto Machbeth, ſaluted him Thane (a Title unto which that of Earl afterward ſucceeded) of Glammis; the ſecond, Thane of Cawder; and the third, King of Scotland. This is unequall dealing, ſaith Banquho, to give my Friend all the Honours, and none unto me; to whom one of the Weirds made anſwer, That he indeed ſhould not be King, but out of his loyns ſhould come a Race of Kings, that ſhould for ever rule the Scots. And having thus ſaid, they all ſuddenly vaniſhed. Vpon their arrivall to the Court, Machbeth was immediatly created Thane of Glammis: & not long after, ſome new ſervice of his requiring new recompence, he was honoured with the title of Thane of Cawder. Seeing then how happily the prediction of the three Weirds fell out in the two former; he reſolved not to be wanting to himſelf in fulfilling the third: and therefore firſt he killed the King, and after, by reaſon of his command among the Souldiers and common people, he ſucceeded in his Throne. Being ſcarce warm in his ſeat, he called to mind the prediction given to his Companion Banquho: whom hereupon ſuſpecting as his ſupplanter, he cauſed him to be killed, together with his whole Poſterity, Fleance one of his Sonnes, eſcaping only with no ſmall difficulty into Wales. Freed, as he thought, from all fear of Banquho and his iſſue, he built Dunſinan Caſtle, and made it his ordinary ſeat: and afterwards on ſome new fears, conſulting with certain of his Wizards about his future Eſtate, was told by one of them, that he ſhould never be overcome till Bernane Wood (being ſome miles diſtant) came to Dunſinan Caſtle; and by another, that he ſhould never be ſlain by any man which was born of a woman. Secure then, as he thought, from all future dangers, he omitted no kind of libidinous cruelty, for the ſpace of 18 yeers, for ſo long he tyrannized over Scotland. But having then made up the meaſure of his Iniquities, Mac-duffe, the Governor of Fife, aſſociating to himſelf ſome few Patriots, equally hated by the Tyrant, and abhorring the Tyrannie, privily met one Evening at Bernane Wood, and taking every one of them a Bough in his hand (the better to keep them from Diſcovery) marched early in the morning towards Dunſinan Caſtle, which they took by Scalado. Macbeth eſcaping was purſued by Mac-duffe, who having overtaken him urged him to the combat: to whom the Tyrant, half in ſcorn, returned this Anſwer; That he did in vain attempt to kill him, it being his deſtinie never to be ſlain by any that was born of a Woman. Now then ſaid Mac-duffe is thy fatall end drawing faſt upon thee, for I was never born of Woman, but violently cut out of my Mothers belly: which words ſo daunted the cruell Tyrant, though otherwiſe a valiant man and of great performances, that he was very eaſily ſlain; and Malcolm Conmor, the true Heir of the Crown, ſeated in the Throne. In the mean time Fleance ſo proſpered in Wales, that he gained the affection of the Princes Daughter of that Countrey; and on her begat a Sonne called Walter; who flying out of Wales returned into Scotland, and his deſcent once known, he was not only reſtored to the Honours, and Eſtates of his Anceſtors, but preferred to be Steward of the Houſe of Edgar, the Sonne of Malcolm the third, ſurnamed Conmor, the name of Stewart growing hence hereditary unto his Poſterity. From this Walter deſcended that Robert Stewart, who ſucceeded David Bruce in the kingdom of Scotland, the Progenitor of nine Kings of the name of Stewart, which have Reigned ſucceſſively in that kingdom. But it is now time to leave off particulars, and look into the generall Succeſſion of 1250. 23 Alexander III. Sonne of Alexander the 2d. after whoſe death, dying without any iſſue, An. 1285. began that tedious and bloody Quarrell about the ſucceſſion of this Kingdom, occaſioned by ſundry Titles and Pretendants to it: the principall whereof were Bruce and Baliol deſcended from the Daughters of David, Earl of Huntingdon, younger Sonne of William, and Great Vncle of Alexander the 3d, the laſt of the Male iſſue of Kenneth the 3d, thoſe of neerer Kindred being quite extinct. And when the Scots could not compoſe the difference among themſelves, it was taken into conſideration by King Edward the firſt of England, as the Lord Paramount of that Kingdom; who ſelecting 12 Engliſh, and as many of the Scots to adviſe about it, with the conſent of all adjudged it to Iohn Baliol Lord of Galloway, Sonne of Iohn Baliol and Dervorguilla his Wife, Daughter of Alan Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the Eldeſt Daughter of the ſaid David; who having done his homage to the ſaid King Edward, was admitted King.

1300. 24 Iohn Baliol, an Engliſh-man, but forgetfull both of Engliſh birth, and Engliſh Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hoſtile manner, and was taken Priſoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himſelf Maſter of all Scotland, which he held during the reſt of his life, and had here his Chancery and other Courts. 6.

1306. 25 Robert Bruce, Sonne of Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Iſabel his Mother, the ſecond Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and conſequently a degree neerer to the King deceaſed than Baliol was, though deſcended from the Elder Siſter) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the firſt, but not fully poſſeſſed thereof untill after his death: confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the 2d, at the fight of Banocksbourn, not far from Sterling, ſpoken of before. But he being dead, Anno 1332. Edward the 3d confirmed the Kingdom on.

1332. 26 Edward Baliol, Sonne of Iohn Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering ſo firmly to the Engliſh; who thereupon harried Scotland with fire and Sword. 10.

27 David Bruce, the Sonne of Robert, reſtored unto his Fathers throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the Engliſh. Invading England when King Edward was at the ſiege of Calice, he was taken Priſoner by Qu. Philip, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windſor; where he was Priſoner, for a while, with King Iohn of France. Releaſed at laſt on ſuch conditions as beſt pleaſed the Conquerour. 29.

1371. 28 Robert II. ſurnamed Stewart, King of the Scots by deſcent from the eldeſt Siſter of David Bruce, was extracted alſo from the antient Princes of Wales (as was ſaid before) reſtoring thereby the Britiſh blood to the throne of Scotland.

1390. 29 Robert III. Sonne of Robert the 2d, called Iohn before he came to the Crown; in which much over-awed by his own brother the Duke of Albanie, who had an aim at it for himſelf. 16.

1406. 30 Iames, Sonne of Robert the 3d taken priſoner by King Henry the 4th of England, as he was croſſing the Seas for France, to avoid the practices of his Vncle. Reſtored unto his Country by King Henry the 5th, after 18 years abſence, he was at laſt moſt miſerably murdered by the Earl of Athol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.

Ireland.

1448. 31 James II. ſlain by the Engliſh at the Siege of Roxborough Caſtle. 24.

1462. 32 James III. ſlain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

1491. 33 James IV. maried Margaret, the eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the 7th, but at the ſoliciting of the French, (againſt the Peace between the Nations) he invaded England (in the abſence of King Henry the 8th) with 100000 men: but was met with by the Earl of Surrey (having 26000 men in his Army) nigh unto Flodden; where he was ſlain, together with two Biſhops, twelve Earles, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514. 34 James V. Sonne of James the 4th, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time ſo good correſpondencie with the Engliſh, that in the year 1536. he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred againſt them, he invaded their Borders in the year 1542: and was met by the Lord Wharton, then Warden of the Weſt Marches. The battells being ready to joyn, one S. Oliver Sincleer the Kings favorite, though otherwiſe of no great parentage, was by the Kings directions proclamed Generall: which the Scotiſh Nobility took with ſuch indignation, that they threw down their weapons, and ſuffered themſelves to be taken priſoners, there being not one man ſlain one either ſide. The principall priſoners were the Earls of Glencarn, and Caſſiles; the Barons Maxwell, Oliphant, Somerwell, Flemming, with divers others: beſides many of the principall Gentry. 28.

1542. 35 Mary, the Daughter and onely Lawfully-begotten Child of James the fift, ſucceeded in her Cradle unto the Throne; promiſed in mariage to King Edward the ſixt of England; but by the power of the Hamiltons carried into France, where maried to Francis, then Dolphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the 2d. After whoſe death, ſhe maried Henry Lord Darnly, eldeſt Sonne of Matthew Earl of Lennox. Outed of her Dominions by a potent Faction, ſhe was compelled to flie into England; where after a tedious impriſonment ſhe was put to death in Fotheringhay Caſtle in Northamptonſhire, and interred at Peterburg, Anno 1586.

1567. 36 JAMES VI. the Sonne of Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnly, was crowned King in his Cradle alſo. He maried Anne, the Daughter of Chriſtiern the 3d, King of Denmark; was choſe of the Order of the Garter, Anno 1590. and ſucceeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24, Anno 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent foreſight of King Henry the 7th, who having two Daughters, beſtowed the Eldeſt (contrary to the mind of his Counſell) on the King of Scots, and the Younger on the King of the French: that ſo, if his own Iſſue male ſhould fail, and that a Prince of another Nation muſt inherit England; then Scotland as the leſſer Kingdom would depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which ſucceſſion of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecie of the fatall Stone, ſpoken of before, did receive accompliſhment. And ſo perhaps might that aſcribed in the Polychronicon to an holy Anchoret living in King Egelreds time, which is this Engliſhmen, for that they wonneth them to drunkenneſs, to treaſon, and to rechleſſneſs of Gods houſe, firſt by Danes, and then by Normans, and the third time by Scots, whom they holden leaſt worth of all, they ſhall be overcome. Then the World ſhall be unſtable, and ſo diverſe and variable, that the unſtableneſs of thoughts ſhall be betokned by many manner diverſitie of Clothing. For on this union of the kingdoms, this prediction ſeems to have been accompliſhed; the Circumſtances mentioned in the ſame ſo patly agreeing, and the Scots never ſubduing England, but by this bleſſed Victory: unleſs perhaps the Accompliſhment thereof be ſtill to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great defeat at Banocks-bourn, in which were ſlain 50000 Engliſh, as the Scotiſh Writers doe report, and the name of Scot growing ſo terrible for a time, that an hundred of the Engliſh would flie from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Boterus eſtimateth at 100000 Crowns, or 30000 ſterling: and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being no commodity in this Kingdom to allure ſtrangers to traffick; the Domain or Patrimonie of the Crown but mean; the country in moſt places barren; and many of the Subjects, thoſe ſpecially of the Out-Iſles, and the Weſtern parts, ſo extremely barbarous, that they adde very ſmall improvement to the publick Treaſurie.

And anſwerable to the ſhortneſs of their ſtanding Revenue, were their Forces alſo. For though the Country be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardſhip; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces ſeldom held together above 40 dayes, and then, if not a great deal ſooner, did disband themſelves. For the Nobility and Gentrie being bound by the Tenure of their Lands to ſerve the King in his Warres, and to bring with them ſuch and ſo many of their Vaſſals as the preſent ſervice did require; uſed to provide for themſelves and their followers, Tents, money, victuals, proviſion of all ſorts, and all other neceſſaries; the King ſupplying them with nothing. Which being ſpent, they uſually disbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reaſon, why the Scots in the time of hoſtilitie betwixt the Nations, made only ſudden and tumultuary incurſions into England; without performing any thing of ſpeciall moment: and that they have not acted any thing elſewhere in the way of conqueſt; but onely as Mercinaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the

Army

Army of King Iames the 4th when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the 8th (being then in France) consisted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an Argument of their populositie: few of those men being armed, or trained up to service; and therefore easily discomfited by a far leis Army. 'Tis true, that in the year 1643 the Scotish Covenanters raised an Armie consisting of 18000 Foot, 2000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; with Arms, Artillery and Ammunion correspondent to it: which was the gallanteſt Army, and the beſt appointed, that ever that Nation did set out in the times foregoing. But then it is as true withall, that this Army was maintained and payed by the two Houses of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 per mensem, and an advance of 100000l. before hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare necessaries for it; without any charge unto themselves. And though the Army which they sent into England about five yeers after, under Iames Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferiour unto this in number, but far superiour to it both in Horse and Arms, and other necessary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horse and Arms being such as they had gotten out of England in the former war. Scotland

In point of reputation amongst forrein Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambassadours and Agents, had place in all Generall Councils, and Ecclesiasticall Assemblies, before those of Castile: and by the Statists of late times. have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for absolute Monarchs. But I conceive this was onely since the first years of King Edward the 3d, when they had quitted their subjection and vassalage to the Crown of England. For that antiently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonstrated by these following Arguments. 1 By the Homages, and other services and duties done by the Kings of the Scots unto those of England: Malcolm the 3d doing Homage unto William the Conquerour; as William one of his Successors, did to King Henry the 2d, and that not onely for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon, (as by some pretended) but for the very Crown it self; Kenneth the 3d being one of those eight Tributary or Vassal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interposing of King Edw. the first, and the submission of the Scots to that interposing, in determining the controversie of succession betwixt Bruce and Baliol: as in like case, Philip the Fair adjudged the title of Artoys, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in question betwixt the Lady Maud and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the 3d, in the right of the said Crown of France, determined of the controversie betwixt Iohn Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blais, for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 3ly, By the confession and acknowledgment of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Estates of Scotland, subscribed by all their hands and seals in the Roll of Ragman; wherein they did acknowledge the superiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of such advantages as the Sword had given him, but as of his originall and undoubted right. Which Roll was treacherously delivered into the hands of the Scots by Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, in the beginning of the reign of King Edward the 3d. 4ly, By the tacit Concession of the Kings themselves, who in their Coins, Commissions, and publick Instruments, assume not to themselves the title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scotorum, or the Kings of the Scots; and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet there is some superiour Lord (King Paramount as we may call him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Iudgements and Arrests of the Courts of England, not onely in the times of King Edward the first, but in some times since. For when William Wallis a Scotishman by Birth, and the best Soldier of that Countrie, was taken Prisoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to suffer death as a Traytor: which had been an illegall and unrighteous judgement, had he been a Prisoner of Warre, and not looked on by the Iudges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the Case of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom, in the same Kings reign. In like manner, in the time of King Edward the 3d it was resolved by the Court in the Lord Beaumonts Case, when it was objected against one of the Witnesses that he was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his testimony was to be allowed of, because the Scots in the Law of England did not goe for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th of Queen Elizabeths reign, desired a Medietatem linguæ, because he was a Scotishman, and so an Alien; it was denied him by the Court, because the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens, but as Subjects rather. So also, when Robert Umframville, Lord of Kyme, was summoned to the Parliament of England in the reign of King Edward the 3d, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus, (which is a dignity in Scotland) and after in a Writ against him was called onely by his own name of Umframville, without the addition of that honour; the Writ was judged to abate: which I conceive the learned Iudges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vassallage of the Kings of England. 6ly, and lastly, By a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my custodie) granted by King Edward the first in the last yeer of his reign, to Peter Dodge of Shorworth in the County of Chester, one of the Ancestors of my Mother: in which it is expressed, that the said Lands & Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent services, ex contra son grand Enemy et Rebel, Baliol, Roy d'Escosse et Vassal de Angleterre, that is to say, against his great Enemy and Rebel Baliol K: of Scotland, and Vassal of England. A thing so cleer, that if King Iames had not been extremely tender of the honour of his native Countrey, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a New Invention, in hammering the Case of the Post-nati for him, to make the Scots inheritable unto Lands in England. The acknowledgement and Reviver of their Ireland. old Subjection would have ſerved his turn. But of this Argument enough, and perhaps too much: I onely adde, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable perſon of that Kingdom of Scotland, employed unto the Court in a buſineſs of no mean conſequence to the peace and quiet of his Countrie. I found him ſo ſenſible of the inconveniences of their preſent Government, by reaſon of the Kings abſence, and the frequent diviſions and partialities of his Counſell there: that he confeſſed that Nation could be never rich or happie, till they were made a Province of the Engliſh Empire, and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

The principall Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom, was that of S. Andrew, inſtituted by Hungus, King of the Picts, to incourage his Subjects in the warre againſt King Athelſtane of England. The Knights did wear about their necke a Collar, interlaced with Thiſtles, with the Picture of S. Andrew appendant to it: The Motto, Nemo me impunè laceſſit. It took this name becauſe after the battel, Hungus and his Souldiers went all bare-foot to S. Andrews, and there vowed that they and their Poſterity would thenceforth uſe his Croſs as their Enſign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whenſoever they took in hand any warlike enterprize.

2 But this Order being expired many Ages ſince, there is now no Order of Knighthood in it, (except Knights Bachelers) but that of Nova Scotia; ordained by King James Anno 1622. for the planting of that Countrie by Scotiſh Colonies; in imitation of the order of Baronets in England, for the plantation of Ulſter. Hereditary, as that alſo is, but the Knights hereof diſtinguiſhed by a Ribband of Orange-Tawnie.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Treſſure counter-flowred: Which Treſſure counter-flowred was added to the Lion by Achaius King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France: ſignifying (ſaith Hector Boetius one of their Hiſtorians) Francorum opibus Leonem exinde muniendum; that the Scotch Lion ſhould be guarded by the riches of France.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is invironed on all ſides with the Ocean: parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea called S. Georges Chanell. Situate on the Weſt of Britain, next unto which it is the biggeſt Iland of Europe, containing in length 300, and in bredth 120 miles: and is ſeated under the 8th and 10th Climates; the longeſt day being 16 hours and an halfin the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts.

It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit: and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland in the Iſle of Britain. But the generall name hereof is Ireland; by the Latines called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though ſome frame a wreſted Etymologie from Iberus, a Spaniſh Captain; and ſome from Irnaulph, once a ſuppoſed Duke hereof; as others ab Hyberno aere, the Winter-like and inclement Air: yet probably the name proceeded from Erinland, which ſignifyeth in their own language a Weſtern land. And yet I muſt not pretermit the Etymon given us by Bochartus, (more neer the name than moſt of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Iberna, a Phœnician word, ſignifying the furtheſt Habitation: there being no Countrie known amongſt the Antients which lay Weſt of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Ceſarea, Noahs Neece, inhabited here before the Flood; and how 300 years after the Flood, it was ſubdued by Bartholanus, a Scythian, who overcame here I know not what Gyants. Afterward Nemethus another Scythian Prince, and Delus a Grecian, came hither: and laſt of all Gaothel, with his Wife Scota, one of Pharaohs daughters, who muſt needs name this Iland Scotia. But not to honour ſuch fopperies with a confutation, doubtleſsly the firſt inhabitants of this Iland came out of Britain. For Britain is the nigheſt Countrey unto it, and ſo had a more ſpeedy waſtage hither; Secondly, the antient Writers call this Iland a Britiſh Iland; and Thirdly, Tacitus giveth us of this Countrey this verdict: Solum, cœlumque cultus & ingenia hominum, haud multum à Britannia differunt, the habits and diſpoſition of the people were not much unlike the Britans. For further evidence whereof it was obſerved, at the reduction of Wales to the Crown of England by King Edward the firſt, that many of their Lawes and Cuſtoms were like thoſe of the Iriſh: which ſhews that they did both deſcend from the ſame originall. But then we muſt obſerve withall, that they were counted far more barbarous and ſavage by moſt antient Writers, than thoſe of Britain are deciphered at the firſt diſcovery: ſaid by Strabo to be man-eaters; accuſtomed (as Solinus telleth us) to drink the blood of thoſe whom they ſlew in fight. Nor were the Women, though the ſofter and more tender Sex, free from ſuch wilde and ſavage cuſtoms; it being a conſtant courſe amongſt them, when they were delivered of a man-childe, to put ſome meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a ſword; wiſhing therewith it might not die but in the middeſt of Arms, and the heat of battell. Both Sexes uſed to trim themſelves with the Teeth of Fiſhes, white as the driven Snow, or the poliſhed Ivorie; and therein placed the greateſt part of their pride and bravery. Ireland.

Nor are the modern Iriſh much abhorrent from ſuch barbarous cuſtoms, as plainly ſhew from what Originall they deſcend; altered but little by converſe with more civill Nations. Of naturall conſtitution generally ſtrong and nimble of body, haughty of heart, careleſs of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, conſtant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory; and in a word, if they be bad, you ſhall no-where find worſe; if they be good, you ſhall haraly meet with better. The Diet, eſpecially of the meer Iriſh, is for the moſt part, on herbs, roots, butter mingled with oat-flower, milk, and beef-broth: eating fleſh many times without bread, which they diſgeſt with Vſquebaugh; and give their bread-corn to their horſes inſtead of Provender. But more particularly thoſe of the richer ſort in all parts, and of all ſorts thoſe which inhabit within the Pale (as they themſelves call it) and in ſuch places where the Engliſh Diſcipline hath been entertained, conformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparrell: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Iriſh of the poorer and inferiour ſort) moſt extremely barbarous; not behaving themſelves like Chriſtians, ſcarcely like men. All of them ſo tenacious of their antient cuſtoms, that neither power, nor reaſon, nor the ſenſe of the inconveniencies which they ſuffer by it, can wean them to deſert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their uſe of Ploughing, not with ſuch geares or harneſs, as in other places, but by tying the hindmoſt horſes head to the tayl of the former: which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain; makes them unſerviceable by the ſoon loſing of their tayls; and withall is a courſe of ſo ſlow a diſpatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week, as a good Teem well harneſſed would perform in a day; yet no perſwaſion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtfull and ridiculous cuſtom. And when the Earl of Strafford, the late Lord Deputy, had damned it by Act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on ſuch as ſhould after uſe it: the people thought it ſuch a grievance, and ſo injurious to the Nation, that among other things demanded towards a Paciſication of the preſent troubles, their Agents and Commiſſioners inſiſted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we ſhall hereafter meet with in another place. Neer of kin to which, is a lazie cuſtom that they have of burning their ſtraw (rather than put themſelves to the pains to threſh it) by that means to part it from the corn. From which no reaſon can diſſwade them, nor perſwaſions winne them. They have among them other cuſtoms as abſurd, though leſs inconvenient, as placing a green buſh, on May-day, before their doores, to make their kine yeeld the more milk; kneeling down to the New Moon as ſoon as they ſee it, deſiring her to leave them in as good health as ſhee found them, and many others of like nature.

They uſe a Language of their own, but ſpoken alſo in the Weſt of Scotland, and the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſlands: which though originally Britiſh, or a Dialect of it, by reaſon of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Eaſterlings or Ooſt-mans, and Engliſh-Saxons, hath no Affinitie with the Welch, for ought I can learn.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached among them by S. Patrick, affirmed to be the Nephew of S. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civill parts, and the Engliſh Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes, or naturall wild Iriſh, (and many of the better ſort of the Nation alſo) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own ſuperſtitious fancies, as in former times. And to ſay truth, it is no wonder that they ſhould; there being no care taken to inſtruct them in the Proteſtant Religion: either by tranſlating the Bible, or the Engliſh Liturgie, into their own Language, as was done in Wales; but forcing them to come to Church to the Engliſh Service, which the people underſtand no more than they do the Maſs. By means whereof, the Iriſh are not onely kept in continuall ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Proteſtant Churches: but thoſe of Rome are furniſhed with an excellent Argument for having the Service of the Church in a Language which the common Hearers doe not underſtand. And therefore I doe heartily commend it to the care of the State (when theſe diſtempers are compoſed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other publick means of Chriſtian Inſtruction, in their naturall tongue.

The Soil of it ſelf is abundantly fruitfull, but naturally fitter for graſs and paſturage, than it is for tillage: as may be ſeen in ſuch places where the induſtrie of man is aiding to the naturall goodneſs of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Country is either over-grown with Woods, or encombred with vaſt Boggs and unwholeſom Mariſhes, yeelding neither profit nor pleaſure unto the Inhabitants. In ſome places, as in the County of Armagh, ſo rank and fertill, that the laying of any ſoil or compoſt on it, doth abate its fruitfulneſs, and proves the worſt Husbandry that can be.

It

Ireland: It hath been antiently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongſt whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apothegm : when offered many fair preferments to leave his Country, he returned this Anſwer, It becomes not them to imbrace other mens goods, who for Chriſts ſake had forſaken their own. Of no leſs pietie, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Rafe, Arch-Biſhop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flouriſhed about the yeer 1350. A declared Enemie of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.
